At 5 percent, the prime rate is the highest since 1931. Until the early 1930's, bankers say, there was no posted prime rate as lending charges were negotiated between the banks and the borrowers. Lending charges generally were higher than 5 percent in the late 1920's. In 1929, for example, money market observers say it was not uncommon for a large corporate borrower to pay 6 percent on a loan.

Short-term interest rates other than bank rates also continued their upward climb yesterday following the rise in yields on Treasury bills and announcement of the higher prime rate.

Commercial paper dealers boosted their rates by ¼-percentage point on unsecured promissory notes sold in the open market—the first ¼-point increase in almost a year. Previous rate changes in recent months had been ⅛-point at a time.

The new scale on so-called "open market" commercial paper ranges from 4⅜ percent on four-to-six month notes of leading industrial concerns to 4⅞ percent on those of lesser-known companies and smaller sales finance firms.

Several sales finance companies also announced boosts ranging from ¼-percentage point to ⅜-point on commercial paper which they issue and place directly with investors.

For most of the major sales finance firms, the new rate schedule on directly-placed paper is:

Maturities of 30 to 59 days, 3⅞ percent, up ¼ point; 60 to 89 days, 4⅛ percent, up ¼ point; 90 to 119 days, 4¼ percent; 120 to 149 days, 4⅜ percent; 150 to 179 days, 4½ percent, up ⅜ point, and 180 to 270 days, 4⅝ percent, up ⅜ point. Previously most paper maturing in 90 to 149 days had been grouped in one category, which had carried a 4-percent rate.

Finance firms announcing this increased scale included General Motors Acceptance Corp., CIT Financial Corp., Pacific Finance Corp., Associates Investment Co., International Harvester Acceptance Corp., General Electric Credit Corp., and General Finance Corp.

Sears Roebuck Acceptance Corp. said it was also increasing its rates by one-fourth point to three-eighths point, but it offers different categories of maturities. Its new rates are 4 percent on paper maturing in 30 to 59 days, 4⅜ percent on notes due in 60 to 149 days, and 4⅝ percent on paper due in 150 to 270 days.

Four dealers in bankers' acceptances raised their rates by one-eighth point early yesterday, but a fifth dealer, Salomon Bros. & Hutzler, boosted its rates by one-fourth point. Before the afternoon was over the other four firms had matched the one-fourth point increase.

The new bankers' acceptances scale is: For bills maturing in 30 to 90 days, 4 percent bid, 3⅞ percent offered; 91 to 120 days, 4⅛ percent bid, 4 percent offered; and 121 to 180 days, 4¼ percent bid, 4⅛ percent offered.

The scale was put into effect by Salomon Bros. & Hutzler; Briggs, Schaedle & Co., Inc.; First Boston Corp.; Discount Corp. of New York; and M. & T. Discount Corp.

Commercial paper is the money market term for two types of short-term borrowings, largely for seasonal needs. One type, so-called open-market paper, is sold by dealers for industrial "names" and smaller sales finance companies, usually to banks outside New York City. Since the last prime rate change in May, rates on this type of commercial paper have climbed by about seven-eighths percentage point to the highest level since the early 1930's.

The other type of commercial paper consists of notes of large sales finance companies which are sold directly to investors, often other corporations. Several sales finance firms said yesterday their new commercial paper scales were the highest since about 1932.

Bankers' acceptances generally are bills to finance the export, import and domestic storage or shipment of goods. A bank lends money in return for a note which it "accepts," thus placing its credit behind that of the borrowers. These bills then can be sold through dealers in the open market. Since mid-May, the time of the last prime rate increase, rates on bankers' acceptances have gone up about three-fourths percentage point. Dealers said, however, the present scale is still slightly under the high levels reached in the fall of 1957.

First National City announced the prime rate increase about 10:20 a.m. yesterday. Within a few minutes, Hanover Bank, Chase Manhattan Bank and Irving Trust Co., all of New York, and several banks in Philadelphia followed.

RATE RISE SPREADS

Before the day was over, the prime rate increase had spread to major banks in Boston, Cleveland, Kansas City, Dallas, Chicago, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Jacksonville, Atlanta, Detroit, Portland, and Seattle.

Other major New York City banks which quickly followed the increase were Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, Marine Midland Trust Co. of New York, United States Trust Co., Bank of New York, and Brown Brothers Harriman & Co.

Among the New York City banks that did not announce an immediate change in the prime rate were Chemical Corn Exchange Bank, New York Trust Co., Manufacturers Trust Co., and Bankers Trust Co.

Other banks across the country which announced increases include:

Philadelphia National Bank and First Pennsylvania Banking & Trust Co., Philadelphia; First National Bank of Boston; Cleveland Trust Co.; Republic National Bank and Mercantile National Bank, Dallas; First National Bank of Chicago; Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. and Harris Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago; Mellon National Bank & Trust Co., Pittsburgh; Bank of America and American Trust Co., San Francisco; Security-First National Bank, Los Angeles; Citizens & Southern National Bank, Atlanta; Barnett National Bank, Jacksonville; Commerce Trust Co., Kansas City; First National Bank of Oregon and United States National Bank, Portland; and First National Bank, Seattle.

BOND MARKETS—TREASURY ISSUES DROP TO NEW LOWS FOLLOWING BOOST IN PRIME RATE—U.S. BONDS OFFER HIGHEST AVERAGE YIELD SINCE 1932—TOP-GRADE CORPORATES EASE

NEW YORK.—U.S. Government bonds plummeted to new lows yesterday, following news that commercial banks across the country were boosting their prime rate to 5 percent from 4½ percent. Investment-quality corporate issues gave up fractions. Tax-exempt State and local government securities were almost neglected, for the second consecutive session.

At yesterday's close, according to Government bond men, U.S. Treasury issues were offering investors the highest average yield since January 1932. The top return of 4.95 percent, based on the usual method of yield calculation, was being given by the 2½s of 1961. Even larger taxable-equivalent returns were being figured on some longer issues, selling at deep discounts from par, for investors in the higher income tax brackets.

The prime rate is the one commercial banks charge on loans to their biggest borrowers with the highest credit ratings. The new 5 percent annual charge for loans of this type is the highest since 1931. In the bond markets, prices decline when interest rates rise.

U.S. Treasury issues were trying to do a little better yesterday morning before the prime rate announcement, although the prime rate boost was not unexpected. Once the announcement came over the newstickers at midmorning, prices turned lower and a number of key issues ended the session with losses ranging to nearly half a point.

Commenting on yesterday's market, one Government bond dealer said: "Activity dried up. Nobody was buying anything and some selling developed after the prime rate change was announced."

Showing losses of fourteen thirty-seconds on the session were the 3¼s of 1985, which ended at 85^{18}/$_{32}$ bid, and 3½s of 1990, which ended at 87^{10}/$_{32}$ bid. At yesterday's close, the 3¼s were yielding the buyer 4.15 percent while the 3½s were offering a yield of 4.22 percent.

The Treasury's new 4¾ percent notes, due May 15, 1964, offered recently in exchange for securities that fell due August 1, ended the session unchanged at 100 bid. The companion 12½-month 4¾-percent notes eased one thirty-second to end at 100^{3}/$_{32}$ bid.

Investment-quality corporate bonds showing declines yesterday included Consumers Power Co. 4⅝s, which ended one-eighth easier at 96 bid, and Houston Lighting & Power 4⅞s, which were three-eighths lower at 97⅛ bid.

Small retail sales left the unsold balances of last week's major corporate offerings almost unchanged from Monday. General Motors Acceptance Corp.'s $125 million of new 5s being offered at par to yield 5 percent, were a little more than 85 percent sold. The $65 million of Pacific Gas & Electric Co. 5s, also placed on the market last week at par to yield 5 percent, were still about half sold.

Municipal bonds were unusually quiet. Several issues that reached the market in recent weeks continued to show large unsold balances, almost unchanged from those reported late Monday.

A "fair" reception was indicated for the $12.5 million of Los Angeles, Calif., various purpose bonds that came into the market yesterday.

Tax-exempt revenue bonds were lower on small turnover. Massachusetts Port Authority 4¾s were off one-half at 99¼ bid.

Secondary and more speculative railroad bonds were quiet and a shade easier.

RECORD U.S. DEBT PASSES $290 BILLION, STILL RISING

WASHINGTON.—Uncle Sam is deeper in debt than ever before in history, and is due to go even further in debt before the year is out.

Last Thursday, the latest day for which the Treasury has debt totals, the Government's direct and guaranteed debt topped the $290 billion mark for the first time. However, the public debt subject to the temporary legal $295 billion limit set by Congress earlier this year was a little lower—$289.9 billion. This is because a small portion of the debt taken on before World War I, is not subject to the legal ceiling.

However, the Treasury expects the amount subject to the legal limit to get close to $295 billion about mid-December. Then it will start going down, and is expected to be about $285 billion next June 30, the end of the fiscal year. At that time, the legal debt ceiling also drops back to $285 billion. Congress specified that the $295 billion ceiling was to be only temporary until then.

The Government's debt usually increases in the fall months, because the Treasury is paying out more money than it is receiving in taxes. During the first half of next year, the Treasury expects to be getting more income from taxes than it spends, and thus the debt would shrink to the $285 billion mark.

INSTALLMENT CREDIT RISE IN JULY WAS BIGGEST IN 4 YEARS—ADJUSTED GAIN OF $500 MILLION PUSHED CONSUMER DEBT TO RECORD $36.4 BILLION—AUTO CREDIT ROSE SHARPLY

WASHINGTON.—Consumer installment credit rose more in July on an adjusted basis than in any other month in nearly 4 years, the Federal Reserve Board reported.

Installment debt outstanding in July increased by a seasonally adjusted $500 million, officials said. This was the biggest monthly rise since an adjusted $518 million rise in September 1955. Extensions of new credit in July also reached a record for any month, gaining an adjusted $4.1 billion, while repayment of old debt came to an adjusted $3.6 billion.

The increase in installment debt in July raised the total outstanding at the end of the month to a record of more than $36.4 billion, officials reported. This was nearly $3.4 billion above the amount outstanding July 31, 1958.

Outstanding auto credit in July rose an adjusted $227 million—the largest increase for any month this year. At the end of July, total auto credit outstanding was $15.8 billion. Other consumer goods credit and repair and modernization loans rose at about the same rate as in recent months. Personal loans outstanding rose by a record $123 million in July, on an adjusted basis.

Government economists rate the willingness of consumers to take on an increasing amount of installment debt as one of the prime factors in the business boom. Federal Reserve Board officials have commented that the consumers' demand for money for installment purchases also has been a factor in the tightening of credit.

Noninstallment credit in July—single-payment loans, charge accounts and service credit—went up $147 million on a seasonally adjusted basis, Federal Reserve Board officials reported. The increase brought the total outstanding at the end of the month to $10.8 billion, a rise of $958 million from a year ago.

Total consumer credit—installment and noninstallment—rose by a seasonably adjusted $647 million, officials added. This brought total consumer credit outstanding on July 31 to a record $47.3 billion, a rise of $4.3 billion from the amount outstanding a year ago.

U.S. DEBT TOPS $290 BILLION

The Treasury said yesterday the national debt now exceeds $290 billion for the first time in history.

As of Thursday, the gross public debt was $290,306 million. The portion subject to legal ceiling was $289,890 million. A small part of the debt, made up largely of obligations incurred before World War I, is not subject to the legal limit.

Treasury officials expected the debt to continue climbing until mid-December, when it will approach the temporary legal ceiling of $295 billions.

INSTALLMENT DEBT REACHES ALLTIME HIGH

The installment debts of all Americans increased $500 million in July to a record $36.5 billion, the Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday.

The month-to-month increase was the largest since September 1955, when installment credit increased by $518 million.

Consumers took on $4,102 million in new installment debts in July—more than in any other month on record. At the same time they paid off $3,602 million in old debts of this kind.

The Board said all these figures were adjusted for seasonal variations in credit movements.

Outstanding automobile credit rose $227 million in July, a bit more than in May and June but about the same as in April. Extensions of personal loans exceeded repayments by a record $123 million.

Outstanding noninstallment credit increased by $147 million, bringing the total to $10,807 million. The largest increase was in single payment loans.

PRIME BANK RATES INCREASED TO 5 PERCENT

NEW YORK, September 1.—Loans to business rose to their highest cost in 28 years today when commercial banks boosted the prime rate from 4½ to 5 percent. That is what banks charge their biggest customers with the best credit ratings. It is a basic money market charge because other interest rates are always scaled up from it.

The hike was followed by increases in dealer and finance commercial paper and bankers acceptances. Rates on broker and dealer loans also went up from 4½ to 5 percent.

The increase in the prime rate was started by First National City Bank of New York, second largest in the city and third in the Nation. The new rate was adopted almost immediately by Chase Manhattan Bank, largest in the city.

Other major banks in New York and around the country joined the parade. Not all, however, made the change effective immediately.

[Washington bankers, who usually take their cue from New York institutions, said they had the situation under study. It was generally understood they would raise their prime rate before long.]

The last increase in the prime rate was in May from 4 to 4½ percent.

"Seldom before has there been a situation in which an increase in the prime rate was so self-evident," said a spokesman for one of New York's big banks.

"Business demand for loans has been increasing at a record rate not only in New York but around the country," he said. "Correspondent banks from out of town have been calling us repeatedly in recent weeks to take a piece of this or that loan."

On its latest issue of Treasury bills, the Government had to pay an interest rate of 3.889 percent for 13-week bills and 4.468 percent for 26-week bills. That's a 26-year high for the 13-week bills and the highest for the 26-week category since they were started last December.

Many corporations, this bank spokesman said, found it cheaper to raise money through short-term bank loans at the old 4½-percent rate than to get it in the capital market through bond or stock flotations.

This put a tremendous squeeze on banks. In times of tight money banks normally secure funds for commercial loans by selling Government securities. In the past year, for instance, major New York banks reduced their holdings of Treasury securities from $8 billion to about $6 billion.

But Government bond market prices have fallen to historic lows in the past week or 10 days and any further sales of such securities by banks would mean heavy losses.

STOCKS TUMBLE ON PRIME RATE INCREASE—U.S. BONDS HIT NEW LOW

NEW YORK, September 1.—The stock market today tumbled to its worst loss in 3 weeks as leading banks boosted the prime interest rate charged to their biggest borrowers.

The news, because of its timing, came as a surprise to Wall Street. The trend to higher rates has been remorseless and unmistakable but a hike in the prime rate was not expected today.

The banks raised the interest rate to 5 percent from 4½ percent, effective immediately.

U.S. Government bonds lost as much as half a point today in the wake of the increase in the prime lending rate. Practically all Treasury issues were at new historic lows. The corporate market closed lower on moderate turnover.

Off 16/32 were the Victory 2½s of December 1972–67 at 81 16/32, the 3¼s of 1983–78 at 85 28/32, and the 4s of 1980 at 96 1/32 bid. All were at historic lows. The 3s of 1995 lost 1/32 at 82 20/32, while the 2½s of 1963 eased 2/32 at 91 24/32 bid. Trading was light and dealers said buyers were hard to find.

In the stock market, motors and steels, pacemakers yesterday because of glowing prospects, reeled backward and took the worst losses at the outset, dragging the rest of the market with them.

Some losses were clipped about midday but the downtrend could not be resisted and closing prices were about the day's worst. Wall Street has never made any secret of the fact that it dislikes high interest costs and anything that puts a crimp on borrowing money, whether for stock purchases or business expansion.

The Dow-Jones industrial average fell 8.51 to 655.90.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks dropped $2 to $229, with the industrials down $3.10, the rails down $2.20, and the utilities down 30 cents. It was the worst break for the AP average since August 10, when it fell $4.10.

Volume expanded on the selloff, but only slightly. Turnover was 2,430,000 shares, compared with 2,140,000 yesterday.

The retreat was general, affecting most major groups, including oils, chemicals, rails, aircrafts, tobaccos, nonferrous metals, and electrical equipments.

Amid the general retreat, American Motors recovered from a drop of 1¼ and ended the day with a net gain of a point as the most active stocks. It was helped by reports of August sales and rumors it may hike the dividend. It closed at 48½ on turnover of 81,400 shares.

Youngstown Sheet, which has risen on stock split rumors, plummeted 6⅜. Texas Instruments dropped 6½. Brunswick-Balke, despite a 3-for-1 stock split proposal, fell 2⅛.

American Stock Exchange prices declined.

THE YOUTH CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a splendid editorial which was published in the Delano Eagle of Delano, Minn., in Wright

County, where Mrs. Humphrey and I have our home in a community very nearby, at Waverly, Minn.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LEADING EDITORIAL

Eagle readers know that we are no political friend of our fellow Wright County citizen, Senator HUBERT HUMPHREY, although personally he is a very friendly and easy-to-know guy.

But we always believe in giving the devil his due and in this instance we are in wholehearted support of his Youth Conservation Act proposal.

S. 812 as introduced by Senator HUMPHREY would establish youth conservation camps, patterned after the depression days Civilian Conservation Corps, "to provide the opportunity for healthful training and employment of young men in carrying out such programs of conservation planned and designed by, and under the immediate supervision of, the various Government agencies charged with the responsibility of carrying out such programs; and to enable the governmental agencies charged with the responsibility of conserving and developing natural resources to accelerate programs planned by such agencies to fulfill such responsibility."

Youths between the ages of 16 and 21 would be eligible to join the corps with Indians given priority for any work to be performed on Indian reservations or lands adjacent thereto. Enrollment would be for 6 months but no one could reenroll for a period longer than 2 years.

Base pay would be $60 per month plus quarters, subsistence, and travel expense, clothing, medical expense, etc.

Enrollment would be limited to 50,000 youths the first year, 100,000 the second year and 150,000 each year thereafter.

The bill is designed to do two things, provide a place for those young people who are at loose ends, who do not know what to do and who presently are doing little more than getting into trouble, and to replenish our fast dwindling reserve of natural resources.

There is no question that a new CCC could absorb a large number of young fellows who are bordering on juvenile delinquency and from past experience we can conclude that most of them would be better for the training they would be getting in the forests and other conservation areas.

Neither is there any question about the need of this type of work being done throughout the United States. As a matter of fact we have a hunch that more of this work is needed in the United States than in some of the countries to whom we are sending millions of dollars for similar programs. Spending the money at home is only commonsense.

But we would like to go Senator HUMPHREY one better. We would like to propose the reactivation of the old Citizen's Military Training Camps which flourished in the 1920's. These camps were conducted at Army posts throughout the country for a period of a month to 6 weeks. During that time the trainees lived and were trained just like in Army boot camp. They were eligible to reenroll for a period of up to 4 years and as they came back each year they advanced in rank.

Such camps, conducted in the summer only, would serve to take a lot of young men off the streets. They would also serve as a means to provide the military training for those youths who wanted to go on to college and did not want to take 6 months off for military training as is now necessary. The camps would also be useful in providing additional training for the fledgling officers of the college ROTC units.

For years we have been sending an unceasing flow of money to foreign lands for very dubious purposes. A little of it spent at home, we believe, would provide far greater dividends.

For once, HUBERT, we are with you.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the editorial refers to S. 812, the bill to establish the Youth Conservation Corps.

I note that the editor of the newspaper, as he says very frankly in the editorial, is not generally a supporter of the senior Senator from Minnesota or the policies which the senior Senator from Minnesota votes for and espouses, but in this instance the editor praises the proposal in S. 812 and urges the passage of the bill.

I note the very last line of the editorial:

For once, HUBERT, we are with you.

I wish to say to the editor that I am extremely grateful that for once he is with me, and with me on such a solid and constructive proposal as the Youth Conservation Corps.

I invite the attention of my colleagues to the fact that in the State of New York, and particularly in the city of New York, the Governor, Mr. Rockefeller; the mayor; the chief of police of the city of New York; the juvenile authorities; the social workers; and leaders in church and civic life are all urging a program of the youth camps such as was outlined in the Youth Conservation Corps be established.

I shall not burden the RECORD with the numerous editorials and articles which have come to my attention in recent days and weeks in support of the Youth Conservation Corps type of proposal, but I will say that were there youth camps in America along the lines outlined in S. 812, youth camps which followed the proposal of the Youth Conservation Corps bill, there would not be nearly as many gang fights in New York or in any other place.

It is shocking to me that the Congress of the United States can be so very blind as to not take expeditious action upon a proposal which has passed the Senate, though by a close vote, and put it into effect. I regret that the administration seems to be able to close its eyes to what is happening throughout the Nation among some of our young people.

The prominent and responsible authorities in the field of juvenile activities, who are responsible for the guidance of our young people, as well as those who are responsible for our correctional institutions for juvenile delinquents, are calling out tonight, and have been calling out for weeks, for a Youth Conservation Corps, but the Bureau of the Budget says it is more important to save money than to save souls, to save lives, and to save bodies.

I hope the experiences of the city of New York will stimulate us to take the action we should. The things which have occurred are not peculiar to New York. New York is a well governed city, with a fine, responsible, socially conscious, honest, and effective mayor. The city of New York has a good police department. The city of New York is a well governed city. Like every other city, New York has its problems. One of the problems in city after city throughout this Nation is the problem regarding some of the young people who have organized themselves into what we call youth gangs, which engage in activities of an antisocial nature, which result in riots, violence, destruction of property, and injury to persons.

I am hopeful that the Youth Conservation Corps bill will be passed by the other body. I am hopeful that the President of the United States will put the prestige of his office, as well as his own personal prestige, behind the proposal. It is very important that something be done quickly, before it is too late to save many of these young people from the stigma of becoming criminals and delinquents. Mr. President, I believe one of the ways in which this can be done is the establishment of the Youth Conservation Corps.

I observe that my good friend the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] has returned to the Chamber. I know of no State which has a finer record in the field of social welfare and social service than the State of New York. My comments about youth gangs are intended in no way to be a reflection upon any city. It is true with regard to every city, with very few exceptions.

Instead of merely talking about our young people, instead of saying that the young people are doing wrong, and instead of worrying about how many more police we can put on the beat to try to control these youth gangs, why do we not employ people who are youth directors to take young men out to the forests, to the great outdoors, and let them do something constructive for our country?

I say to the Senate that we can save money, if saving money is what people are interested in primarily, with a Youth Conservation Corps.

The editorial I mentioned, and the hundreds of editorials I have received, tell the whole story of the importance of a youth conservation measure; and I am hopeful that those who occasionally glance at the RECORD, this great public document recording the debates and discussions and the speeches in the Congress of the United States, will take note of the fact that there is a way and that the answer is not another 1,800 policemen.

The answer is not to weep crocodile tears over gang wars. The answer is to get up and do what we know will be effective. Take these young men and give them gainful work to do. They are seething with energy. Let them help conserve our soil, our land, and our timber. Let them help work in the great out-of-doors, and we will have a better America and many better young people.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I address myself now to the subject matter which I had hoped to discuss earlier today, but because of the debate in the Senate on the interest rate policies of our Government I was foreclosed from so doing. I refer to the report of the Commission on Civil Rights.

The report of the Commission on Civil Rights which was submitted to the President and to Congress this morning is, in my mind, a most encouraging document. I wish to commend the Civil Rights Commission for its courage, for its forthrightness, and for its vision.

To be accurate, I should refer in the plural to the documents submitted by the Commission. There is the full 600-page report, a 190-page abridgment, 4 volumes of hearings on voting, education, and housing, and, to come shortly I understand, a volume containing the reports of citizens' advisory committees that the Commission organized in 48 States.

I salute the Commission. Speaking as one Senator, I say "Well done." I express both a personal and an official "thank you" for the work which I believe has been almost beyond the call of duty.

I had hoped earlier tonight to have dinner with one of the most distinguished members of that Commission, Father Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University. To the Chairman of the Commission and to every member I express my thanks and appreciation for the fine public service that has been performed.

None of us has had an opportunity to study in detail this mountain of material. It appears to be the most comprehensive such study ever undertaken by a Government agency. I have gone over the findings and recommendations of the Commission, which take up about 30 pages. These are most interesting and important.

When the President appointed three Commissioners from the South and three from the North some people predicted that the Commission would be unable to agree upon anything. But the Commissioners agreed unanimously on many of the findings and recommendations, as the Vice Chairman of the Commission, Dean Robert Storey, of Southern Methodist University Law School of Dallas, has stressed. The findings and recommendations on education and housing are unanimous as far as they go. All the findings and the first four recommendations on voting are unanimous. On the biggest and most controversial proposal—for the appointment of temporary Federal registrars to actually register citizens who are qualified to vote under State law but who are illegally denied their right to vote—there was agreement by five out of the six Commissioners.

The two southern members who supported this far-reaching recommendation explained why they did so. I think the words of these two respected southern leaders should be listened to with great attention.

We strongly believe—

Said Dean Storey, of Texas and former Gov. Doyle Carlton, of Florida—

in the right of every qualified citizen of the United States, irrespective of his color, race, religion, or national origin, to register, vote, and have his vote counted. We regard full protection of these rights of suffrage by both State and Federal Governments as necessary and proper (abridged report, p. 95).

While my friend John Battle did not go along with his colleagues on this particular remedial measure, he joined in the unanimous findings of fact on the discrimination against Negro voters and the denials of the right to vote shown in the Commission's Alabama hearings. He also joined in the Commission's unanimous finding that "many Americans, even today, are denied the franchise because of race," and that "this is accomplished through the creation of legal impediments, administrative obstacles, and positive discouragement engendered by fears of economic reprisal and physical harm." Abridged report at page 86.

It will be up to this Congress and to the President to do something about the facts thus unanimously found by this bipartisan Commission. The Commission's recommendations and lengthy documentation supporting these recommendations will need to be carefully studied. From a short perusal of the abridged report I can assure this body that there are facts here that can no longer be ignored in this country. I will cite only a few.

The most detailed example of the manner of denying Negroes their right to vote is to be found in the Commission's Alabama voting hearing, with its unanimous findings of fact. But some of the other instances given in the Commission's report are just as alarming. In one county in Georgia the chairman of the board of registrars denied registration to a Negro on the ground that in his reading test he had pronounced the word "equity" as "eequity"—abridged report at page 56. In Louisiana, registrars were instructed to require registrants to give a reasonable interpretation of the following clauses of the State constitution:

The legislature shall provide by law for change of venue in civil and criminal cases.

The exercise of the police power of the State shall never be abridged.

Prescription shall not run against the State in any civil matter (abridged report at p. 80).

I leave it to your judgment how many of our constituents, or for that matter how many of the nonlawyers in this body, would give an adequate interpretation of "change of venue" or "prescription" running against a State.

Fortunately, denials of the right to vote by reason of race or color are limited to a relatively small geographical area. The heart of the problem is to be found in the 16 counties where, according to the Commission's report, nonwhites constituted a majority of the voting age population in 1950 but not a single Negro is registered, and in the 49 other Negro majority counties with some but fewer than 5 percent of voting age Negroes registered—abridged report at page 45.

It is discouraging, however, to see how ineffective the previous measures adopted to remedy this situation have proved to be. The Commission notes that the provision for civil injunctive actions in the Civil Rights Act of 1957 has not been adequately tested, only three suits having been brought by the Department of Justice in the last 2 years—abridged report at pages 84–85. I would like to call special attention to the footnote of Commissioner George Johnson, one of the Republican members, on page 85 of the abridged report. Commissioner Johnson notes that the Civil Rights Act of 1957 authorizes the Attorney General to "institute a civil action or other proper proceeding for preventive relief" where "there are reasonable grounds to believe any person is about to engage in any act or practice which would deprive any other person" of the right to vote. Commissioner Johnson urged, and I join him in this, that the total absence of Negroes from the registration rolls in 16 Negro-majority counties and the presence of only a few Negroes registered in 49 other such Negro-majority counties warrants an investigation by the Department of Justice to see whether there are not "reasonable grounds" to institute such civil actions. In view of these facts, the record of only three suits by the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice in these last 2 years seems to me both incredible and inexcusable.

The Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice has known of these hearings. It has been informed of the facts in the cases that have been investigated. The work of the Civil Rights Commission has been no secret. Yet the administration, with the authority of law, with all of its high pronouncements on civil rights, with the facts as evident as the nose on one's face, has instituted only three suits in the last 3 years in an effort to protect the voting rights of fellow citizens.

It seems to me that the administration has some explaining to do, and I urge that the Department of Justice take the action which the present law not only makes possible but literally directs in order to protect the great right, and to my mind the most important right, the most important political right, I should say, of a citizen, the right to vote.

However, I must agree with the Commission that "even if the Attorney General should bring civil suits for preventive relief in a larger number of districts where there are presently reasonable grounds to believe that persons are being deprived of their right to vote, there is little reason to believe that such litigation would afford adequate relief." As the Commission explains:

The burden of litigation involved in acting against each new evasion of the Constitution, county by county, and registrar by registrar, would be immense. Nor is there any presently available effective remedy for a situation where the registrars simply resign (abridged report at p. 85).

From all this the Commission finally concluded that "against the prejudice of registrars and jurors, the U.S. Government appears under present laws to be helpless to make good the guarantees of the U.S. Constitution."

That is why the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. WILLIAMS], and other Senators have urged that the Department of Justice be given greater authority to institute proceedings to protect the legal rights, the voting rights of citizens of the United States.

The Commission's report has laid the groundwork for legislative action to finally remedy this situation. The Commission's recommendation for temporary Federal registrars in cases of arbitrary denials of the right to vote, and the proposal by three members of the Commission for a constitutional amendment establishing universal suffrage and doing away with literacy or interpretation tests or poll taxes may at last provide the ingredients for a solution to this perennial problem.

I hope that action on these and other substantive civil rights measures will be taken early in the next session of this Congress.

I know that it may not be possible to take action in this session, but the 86th Congress has a political and moral responsibility to take action and at least to follow through on the recommendations of the Civil Rights Commission.

If we fail to act on this problem during the next session, it takes no crystal ball to see that these issues will be sharply before both national party conventions and before the people during the next national election. The surest way to prevent trouble at the national party conventions is to take constructive action in this Congress. In that way we can be assured that the respective political parties will be able to adopt resolutions and platforms consonant with the requirements and the needs of the time.

Meanwhile, we must now extend the life of the Commission.

We must extend the Commission because its works has just begun. It has more voting complaints to investigate. There are other States where it will need to hold voting hearings. It needs to complete and keep up to date its compilation of racial voting statistics, county by county. It needs to continue its studies of discrimination in housing and of the role played by Federal housing laws and policies. Particularly in education it needs to continue and extend its studies. It has made a worthwhile beginning here. I would particularly call attention to the two fundamental premises it unanimously adopted in its findings on education:

(1) The American system of public education must be preserved without impairment because an educated citizenry is the mainstay of the Republic and full educational opportunity for each and every citizen is America's major defense against the world threat to freedom.

(2) The constitutional right to be free from compulsory segregation in public education can be and must be realized, for this is a government of law, and the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court is the supreme law of the land.

That three distinguished southerners should join the three northern members in accepting those fundamental premises is most heartening. I am also impressed by their unanimous statement that "the problem, therefore, is how to comply with the Supreme Court decision while preserving and even improving public education." They also state the hard fact which responsible citizens must face and act upon:

The ultimate choice of each State is between finding reasonable ways of ending compulsory segregation in its schools or abandoning its system of free public education (ibid.).

I was also happy to read the Commission's finding that "in many instances desegregation has been used by the local community as the occasion to raise its educational standards."

From these excellent starting points, the Commission can and should go on to become a valuable center for information on how local communities can comply with the constitutional requirement of desegregation and at the same time improve the educational standards of all students.

And beyond these studies in voting, education and housing, the Commission should take up and report upon the other questions of equal protection of the laws such as discrimination in employment, in the administration of justice, in public accommodations, in public transportation.

So let us promptly extend the Commission and during the next few months study its report in order to act promptly on its substantive recommendations in the next session. As Father Hesburgh, the president of Notre Dame and a member of the Commission, says in his closing statement in the Commission report, "no American can escape taking a stand on civil rights."

Each of us—

He says—

must choose to deepen the anguish of the problem, by silence and passivity, if nothing more, or must take a forthright stand on principles that give some hope of eventual solution.

I would like to close by quoting the central principle stated by Father Hesburgh, the principle that I hope this Congress and if not this administration, then let us make sure the next administration, will finally bring to full fruition in this land.

Civil rights—

are important corollaries of the great proposition, at the heart of Western civilization, that every human person is a res sacra, a sacred reality, and as such is entitled to the opportunity of fulfilling those great human potentials with which God has endowed every man.

Mr. President, the report of the Civil Rights Commission is most timely. It comes when we will be called upon within a few days to act upon, No. 1, a supplemental appropriation for the Civil Rights Commission and, I gather, No. 2, an extension of authority of the Civil Rights Commission. I wish the Senate to know that both of these are absolutely required. The work has just started. The beginnings are constructive and lend themselves to a helpful and decent solution of many of the grave problems which affect our country today in the field of human rights. I am pleased that we have made such splendid progress, and I am hopeful we shall continue on in this same constructive and responsible manner.

Mr. ALLOTT. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not mind if I comment briefly on his speech, which I think is creditable.

As we study the civil rights issue I believe we can agree that one of the main things in the core of the problem which concerns us is to be sure that people have the right to exercise their franchise at the polls; and I agree wholeheartedly that we must act at this session of the Congress or we will have abrogated many of our responsibilities to our constituents. I feel just as deeply as he does about this issue, as he well knows, and I compliment him on calling the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLOTT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not only the voting record of the distinguished Senator from Colorado, as viewed by one on this side of the aisle, but the actions of the Senator from Colorado have demonstrated again and again his sincerity of purpose in the field of civil rights, as in many other areas. He has been a copartner, so to speak, in all the effort that has been made in Congress to enact effective civil rights legislation. I am hopeful that we will be able to continue that record this session and into the next.

Mr. ALLOTT. That is my wish, also, and I appreciate the kind remarks of the Senator from Minnesota.

WATER RIGHTS UNDER STATE LAWS

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I shall speak briefly on the subject of "Water Rights." What I have to say should be of interest to every Member of the Senate. Water rights mean rights to use water from natural flows for recognized beneficial purposes under whatever laws that apply within any State, whether under a riparian doctrine, or under the doctrine of priority of appropriation. These rights are property rights in this country and are in the category of real property. In some States both surface and ground water rights are granted pursuant to their laws.

Generally, rights to use water are appurtenant to land areas. Riparian rights attach to lands abutting natural bodies of water. In Eastern States such rights have always been recognized. In the 17 Western States—18 including Alaska—ownership or control is claimed by the States of all surface waters within their borders, subject, of course, to interstate compacts and interstate adjudications, but such ownership or control is for the sole purpose of granting permits to secure rights for beneficial uses and for the administration of those uses for the protection of all rights so acquired. The Western States all recognize the priority-of-appropriation doctrine. Priority in this sense implies that first in time constitutes the better right. Federal reclamation law adopts and requires compliance with these laws.

Western States have granted appropriative rights, with priorities dating back to 100 years, to more than 25 million acres of irrigated lands, to municipalities and to industries—for domestic and manufacturing purposes—and for the generation of electricity. All such rights vest in lands benefited by the application of water for agriculture, as in farms, and they vest in muncipal areas, and in places of use as at hydroelectric powerplants. A water right has a specific date of priority in time which attaches to a specific area or site. Neither points of diversion nor purposes and places of use may be changed if other users would be injured thereby. These qualities give appropriations both security and value with a definite status. This is necessary especially in the arid West where supplies rarely meet the demands.

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in the Senate and the House have before them several types of bills which propose to require that the Government, its agencies, and its officials shall use, or let use be made of the waters from a Federal project only if such use is pursuant to State laws pertaining to the appropriation and administration of those water resources. I shall explain why such proposed legislation is before Congress. We are presently facing a situation where implications resulting from interpretations of decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court need our study and our most careful consideration. The appropriation, use, and controls of the water resources of the Western States have been and are excellent examples of highest administrative efficiency. The result is that billions of dollars are invested by private interests in the development of the waters of the West.

The Western States have relied for a century on Federal statutes dating from the act of July 26, 1866, granting rights-of-way to canal owners over public lands (14 Stat. 253). This and 29 additional statutes were listed in appendix B of a statement presented by Senator O'MAHONEY at the hearings before the House Interior Committee on July 20, 1959. The Senator from Wyoming also submitted appendixes A and C.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these appendixes be included in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the appendixes may be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, the implications of these interpretations, which I mentioned, by some Federal departments, agencies, and officers, have resulted in claims by them that the Government is not bound, nor are any agencies or officials bound, by the laws of States relating to the uses of surface and ground waters. Two recent decisions of the Supreme Court when taken together have brought about this situation. We find in the Government those who still contend that the Government, first, is the owner of all waters in the Western States because it never ceded the waters to the States; and, second, is in full control of the waters of the Eastern States because of the navigability implications of the commerce clause of the Constitution. I shall discuss these claims in that order.

The third item in Senator O'MAHONEY's appendix B is from the Desert Land Act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377, as amended). It is apparent that the act severed all nonnavigable waters from the public lands of the United States and declared the sources of water supply to be available for appropriation for beneficial purposes. This was the opinion of the Supreme Court in 1935 in California-Oregon Power Co. v. Portland Cement Co. (295 U.S. 142).

The Desert Land Act followed and supplemented the acts of July 26, 1866, and July 9, 1870, granting rights-of-way to canal owner over public lands. Under the Desert Land Act water rights were required to be obtained in conformity with the laws of the States and the Territories.

Patents were issued by the United States under the terms of the Desert Land Act for thousands of acres over a long period of years. It was well known to the Government that such approved water supplies for the irrigation of those arid lands were from both navigable and nonnavigable sources. Those water rights have never been questioned. I wish to emphasize, however, that these rights derived from local authority and not from a Federal appropriative statute. We know as a matter of fact there was not such statute then—nor is there one now.

The records in the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, show final desert land entries to June 30, 1956, by States, as follows:

State or Territory	Entries
	Number	Acres
California	6,122	1,108,014
Oregon	2,319	357,978
Washington	1,117	137,600
Arizona	2,242	480,070
Idaho	6,262	1,172,540
Nevada	947	177,965
Utah	3,209	495,894
Colorado	5,640	1,013,280
Dakota Territory	1	300
Montana	16,403	3,051,381
New Mexico	1,885	281,581
North Dakota	118	20,254
South Dakota	1,118	180,759
Wyoming	7,937	1,618,367
Grand total	[1] 55,320	[1] 10,095,983

[1] These figures are nearly identical to the patents issued.

Thus, and it must be conceded to have been a requirement of the act, water became appurtenant to the lands irrigated to a minimum area of 1,260,000 acres for the reason the rules required a minium of one-eighth of any legal subdivision entered was to be irrigated. I estimate that under the Desert Land Act about 5 million acres were actually reclaimed by irrigation. These lands still exercise their original rights to use water acquired pursuant to local laws. This fact, most assuredly, is contrary to the claim that the Federal Government could have rights in the West not derived pursuant to State water laws. It also refutes the claim that navigable waters were not subject to appropriation under State laws, because most of the approved water supplies were from navigable streams or their tributaries.

For Federal reclamation developments I refer to item 7 of Senator O'MAHONEY's appendix B. This is section 8 of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 390), which is the first of several reclamation acts. It makes mandatory the requirement that the Secretary of the Interior shall follow the procedures of the States in securing rights to the use of water for irrigation. All 30 items in appendix B apply to the West. They show congressional consistency unmatched in any other field of statutory law.

Western Senators are familiar with section 1 of the Flood Control Act of 1944, better known by the title of "O'Mahoney-Millikin Amendment." This was an extraordinary declaration by the Congress of the broad principle stated in the preamble to the section. It declared that Congress recognized the interests and rights of States in planning and providing for the orderly use of the waters within their borders, and to protect present and future rights in the use of those waters. There is need for clarification here, however, because the declaration of policy also implies that the Federal Government has jurisdiction of a kind over the waters of the Nation. This jurisdiction is assumed under the several rivers and harbors acts and flood control acts as well as the Federal Power Act. It is through litigation concerning water resources development by the Corps of Engineers and by licensees under the Federal Power Act that the courts have defined navigation and flood control.

This brings me to the second claim to jurisdiction by certain agencies of the Government over the natural bodies of water—lakes and the perennial, intermittent, and ephemeral streams. The jurisdiction of the Government is, nevertheless, only that conferred by acts of Congress pursuant to permissive provisions of the Constitution.

The authorization of projects to improve navigation on our streams and to alleviate flood damage did not, in my opinion, include the granting of the authority stated in the Red River decision of the Supreme Court (313 U.S. 508). I ask unanimous consent that a paragraph from this decision be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OKLAHOMA v. ATKINSON CO. (313 U.S. (508) 525 (1941)) (RED RIVER CASE) (POWERS OF CONGRESS)

We would, however, be less than frank if we failed to recognize this project as part of a comprehensive flood control program for the Mississippi itself. But there is no constitutional reason why Congress or the courts should be blind to the engineering prospects of protecting the Nation's arteries of commerce through control of the watersheds. There is no constitutional reason why Congress cannot, under the commerce power, treat the watersheds as a key to flood control on navigable streams and their tributaries. Nor is there a constitutional necessity for viewing each reservoir project in isolation from a comprehensive plan covering the entire basin of a particular river.

We need no survey to know that the Mississippi is a navigable river. We need no survey to know that the tributaries are generous contributors to the flood of the Mississippi. And it is common knowledge that Mississippi floods have paralyzed commerce in the affected areas and have impaired navigation itself. We have recently recognized that "flood protection, watershed development, recovery of the cost of improvements through utilization of power are * * * parts of commerce control" (U.S. v. Appalachian Power Co., supra, p. 426). And we now add that the power of flood control extends to the tributaries of navigable streams. For, just as control over the nonnavigable parts of a river may be essential or desirable in the interests of the navigable portions, so may the key to flood control on a navigable stream be found in whole or in part in flood control on its tributaries * * *. The exercise of the granted power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce may be aided by appropriate and needful control of activities and agencies which, though intrastate, affect that commerce.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, in the best interests of all of our 50 States, we should study this situation before us. I think States and their subdivisions have rights and obligations to plan and control their water resources. I do not want all control and jurisdiction to lie in the Federal Government. Without acts of Congress there would be no navigation nor flood control works. I do not like the assumption that the commerce and property clauses of the Constitution may be cited as authority for navigation and flood control projects constructed by Federal agencies or under license from the Federal Power Commission. It should be stated, rather, that the acts of Congress authorizing such construction have given due regard to the protection of private properties and to local laws concerning water resources.

Nor do I want the Congress to sit idly by and see a decision, such as the Pelton Dam decision—349 U.S. 435—finalize the argument that local plans and controls are to be ignored where Federal reservations are used for water projects. And I do not concur with the First Iowa Co-op decision—328 U.S. 152—which was based on the Red River decision concerning the definition of navigable waters. I cannot agree with the implication existing in both of these decisions that Congress has granted jurisdiction in its several acts over the waters of the Nation—within all 50 States—to agencies of the Federal Government. That the Supreme Court has, in effect, so decided, is the reason we are compelled to consider remedial legislation.

Most of our States are now engaged in studies of their surface and ground waters. They are studying, in addition to the nature and extent of these resources, the laws needed to enable them to plan and manage these resources as well as to protect existing and future rights to put them to use. At present there is little evidence that they realize the limitations of the rights of the States to attain these objectives. I have tried to state the case as it now exists.

In the West we need immediate remedial legislation to restore to the people the security of their investment in a billion-dollar water development. These works were not constructed by Federal agencies. Nor were they paid for from Federal appropriations. S. 851, of which I am one of 16 sponsors, is legislation, I think, that we can now agree upon.

Appendix C, which is a part of exhibit 1, is a draft of substitute for S. 863, 85th Congress, submitted by Department of Interior with the concurrence of the Departments of Justice, Defense, Agriculture and the Bureau of the Budget. S. 851 is patterned after this appendix.

S. 851 provides security and recognition of all water rights under the laws of the States that have their sources of supply from waters that originate or traverse Federal reservations. In the West practically all of our perennial streams rise in national forest reservations. The enactment of this, or a similarly worded bill, would nullify all claims resulting from the Pelton Dam decision. I believe it would leave water rights, where Federal reservations are involved in any way, in the status we assumed them to have prior to that decision. I have indicated that I believe that in the Western States namely, in the priority-of-appropriation States, a decision similar to that in the First Iowa Co-op case might not have been handed down by the Supreme Court. History and practice alike support this view. We should, however, now consider the effect on private property of claims based on the Federal-reservation theory on the basis of the Pelton Dam decision.

The reservations with which we are concerned are those created by withdrawals of the public domain. Thirty of our fifty States were created out of the public lands of the United States. The 20 States which were never public land States are the Thirteen Original States and the following: Vermont, Maine, Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, Texas, and Hawaii. I note that item 29 of Senator O'MAHONEY's appendix B is from an act affecting South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama. The first two are honored members of the Thirteen Original States, the other two were created from the public domain. I think we may find it highly desirable to act together in the common objective of protecting the rights of our citizens to the use of water supplies where those rights are recognized by or acquired under the laws of our States.

EXHIBIT I

APPENDIXES AS SUBMITTED BY SENATOR JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY AT HEARINGS BEFORE THE HOUSE INTERIOR COMMITTEE, JULY 20, 1959

APPENDIX A: FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL POWERS FURNISHING BASES FOR ACTIVITIES IN WATER RESOURCE DEVELOPMENTS

Article I, section 8 (commerce clause): "The Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Article I, section 10 (compact clause): "No State shall, without the consent of Congress * * * enter into an agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power."

Article IV, section 3 (property clause): "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

Article VI (supremacy clause): "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

APPENDIX B: PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL STATUTES IN RECOGNITION OF STATE LAW AS GOVERNING WATER RIGHTS

1. Section 9 of the act of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. 253, 30 U.S.C., sec. 51 (1952)): "Whenever, by priority of possesson, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decision of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right-of-way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage."

2. Section 17 of the act of July 9, 1870 (16 Stat. 218, 30 U.S.C., sec. 52 (1952)): "All patents granted, or homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by section 51 of this title." (Both the act of July 26, 1866, and July 9, 1870, are embodied in 43 U.S.C., sec. 661 (1952)).

3. Section 1 of the Desert Land Act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377, as amended, 43 U.S.C.A. sec. 321 (1958 Supp.)): "It shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age 'who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such' and upon payment of 25 cents per acre—to file a declaration under oath with the officer designated by the Secretary of the Interior of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one-half section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter; Provided, however, That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same, on or to any tract of desert land of three hundred and twenty acres shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation; and such right shall not exceed the amount of water actually appropriated, and necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation; and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes subject to existing rights."

4. Section 18 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1101, as amended, 43 U.S.C. sec. 946 (1952)): "The right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal ditch company, irrigation or drainage district formed for the purpose of irrigation or drainage, and duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory: Provided, That * * * the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under authority of the respective States or Territories."

5. Act of February 26, 1897 (29 Stat. 599, 43 U.S.C. sec. 664 (19522)): "All reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved shall be open to use and occupation under sections 946–949, inclusive of this title, and any State is authorized to improve and occupy such reservoir sites to the same extent as an individual or private corporation, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the charges for water coming in whole or part from reservoir sites used or occupied under the provisions of this section shall always be subject to the control and regulation of the respective States and Territories in which such reservoirs are in whole or part situate."

6. Section 1 of the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 36, 16 U.S.C. sec. 481 (1952)): "All waters within the boundaries of national forests may be used for domestic, mining, milling, or irrigation purposes, under the laws of the State wherein such national forests are situated, or under the laws of the United States and the rules and regulations established thereunder."

7. Section 8 of the Reclamation Act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 390, 43 U.S.C., secs 372, 383 (1952)): "Nothing in sections 372, 373, 381, 383, 391, 392, 411, 416, 419, 421, 431, 432, 434, 439, 461, 491, and 498 of this title shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State or Territory relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of such sections, shall proceed in conformity with such laws, and nothing in such sections shall in any way affect any right of any State or of the Federal Government or of any landowner, appropriator, or user of water in, to, or from any interstate stream or the waters thereof: Provided, That the right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this Act shall be appurtenant to the land irrigated, and the beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right."

8. Section 4 of the act of February 1, 1905 (33 Stat. 628, 16 U.S.C., sec. 524 (1952)): "Rights-of-way for the construction and maintenance of dams, reservoirs, waterplants, ditches, flumes, pipes, tunnels, and canals, within and across the national forests of the United States are granted to citizens and corporations of the United States for municipal or mining purposes, and for the purposes of the milling and reduction of ores, during the period of their beneficial use, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and subject to the laws of the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated."

9. Section 2 of the Warren Act of February 21, 1911 (36 Stat. 926, 43 U.S.C., sec. 524 (1952)): "In carrying out the provisions of the reclamation law, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, to cooperate with irrigation districts, water-users' associations, corporations, entrymen, or water users for the construction or use of such reservoirs, canals, or ditches as may be advantageously used by the Government and irrigation districts, water-users' associations, corporations, entrymen, or water users for impounding, delivering, and carrying water for irrigation purposes: Provided, That nothing contained in this section or section 523 of this title shall be held or construed as enlarging or attempting to enlarge the right of the United States, under existing law, to control the waters of any stream in any State."

10. Section 11 of the act of December 19, 1913 (relating to Hetch-Hetchy), granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights-of-way over public lands and lands in Yosemite National Park and Stanislaus National Forest for the construction of works to bring water and power to San Francisco for domestic purposes and uses (38 Stat. 250):

"SEC. 11. That this Act is a grant upon certain express conditions specifically set forth herein, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this Act, shall proceed in conformity with the laws of said State."

11. Sections 9(b) and 27 of the Federal Power Act of June 10, 1920: "9. Each applicant for a license under this chapter shall submit to the Commission—

"(b) Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to bed and banks and to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes and with respect to the right to engage in the business of developing, transmitting, and distributing power, and in any other business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this chapter." (41 Stat. 1068, 16 U.S.C., sec. 802(b)(1952)).

"27. Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the respective States relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired therein." (41 Stat. 1077, 16 U.S.C., sec. 821 (1952)).

12. Section 18 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928 (45 Stat. 1065, 43 U.S.C., sec. 617q (1952): "Nothing herein shall be construed as interfering with such rights as the States now have either to the waters within their borders or to adopt such policies and enact such laws as they may deem necessary with respect to the appropriation, control, and use of waters within their borders, except as modified by the Colorado River Compact or other interstate agreement."

13. Section 3 of the Taylor Grazing Act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1270, as amended, 43 U.S.C., sec. 315b (1952)): "Provided further, That nothing in this chapter shall be construed or administered in any way to diminish or impair any right to the possession and use of water for mining, agriculture, manufacture, or other purposes which has heretofore vested or accrued under existing law validly affecting the public lands or which may be hereafter initiated or acquired and maintained in accordance with such law."

14. Section 4 of the act of August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 870, 16 U.S.C., 590(u) (1952)): "As a condition to extending benefits under sections 590r–590x of this title to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of sections 590v–590x of this title, require—

"(1) The enactment of State and local laws providing for soil conserving land uses and practices, and the storage, conservation and equitable utilization of waters;

"(2) Agreements or covenants in regard to the maintenance and permanent use of such water, facilities or lands benefited by such facilities;

"(3) Contributions in money, services, materials or otherwise to any operations conferring such benefits."

15. Section 3 of the Water Conservation Act of August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1419, as amended, 16 U.S.C., sec. 590z–1(b) (2) (1952)): "No actual construction of the physical features of a project shall be undertaken unless and until—

"(2) the Secretary has found (i) that water rights adequate for the purposes of the project have been acquired with titles and at prices satisfactory to him, or that such water rights have been initiated and in his judgment can be perfected in conformity with State law and any applicable interstate agreements and in a manner satisfactory to him; and (ii) that such water rights can be utilized for the purposes of the project in conformity with State law and any applicable interstate agreements and in a manner satisfactory to him."

16. Section 14 of the Boulder Canyon Project Adjustment Act of July 19, 1940 (54 Stat. 779, 43 U.S.C., sec. 618m (1952)): "Nothing in this subchapter shall be construed as interfering with such rights as the States had on July 19, 1940, either to the waters within their borders or to adopt such policies and enact such laws as they deem necessary with respect to the appropriation, control, and use of waters within their borders, except as modified by the Colorado River compact or other interstate agreement."

17. Section 1 of the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 887, 33 U.S.C., sec. 701–1 (1952)): "(a) The Chief of Engineers shall transmit a copy of his proposed report to each affected State, and, in case the plans or proposals covered by the report are concerned with the use or control of waters which rise in whole or in part west of the ninety-seventh meridian, to the Secretary of the Interior. Within ninety days from the date of receipt of said proposed report, the written views and recommendations of each affected State and of the Secretary of the Interior may be submitted to the Chief of Engineers. The Secretary of the Army shall transmit to the Congress, with such comments and recommendations as he deems appropriate, the proposed report together with the submitted views and recommendations of affected States and of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Army may prepare and make said transmittal any time following said ninety-day period. The letter of transmittal and its attachments shall be printed as a House or Senate document.

"(b) The use for navigation, in connection with the operation and maintenance of such works herein authorized for construction, of waters arising in States lying wholly or partly west of the ninety-eighth meridian shall be only such use as does not conflict with any beneficial consumptive use, present or future, in States lying wholly or partly west of the ninety-eighth meridian, of such waters for domestic, municipal, stock water, irrigation, mining, or industrial purposes.

"(c) The Secretary of the Interior, in making investigations of and reports on works for irrigation and purposes incidental thereto shall, in relation to an affected State or States (as defined in paragraph (a) of this section), and to the Secretary of the Army, be subject to the same provisions regarding investigations, plans, proposals, and reports as prescribed in paragraph (a) of this section for the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of the Army. In the event a submission of views and recommendations, made by an affected State or by the Secretary of the Army pursuant to said provisions, sets forth objections to the plans or proposals covered by the report of the Secretary of the Interior, the proposed works shall not be deemed authorized except upon approval by an Act of Congress; and section 485h of title 43 and section 590z–1 of title 16 are amended accordingly."

18. Reservation (c) to the Mexican Water Treaty, United States Treaty Series No. 994 (59 Stat. 1265 (1945)): "(c) That nothing contained in the treaty or protocol shall be construed as authorizing the Secretary of State of the United States, the Commissioner of the United States section of the International Boundary and Water Commission, or the United States section of said Commission, directly or indirectly to alter or control the distribution of water to users within the territorial limits of any of the individual States."

19. The National Parks Act of August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 885, 16 U.S.C., sec. 17j–2 (1952)): "Appropriations for the National Park Service are authorized for—

"(g) Investigation and establishment of water rights in accordance with local custom, laws, and decisions of courts, including the acquisition of water rights or of lands or interest in lands or rights-of-way for use and protection of water rights necessary or beneficial in the administration and public use of the national parks and monuments."

20. Section 208 of the Act of July 10, 1952, authorizing suits against the United States in State courts for the adjudication of water rights (66 Stat. 560, 43 U.S.C., secs. 666 (a) and (c) (1952)): "(a) Consent is given to join the United States as a defendant in any suit (1) for the adjudication of rights to the use of water of a river system or other source, or (2) for the administration of such rights, where it appears that the United States is the owner of or is in the process of acquiring water rights by appropriation under State law, by purchase, by exchange, or otherwise, and the United States is a necessary party to such suit. The United States, when a party to any such suit, shall (1) be deemed to have waived any right to plead that the State laws are inapplicable or that the United States is not amenable thereto by reason of its sovereignty, and (2) shall be subject to the judgments, orders, and decrees of the court having jurisdiction, and may obtain review thereof, in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances: Provided, That no judgment for costs shall be entered against the United States in any such suit.

"(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing the joinder of the United States in any suit or controversy in the Supreme Court of the United States involving the right of States to the use of the water of any interstate stream."

21. Subsection 3(e) of the Submerged Lands Act of May 22, 1953 (67 Stat. 30, 43 U.S.C., sec. 1311(e) (1956 Supp.)): "Nothing in this chapter shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or in any way interfere with or modify the laws of the States which lie wholly or in part westward of the ninety-eighth meridian, relating to the ownership and control of ground and surface waters; and the control, appropriation, use, and distribution of such waters shall continue to be in accordance with the laws of such States."

22. Subsection 3(c) of the act of July 28, 1954, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct facilities for the Santa Margarita River Project, California (68 Stat. 577): "For the purposes of this Act the basis, measure, and limit of all rights of the United States of America pertaining to the use of water shall be the laws of the State of California: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as a grant or a relinguishment by the United States of America of any of its rights to the use of water which it acquired according to the laws of the State of California either as a result of its acquisition of the lands comprising Camp Joseph H. Pendleton and adjoining naval installations, and the rights to the use of water as a part of said acquisition, or through actual use or prescription or both since the date of that acquisition, if any, or to create any legal obligation to store any water in De Luz Reservoir, to the use of which it has such rights, or to require the division under this Act of water to which it has such rights."

23. Section 4(4) of the Act of August 4, 1954 (68 Stat. 667, as amended, 16 U.S.C.A. 1004(4) (1958 Supp.)) relating to watershed protection and flood prevention: "The Secretary shall require as a condition to providing Federal assistance for the installation of works of improvement that local organizations shall—

"(4) acquire, or provide assurance that landowners or water users have acquired, such water rights, pursuant to State law, as may be needed in the installation and operation of the work of improvement."

24. Section 4(b) of the act of July 23, 1955, providing for multiple use of the surface of tracts of public land (69 Stat. 368, 30 U.S.C., sec. 612(b) (1956 Supp.)): "Provided further, That nothing in sections 601, 603, and 611–615 of this title shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or in any way interfere with or modify the laws of the States which lie wholly or in part westward of the ninety-eighth meridian relating to the ownership, control, appropriation, use, and distribution of ground or surface waters within any unpatented mining claim."

25. Section 7 of the Colorado River Storage Project Act of April 11, 1956 (70 Stat. 109, 43 U.S.C.A., sec. 620f 1958 Supp.)): "Subject to the provisions of the Colorado River compact, neither the impounding nor the use of water for the generation of power and energy at the plants of the Colorado River storage project shall preclude or impair the appropriation of water for domestic or agricultural purposes pursuant to applicable State law."

26. Section 4 of the act of July 2, 1956, relating to the administration of section 9, subsections (d) and (e) of the Reclamation Act of 1939, (70 Stat. 483, 43 U.S.C.A., sec. 485h–4 (1958 Supp.)): "Nothing in this Act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary in carrying out the provisions of this Act, shall proceed in conformity with such laws, and nothing herein shall in any way affect any rights of any State or of the Federal Government or of any landowner, appropriator, or user of water in, to, or from any interstate stream or the waters thereof: Provided, That the right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this Act shall be appurtenant to the land irrigated and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right."

27. Section 4(b) of the Small Reclamation Projects Act of August 1956 (70 Stat. 1044, 43 U.S.C.A., sec. 422d(b) (1958 Supp.)): "Every such proposal shall include a showing that the organization already holds or can acquire all lands and interests in land (except public and other lands and interests in land owned by the United States which are within the administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary and subject to disposition by him) and rights, pursuant to applicable State law, to the use of water necessary for the successful construction, operation, and maintenance of the project and that it is ready, able, and willing to finance otherwise than by loan and grant under this Act such portion of the cost of construction (which portion shall include all costs of acquiring lands, interests in land, and rights to the use of water) as the Secretary shall have advised is proper in the circumstances."

28. Section 202 of the act of August 28, 1958, setting up a United States Study Commission to formulate a comprehensive plan for the development of certain Texas river basins (71 Stat. 1058):

"SEC. 202. In carrying out the purposes of this title it shall be the policy of Congress to—

"(1) recognize and protect the rights and interests of the State of Texas in determining the development of the watersheds of the rivers herein mentioned and its interests and rights in water utilization and control, as well as the preservation and protection of established uses."

1958 setting up a United States Study Com-

29. Section 2 of the act of August 28 mission to formulate a comprehensive plan for the development of certain streams in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama (72 Stat. 1090):

"SEC. 2. In carrying out the purposes of this Act it shall be the policy of Congress to—

"(1) recognize and protect the rights and interests of the States in determining the development of the watersheds of the rivers herein mentioned and their interests and rights in water utilization and control, as well as the preservation and protection of established uses."

30. Section 1 of the act of December 24, 1942, authorizing the Secretary of Interior to purchase lands necessary to carry on water resource measurements (56 Stat. 1086, 43 U.S.C., 36b): "That the Secretary of the Interior may, on behalf of the United States and for use by the Geological Survey in gaging streams, acquire lands by donation or when funds have been appropriated by Congress by purchase or condemnation but not in excess of ten acres for any one stream-gaging station. For the same purpose the Secretary may obtain easements, licenses, rights-of-way, and leases limited to run for such a period of time or term of years as may be required for the effective performance of the function of gaging streams: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State or Territory relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or any vested right acquired thereunder and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this Act shall proceed in conformity with such laws and nothing in this Act shall in any way affect any right of any State or of the Federal Government or of any landowner, appropriator, or user of water in, to, or from any interstate stream or the waters thereof."

NOTE.—The House has passed H.R. 4483 amending the 1942 act by making its provisions applicable also to underground water storage. It is now pending before the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

APPENDIX C: DRAFT OF SUBSTITUTE FOR S. 863, 85TH CONGRESS, SUBMITTED BY DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR WITH THE CONCURRENCE OF THE DEPARTMENTS OF JUSTICE, DEFENSE, AGRICULTURE, AND THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET, WITH COMMENTS, MAY 13, 1958

SECTION 1. The withdrawal or reservation of surveyed or unsurveyed public lands, heretofore or hereafter established, shall not affect any right to the use of water acquired pursuant to State law either before or after the establishment of such withdrawal or reservation.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as:

(a) Modifying or repealing any provision of any existing Act of Congress requiring that rights of the United States to the use of water be acquired pursuant to State law, to the extent that such provisions are otherwise applicable.

(b) Permitting appropriations of water under State law which interfere with the provisions of international treaties of the United States.

(c) Affecting, impairing, diminishing, subordinating or enlarging (1) the rights of the United States or any State to waters under any interstate compact or existing judicial decree; (2) the obligations of the United States to Indians or Indian tribes, or any right owned or held by or for Indians or Indian tribes; (3) any water right heretofore acquired by others than the United States under Federal or State law; (4) any right to any quantity of water used for governmental purposes or programs of the United States at any time from January 1, 1940, to the effective date of this Act; or (5) any right of the United States to use water hereafter lawfully initiated in the exercise of the express or necessarily implied authority of any present or future act of Congress or State law when such right is initiated prior to the acquisition by others of any right to use water pursuant to State law.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate. I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H.R. 8385) making appropriations for Mutual Security and related agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, the following amendment:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

Commission on Civil Rights, salaries and expenses. For an additional amount for "salaries and expenses," $500,000: Provided, That section 104(b) of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 is amended by striking out the words "two years" and inserting in lieu thereof "four years."

TRANSACTION OF ADDITIONAL ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following additional routine business was transacted:

REPORT ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments, to which was referred for examination and recommendation a list of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted a report thereon, pursuant to law.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED

Additional bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CASE of New Jersey (for himself, Mr. BUSH, Mr. DODD, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. KEATING, and Mr. NEUBERGER):

S. 2659. A bill to amend section 13a(1) of the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to the discontinuance or change of operations of certain trains and ferries; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

(See the remarks of Mr. CASE of New Jersey when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 2660. A bill for the relief of Peter Zanelotti; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTLETT (for himself, Mr. GRUENING, Mr. LONG of Hawaii, and Mr. FONG):

S. 2661. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to provide for participation of Federal-aid highway funds in the construction of approach roads to ferry facilities on the Federal-aid systems; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 2662. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Garold Van Cannon; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEATING (for himself, Mr. BEALL, Mr. COTTON, Mr. DODD, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. BUSH, and Mr. SALTONSTALL):

S. 2663. A bill to provide for equalizing the conditions of competition between domestic industries and foreign industries with respect to the level of wages and the working conditions in the production of articles imported into the United States; to the Committee on Finance.

(See remarks of Mr. KEATING when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in accordance with the order previously entered, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 9:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 9, 1959, at 9:30 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1959

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

Father James Lyons, St. Gertrude's Church, Chicago, offered the following prayer:

In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

May the ideas and the ideals of St. Francis of Assisi be true of each of our Representatives today. St. Francis wrote:

"Lord, make me an instrument of Your peace. Where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; and where there is sadness, joy.

"O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love; for it is in giving that we receive; it is in pardoning that we are pardoned; and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life."

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 435. Concurrent resolution declaring that the Congress does hereby express its deep realization and appreciation of the basic role that labor plays in our economy and of the contributions that American working men and women have made to America's well-being.

NEBRASKA MID-STATE UNIT IN THE MISSOURI RIVER BASIN PROJECT

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 8985) to provide for the inclusion of the Nebraska Mid-State unit in the Missouri River Basin project, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING SALE AT MARKET PRICES OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2504) to authorize the sale at market prices of agricultural commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide feed for livestock in areas determined to be emergency areas, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the purpose of the legislation and the clarifying amendments which were agreed to in committee?

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, this legislation authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture when he determines that a drought or other emergency is sufficient to authorize the sale of Commodity Credit Corporation feed at the current support price. The original bill passed by the other body would authorize such sales at the "market price," but, as I pointed out before the House Committee on Agriculture, this provision would not accomplish the real purpose of the bill, which is to assist the farmers in an area where there is a feed shortage stemming from drought or other emergencies. Presumably, in a feed shortage area, market prices will rise—perhaps above the level now authorized for the sale of CCC feed. In that case the bill as passed by the Senate would be of no value at all.

My amendment, approved unanimously by the House Committee on Agriculture, can save drought-stricken farmers many thousands of dollars by permitting Government feed to be sold at the existing support level price.

This is sound legislation because it not only gives the Secretary additional authority to help farmers in drought areas, but it can reduce costly Government storages. After all, one of the purposes of a grain storage program is to have a reserve supply of feed in case of drought. I find it hard to understand why the Secretary of Agriculture is so reluctant to use the drought authority he now has.

The Department of Agriculture objected to a phase of the bill as it passed the other body which permitted soil bank acres to be harvested in drought areas. We struck that title from the bill. Let me say that the soil bank emergency bill which the House passed yesterday is superior to the title which we removed from the pending bill. There are two or three other minor amendments that do not change the substance of the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGOVERN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. This legislation is permissive, and the Secretary is only authorized to act whenever the Governor of the State certifies that a particular need arises in his State?

Mr. McGOVERN. That is correct. I hope the House will not object to this bill needed by our farmers. We have greatly improved the measure as originally passed by the Senate. I trust that our action will be accepted by the other body and that Mr. Benson will use the additional authority which this bill gives him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell at market prices, any wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, or grain sorghums (hereafter referred to as feed grains), owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation, to provide feed for livestock in any area determined by him to be an emergency area under section 2.

SEC. 2. The Secretary may designate any area as an emergency area for the purposes of this Act if he determines that, as a result of flood, drought, hurricane, tornado, or other catastrophe there is a shortage of feed for livestock in such area.

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall not sell feed grains under this Act to any person unless he is satisfied that such person does not have, and is unable to obtain through normal channels of trade without undue financial hardship, sufficient feed for livestock owned by him, and unless such person agrees to use the feed grains only for such livestock.

SEC. 4. Any person who fails to carry out an agreement entered into under section 3 with respect to any feed grains purchased under this Act, or who disposes of any such feed grains other than by feeding to livestock owned by him, shall be subject to a penalty equal to but not in excess of the market value of the feed grains involved, to be recovered by the Secretary in a civil suit brought for that purpose.

SEC. 5. Section 107(a)(3) of the Soil Bank Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and except that the Secretary may authorize the producer to harvest hay on such acreage if, after certification by the Governor of the State in which such acreage is situated of the need therefor, the Secretary determines that it is necessary to permit such harvesting in order to alleviate damage, hardship, or suffering caused by severe drought, flood, or other natural disaster".

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "market" and insert "current support".

Page 2, line 1, after "may," insert "after certification by the Governor of the State in which such area is situated of the need therefor,".

Page 2, line 5, strike out "or other catastrophe" and insert "earthquake, or other catastrophe including disease or insect infestation".

Page 2, line 22, after the word "purpose," insert "and in addition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the sale at current support prices of agricultural commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide feed for livestock in areas determined to be emergency areas, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL BUILDING FOR THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 352 authorizing a preliminary study and review in connection with proposed additional building for the Library of Congress?

The question was taken.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 324, nays 47, not voting 65, as follows:

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is, Will the House suspend the rules and agree to House Resolution 379?

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time on Thursday, September 10, 1959, and at any time during the remainder of the week, to entertain motions to suspend the rules, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

INCREASED PER DIEM ALLOWANCE FOR TRAVEL

The SPEAKER. The further unfinished business is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5196) to increase the maximum rates of per diem allowance for employees of the Government traveling on official business, and for other purposes?

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HALLECK) there were—ayes 246, noes 68.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

OVERSEAS DIFFERENTIALS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

The SPEAKER. The further unfinished business is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 7758) to improve the administration of oversea activities of the Government of the United States, and for other purposes, as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHANSEN) there were—ayes 249, noes 71.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day.

The Clerk will call the first individual bill on the calendar.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 36) for the relief of Page A. Wilson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Page A. Wilson, Major, United States Air Force, is hereby relieved of all liability for repayment to the United States of the sum of $1,718.80, representing the balance as of May 1, 1959, of overpayments of longevity pay paid to him as the result of his claiming membership in the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army for the period November 17, 1930, to September 8, 1933, which period was disallowed by the Air Force after the said Page A. Wilson had been paid on the basis of such period for over fourteen years, the said Page A. Wilson having believed such period had been verified a short time after it had been originally claimed by him.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Page A. Wilson, any sum or amounts received or withheld from him after May 1, 1959, on account of the overpayments referred to in the first section of this Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARSHALOUIS SIMEONIAN

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1081) for the relief of Arshalouis Simeonian.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (6) of section 212(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Arshalouis Simeonian may, if he is found to be otherwise admissible under the provisions of such Act, be issued a visa and be admitted to the United States for permanent residence, under such conditions and controls as the Attorney General, after consultation with the Surgeon General of the United States, deems necessary to impose: Provided, That a suitable or proper bond or undertaking, approved by the Attorney General, shall be given by or on behalf of the said Arshalouis Simeonian in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as bonds or undertakings given under section 213 of such Act: Provided further, That this Act shall apply only to grounds for exclusion under paragraph (6) of section 212(a) of such Act known to the Secretary of State or the Attorney General prior to the date of the enactment of this Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of section 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, Matilda Kolich, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Mr. and Mrs. Vid A. Kolich, citizens of the United States: Provided, That the natural parents of Matilda Kolich shall not, come by virtue of such parentage, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM J. BARBIERO

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7036) for the relief of William J. Barbiero.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William J. Barbiero, of Brooklyn, New York, the sum of $2,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all the claims of William J. Barbiero against the United States for loss of earnings and damage to his property due to the deterioration in storage, as a result of delay on the part of agents of the United States in processing his petition for the return of his truck, the sole asset of his trucking business, which had been confiscated through no fault of his by agents of the United States Treasury on October 21, 1958: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike "$2,000" and insert "$300."

Page 1, lines 9, 10, and 11, strike ", as a result of delay on the part of agents of the United States in processing his petition for the return."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES H. BIEDERMAN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8761) for the relief of the estate of Charles H. Biederman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding any statute of limitations, the lapse of time, the limitations contained in sections 322 and 3774 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, or the defense of res adjudicata and particularly such a defense of res adjudicata with respect to the decision of the Tax Court of the United States entered August 26, 1948, pursuant to a stipulation entered into on August 16, 1948, by a guardian of Charles H. Biederman, jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of the estate of Charles H. Biederman, deceased, for the overpayment of Federal income taxes of the said Charles H. Biederman for the taxable years 1936 and 1944, inclusive, together with the amounts of penalties and interest paid thereon.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OURANIA BEN BLIKAS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2101) for the relief of Ourania Ben Blikas.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALTER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Ourania Ben Blikas shall be held and considered to be the natural-born minor alien child of Mr. and Mrs. Ben John Blikas, citizens of the United States: Provided, That the natural mother of the beneficiary shall not, by virtue of such parentage, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAPT. THOMAS J. McARDLE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1149) for the relief of Capt. Thomas J. McArdle.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Captain Thomas J. McArdle, United States Air Force, a sum equal to the amount which he would have received under the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 if he had made timely application under such Act for compensation for unused accrued leave, the said Captain McArdle having failed to make application for such compensation because of the confidential nature of his assignment in the United States Air Force during the period allowed for filing under such Act.

The bill was orderd to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DONALD G. COPLAN

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1891) for the relief of Donald G. Coplan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Donald G. Coplan, Minneapolis, Minnesota, the sum of $500. Such sum represents reimbursement in the amount of the judgment and costs for which the said Donald G. Coplan was held liable and has paid as a result of a civil action in the court of the State of Minnesota. This civil action arose out of an accident which occurred on Octobr 4, 1955, between an automobile owned by the said Richard Vossen and a United States mail truck driven by the said Donald G. Coplan, a motor vehicle operator in the Minneapolis post office motor vehicle service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COL. PHILIP M. WHITNEY—DECORATION TENDERED BY FRANCE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 252) to authorize Col. Philip M. Whitney, U.S. Army, retired, to accept and wear the decoration tendered him by the Government of the Republic of France.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Colonel Philip M. Whitney, United States Army, retired, is authorized to accept and wear the decoration known as the Croix de Guerre with palm, and to accept any supporting documents tendered him by the Government of the Republic of France. The Secretary of State shall deliver such decoration and any such supporting documents to the said Colonel Philip M. Whitney.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF JOHN STEVE

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1540) for the relief of Edward F. Stefan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,506.21 to Edward F. Stefan, the brother of John Steve, CBM (PA), United States Naval Reserve, deceased, in full settlement of all claims against the United States. Such sum represents arrears of pay and allowances and the six months' death gratuity pay, which he would have been entitled to had he filed claim prior to the limitations of time after the death of his brother, the said John Steve, whose death was established on October 24, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5: Strike "$11,506.21" and insert "$10,181.41".

Page 1, line 6: Strike "Edward F. Stefan, the brother" and insert "the Estate".

Page 1, lines 9, 10, and 11: Strike "and the six months' death gratuity pay, which he would have been entitled to had he filed claim prior to the limitations of time after the death of his brother."

Page 2, line 3: Strike "in excess of 10 per centum thereof".

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of the estate of John Steve."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARGARET P. COPIN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4546) for the relief of Margaret P. Copin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Civil Service Retirement Act, Mrs. Margaret P. Copin, Annandale, Virginia, shall be held and considered to have performed twenty years of service which is creditable for the purposes of such Act.

Any annuity payable by reason of this Act shall commence as of October 1, 1958.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PIONEER AIR LINES, INC.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4965) for the relief of Pioneer Air Lines, Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment, with such interest as the Court may determine, upon the claim of Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated, against the United States for such sums as the court may find Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated, to be legally or equitably entitled as a result of acts or failures to act by the Civil Aeronautics Board, including the decision rendered by the Civil Aeronautics Board in 1953 (docket numbered 5499) denying a mail pay subsidy increase which resulted in or was the occasion for damage to Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated. The court, in reviewing the decision and the conduct of the Civil Aeronautics Board and its members, may enter judgment in favor of Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated, to compensate it for such damage is it may find was caused or occasioned by all the circumstances surrounding the issuance of the Civil Aeronautics Board's decision and by the decision itself.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, notwithstanding the lapse of time, laches, or any other statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 1491 of title 28 of the United States Code. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as an implication of liability on the part of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert "That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the courts of appeals of the United States and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia to review the decision of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the case of Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated (Docket Number 5499), including the orders of the Board dated March 13, 1953, and May 4, 1953.

"SEC. 2. A petition for review may be filed by Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated, at any time within sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act as of right and notwithstanding the expiration of a period of more than sixty days from the dates of said orders.

"SEC. 3. Except as provided in section 2 of this Act, any petition for review which may be filed by Pioneer Air Lines, Incorporated, shall be governed by the provisions of section 1006 of the Civil Aeronautics Act (49 U.S.C. 646)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAM J. BUZZANCA

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 6712) for the relief of Sam J. Buzzanca.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sam J. Buzzanca, Birmingham, Alabama, the sum of $8,100. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Sam J. Buzzanca against the United States for reimbursement to him of amounts paid by him to the United States for real property formerly belonging to W. H. Brown seized by the Internal Revenue Service and sold for unpaid taxes: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, change the period after "$8,100" to a comma and add the following: "upon conveyance to the United States of America by said Sam J. Buzzanca of all his right, title and interest in and to real property situated in McCalla, Alabama, all as described and set forth in a quitclaim deed dated July 7, 1955, to said Sam J. Buzzanca from George D. Patterson, District Director of Internal Revenue, filed in the office of the Judge of Probate, Tuscaloosa County, State of Alabama, August 18, 1955, and recorded in Deed Record book 370, page 71, and his signature and acknowledgment of all papers, instruments, documents and releases that may be required from him by the United States of America in acquiring said right, title and interest."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "The", insert "conveyance of said right, title and interest and the."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

NEAL E. ANDERSEN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 6885) for the relief of Neal Anderson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Neal Anderson, Stockton, California, the sum of $343.37. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Neal Anderson against the United States for reimbursement of the amount required to be paid by him for the transportation of his household goods from the United States Air Force storage branch, Savannah, Georgia, to the Hamilton Air Force Base, California, under Government bill of lading numbered WX-8584605, dated April 22, 1953, following the receipt of orders dated March 9, 1953, directing his release from active duty as a captain in the United States Air Force Reserve: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, strike "in excess of 10 per centum thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Neal E. Andersen."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN NAPOLI

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7260) for the relief of John Napoli.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Napoli, San Francisco, California, the sum of $46,141. Payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said John Napoli against the United States for personal injuries, loss of and damage to his personal property, and other loss and damage resulting from his activity in saving, courageously and with sacrifice of his own health and property, the lives of naval personnel in connection with the sinking of the United States ship Benevolence on August 25, 1950. The said John Napoli shall not be obligated to repay to the United States any sums heretofore paid to him on account of such injuries, loss, and damage: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike "$46,141" and insert "$25,000."

Page 2, lines 6 and 7, strike "in excess of 10 per centum thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM E. DULIN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7932) for the relief of William E. Dulin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That William E. Dulin, Adelphi, Maryland, is hereby relieved of all liability to refund to the United States the sum of $565.90. Such sum is the aggregate amount of salary erroneously paid to the said William E. Dulin for the period beginning July 17, 1955, and ending September 20, 1958, but without knowledge of such error on his part, in connection with the reallocation of his civilian position at the United States Naval Gun Factory, Washington, District of Columbia, from grade 5 to grade 4 of the General Schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. In the audit and settlement of the accounts of any certifying or disbursing officer of the United States, full credit shall be allowed for the amount for which liability is relieved by this section.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said William E. Dulin, a sum equal to the aggregate of the amounts (if any) which have been repaid by him to the United States or which have been withheld by the United States from amounts otherwise due him from the United States, by reason of the liability of which he is relieved by the first section of this Act. No part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8: strike out "1955" and insert "1958."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FATHER KENNETH M. RIZER

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7935) for the relief of Father Kenneth M. Rizer.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $963 to Father Kenneth M. Rizer, of Norfolk, Virginia. Payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of Father Kenneth M. Rizer against the United States arising out of the collision which occurred at about 12:30 a.m., October 23, 1956, on Airport Parkway in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, between a truck owned by the United States and being driven by a member of the United States Air Force and an automobile being driven by Father Kenneth M. Rizer. This claim is not cognizable under tort claims procedure as provided in title 28, United States Code: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MISS ELSIE ROBEY

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8110) for the relief of Miss Elsie Robey.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Miss Elsie Robey, of Breckenridge, Michigan, the sum of $25,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all the claims of Miss Elsie Robey against the United States arising out of an accident in Saginaw, Michigan, on May 31, 1943, in which she was struck by a United States Post Office truck and received severe and permanent injuries: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike "in excess of 10 per centum thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MACO WAREHOUSE CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8801) for the relief of the Maco Warehouse Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Maco Warehouse Company, Stockton, California, the sum of $1,745.86. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of such company against the United States for the cost of certain alterations and repairs made by such company to certain premises leased from the United States under contract numbered DA(s)04–203–eng–211, dated June 23, 1950, for which costs such company has not been reimbursed. Such sum represents the difference between the total amount determined by the United States Court of Claims to be equitably due such company from the United States and the amount of a certain judgment ordered by such court to be entered in favor of the United States against such company. Such determination and judgment, and other findings of fact with respect to this matter, are contained in the congressional reference case styled Maco Warehouse Company California against The United States (No. Cong. 2–56), decided January 14, 1959. Such judgment in favor of the United States shall be held and considered to be satisfied upon acceptance by such company of the sum to be paid under this section.

SEC. 2. No part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARDY MANUFACTURING CORP.

The Clerk called the resolution (H. Res. 266) referring H.R. 7081 to the U.S. Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H.R. 7081) entitled, "A bill for the relief of the Hardy Manufacturing Corporation," together with all accompanying papers, is hereby referred to the United States Court of Claims pursuant to sections 1492 and 2509 of title 28, United States Code; and said court shall proceed expeditiously with the same in accordance with the provisions of said sections, and report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date, giving findings of fact and conclusions thereon as shall be sufficient to inform the Congress of the nature and character of the demand, as a claim legal or equitable against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably owing by the United States to the claimant.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF ELWOOD R. QUESADA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2500) to authorize the appointment of Elwood R. Quesada to the retired list of the Regular Air Force, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding any other law, the President alone is authorized to appoint Elwood R. Quesada, formerly a retired lieutenant general, United States Air Force, to the grade of lieutenant general on the retired list of the Regular Air Force, with the pay, allowances, emoluments, perquisites, rights, privileges, and benefits of an officer of his grade and length of service who was on that retired list on May 31, 1958. No pay, allowances, or other benefits shall become due as a result of the enactment of this act for any period before the effective date of his appointment under this act.

SEC. 2. The effective date of the appointment authorized by this act is the day after Elwood R. Quesada ceases to hold office as Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, or the day before the death of Elwood R. Quesada, whichever is earlier.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1960

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9105) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes, half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] and half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the committee, will revise his request and make it 1 hour, that is, 30 minutes on each side. Will the gentleman do that?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 9105, with Mr. BOGGS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to debate this bill again. It was thoroughly analyzed and discussed at the time it was passed by the House. It was again dissected and debated when it was reported back to the House from the Committee of Conference. And it was exhaustively debated and scrutinized when it was vetoed.

It is the identical bill vetoed by the President with the exception that there is an across-the-board reduction of 2½ percent.

But you will recall, the President did not object to the amount in the bill so the reduction of 2½ percent is not a matter in issue. Neither did he object to first start. His only objection was to unbudgeted construction.

All the Presidents except eight have exercised the right of veto. Jefferson did not veto a single bill during his two terms of office.

President Grover Cleveland was the first President to make a notable record in vetoing bills. He vetoed 414 bills—more than all previous Presidents combined. Of all the Presidents he was exceeded only by that great breaker of all records, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who vetoed 632 bills.

So the bill before us today does not present a single new issue. It is the same bill we debated before. It is the same bill we passed. It is the same bill the President vetoed.

Everyone is thoroughly conversant with the bill. Further exposition would be superfluous.

It is however a precedent breaker in one respect. It is the first vetoed bill in the history of the Congress ever reported back to the House still carrying in full the material objected to in the veto message. All former vetoed bills have either been reported back to the House and passed without the interdicted matter or have not been reported back at all.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks I want to say that had our great President known all the facts relative to this bill, and had he received proper advice, which I am sure he did not receive, I am sure President Eisenhower would not have vetoed this bill. Every President, of course, has a perfect right to veto any bill he sees fit to veto.

I am sure the President did not know that 32 of the projects objected to in the veto message are urgently needed for flood control in order to protect life and property.

I have visited the sites of many of these projects where great floods have raged which have cost the lives of many people and caused property damage of hundreds of millions of dollars. In my home county, a year ago last July 2, a flood occurred which cost the lives of 19 of my friends in that county. Then, Mr. Chairman, last spring, I made two Lincoln Day speeches in Pennsylvania, at Sharon and at Meadville. There I saw with my own eyes the effects of those terrible floods that occurred in Pennsylvania last spring, driving thousands and thousands of people from their homes. This bill which the President vetoed carried money for the construction of a dam that would help control the devastating floods in that area.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAVIN. I have in my hand a report from the Department of Commerce, a flood damage report. The flood to which the gentleman refers occurred between January 21 and 25, 1959. The damage in western Pennsylvania was $18,082,199. For western Pennsylvania, including the Pittsburgh district it was $27,871,856, the most devastating, destructive floods that caused $28 million damage in western Pennsylvania in and around the Pittsburgh and Shenango districts.

Mr. JENSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I do not hold our great President in any lower esteem because he vetoed this bill. I am sure he would not have done as President Truman did the day after Congress adjourned in 1947, when he froze 50 percent of the funds which Congress had just that session appropriated for the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation. The day after the Members of Congress were out of town the President took upon himself to freeze 50 percent of the funds which Congress had appropriated that year for flood control, irrigation, reclamation, hydroelectric power, river improvements and harbor improvements. Then immediately after the devastating flood in November 1947 the President unfroze the 50 percent and said that the Republican-controlled Congress had not appropriated enough money for flood control and he said they were responsible for the terrible floods that occurred.

President Eisenhower will not do that, I am sure.

Mr. Chairman, there are a few facts and figures I want to read into the RECORD that have not been brought out before. President Eisenhower in his budget message did not say he objected to new starts. There is not one word about new starts. He simply said he opposed unbudgeted construction items that were included in the bill.

In his own budget request to the Congress there were 27 new projects for which he asked planning money. There are your new starts. A new start is when you begin spending money for planning and advance engineering. That is as much a necessary part of building a project as is the actual moving of dirt and pouring of concrete.

If in a couple of years, because of the fact that Congress held down for one year appropriated funds to stop devastating floods in many of these areas, we lose many lives, millions of dollars worth of property and folks are driven from their homes, I am not going to have that on my conscience. You can if you want to. That is every Member's own responsibility.

What did the House Committee accomplish? We brought this public works bill to the floor of the House exactly to the penny the amount that the President had requested in his budget and on final passage of that bill only 20 voted nay, while 380 voted yea, and it is noteworthy that the leaders on both sides of the aisle voted yea.

It is true that some new projects were included in the House bill. Yes, there were projects in that bill for districts represented by Democrats and Republicans alike. Many of my colleagues came to me and said "the flood problem out in my district is terrific and my people are concerned about it. They want the money to control those devastating floods."

Now the facts are, of course, when Members on the other side of the aisle put in projects in the districts of their Members it is very natural that Members on this side take the position that if you are going to put in projects for Members on your side of the aisle, we will have to try to match it to some degree at least, and we have included in the bill a number of worthy projects.

What happened when this bill went over to the Senate? That body increased our appropriations by $80 million. The House conferees battled for 2 days with the Senate conferees and we struck out 15 unbudgeted construction projects of the 30 which the Senate had added. Those 30 that they added would ultimately have cost $585,700,000. The final cost of the 15 unbudgeted projects which the House conferees were successful in striking from the Senate bill amounted to $460 million plus. We left only $125,600,000 in the conference report for unbudgeted projects which the Senate added to the House bill.

I am sure the President of the United States did not have those facts before him. He was a very busy man those days. He was arranging for his trip abroad to bring peace to the world and action on this bill was of lesser importance to President Eisenhower. But he had bad information from the Bureau of the Budget and from his other close associates. They claimed that the unbudgeted projects in this bill would ultimately cost over $800 million. The facts are they were over $300 million wrong, and let us not forget that on an average, from preliminary surveys to completed construction it takes 10 years.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KNOX. Following along the gentleman's statement, you speak of unauthorized projects and you speak of new starts. There are many projects that have been authorized by Congress. Work had been done on the projects, and then they were suspended. Do you consider that type of project as a new start?

Mr. JENSEN. No; indeed I do not.

Mr. KNOX. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JENSEN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. KNOX. Well, it is my understanding that the bill which is now before the committee provides for a 2½-percent cut in the overall appropriations which now would bring it within the budget amount as recommended in the President's budget; is that correct?

Mr. JENSEN. That is correct.

Mr. KNOX. If I recall properly, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] offered a motion to refer the bill back to the committee with a 5-percent cut, when the bill was before the House.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman is correct. The motion to recommit included an amendment to reduce by 5 percent all projects but the smaller ones.

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when he uses the term "unauthorized" he means "unbudgeted."

Mr. JENSEN. Unbudgeted, I beg your pardon. I will correct my remarks in that regard. However, there were some unauthorized projects in this bill, too, as far as that is concerned.

Referring back to the question of the gentleman from Michigan—when the full Committee on Appropriations marked up this bill I offered an amendment which provided that we should make an across-the-board cut of 5 percent on all projects amounting to $5 million or more. That amendment was defeated by an almost strict party vote. When the bill came to the floor, a similar amendment was offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] in connection with his motion to recommit the bill. I shall offer an amendment to this bill today which will do just that. I shall offer an amendment which will reduce the bill by another 2½ percent in addition to the 2½ percent reduction which the bill provides now as it comes to the floor. That will bring it approximately $30 million below the President's budget request. I do that not only to save the $30 million, but also in the hope that it might forestall another Presidential veto.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. I take it, then, that the gentleman means to endorse the principle of the pending bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Yes, with the 2½ percent additional over and above the 2½ percent by which it already has been reduced.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to pay a special tribute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], having been in my district during those disastrous floods. And I should like to pay tribute to the entire Committee on Appropriations and the conferees for having the interests of the American people at heart and for trying to do a job that is really worth while. I know 428,000 people who are going to appreciate the gentleman's efforts and those of the committee.

Mr. JENSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. JONAS. The gentleman from Iowa stated that the $800 million figure cost figure was overstated by $300 million.

Mr. JENSEN. Over $300 million.

Mr. JONAS. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the distinguished Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], put a table in the RECORD itemizing the projects and the total cost of the 67 unbudgeted projects comes to $800 million which is exactly the figure used in the President's veto message. Will the gentleman please clarify that apparent inconsistency.

Mr. JENSEN. Yes, I will. After those figures were put in the RECORD, the clerks of the Public Works Appropriations Committee went into the matter item-by-item and they brought out the facts and the figures which can be proven. The net cost after 1960 for the projects that have been added by the bill which the President vetoed would be $476,918,247.

Mr. JONAS. It is true, though, that the figures placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] agree with the $800 million figure given by the President?

Mr. JENSEN. I cannot help that. I am sure the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], will now agree that the figures which the clerks have prepared are correct as I have stated.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. In reclamation, which is the part with which I am familiar, I point out to the gentleman from North Carolina that the Burns Creek project is unauthorized and cannot be constructed in any event, which takes away $45 million from the $206 million eventual cost to which the President objected. Furthermore the Trinity power project, which I do not think ever should have been in the bill is still left in the bill prepared to meet the President's objection and comes to $60 million. There is over $105 million off the $206 million cited by the President, in reclamation. When you take off the $17 million for the small loan projects which will all be constructed in 1 year, the eventual cost is $85 million instead of $206 million as stated in the veto message.

Mr. JENSEN. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I insert a summary of the 67 unbudgeted construction items in the veto message.

Summary of 67 unbudgeted construction items in veto message

Project	Number	Total estimated Federal cost
Total unbudgeted construction items	67	$804,526,600
Deduct:
Unauthorized projects included in totals:
Burns Creek, Idaho	1	−44,616,000
Kahului Harbor, Hawaii	1	−963,000
Gulf Intracoastal Waterway, channel to Port Mansfield	1	−3,446,060
Subtotal, unauthorized projects	3	−49,025,000
Projects that will be completed with 1960 appropriations:
Dillingham Harbor, Alaska	1	−412,000
Redwood City Harbor, Calif	1	−1,380,000
Apalachicola Bay, Fla.:
(a) Channel at East Point (reimbursement)	1	−39,100
(b) St. George Island (reimbursement)	1	−43,000
Algiers Cutoff, Jefferson Plaquemine Drainage District, Louisiana	1	−1,420,000
Boston Harbor (35 feet reserved channel)	1	−829,000
Pascagoula Harbor, Miss	1	−1,248,000
Buttermilk Channel, N.Y	1	−1,551,000
Port Aransas—Corpus Christie Waterway, channel to La Quinta, Tex. (reimbursement)	1	−959,000
Subtotal, projects completed in 1960	9	−7,881,100
Deduct—Continued
Allegheny River Reservoir (present budget included carryover funds to resume construction when Supreme Court issue settled)	1	−$113,000,000
Trinity power facilities (recommended in veto message if partnership proposal not authorized)	1	−59,607,000
Reclamation loan program	6	−17,989,000
Total, above deductions	20	−246,602,100
Balance, veto list	47	557,924,500
Less:
Appropriated through 1959		−10,147,253
Amount in bill for 1960		−33,076,000
Remaining cost after 1960	47	514,701,247
Budgeted projects stopped by Congress	−3	−37,783,000
Net cost after 1960	44	476,918,247

Of the 47 projects 32 are flood control, 7 are navigation, 7 are reclamation, and 1 is multipurpose.

Only 9 of the 47 projects have a cost in excess of $20,000,000, and only 2 of these exceed $50,000,000.

22 of the projects have a cost of less than $5,000,000; 33 of the 47 projects have a cost of less than $10,000,000.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I note in the report that the reduction is 2½ percent. Does that mean 2½ percent of the budget estimate or 2½ percent of the conference allowance?

Mr. JENSEN. That means 2½ percent of the total conference allowance.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. In view of the confusion over the authorized and unauthorized projects that are in this budget, I wonder if the gentleman would clarify the situation as to the unauthorized projects in this bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Yes, I shall do that right now. I shall put the whole story in the RECORD.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HALLECK. We can all get time under the 5-minute rule, I understand. Did the gentleman have in mind yielding any time?

Mr. JENSEN. No one asked me for time.

Mr. HALLECK. I have not made any formal request; that is true.

Mr. JENSEN. Does the gentleman want some time yielded to him?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; before this is over.

Mr. JENSEN. Continuing now with the list of unauthorized projects: Burns Creek, Idaho. The final total cost of that project would be $44,616,000.

The Kahului Harbor, Hawaii project, $963,000.

The Gulf Intracostal Waterway channel to Port Mansfield, $3,446,000. That is a total of $49,025,000, which represents the ultimate cost of the unauthorized projects in the bill, when they are completed.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. Did not the bill provide that no funds could be expended for the unauthorized projects unless they were authorized by the Congress?

Mr. JENSEN. That is correct.

Permit me to say in closing that I challenge any Member of this House to match my record for economy. If there be such a Member, let him stand in his place and speak up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KIRWAN].

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not here today to talk about why the President vetoed the bill. But I am here to try to tell you a little bit of the history of these things. When the first of the year came and this Congress went into session, the President sent word to the Congress that he wanted economy. Yet we have bought over $8 billion worth of minerals for the stockpile and over $4 billion worth are excess to our maximum defense needs. Nearly every general, admiral, and Air Force chief who comes before us tells us that the next war, if it comes, would last maybe only a few days or at best weeks. But, we have over $8 billion worth of minerals, enough to last many years, and we are still buying. The other day we voted to increase the tax on gasoline by 1 cent to provide more funds for highways. I voted for it. I am not condemning anyone who voted against it. But the gentleman from Wyoming will tell you that they are building cloverleafs costing millions in Wyoming where, if you see an automobile coming along, by golly you stop to see what State it is from. But nobody is objecting to that waste. And we have the surplus wheat situation which has cost millions. Yet when it comes to flood control, people are economy minded all of a sudden.

Take a look at the record on these projects. There are only two projects in this bill that are not authorized, and the funds cannot be spent until they are authorized. They were not put in there blindly. Every project in this will stand the acid test. The Army Engineers have approved them and the Public Works Committee that authorized them—not the appropriating committee, heard the testimony for weeks and put its okay on each project. They all have a good rating. But, did anybody in this Congress get any project ratings on the millions and millions of dollars we are sending abroad on public works? Do you even know what countries these projects are going to be built in?

We must remember that we also have a responsibility to take care of our own country. My colleague, the gentleman from Iowa, and I saw thousands being put out of their homes last January—families—with children being held in the arms of their parents in zero weather looking at the water coming in the second floor windows. The Budget Bureau sent people down there who had never seen a flood in their lives and yet we are expected to let them select the projects to go in this bill. It only costs $13 million to build that dam and reservoir that I have in mind, and it is not in my district. The local interests are paying half the cost. But the flood damage was $16 million—is that economy? The flood stopped all the industrial plants from operating. Mr. JENSEN saw the situation in Sharon, Pa. I went there too, and I saw it. But the Budget Bureau objects to our appropriating construction funds this year because it was not in their budget. Despite the flood they included this project on the veto list. Some of their staff have never seen a flood and yet they send the budget up here and expect to tell us what we should do. I again repeat—we had better stop, look, and listen. I have told you many, many times on the floor of the House here that every dollar invested in America will come back 100 percent. It cannot fail, but all the money that is being invested all around the world—very little of that is going to come back home to do you any good. That is why I am asking you here today to accept this bill the way the committee has reported it to you.

Every project in the bill will stand the acid test. I urge everyone here to do something for your country. God gave us this country. God gave us the soil, the rocks, the mountains, the woods, the streams. Let us do a good job protecting and preserving them. Let this be one of the few times in history that we do something in and for America.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PASSMAN].

Mr. PASSMAN. It is a little difficult to understand why this bill should be called a pork barrel bill. In 1927 we had a flood in the lower Mississippi Valley that cost the economy of this Nation in excess of $1 billion and more importantly, cost 329 lives.

There are records available proving that for each dollar spent in the valley the return has been $4.50. On a national basis for each $1 spent in public works type projects there has been a return of $2.10. Those records are available to any of you.

Unless you start a project you can never complete one. If new projects have favorable cost-benefit ratios we should continue the new starts policy.

Now, for the benefit of the members of the committee who have been too busy to study the Foreign Operations Subcommittee hearings, I refer you to pages 940 and 941 of the hearings for 1960 on the foreign aid bill—the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] I am sure will recall this—you will see listed the different types of public works projects being carried on in other nations. So far as we can determine not one of those projects has ever received the careful planning and scrutiny of the Corps of Engineers, the Bureau of the Budget, or the Congress; nor has there ever been any cost-benefit ratio figure for these projects submitted to the committee. The foreign aid program contained 2,866 projects scattered all over the world. Approximately 1,000 of them have been abandoned.

If you will refer to page 1205 of the hearings you will discover that the witness told us that even after discontinuing some of the projects they still had in the neighborhood of 1,450 projects underway financed by the foreign aid appropriation bill.

You are talking now about a planned public works program, yet you will find the same administration that vetoed this bill is asking for a foreign aid bill where there are over 1,450 projects programed for expenditures in the same fiscal year.

If you will read the foreign aid hearings you will certainly find out that some of the people who are advocating cutting our own public works program—a properly planned program and where part of the cost is reimbursable—are urging appropriations in the foreign aid bill for public works projects in some 76 nations of the world.

We must be consistent. If we are to have no new starts in this country certainly we should have no new starts in the foreign aid bill.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to make reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] about the return of our great President from his trip to Europe. I want to take this opportunity to say that the President is quite pleased with the results of that trip. He is mighty happy to be back. I personally feel that he has done much by the trip to promote the peace of the world and I think future actions on his part will be in the same line.

To say that his veto of this bill was not promoted by his own firm conviction is not right. His determination to veto this bill was made before he left for Europe and was made on his own responsibility.

As the chairman of the committee has pointed out, our President has used the veto sparingly, may I say, in comparison with some predecessors who have vetoed bills in great numbers. I do not think this is any abuse of the President's privilege.

The statements I have heard thus far, and particularly coming from the chairman of the committee, for whom I have the greatest respect, would seem to be inviting a veto.

I would like to read to you now, before you think this is too funny, what the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, had to say when this bill was before the House last June. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, this is one of the important bills of the session. It is the bill which unbalances the budget.

He went on to say:

> But, Mr. Chairman, you know—and if you do not know—this bill demonstrates conclusively that it is not the national defense expenditures that unbalance the budget. It is the nondefense items that unbalance the budget.

Then he went on to say, speaking on this very bill:

> We cannot escape the responsibility for the situation as we find it today. Congress spent the money and increased the national debt and brought on the inflation. The responsibility is right here on this floor. We cannot offer an alibi. We cannot pass the buck. And the reason we can no longer sell bonds at 2 percent is because we have steadily and stubbornly and continuously refused to retrench expenditures and begin systematically and methodically to reduce the national debt and stop inflation. Congress did it and let no one try to make the people back home believe any different.

Then he said further what you may well take to heart because he made the speech that needed to be made on this floor. I did not have to make it.

> But this Congress has doubled the cost of breakfast, doubled the cost of school clothing. Ah; it comes home to you. Congress has increased the cost of living of every family in the district of every Member of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I hope an amendment will be offered to bring this bill in line with what the President requested. I think it is reasonable, I think it is right, and I think it is in the best interests of the country. I realize, of course, that many of our folks at home are for economy if you take the "me" out of it. I have experienced that. So have you. But there is only one way I know of to bring down the cost of the Government and that is to begin to cut the very things that the gentleman from Missouri talked about, and they are as true as true can be.

You have the votes to defeat this amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. You have the votes to do it, and you will do it. I do not know what the final action on the bill will be, but, in any event, I want the responsibility to rest just where it should.

As far as I am concerned I shall support the amendment. If it carries I shall vote for the bill. If it does not carry I am going to vote against the bill. I am going to follow the advice of the chairman of this great committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RILEY].

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time to refresh the minds of the members of the committee in regard to a few salient facts with reference to this appropriation bill.

For several months the subcommittee that handled this bill worked diligently screening the requests that were made and ascertaining the facts in regard to them. There were 1,150 witnesses who appeared before this subcommittee and gave testimony in regard to these projects. Seven or eight hundred of them came from all over the United States, many of them at their own expense, some of them supported by organizations that were interested in a particular project, to give testimony to the Congress.

Now, the first question I want to ask is this. Who has the best information in regard to this bill, the subcommittee that heard these witnesses, or the pencil-and-paper boys down at the Bureau of the Budget? Every project was carefully considered and every item in this bill was passed by both Houses of Congress and they weathered the conference. So, it represents the best thinking of both this body and the other body. And, I call your attention to this fact, that in the committee the other day they decided that they could not improve this bill over the bill that was presented before, except to bring it within the dollar limit set by the Bureau of the Budget, in order to hold the budget within bounds. It is the same bill with everybody taking a little cut in order to bring it in line, and it represents, again I tell you, the best thinking of both this body and the other body.

Now, in regard to these new projects, budget requests are made up about a year before they are presented to the Congress. Now, I do not believe that even the omniscient Bureau of the Budget can anticipate emergencies and problems a year in advance. Unprecedented floods occurred in many of the States: Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and other States; one unprecedented and disastrous flood after the other. Do you think that this body should sit here and not take cognizance of that; not make some effort to prevent a recurrence? There is not a vetoed item in this bill that affects my State, but I am interested and the people of my State are interested in this Nation as a whole. I do not believe that Congress would be faithful to its trust if it did not recognize these emergencies that occur after the budget requests are made.

Now, about the future spending and future costs. Have you no faith in future Congresses? This Congress cannot bind another Congress if it wanted to. Those Congresses must assume their own responsibility and handle the problems as they arise before them.

Now, a whole lot has been said here this morning about economy. Let us see who is economical. Here is a recapitulation of the appropriation requests that were presented to this session of the Congress. And, what did the House do? They have cut $2,756,340,224 off of the requests submitted to them by the bureaus downtown. What happened? There was a stampede over to the other body, with the approval and blessing of the same Bureau of the Budget, to put those cuts back into the bill. Who is concerned about economy, the House or the Bureau of the Budget and the bureaucrats downtown? I do not think that we would be doing our duty if we did not give the proper consideration to the facts that were presented to us.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this is a well-considered bill, a fair bill, a reasonable bill, and I hope this House will approve it overwhelmingly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I offered this motion to reduce each item 2½ percent and to retain the 67 new projects, after it became apparent that it would not be offered otherwise. I am not a member of the Public Works Subcommittee. I have no projects in this bill, present, past or future. I offered that motion because I think, and I thought then, that it is high time we took care of our own country. If the President and a majority of the Congress are going to have a foreign aid program of billions of dollars annually; if we are going to raise travel allowances for Federal employees, Federal pay; if we are going to increase benefits to veterans, and provide more inflated dollars to almost everything, if we are going to have all these other things, if we continue using appropriations to put money in the hands of people and thereby increase the national debt. I think that we owe it to our future and to our children to protect our own country, its soil and its natural resources. The President's veto would have us do all these other things at the expense of our own country.

These facts are argument, not against domestic public works but for them. May I say to you that the argument made as to how much we owe, and about the deficit, and all of that, is the strongest argument for giving attention to our own country that I can bring you. May I tell you that the strength of the dollars that we have, the ability to pay debts that we owe, for whatever it is worth, is dependent upon the country that stands behind it.

While I could say many fine things about the chairman of my committee and the ranking Republican member, and we can all second-guess the other fellow, but if I were running the Appropriations Committee, in the capacity of either one of them, the first bill on this floor each and every year would be Public Works. It is not bacon, not pork, but I would protect the base from which all these other things must be supported.

Mr. Chairman, money spent improving the Nation, preventing floods that cause damage of hundreds of millions of dollars—and preventing drought damage, improving harbors, is sound. Yes, I would look out for my country first, recognizing that it is the basis for everything. Then after we have looked after the factory and the home, I would see what else we were able to do. But unfortunately we do not do that. We follow the practice of appropriating for everything else under the sun, then when it comes to this bill, which supports the very foundation of our Nation, we are told we cannot afford to do that, we must let the Nation's resources go because we have committed ourselves to look after everybody else. Is such a course not ridiculous?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman the President of the United States by his veto of the public works program covering projects in the United States, has proven to the people of our country that he is more interested in public works that are being built in foreign countries than our own.

Millions of dollars have been given in foreign relief to the countries scattered all over the world to build dams, hydroelectric projects, schools, roads, and many other projects, at the cost of spending sufficient money to develop our own America.

I am in favor of and have voted to assist these underprivileged countries in improving their way of living. However, at the same time I believe we should invest in America, by developing our own resources, in improving our Nation, especially from the ravages of nature in the way of floods. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has suffered terrific losses over the years—not only have we had loss of life, and loss of property, but our industries have been affected also as they have been built along our rivers.

This second bill was entirely unnecessary. Republican Representatives in Pennsylvania who through partisan politics voted to sustain the President's veto, voted against their own State.

Today, we are making another try. We hope this time the President shall realize the projects are a must.

The wants of our own country should come first.

Members of Congress are well acquainted with what is necessary in their own districts and have spoken out twice in this session.

The President should listen.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, some people have interpreted the dispute between Congress and the President over the Public Works Bill as being one over whether it is inflationary or good to have a continuing expansion of public works projects; but, there is another question of great importance. That question is whether the President or the Congress should determine which projects shall be started or included in the money to be invested. This is basically a question of which form of government one believes in.

Under the parliamentary form of government used in England and many western countries, the head of government serves at the pleasure of the legislature and, therefore, would act according to the wishes of a majority of the peoples' elected representatives. In dictatorships which have legislatures, the legislature actually does as the head of government desires, down to the last word. This was the case in Germany after Hitler had whipped his legislative branch into line and is true in military dictatorships in many countries.

We in the United States have a combination of these forms in our government where the legislature has an absolute right to determine such policy as can pass by a two-thirds vote and has always been expected to determine by majority vote the details of legislation such as whether one public works project should be started before another one. If a couple of the President's advisers are to determine such things as this, then our Congress would be a mere rubber stamp, and we would in fact have the military dictatorship form of government rather than the American system. This is underscored in connection with the public works bill in view of the fact that the Administration has told some Congressmen that the determination of the inclusion or exclusion of projects in their Districts next year will be made upon whether or not they support the President's position. This is making strictly one party politics the replacement for bipartisan consideration of the matter and strikes at the very root of the difference between a responsible legislative government and one where the legislature is a mere rubber stamp. Historically, basic rights have been trampled upon where legislatures became a mere rubber stamp. It is the fear of this military approach that has always made people in the United States reluctant to trust professional military men as the head of civilian departments.

The cherished American form of government and the reservation of protective authority in the peoples' legislative representatives is so basically important that we must never permit its erosion. It is a highly important part of this dispute over the public works bill, and I sincerely hope the President will consider the impact of his insistence upon infringing upon the responsibilities and rights of the legislative branch of government and using the powers of his office in derogation of the doctrine of separation of powers and the importance of this doctrine to our American way of life.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to challenge emphatically the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON] in his contention in a letter circulated yesterday to Members of the House that Federal construction of the Trinity Power facilities in northern California should be struck from the public works money bill.

If the gentleman had studied the record of this Congress he would know that it is not going to agree to any misnamed partnership on the Trinity River project. I point out that the President himself recognized this fact in his recent veto message returning H.R. 7509 to the Congress without approval. The President's veto message stated that if the Congress continues its refusal to approve private construction of the Trinity Power facilities, a new public works appropriations bill should include funds to provide for Federal construction of these power facilities. He pointed out that the Trinity River Dam and Reservoir is now being built and it is essential that power facilities be in place when the reservoir is full.

The gentleman from Wyoming makes the same charges as the Secretary of the Interior did in past hearings before the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. I call his attention to the fact that on February 1, 1957, Secretary Seaton unequivocally reported that under the so-called P.G. & E. plan, the Central Valley project over a 50-year period would earn some $86 million more from the sale of falling water to the utility than it would earn by selling this power itself. This figure was proved to be in error and the Secretary thereupon upped it, on June 5, 1957, to $115 million. Then, in January 1958 in hearings before the House committee, Mr. Samuel Morris, an internationally famous engineer, challenged the $115 million figure and the Secretary of the Interior, like a prestidigitator with a hatful of rabbits, came up with a new figure—$139 million this time. Naturally, these figures were arrived at in close consultation with the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., and in fact, that corporation's unchecked figures were frequently utilized by the Interior Department in its arguments in favor of the partnership plan.

In a report prepared in April 1959 for the California Municipal Utilities Corp. by the Engineering Consultants, Inc., of Denver, Colo.—a highly competent firm of international reputation—it is disclosed that all the joint features of the Trinity will be completed and ready for operation on July 1, 1963, if the present construction schedule is followed.

It is the opinion of this firm of engineers which, incidentally, employs as its chief consultant L. N. McClellan, former chief engineer of the Bureau of Reclamation and the man responsible for the design of the Trinity project, that the joint features of Trinity could be completed a full year sooner than July 1, 1963, that is to say, on July 1, 1962, if ample funds for construction were made available by the Congress in fiscal years 1960, 1961, and 1962.

In this connection, Engineering Consultants, Inc., makes the following meaningful statement:

> When the joint features are completed, the Government will have an investment of about $200 million in the Trinity River project, exclusive of power features. The Bureau of Reclamation's own estimates show that the gross power revenues from the Central Valley project will amount to about $16,350,000 per year after the Trinity River division is in full operation. Without the Trinity powerplants, the gross power revenues will amount to approximately $10,500,000 per year.
> Consequently, about $5,500,000 in revenues would be lost to the project for each year that the power features of the Trinity project are delayed. It appears, therefore, that it would be most advantageous to the Federal Government to complete the remaining joint features of the project, and to have the power features also completed at the earliest practical date in order to minimize interest during construction, to reduce the Bureau's overhead and supervision costs, and to secure the $5,500,000 annual power revenues as soon as possible. In may be added, too, that in recent years construction costs have escalated about 5 percent per year, and there appears no immediate prospect that this trend will change. Early completion then would bring substantial savings to the Government.

The gentleman from Wyoming is completely mistaken in his contention that it would save taxpayers money if the Trinity power facilities were built as a partnership project.

For one thing, the Federal Government itself will be the principal customer for Trinity power to operate additional Central Valley pumps and to meet increasing power needs of numerous defense installations. So, it is a question of whether, through partnership with the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a middleman profit should be taken out by the Federal production and Federal consumption of this commodity.

Incidentally, and contrary to the general conception, the Government gets a higher average return on its Central Valley project power sales to public agencies than it does on the sales to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. In 1958, for example, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. got most of the power, but the 25 public agency customers coughed up most of the money. The specific figures from a tabulation of power sales data furnished by the Bureau of Reclamation are:

	Energy sales (kilowatt-hours)	Net revenue to United States
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.	1,794,667,132	$5,387,690
25 public agencies	1,689,487,361	7,326,338

Of course, I readily admit that a large share of the power delivered to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. was nonfirm, but nevertheless, overall, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. got Central Valley project power at an average rate of 3 mills per kilowatt-hour while the public customers paid 4.34 mills.

The partnership proposal not only would deprive the people of California of the benefits of low cost public power, it would also put the State in a position of having to pay millions more for power to operate its own water plan.

This would be especially true in case of the proposed San Luis Reservoir on the west side of the Central Valley. In this planned project, power from Trinity is earmarked to run the pumps to hoist water from the Delta-Mendota Canal to the San Luis Reservoir, where the water would be stored for delivery to the San Joaquin Valley and southern California.

Under "partnership," the P.G. & E. would build the Trinity powerplants, generate the Trinity power and sell it to the San Luis project at the private utility's rates. It is easy to understand how this kind of "partnership" would be good for the P.G. & E., but how it would be good for the State of California and the Federal Government is difficult to comprehend.

Actually, if P.G. & E. were to get Trinity power, and if the Government then constructs the San Luis project, there would only be enough CVP power left for one preference customer—the Sacramento Municipal Utility District, which has a 40-year contract for 290,000 kilowatts. All other preference customers now receiving CVP power, and many Federal agencies would have to buy their power from the P.G. & E. at several times the rate they now pay. This certainly cannot by the wildest stretch of the imagination be considered economy in the operation of the Government.

It is regrettable that the gentleman from Wyoming has been misinformed about the P.G. & E. partnership deal. Far from saving the Federal Government money, it would be bad business for Uncle Sam.

Any illusory increased revenues the Federal Government is promised under the "partnership" plan could obviously be equaled or exceeded by a minor increase in the power rates of CVP. This could be done by the Federal Government, merely by adding its profit to the increased net revenue, without paying tribute to a private utility. However, it is the established policy of the Government not to realize a "profit" from power sales. The established policy, in which I concur, is to sell power at a price which will fully reimburse the Treasury for costs involved and will at the same time furnish electric energy to consumers and Government installations at minimum cost to them.

PASCAGOULA, MISS., HARBOR PROJECT

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriation item in this bill in which I am very much interested. I refer to the appropriation of $1,242,000 for the Pascagoula, Miss., harbor project. If there is an item in the whole billion-dollar-plus bill that can be justified upon its merits, it is this item. This project is not my project alone. It is a project that every Member of this House should be interested in. It is just as much a part of the national defense as any item in the $40 billion defense appropriation bill passed earlier this session.

Mr. Chairman, I make this statement based on the following facts: The Ingalls Shipbuilding Corp., the largest single industry in Mississippi, is located at the mouth of the Pascagoula River in my home town of Pascagoula. This industry, employing some 6,000 to 11,000 people, is engaged, among other things, in the construction of naval craft for the Navy, and merchant vessels for our merchant marine. This yard, both in World Wars I and II was active in the construction of vessels necessary for the defense of this country. More specifically, Mr. Chairman, this yard now has under contract and construction two Polaris nuclear submarines. One conventional submarine has already been launched and two of the Polaris type now under construction will be launched and ready for sea trials before July 1, 1960.

Mr. Chairman, the simple fact is that the present depth of 22 feet of the harbor and channel is insufficient to get these important vessels, which require 30-foot depths, to sea. Time is of the essence. This work must be begun within the next 60 days; not within the next 6 months or a year.

The question has been raised as to why these vessels were authorized to be constructed at this yard in the first place. The answer is that the project contained in this bill was started in 1950 by a resolution introduced by me and approved by the House Committee on Public Works. This document calls for a review of the existing project of 22 feet looking to its modification to a depth of 30 feet. Furthermore, the Navy was assured prior to its award of these contracts that the project which had been authorized by the Congress in 1954—Public Law 780, 83d Congress—would be completed to a depth of 30 feet in ample time for the submarines to go to sea. Both the Navy, the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corp. officials and we in the Congress had every reason to believe that this would be done seasonably. In fact, the 1954 act to which I have just referred authorized the project subject to the final approval of the Corps of Army Engineers. The Army Engineers did approve it; but, unfortunately, before all of the final steps were taken in clearing the various branches of Government required, the report approving the project by the Engineers was not finally filed and printed until March 18 this year.

And here we have the crux of the situation. The report was not finally filed until after the President submitted his budget to the Congress. Immediately, I attempted to persuade the Bureau of the Budget to send a supplemental recommendation for this project to the Congress. On two occasions I personally called upon the Budget Director and on numerous occasions I contacted the Bureau by telephone and otherwise. Mr. Stans, the Budget Director, always agreed that this project was not only meritorious but that it had to be completed and that the necessary money had to be had this year. In fact, everyone whom we contacted, and we must have contacted at least 50 officials in both the executive and legislative departments, agreed that the project must be carried out and that the necessary funds had to be appropriated this year. In fairness, it should be stated that the Bureau of the Budget and the White House did attempt to cooperate in every way short of formally requesting the funds for the project of the Congress. At one stage, the White House even went so far as to direct the Navy to do this work out of its own funds. But, the Comptroller General ruled against this.

Mr. Chairman, during the hearings on the original appropriations bill this year I appeared together with several witnesses before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations for Public Works and urged the inclusion of the necessary funds for the project. The subcommittee was so impressed with the merits of and the necessity for the project that they included it in the original bill. The full Appropriations Committee approved this action, as did the House and the Senate. Subsequently, of course, as you know, the President vetoed the bill, and the project is in the new bill now before us. While it is true that the new bill carries a 2½ percent reduction, I am confident that the project can be completed.

So far I have discussed only the urgency because of the military aspects of the project. I should like, however, to point out that the domestic features of the bill are most important. Pascagoula is a rapidly growing city. It is an industrial city. Its population has more than trebled in the past two decades. There are several large industries that use this port. One, the H. K. Porter Co., which has recently constructed a multimillion-dollar industry there, is required to have the minerals-bearing vessels go to Mobile, Ala., and unload part of the cargo before they can bring the vessels through the port at Pascagoula to unload.

LOCAL CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is a project in this bill or has been one in other bills where there has been a greater percentage of local contribution. First, I call your attention to the fact that this channel was dredged from the authorized 22 feet to 30 feet at a cost of nearly $1 million by local interests some 10 years ago. Second, an auxiliary channel leading to the Bayou Casotte development has just been completed within the last year at a depth of 30 feet at a cost in excess of $2 million by local interests. The Dog River Cut-Off, another part of this project, which, incidentally, was authorized by this Congress some 8 or 10 years ago, was dredged at a cost to local interests of $63,000.

In 1958 another $2 million was expended by local interests for terminal facilities. All in all, Jackson County and the city of Pascagoula, Miss., have expended more than $5 million for dredging and developing this port as its contribution.

But, this is not all. The State of Mississippi has within the past few weeks approved a $10 million bond issue in State aid for the development of the port.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I return to the defense angle of this project. During the hearings on the project before the Public Works Subcommittee, I submitted to that committee and for the RECORD last April the following letters from Adm. Ralph E. Wilson and Rear Adm. A. G. Mumma, Department of the Navy, showing the necessity for prompt action:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE, CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C., April 28, 1959.

Hon. WILLIAM M. COLMER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. COLMER: This is in response to your telephone inquiry concerning the Navy's interests in achieving safe navigation through the Pascagoula Channel.

The Navy has determined that the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corp. at Pascagoula, Miss., is an efficient commercial shipyard. Recognizing this essential factor in shipbuilding, a series of construction contracts have been concluded with the company, including some for deep-draft submarines.

Consequently we have a singular interest in continuity of restoration measures to the channel in order that safe navigation to a depth of 30 feet is assured from the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corp. to the Gulf of Mexico.

Sincerely yours,

RALPH E. WILSON,
Deputy Chief of Naval Operations (Logistics).

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF SHIPS,
Washington, D.C., April 29, 1959.

Mr. MONRO B. LANIER,
Ingalls Shipbuilding Corp.,
Pascagoula, Miss.

DEAR MR. LANIER: This letter is to provide information you requested pertaining to depths of the channel from your yard to the open sea.

In order to permit the Navy to conduct builders' and acceptance trials on four nuclear-powered submarines of the 588 and 593 class now under construction at your shipyard, the channel from your yard via Horn Island Pass to the Gulf of Mexico must have a minimum depth of 28 feet below mean low water. For complete safety of operations this depth should be 30 feet.

Sincerely yours,

A. G. MUMMA,
Rear Admiral, U.S. Navy,
Chief of Bureau.

Further, I call attention to the fact that the Assistant Secretary of the Army, the Honorable Dewey Short, on September 3, 1959, wrote the Honorable Clarence Cannon, Chairman of the Full Committee on Appropriations, a letter urging the inclusion of this item in the new appropriations bill which we are today considering. The pertinent part of that letter follows:

1. Pascagoula Harbor, Miss.: Completion of this navigation project is necessary in order that nuclear submarines currently under construction at Pascagoula may have safe passage to undergo sea trials and to join the fleet. Funds must be available soon so that the dredging can be completed in time for sea trials that are now scheduled to take place in fiscal year 1960. The proposed amount for this project is $1,242,000.

Significantly, Secretary Short concluded the letter with this statement:

I am authorized by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to state that such action would have the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. Chairman, in these last days of the session, when nerves are frazzled and tempers are short, permit me to say that in spite of my intense interest in this project, which means so much to the economy of my section as well as to the defense of the country, I harbor no ill will toward anyone nor do I point the finger of criticism at anyone. While every person in official capacity, including Members of Congress, is agreed that this is a prime project and must be completed expeditiously, I recognize the formalities, and the so-called redtape that is encountered in these matters. I have great respect for the President's desire for a balanced budget. In fact, I have cooperated as fully as I could, not only this year, but in the years gone by, to that end. As I pointed out before, the administration recognizes the necessity for urgent action on this project. And, I can safely say that it is in favor of immediate action. We have all been caught here in the maze of governmental procedure.

Therefore, while this bill including this project will be passed by an overwhelming vote here today, I can only express the hope that this project will not encounter any further delays along the route which it must travel through the other body and Presidential action.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for other purposes, namely.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"TITLE I—CIVIL FUNCTIONS, DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY

"Cemeterial expenses

"Salaries and Expenses

"For necessary cemeterial expenses as authorized by law, including maintenance, operation, and improvement of national cemeteries, and purchase of headstones and markers for unmarked graves; purchase of one passenger motor vehicle for replacement only; maintenance of that portion of Congressional Cemetery to which the United States has title, Confederate burial places under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army, and graves used by the Army in commercial cemeteries; $9,194,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be used to repair more than a single approach road to any national cemetery: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be obligated for construction of a superintendent's lodge or family quarters at a cost per unit in excess of $17,000, but such limitations may be increased by such additional amounts as may be required to provide office space, public comfort rooms, or space for the storage of Government property within the same structure: Provided further, That reimbursement shall be made to the applicable military appropriation for the pay and allowances of any military personnel performing services exclusively for the purposes of this appropriation.

"Rivers and harbors and flood control

"The following appropriations shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Army and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for authorized civil functions of the Department of the Army pertaining to rivers and harbors, flood control, beach erosion, and related purposes:

"General Investigations

"For expenses necessary for the collection and study of basic information pertaining to river and harbor, flood control, shore protection, and related projects, and when authorized by law, preliminary examinations, surveys and studies (including cooperative beach erosion studies as authorized in Public Law Numbered 520, Seventy-first Congress, approved July 3, 1930, as amended and supplemented), of projects prior to authorization for construction, to remain available until expended, $10,750,000: Provided, That $50,000 of this appropriation shall be transferred to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service for studies, investigations, and reports thereon as required by the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 563–565) to provide that wildlife conservation shall receive equal consideration and be coordinated with other features of water-resource development programs of the Department of the Army.

"Construction, General

"For the prosecution of river and harbor, flood control, shore protection, and related projects authorized by law; detailed studies, and plans and specifications, of projects (including those for development with participation or under consideration for participation by States, local governments, or private groups) authorized or made eligible for selection by law (but such studies shall not constitute a commitment of the Government to construction); and not to exceed $1,200,000 for transfer to the Secretary of the Interior for conservation of fish and wildlife as authorized by law; to remain available until expended, $642,023,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for projects not authorized by law or which are authorized by a law limiting the amount to be appropriated therefor, except as may be within the limits of the amount now or hereafter authorized to be appropriated: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for 'Construction, General', in this Act shall be used on the project 'Missouri River, Kansas City to mouth', for any purpose other than bank stabilization work: Provided further, That $500,000 of this appropriation shall be transferred to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service for studies, investigations, and reports thereon as required by the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 563–565) to provide that wildlife conservation shall receive equal consideration and be coordinated with other features of water-resource development programs of the Department of the Army.

"Operation and Maintenance, General

"For expenses necessary for the preservation, operation, maintenance, and care of existing river and harbor, flood control, and related works, including such sums as may be necessary for the maintenance of harbor channels provided by a State, municipality, or other public agency, outside of harbor lines, and serving essential needs of general commerce and navigation; financing the United States share of the cost of operation and maintenance of remedial works in the Niagara River; surveys and charting of northern and northwestern lakes and connecting waters; clearing and straightening channels; removal of obstructions to navigation; rescue work, and repair, or restoration of flood control projects threatened or destroyed by flood; and not to exceed $1,750,000 for transfer to the Secretary of the Interior for conservation of fish and wildlife as authorized by law; to remain available until expended, $117,882,000.

"General Expenses

"For expenses necessary for general administration and related functions in the Office of the Chief of Engineers and offices of the Division Engineers; activities of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the Beach Erosion Board, and the California Debris Commission; administration of laws pertaining to preservation of navigable waters; commercial statistics; and miscellaneous investigations; $12,640,000.

"Flood Control, Mississippi River and Tributaries

"For expenses necessary for prosecuting work of flood control, and rescue work, repair, restoration, or maintenance of flood control projects threatened or destroyed by flood, as authorized by law (33 U.S.C. 702a, 702g–1), to remain available until expended, $70,289,500.

"United States Section, Saint Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers

"For necessary expenses of the United States section of the Saint Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers, established by Executive Order 10500, dated November 4, 1953, including services as authorized by section 15 of the Act of August 2, 1946 (5 U.S.C. 55a), at rates not to exceed $100 per day for individuals; $40,000: Provided, That no part of these funds shall be obligated until agreement has been entered into, by the United States Government and the United States entity authorized to construct the power works in the International Rapids section of the Saint Lawrence River, providing for the reimbursement of the expenditures of the United States section of this Board by the construction entity.

"Administrative provisions

"Appropriations in this title shall be available for uniforms, or allowances therefor, as authorized by the Act of September 1, 1954, as amended (5 U.S.C. 2131), and for printing, either during a recess or session of Congress, of survey reports authorized by law, and such survey reports as may be printed during a recess of Congress shall be printed, with illustrations, as documents of the next succeeding session of Congress; and during the current fiscal year the revolving fund, Corps of Engineers, shall be available for purchase (not to exceed one hundred and seventy-six for replacement only) and hire of passenger motor vehicles.

"TITLE II—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

"Bureau of Reclamation

"For carrying out the functions of the Bureau of Reclamation as provided in the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat 388, and Acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto) and other Acts applicable to that Bureau, as follows:

"General Investigations

"For engineering and economic investigations of proposed Federal reclamation projects and studies of water conservation and development plans; formulating plans and preparing designs and specifications for authorized Federal reclamation projects or parts thereof prior to initial allocation of appropriations for construction of such projects or parts; and activities preliminary to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and betterment, financial adjustment, or extension of existing projects; to remain available until expended, $4,788,710, of which $3,838,710 shall be derived from the reclamation fund and $500,000 shall be derived from the Colorado River development fund: Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be used for more than one-half of the cost of an investigation requested by a State, municipality, or other interest: Provided further, That $200,000 of this appropriation shall be transferred to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service for studies, investigations, and reports thereon as required by the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 563–565) to provide that wildlife conservation shall receive equal consideration and be coordinated with other features of water-resource development programs of the Bureau of Reclamation.

"Construction and Rehabilitation

"For construction and rehabilitation of authorized reclamation projects or parts thereof (including power transmission facilities) and for other related activities, as authorized by law, to remain available until expended, $132,937,739, of which $95,000,000 shall be derived from the reclamation fund: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to initiate the construction of transmission facilities within those areas covered by power wheeling service contracts which include provision for service to Federal establishments and preferred customers, except those transmission facilities for which construction funds have been heretofore appropriated, those facilities which are necessary to carry out the terms of such contracts or those facilities for which the Secretary of the Interior finds the wheeling agency is unable or unwilling to provide for the integration of Federal projects or for service to a Federal establishment or preferred customer: Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 of the funds appropriated in this paragraph shall be available for the construction of safety and public-use facilities at the Alamogordo Dam (Carlsbad project), New Mexico, which shall be nonreimbursable and nonreturnable.

"Operation and Maintenance

"For operation and maintenance of reclamation projects or parts thereof and of other facilities, as authorized by law; and for a soil and moisture conservation program on lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation, pursuant to law, $29,131,000, of which $23,664,000 shall be derived from the reclamation fund and $2,030,000 shall be derived from the Colorado River dam fund: Provided, That funds advanced for operation and maintenance of reclamation projects or parts thereof shall be deposited to the credit of this appropriation and may be expended for the same objects and in the same manner as sums appropriated herein may be expended, and the unexpended balances of such advances shall be credited to the appropriation for the next succeeding fiscal year.

"Loan Program

"For loans to irrigation districts and other public agencies for construction of distribution systems on authorized Federal reclamation projects, and for loans and grants to non-Federal agencies for construction of projects, as authorized by the Acts of July 4, 1955, as amended (43 U.S.C. 421a–421d), and August 6, 1956 (43 U.S.C. 422a–422k), as amended (71 Stat. 48), including expenses necessary for carrying out the program, $220,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That any contract under the Act of July 4, 1955 (69 Stat. 244), as amended, not yet executed by the Secretary, which calls for the making of loans beyond the fiscal year in which the contract is entered into shall be made only on the same conditions as those prescribed in section 12 of the Act of August 4, 1939 (53 Stat. 1187, 1197).

"General Administrative Expenses

"For necessary expenses of general administration and related functions in the offices of the Commissioner of Reclamation and in the regional offices of the Bureau of Reclamation, $4,400,000, to be derived from the reclamation fund and to be nonreimbursable pursuant to the Act of April 19, 1945 (43 U.S.C. 377); Provided, That no part of any other appropriation in this Act shall be available for activities or functions budgeted for the current fiscal year as general administrative expenses.

"Upper Colorado River Basin Fund

"For payment to the 'Upper Colorado River Basin fund', authorized by section 5 of the Act of April 11, 1956 (Public Law 485), $74,015,000; to remain available until expended.

"Special Funds

"Sums herein referred to as being derived from the reclamation fund, the Colorado River dam fund, or the Colorado River development fund, are appropriated from the special funds in the Treasury created by the Act of June 17, 1902 (43 U.S.C. 391), the Act of December 21, 1928 (43 U.S.C. 617a), and the Act of July 19, 1940 (43 U.S.C. 618a), respectively. Such sums shall be transferred, upon request of the Secretary, to be merged with and expended under the heads herein specified; and the unexpended balances of sums transferred for expenditure under the heads 'Operation and Maintenance' and 'General Administrative Expenses' shall revert and be credited to the special fund from which derived.

"Administrative Provisions

"Appropriations to the Bureau of Reclamation shall be available for purchase of not to exceed eighty-four passenger motor vehicles for replacement only, payment of claims for damage to or loss of property, personal injury, or death arising out of activities of the Bureau of Reclamation; payment, except as otherwise provided for, of compensation and expense of persons on the rolls of the Bureau of Reclamation appointed as authorized by law to represent the United States in the negotiation and administration of interstate compacts without reimbursement or return under the reclamation laws; rewards for information or evidence concerning violations of law involving property under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation; performance of the functions specified under the head 'Operation and Maintenance Administration', Bureau of Reclamation, in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1945; preparation and dissemination of useful information including recordings, photographs, and photographic prints; and studies of recreational uses of reservoir areas, and investigation and recovery of archeological and paleontological remains in such areas in the same manner as provided for in the Act of August 21, 1935 (16 U.S.C. 461–467): Provided, That no part of any appropriation made herein shall be available pursuant to the Act of April 19, 1945 (43 U.S.C. 377), for expenses other than those incurred on behalf of specific reclamation projects except 'General Administrative Expenses' and amounts provided for reconnaissance, basin surveys, and general engineering and research under the head 'General Investigations'.

"Allotments to the Missouri River Basin project from the appropriation under the head 'Construction and Rehabilitation' shall be available additionally for said project for those functions of the Bureau of Reclamation provided for under the head 'General Investigations' (but this authorization shall not preclude use of the appropriation under said head within that area), and for the continuation of investigations by agencies of the Department on a general plan for the development of the Missouri River Basin. Such allotments may be expended through or in cooperation with State and other Federal agencies, and advances to such agencies are hereby authorized.

"Sums appropriated herein which are expended in the performance of reimbursable functions of the Bureau of Reclamation shall be returnable to the extent and in the manner provided by law.

"No part of any appropriation for the Bureau of Reclamation, contained in this Act or in any prior Act, which represents amounts earned under the terms of a contract but remaining unpaid, shall be obligated for any other purpose, regardless of when such amounts are to be paid: Provided, That the incurring of any obligation prohibited by this paragraph shall be deemed a violation of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 665).

"No funds appropriated to the Bureau of Reclamation for operation and maintenance, except those derived from advances by water users, shall be used for the particular benefit of lands (a) within the boundaries of an irrigation district, (b) of any member of a water users' organization, the payment of charges due under a contract entered into with the United States pursuant to laws administered by the Bureau of Reclamation.

"Not to exceed $225,000 may be expended from the appropriation 'Construction and rehabilitation' for work by force account on any one project or Missouri Basin unit and then only when such work is unsuitable for contract or no acceptable bid has been received and, other than otherwise provided in this paragraph or as may be necessary to meet local emergencies, not to exceed 12 per centum of the construction allotment for any project from the appropriation 'Construction and rehabilitation' contained in this Act shall be available for construction work by force account.

"Bonneville Power Administration

"Construction

"For construction and acquisition of transmission lines, substations, and appurtenant facilities, as authorized by law, $22,000,000, to remain available until expended.

"Operation and Maintenance

"For necessary expenses of operation and maintenance of the Bonneville transmission system and of marketing electric power and energy, $10,250,000.

"Administrative Provisions

"Appropriations of the Bonneville Power Administration shall be available to carry out all the duties imposed upon the Administrator pursuant to law, including purchase of one aircraft for replacement only. Appropriations made herein to the Bonneville Power Administration shall be available in one fund, except that the appropriation herein made for operation and maintenance shall be available only for the service of the current fiscal year.

"Other than as may be necessary to meet local emergencies, not to exceed 12 per centum of the appropriation for construction herein made for the Bonneville Power Administration shall be available for construction work by force account or on a hired-labor basis.

"Southeastern Power Administration

"Operation and Maintenance

"For necessary expenses of operation and maintenance of power transmission facilities and of marketing electric power and energy pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 (16 U.S.C. 825s), as applied to the southeastern power area, $735,000.

"Southwestern Power Administration

"Construction

"For construction and acquisition of transmission lines, substations, and appurtenant facilities, and for administrative expenses connected therewith, in carrying out the provisions of section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 (16 U.S.C. 825s), as applied to the southwestern power area, $880,000, to remain available until expended.

"Operation and Maintenance

"For necessary expenses of operation and maintenance of power transmission facilities and of marketing electric power and energy pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 (16 U.S.C. 825s), as applied to the southwestern power area, including purchase of not to exceed four passenger motor vehicles for replacement only $1,150,000.

"Continuing Fund

"Not to exceed $5,000,000 shall be available during the current fiscal year from the continuing fund for all costs in connection with the purchase of electric power and energy, and rentals for the use of transmission facilities.

"General provisions—Department of the Interior

"SEC. 201. Appropriations in this title shall be available for expenditure or transfer (within each bureau or office), with the approval of the Secretary, for the emergency reconstruction, replacement or repair of buildings, utilities, or other facilities or equipment damaged or destroyed by fire, flood, storm, or other unavoidable causes: Provided, That no funds shall be made available under this authority until funds specifically made available to the Department of the Interior for emergencies shall have been exhausted.

"SEC. 202. The Secretary may authorize the expenditure or transfer (within each bureau or office) of any appropriation in this title, in addition to the amounts included in the budget programs of the several agencies, for the suppression or emergency prevention of forest or range fires on or threatening lands under jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

"SEC. 203. Appropriations in this title shall be available for operation of warehouses, garages, shops, and similar facilities, wherever consolidation of activities will contribute to efficiency or economy, and said appropriations shall be reimbursed for services rendered to any other activity in the same manner as authorized by the Act of June 30, 1932 (31 U.S.C. 686): Provided, That reimbursements for cost of supplies, materials, and equipment, and for services rendered may be credited to the appropriation current at the time such reimbursements are received.

"SEC. 204. No part of any funds made available by this Act to the Southwestern Power Administration may be made available to any other agency, bureau, or office for any purposes other than for services rendered pursuant to law to the Southwestern Power Administration.

"TITLE III—INDEPENDENT OFFICES

"Tennessee Valley Authority

"Payment to Tennessee Valley Authority Fund

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended (16 U.S.C., ch. 12A), including hire, maintenance, and operation of aircraft, and purchase (not to exceed two hundred for replacement only) and hire of passenger motor vehicles, $15,286,000, to remain available until expended.

"This Act may be cited as the 'Public Works Appropriation Act, 1960.'"

Mr. TABER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, in order to save time I will say that this amendment is the same as that which was reported by the subcommittee to the full Committee on Appropriations. I think, with that, we could agree to suspend with further reading, and I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to get two or three things straightened out in connection with this bill before we get in too far. In this block of projects in dispute there are about 25 out of the 60 projects involved that have a benefit-cost ratio, if it is figured on an honest basis, that would not be as good as 1 to 1. In other words, all of these projects have a benefit-cost ratio submitted to the committee based upon a carrying charge of 2½ percent whereas we know that the carrying charge is wellnigh 4 percent on an average, and it is getting higher.

The projects that are in that block of projects that the President vetoed are in that category. There are so many of them that are ragged edged, so many of them that do not have a really good, honest benefit-cost ratio, that we ought not to get into them and we ought not to approve them. Some of them are projects that are not authorized at all. That figure would run to $75 million or $100 million. Of those projects that come to $800 million that were the cause of the President's veto, here is one with an ultimate cost of $50 million, with a benefit-cost ratio, the way the Engineers figure it, of 1.1 to 1.

Here is one—$50 million is the ultimate cost—with a benefit-cost ratio, the way the Engineers figure it out, of 1.1 to 1. But, actually, it would be less than even up.

Then there is another one. You can go down the list and you strike $113 million on another project.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. Would the gentleman insert in the RECORD a list of these 20 and some odd projects which have this low cost-benefit ratio so that we can inspect the list?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I will do so.

The table follows:

Project	Benefit-cost ratio	Total estimated cost	Appropriation to date	Amount in H.R. 7509
Arkansas: Beaver	1.1	$56,100,000	$1,201,000	$1,500,000
Actual	.5
Alaska: Dillingham	1.3	412,000	6,000	406,000
Actual	.6
Mad River Reservoir	1.2	5,970,000	18,000
Actual	.7
Connecticut
Florida:
Apalachicola Bay	(1)	39,100		39,100
George Island	(1)	43,000		43,000
Intracoastal Waterway	(1)	6,860,000	370,000	600,000
Iowa	1.5	71,000,000	1,717,000	1,113,300
Actual	.9
Kansas: Wilson Reservoir	1.2	18,100,000	259,000	500,000
Actual	.8
Louisiana	(1)	1,420,000		1,420,000
Massachusetts: Westville Reservoir	1.1	2,450,000	328,000
Actual	.7

[1] Not available.

Mr. TABER. There are 13 more without a good benefit cost. I will supply a new table.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. There are a great number of other projects. There is a project for $113 million, that I mentioned a minute ago. There is another of $17 million and another one of $17 million, the two of them running right together. There are a lot of others besides that.

We ought to take care of, as far as we can, the people of the United States. And we do take of them, but we are getting into a situation where we do not seem to be able to take first things first at all. We do not seem to be able to realize it is absolutely necessary that we conserve our resources and get to the point where the tax receipts will come to enough to take care of the governmental expenses. That is why I am very leary of any appropriations that are not absolutely necessary. That is why I believe we ought not to start off on a list of projects where we have to dribble along and dribble along and handle the thing in such a way that it will cost three and four times what it ought to, and to allow the engineers to make fools of the country as they have so many times in days gone by. I do not believe we ought to be too liberal with any of these things. I do not believe we ought to be too liberal with the foreign relief. I do not believe we ought to be too liberal with any of these projects for public buildings in our own territory or for these flood control projects which are not in such shape that they can be handled, and where the Engineers themselves do not know what the actual cost is going to be and where they do not have the thing far enough along or well enough organized so that they can give us an intelligent statement on them when they come up to see us.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MOORHEAD. What is the effect of the amendment on the Allegheny River Reservoir, Kinzua, Pa., where there were funds appropriated in past years and also this year?

Mr. TABER. The item for the Kinzua Reservoir is not in the amendment that I have offered. But that is one of these projects where it is absolutely impossible for them to proceed with anything beyond planning intelligently. They cannot do anything else but that and they can do that with what funds have been appropriated in years gone by. I would like to see this amendment adopted because it will end this picture. If we could do that we would have the thing in such shape that the President would be willing to sign the bill and I do not believe that we ought to present a bill to the President three or four times for his consideration.

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I thank the gentleman. Did I understand the able gentleman from New York a moment ago to state that one of the unbudgeted items last year in the chairman's list was not covered by this amendment, an unbudgeted item?

Mr. TABER. I did not say that.

Mr. EDMONDSON. The gentleman, as I understand, is dealing with these 67 unbudgeted new starts; is that correct?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. I have never said anything different at all.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WEAVER. That was the point I wanted to make so everyone would know clearly what he was voting on and just what impact the gentleman's amendment would have.

Mr. TABER. That is it.

I do wish the Congress would get to the point where we had a different method of handling these projects other than this helter-skelter procedure that spreads them out all over the lot and where there is not enough money spent at any one place in any one quarter so that they can ever get anything done within a reasonable time and at a reasonable cost. That is the reason these things cost so much, because they are scattered all over the lot. I do not think we meet our responsibility to the people when we approach this thing from that viewpoint, and for that reason I offered this amendment.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I object. The two previous speakers not only had 5 minutes but had an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, while I was the sponsor of the pending bill, representing however, except for the 2½ percent reduction, the composite views of the House and Senate, I had only a few minutes in general debate due to the great demand for time; so I have taken this time to further explain my reasoning in offering this bill in the Appropriations Committee.

In the first place, if you do not pass this bill you leave it up to the Bureau of the Budget under any administration to determine all new projects, leaving it open to a handful of men to be purely political.

I have had no unhappy personal experiences with the present Budget Bureau under the Republican administration, though I was not proud of Dixon-Yates, because I have had no problems from my district before it; but I have had experience in prior years as an individual Congressman going down to the Bureau of the Budget trying to get them to do anything. I live adjacent to the Mississippi Delta and frequently have had to turn to the members of this subcommittee for what I knew was vital to that area, and yes, to the Nation.

I approached this problem in a fair way. After the President's veto, I made a motion that our committee invite the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and the Secretary of the Interior before our committee to see if they would promise us to be objective in next year's budget. It is generally accepted—I do not have any individual proof of this, but it is generally accepted that prior to this veto both of those gentlemen had a suite in the Congressional Hotel; and it was mighty easy for my Republican friends to see them under the circumstances where they were seeking your vote. But have you ever tried to see the Bureau of the Budget on your own? If you could have seen them very effectively these projects would have had Budget approval. Now, if it should prove to be as it is rumored that there are commitments that the Bureau of the Budget will include these projects in the next budget, then this talk about keeping them out of the bill because of future cost is purely political. I repeat again I tried to get these gentlemen before us to find out their attitude and to ask them if they would deal with this matter objectively. I was not successful.

In this same connection, I believe it was about three years ago, that this same Bureau of the Budget approved new initial starts in several Republican districts where there was a close contest and refused approval elsewhere. It did not work, but those gentleman tried.

Let me tell you what this Bureau of the Budget did when I had several matters up with that most estimable gentleman, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Benson. A few years ago Secretary Benson, having opposed almost everything that was done to help agriculture, recommended—and, listen—the Bureau of the Budget approved $10 million in retroactive crop insurance out here trying to defeat a Maryland Congressman, a fine Republican whom I personally like. It did not work. At that time I told them you could take half that amount $5 million and elect a Republican in my district.

I am saying that we have an obligation to look after our country, and I am saying that, after study by the Corps of Engineers, a part of the Executive Department, it is up to the Congress after hours, days, and months of study and the testimony of 1,150 witnesses, to recommend the initiation of development in sections of this Nation. That is what the bill before us would do.

As chairman of the Agricultural Appropriation Subcommittee, I have had to recommend to you hundreds of millions of dollars in direct relief trying to alleviate the suffering and damage that had been done because we were not farsighted enough to spend in our own country first. It is an odd commentary that I make. I was standing here and figuring that if we had merely diverted 2 percent of what a majority of the Congress and the President have spent in foreign countries in the last 10 years, these projects would all be completed, because it figures $800 million.

Involved here is whether the Congress grant to the Bureau of the Budget, under any President, under any administration, the privilege of playing politics with the right to designate where you are going to start taking care of this country. I read the Washington papers regularly, and if you will look at them, we have the unhappy situation where the American press identifies everything that is not for the Potomac River, the District of Columbia and adjacent area, or for a foreign country, as pork in the lap of some Congressman; and they indicate rotten "pork" at that. They are wrong, and that attitude is one of the great dangers this Nation faces today.

I have not any projects in this bill which are in my district, though I have some adjacent to me. I am not a disappointed Member, I did not ask for any for my district. However, when we spend a lot of time and money in harnessing our rivers, in trying to prevent floods, in trying to prevent droughts; when we try to save the millions of dollars we spend every year trying to alleviate suffering because we have been shortsighted, for the American press to say unless you spend it in the District of Columbia, adjacent thereto, or in foreign countries, it is pork for some Congressman, it is a sad day, yes, a dangerous day.

In 1956 I was in Russia, and may I say to you that Russia does not compare in overall strength with our Nation today, but they have the raw materials, they have this great country for development. As you go into the public parks of any city in Russia you will see on a large board, big as one end of this chamber, a big relief map, if you please, showing the rivers and streams, showing the 5-year plan that they are carrying out to strengthen Russia. Over here we are giving bonuses, billions in foreign aid, we are raising mileage payments, salaries, providing insurance, we are raising old-age pensions, the money for which is dependent on the land, the rivers, the natural resources of the United States of America. No, we take care of everybody in the world, with our money, then after we are committed to that we come in here and say: We have not enough money left to take care of the very foundation on which all of these other things are built, we must let the development, the protection from flood and drought in the United States go by the board for we cannot afford it.

I am not on this subcommittee, I will have nothing to do with it next year, but may I say something to the gentlemen on the Republican side—and this is no threat, but merely looking at the practical aspects of the situation. If a Member were to vote to delete the project deemed necessary to his area now, I could not help but believe he recognized it is not sound and that he would not want it next year, whatever the Bureau of the Budget may recommend.

When you go home and say: "I voted against this project because in Washington they wrote it up as pork barrel, in Washington they are trying to elect our distinguished minority leader Vice President; we wanted to strengthen the hand of the Bureau of the Budget." I do not believe you can explain to those folks who were badly in need of this work. You might get the minority leader to come out to speak, and he is a powerful speaker. You might get my good friend from New York to come out, too. One of the sad things I have had to live through is to see my good friend from New York opposing such projects in foreign aid. This year he opposed my efforts to even investigate the waste in the foreign aid program. To see him now opposing this American investment in our own country at the same time he opposes every effort to cut down foreign aid, is truly saddening.

I remember a few years ago when he was out to cut conservation of our soil in the Agricultural appropriation bill. At that time one of his Republican colleagues said to me: "Do not pay any attention to our friend. I know you love him as I do, but he honestly thinks all of the country west of Baltimore is Indian country, and he thinks you have to have a passport to go out there."

I have seen him try to break this bill down during the years. I am not saying I know, but I will tell you what I think; if the Republican Bureau of the Budget puts these projects in next year the Democrats will cut them out; when the Democrats put their projects in the President will cut them out, these areas of the country, represented by both sides get cut out. And my good friend from New York and a few on my side, will win both ways in reducing efforts at developing and protecting our own country, the supporting base of our financial system.

And the plant upon which we must depend if we are ever able to work out the money debt we have imposed on ourselves in the other programs.

My friends if we leave our children and our children's children, a fertile land, with our harbors improved, with our rivers harnessed, against flood and drought, with all our resources intact, they will make it fine, for they could set up a new financial system.

On the other hand if we paid off every nickel we owe, if we did it by letting our country go to pot, in future years this Nation could be like China and India, with little on which to build. We are wasting far too much money, but money spent on our country is not waste, it is merely common sense.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, several years ago the phrase "no new starts" was coined. That was back in 1945 and 1946. New starts were objected to because we were in World War II and then we were in the Korean war. We had a shortage of manpower, we had a shortage of labor, we had a shortage of all sorts of materials at that time. So it was practical and realistic that we not undertake any new starts. But, they have been carrying the no-new-start slogan right along up to 1959. It is about time we dismissed the thought of no new starts, because if we can make new starts all over the world, I cannot see any reason why we should not make a few new starts in this country of ours.

Now, it must be recalled that two previous authorization bills were vetoed, so that, I would say, set back the new starts 4 or 5 years. We had no new starts. So, I think it is about time that we gave some consideration to the situation existing in our own country.

Now, my very good and able friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], referred to a project in which I am interested, as an $113 million item. I think they put that in the report just to get the amount up to the $800 million referred to. My project was not a new start. This project was not an unbudgeted project. But, to show you what they will resort to, the project that I am talking about was authorized in three acts—1936, 1938, and 1941. The project was authorized after the devastating floods in the Allegheny Valley, at Pittsburgh and western Pennsylvania, at a cost of $736 million property damage and 33 lives. Now, to show you that they do not know what they are talking about on this project—and if they are no more accurate with other projects than they are with this project this amendment is not in order—let me say this: Including fiscal year 1956, $241,000 was spent on planning for this project, and in 1956, for fiscal 1957, Congress appropriated $384,000 to complete the project report. Thus, $625,000 has been spent on the plans and specifications for the project that they are now trying to take out as a new start. So, it becomes evident they do not know what they are talking about. The project was under study for many years. No objections were voiced, at least, not to my knowledge, until the first appropriation of $1 million was made for fiscal 1958 for actual construction of the project. Then an additional $1 million for construction was appropriated for fiscal 1959 for the project, and the project was undertaken when litigation broke out with the Indians. A restraint was written into the fiscal 1959 report restricting the use of the money until such time as the Supreme Court acted. The Supreme Court acted on June 15, and they should have resumed the project, the construction, but no, an effort was made to reallocate the money appropriated and take it away for other projects. I am merely trying to show you that the people who are talking about items that ought to be deleted, do not fully understand, or do not want to understand, and how wrong they are in making an attempt to eliminate a project that was actually under construction. Then an attempt was made to require additional study of the project. They tried to study the project to death. Last year they spent another $75,000 for additional studies on five alternate plans. Already $700,000 has been spent in studying all phases and reports on the project. It is now and has been under construction; the moneys are appropriated. There is no reason why the U.S. engineers cannot proceed, but now an attempt is made to try to list it as an unbudgeted item and to delete it.

Now, if the rest of the items that are to be deleted are in the same category as the one I am talking about, certainly this amendment that is being offered here today should be voted down. To make a comparison I made inquiry concerning mutual security legislation and the various types of projects being considered. I also talked with Representative JENSEN and, if I am wrong, my very good and able friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] can correct me. He said there was about $320 million for projects in the mutual security bill. Here is a list of some items in mutual security; and bear with me, because I think this is important. Here are just some of the projects in the mutual security appropriation bill to be considered for some 12 countries:

Irrigation and drainage systems; improvement of water supplies; land and water resources development; fisheries development; hydroelectric power development; power transmission and distribution; water resources survey; harbor and shipping development; municipal water supply; flood control; land and water use improvement; highway and bridge construction; port and harbor improvement; irrigation development; improvement of rivers and harbors; water resources planning and development; irrigation services; power facilities; improvement of irrigation and water control; expansion of rural-urban water supply; rehabilitation of inland waterways.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVIN. I yield.

Mr. CORBETT. For the purpose of clarity and emphasis, I should like to ask the gentleman if he is telling the House that carryovers from previous appropriations that were authorized, and for which money was appropriated, and the bill signed by the President, would be wiped out by this amendment?

Mr. GAVIN. The amendment cites a list of projects and the project to which I refer and am interested in is on the list, so I presume that it would be taken out.

Mr. CORBETT. Was this provision to eliminate these carryover funds the result of subcommittee or full committee action or was it just written into the report?

Mr. GAVIN. I think my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON] is more familiar with that, also my good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], who when they found this language written into the report, to reprogram the money, vigorously protested to the committee. The first copy of this report—or committee print—was called to their attention, both members of the Public Works subcommittee, who—and if I am wrong and either gentleman is here—I see Mr. FENTON is here—I wish to be corrected—immediately protested this language in the report. It had not been considered by the subcommittee, nor was any action taken on it by the subcommittee. It had just been written into the report.

They protested the language and if I remember correctly, and were assured that it would be changed. When the committee report was issued, no change had been made. I called it to the attention of Mr. RABAUT who stated, "You must be mistaken," and I thought possibly I might be. However, after I investigated I found that the language had been written in and the language in the second report was just the same as the language in the first report. Certain persons were determined to take this project out and I was determined to keep it in.

Mr. CORBETT. The gentleman is saying that they are altering the law, the appropriation, by the simple action of somebody writing the report?

Mr. GAVIN. That is right.. Then when the bill came to the floor of the House, an amendment was offered to restore the $1,400,000 by Representative FENTON, which was accepted and then the gentleman from New York insisted the amendment be amended so another study could be made. This last amendment was legislation on an appropriation bill.

The Senate committee concurred in restoring the $1,400,000 but deleted the language calling for another study. That is right. We want to be fair in these matters. But after $700,000 had been spent on the project report and after the same committee appropriated $2 million for construction, they still wanted to make another study and write the project out. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] inserted a list of items to be deleted in the record of August 31 and right opposite this project it says "No. 2," and that refers to "Resumption of Construction." And now it is said it is an unbudgeted item. The gentleman from New York stated here today that these are unbudgeted items, that they are new starts, that they are this, that, and the other thing. Nobody knows what they are. So, if you are on the list, let me tell you right now you are out—at least, if you support this amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

I just want to call attention to the fact that I am concerned about new starts. We are making new starts all over the world. The flood of January 21 to 25 in the Allegheny Valley this year in the western part of Pennsylvania cost $18 million. And in the Pittsburgh district $28 million and thousands of people were made homeless. This project is the key to the overall flood protection program of the Allegheny, Upper Ohio, Beaver, and Monongahela River basins. It will harness the water for useful purposes for several million people and prevent the devastating and destructive floods which are periodically visited on the Allegheny and Ohio River valleys. I appeal to you as I have never before appealed to you to reject this amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What the gentleman is getting is a dirty deal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman Louisiana [Mr. PASSMAN].

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to think that this is a nonpartisan bill. We can approach it as our constituents back home would like to have us approach it.

I see the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], on the floor, and also the beloved ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

When we were considering the mutual security appropriation bill, a Republican Member, my good friend, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON], offered an amendment providing that all projects on foreign countries would have to meet the same acid test as projects here in America, that these projects in foreign countries would have to qualify under the benefit-cost ratio that we have had in this country for so long.

This year the foreign aid bill will finance over 1,450 projects. That is in the RECORD. None of those projects has ever had adequate planning, nor has a benefit-cost ratio ever been approved for a single one of those projects, other than what some political bureaucrat saying with respect to it, "This will help us politically, it may do the country some good."

We hope when we go to conference on the foreign aid bill, that we may be able to hold the Thomson amendment in the bill. I believe inasmuch as we are practicing economy, that if the distinguished gentlemen who are so close to the Director of the Budget and our distinguished President would get the word downtown and also get the word to their friends of the other body who will be on the conference, to hold this amendment in the bill, and make all of the 1,450 foreign projects meet the same criteria that we have to meet here in America, we will, in my opinion, be able to save $700 million because, as I stated earlier, there is over $8 billion in that program. Most of that money, if it is not for personnel, which incidentally amounts to about 43,800 jobs, it goes to one of the 1,450 projects.

I hope you will get the word downtown and to the conferees on the other side to go along with the House conferees. If you do we will save some real money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short observation?

Mr. Chairman, I just want to call the attention of the House in reference to my previous remarks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] wholeheartedly supported my project and did everything that was humanly possible to get the thing changed.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming to the amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 8, line 12 strike "$4,788,710", and insert in lieu thereof "$6,703,710, of which $1,915,000 shall be used for advance planning, to include collection of design data, designs and specifications, foundation explorations and associated activities on the Greater Wenatchee Division, Cedar Bluff, East Bench, Red Willow Dam, Smith Fork, Hammong and Seedskadee projects, and".

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect this amendment to carry because I do not think that the principal amendment, or any other amendments offered today, will carry. I know that there is a general understanding that all amendments will be voted down, whether they propose to take from or add to the bill.

In some respects, that is an unfortunate situation. It precludes amendments which I am satisfied would carry if considered on their merits.

This I will discuss later. But, if the pending substitute amendment is to be seriously considered, then it would be most necessary that my amendment to it be adopted so that in fairness, the unbudgeted projects for which construction money was provided in the original bill would be treated at least as favorably as the unbudgeted projects which would remain and for which advance planning and general investigation funds were provided in the vetoed bill. For a more detailed analysis of this and other items which I will mention, I respectfully refer the membership to my extensive statement made on last Friday, September 4, 1959, beginning at page 18176 of the RECORD.

I want to repeat again that I do not blame the President for this veto. At the time it was being considered, he was occupied with most important questions of foreign policy. As a matter of fact, when the veto was delivered, he was out of the country and had been for some time.

This did not permit those who really knew the true situation to consult with him or for him to consult with them. The President was denied the advice of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], who has just spoken as ranking Republican member of the subcommittee which considered the bill, is best informed, and has time and again proved that he is really an economy Congressman, with his actions resulting in savings of billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money.

The veto of the bill is unfortunate and ill-considered, because it is based on wrong information. The real blame must rest on the shoulders of those who gave the President this wrong basic information, as reflected by his veto message.

The substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which is identical with the proposal made by the chairman of the committee in interpreting the veto message, points out just how wrong this information was. The effect of this substitute amendment would be to knock out all of the unbudgeted projects for which construction money was provided in the vetoed bill, but would leave in the general investigation and advance planning money for unbudgeted projects. The effect of this is not to cut spending in the long run, as the President stated his aim to be, and therefore there is no true economy in his veto.

Everyone familiar with the program knows that the real place that you make new starts is in general investigations and particularly in advance planning. The advance planning stages is when the people move in and set up their camps and prepare designs and specifications, and they are then ready to go ahead with the construction, which is the orderly next step. There is no economy, at that point, in making them move out and stay away a couple of years and then come back. We have already found, with regard to the military that we spend a good part of our money paying for people to travel around. The same would be true here, and that is no economy.

If we really wanted to make cuts, the items to be eliminated should be the general investigation and advance planning items. All the members of the Appropriations subcommittee have agreed in our committee meetings that that is the fact.

If this substitute were adopted, there would be left in the bill, purportedly at the President's request, 32 unbudgeted advance planning projects with an eventual cost of $450 million, as per the estimate of the Army Corps of Engineers. Furthermore, there would be 89 unbudgeted projects for general investigations left in the bill, at a total cost of somewhere between $1 and $2 billion. That is why I say it is not true economy. There are your real new starts, and those would be left in the bill, based upon the misinformation given to the President.

There is absolutely no justification for accelerating advance planning on projects, if we cannot afford to go ahead on those projects which we have on hand and which are ready for construction money. That would be throwing the taxpayers' money down the drain.

But at the least, we should in fairness treat the projects which are ready for construction money on an equal basis. The effect of my amendment would be to add $1,915,000 to the reclamation appropriation for advance planning on these projects. A similar amendment, to add $572,000 to the Corps of Engineers appropriation, would be required.

The veto message is further based upon misinformation because it charges a "tremendous expansion in government expenditures in just this one area," and infers that there has been a threefold increase in expenditures, which leads us to deficit spending and our fiscal problems of today. With regard to reclamation, which is of primary interest in the West as a means of developing our vital water resources, exactly the reverse is true. There has been approximately a one-third reduction in appropriations, as compared to the 1950 level. In 1949, there was appropriated for fiscal year 1950 $335.6 million, as compared to an appropriation for reclamation construction of $212.1 million in the vetoed bill, a drop of over $120 million, or more than 33⅓ percent. The amount appropriated for the total reclamation program in 1949 was $358.9 million, as compared to $256.7 million in the vetoed bill, or a total drop of over $100 million, representing almost a 33⅓ percent reduction.

I again point out to my Democrat friends that they should not try to make a political issue out of this, for it is one on which they would lose. The appropriations had in fact dropped to $177.7 million for construction and $206.4 million for total reclamation in 1952, the last year of the Truman administration. We should work to continue to meet this problem, just as we are doing on this bill.

The veto is further based upon misinformation because the message refers to 67 unbudgeted projects, with an eventual cost of over $800 million. This is misleading information. It includes six small loan projects for which no future appropriations are required. It includes the Burns Creek project in Idaho, which is unauthorized and therefore could not possibly be constructed. It includes the Trinity power project, which is still in this substitute as offered by the gentleman from New York.

Therefore, instead of 15 new starts with a total cost of over $200 million in future years, as inferred by the veto message, we have 7 new starts with a total cost of about $80 million in future years, to complete them. This would be spread out over a 10-year construction period, and could not possibly have the adverse effect upon future budgets as charged.

Similar adjustments must be made for the Corps of Engineers. Also, there must be offset the three projects which were recommended in the budget and on which construction was stopped. When these adjustments are made, we end up with less than 50 projects, with a total cost of about $500 million.

There are about 40 projects being completed in the coming fiscal year, with approximately the same total estimated cost. Therefore, the bill would not be expanding the construction appropriations in years ahead.

As I mentioned, I am satisfied that no amendments to this bill, either to put anything in or to take anything out, will be adopted. This is unfortunate, because there are two amendments which I had intended to offer, and which I believe would have been adopted if that decision had not been made and they could have been considered on their merits. Both of these amendments would have been to eliminate projects in the reclamation area which would have been true economy, and from the people with whom I have talked, I am satisfied that they could have carried, had they been considered on their merits.

At this point, I would like to point out that the true economy and savings to the taxpayers in the reclamation field have been accomplished principally by people like myself from reclamation areas, who have successfully fought to eliminate bad projects and to keep the rate of spending at a reasonable level. I would further point out to the executive that I will mention these projects because I think they point the way to how this bill can truly be brought in line with the President's objectives.

The first amendment which I would have offered would have been to reduce the appropriation by $487,500, because of the Burns Creek project situation. This is a bad project which should never be constructed. It is strictly a power project that would produce power at a cost of over 5.4 mills per kilowatt-hour, to be sold at 3.67 mills per kilowatt-hour, and would take millions of dollars from the true reclamation program. Actually, I do not think that it is particularly important whether this amendment is offered or not, except to bring the dollar figures into line. As the bill is presented, I do not believe that the project is included. The "Construction and Rehabilitation" reclamation appropriation on page 8 is "for construction and rehabilitation of authorized reclamation projects." This project is not authorized, and therefore is not included in the appropriation.

I would, though, point out to the Executive, that if they really want to accomplish some savings for the taxpayer, then this project should receive their attention. Ironically enough, I was testifying before the House Interior Committee in opposition to this project which the Interior Department, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, was supporting, on the very day that the veto message was received. The House Interior Committee has passed the bill over for continuation of hearings next year, and I would suggest to the Executive that it might well review its position if it really wants to save the reclamation fund and the taxpayers some money.

The other amendment which, because of the situation prevailing, I will not offer is one to eliminate $2,354,625 for the Trinity power project. Here again, the President was given misinformation as to the importance of providing funds for the Trinity power facilities this year. The private utility company has stated in writing to the Secretary of the Interior that it will continue with the preparation of final designs and specifications, of required major equipment and engineering studies in collaboration with the Bureau of Reclamation engineers, and will make all of these available without charge to the Bureau. This is what the funds provided in this bill are designed to do. Mr. Dominy, the Commissioner of Reclamation, in response to a question asked by the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, stated, "We could take over their designs without a measurable delay in completing this project." Here is a chance to really save the taxpayers some money. Besides that, what has happened on this bill clearly points up the need for construction of the Trinity power facilities as a partnership project.

The President is in error about the necessity for constructing these power facilities, because the effect of this would be to produce power at a cost of 8.9 mills to 9.6 mills per kilowatt-hour, which would be sold to SMUD—Sacramento Municipal Utility District—at a rate of 4.5 mills, or at a big loss. There is no point in hurrying to construct something that is going to operate at a loss.

Furthermore, over a period of 50 years this would result in a loss to the reclamation fund of $175 million. I would say to my friends who have felt they must support this project for other reasons that his veto brings quite sharply to our attention that, unless these funds are made available to reclamation, we are going to destroy the reclamation program. Furthermore, this project would result in the loss of Federal taxes over the 50-year period of $83 million, or a total loss to the taxpayers of the Nation of over $318 million.

If the parliamentary situation prevailing in committee had permitted my offering this amendment to eliminate these funds, I am satisfied that it would have carried. The Executive should not interpret the fact that it is left in this bill as a mandate to go ahead with the all-federal construction of the Trinity power project. If an amendment to eliminate the funds could be considered here on its merits, from the check that I have made, I believe that it would carry. Again, I respectfully suggest to the President that here is a real opportunity to save over $318 million for the reclamation fund and the taxpayers of the Nation, if he allows the private utility company to go ahead with preconstruction planning, and insists upon this being constructed as a partnership project.

At this point, I would like to point out something to those people on both sides of the aisle who are interested in the reclamation program. I think the veto of the public works appropriation bill establishes beyond a doubt the warning which I and several others have been sounding. If we want a continuing reclamation program on a sound basis, then the attempt to use it as a vehicle for bringing about all-Federal ownership of all power facilities at any cost must be met head-on and stopped.

The attempt to construct projects like the Burns Creek and the Trinity power project from reclamation funds does two things, both of which it is demonstrated will be a death blow to reclamation. In the first place, it robs the reclamation program of necessary construction funds for true reclamation projects. Furthermore, the reclamation program has been made possible, to a large extent, because of the philosophy of the 1906 amendment to the Reclamation Act which established the principle that when power is produced as an adjunct of a true reclamation project, then the surplus revenues will be used to assist reclamation. The effect of these projects and others like them, which will be coming along in increasing numbers, is to change that principle to say that power revenues will be used to subsidize power instead of to assist reclamation. Those who are truly interested in the future of reclamation must meet this challenge.

I will vote for the committee bill because it is necessary to a continuing sound and orderly water development program. I regret that the situation does not permit making it a better bill. This is true economy, for if we do not provide for the orderly development of our water resources, we will eventually have to have a crash program like the highway program now confronting us, which will end up with extravagance and deficit spending, at the expense of the taxpayers of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. CLEM MILLER.]

Mr. CLEM MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to speak of fat and pork barrel and to ask some pertinent questions. We hear so much of pork barrel and fat in this bill from the press of the country. From my experience I do not see how we are going to roll a pork barrel past the gentleman from Iowa, the gentleman from Missouri, and the gentleman from New York. This week has been a field day for editorial writers. Everything this week is pork barrel, and it seems to me they ought to get specific. So I address this question to anyone in this Chamber, particularly those who vote against the bill, who voted against overriding: Where is the pork barrel in this bill, or where was it in the previous bills?

I yield the balance of my time to anyone who can answer my question.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding for I would like to ask a question. Do I understand in this bill that there are cancellations of previous appropriations, for example, the 1958–1959 appropriations for the project in the district of our good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN]? A cutting out of previously authorized appropriations? Is that correct? Can the chairman or the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] answer?

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I ask again: Is there anyone here on this floor now who can answer me so we can give something specific to these editorial writers that they may present specific instances instead of these glittering generalities?

Mr. TABER. I say those cases that have such a low benefit-to-cost ratio that there is practically none. That is "pork."

Mr. CLEM MILLER. Can anyone else answer me?

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I yield.

Mr. GAVIN. You can rest assured if your project is in there you are out.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I yield.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Chairman, under the statement just made by the ranking member of the great Committee on Appropriations, then there would be no elimination of the new projects from the Bureau of Reclamation, because each one of those projects has a fine benefit-to-cost ratio; so that answer does not go for the Bureau of Reclamation.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I wish the gentlemen would give me an example of where there is any pork barrel in this bill. I wonder if the gentleman from Iowa can point out an example of where there is any pork barrel in this bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Since the gentleman mentioned "the gentleman from Iowa" I presume he meant me. I want to say I have never, since I have been a Member of this Congress, voted for what I would call a pork barrel bill.

Mr. CLEM MILLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. And I renew the challenge I made earlier when I asked if any Member of this House would stand in his place and say that Congressman JENSEN of Iowa has spent the money of the American people recklessly. If so, let him stand in his place and make his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD].

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in answer to my question and questions propounded by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON], the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee has made it clear that money appropriated by previous Congresses and remaining unexpended for projects—and I refer particularly to the Allegheny River Reservoir project at Kinzua—it will be eliminated as a result of the veto and this proposed amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I consider this to be one of the most outrageous effects of the veto and this amendment. This Congress, and past Congresses, of the United States have appropriated money for the Allegheny River Reservoir. The veto apparently was intended only to affect new moneys, but this amendment affects not only money appropriated by this bill but also moneys appropriated by previous Congresses.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CORBETT. Again we want to make crystal clear that this particular amendment will eliminate items previously appropriated for according to law beyond the bill which was vetoed. The veto as I understand only eliminated new money, not previously appropriated money; so this particular amendment is doubly vicious.

Mr. MOORHEAD. It is doubly vicious. I agree heartily with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. I am one of those who voted to sustain the veto, but I certainly do not go so far as to throw out previously appropriated funds which as shown by the statement of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], this last year was intended for the Allegheny Reservoir. For example, $1,333,000 of unused money from the 1958 appropriations are being canceled by this amendment that would otherwise have been there in spite of the veto.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I would like to add this. Allegheny River Reservoir is only in a technical sense a new start. The money has already been appropriated for the construction of this item, and construction would have started years ago. It would be well on the way to completion now except for a lawsuit that held up the use of this money. That lawsuit has terminated. There is no reason why we should not use this money and money previously appropriated.

This is an example of the outrageous effect of the amendment. I believe it should be soundly defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, when we passed the appropriation bill that the President vetoed I think practically every Member of the House was very happy, because they realized that that bill was the result of months of hearings and efforts by the subcommittee, a profound consideration by the House, and a committee of the other body and the other body itself. We felt that the bill was an honest and a fair bill to the people of all sections of our country in connection with matters of great importance to them, whether flood control protection, conservation, or any other of the activities that were involved in the appropriation bill that was vetoed.

I do not know of any appropriation bill that approximated greater satisfaction, any public works appropriation bill, in my 31 years in this body, than the one we sent to the President.

In the exercise of his judgment and following his constitutional authority, the President vetoed the bill. We exercised our constitutional authority and the veto was sustained by one vote. This bill is now before the House in the exercise of our constitutional responsibility. The President's power to veto stems from the Constitution, our power to try to pass over the veto stems from the Constitution, our power to consider the bill today also stems from the Constitution. I do not think the Constitution ever intended that the Congress of the United States should abdicate its constitutional authority to any President.

When the bill was vetoed the other day we heard talk of recrimination. I knew that on the Republican side there were many Members suffering, and I say this not politically but objectively, there were many of my Republican friends suffering keenly who voted to sustain the veto. We know they were hoping that the veto would be overridden, that there would be the two-thirds vote to override. They could play it both ways. They are suffering today. But the political suffering of this vote is not now. It is going to be in November of 1960. That is when all of these vetoes are going to be interpreted in political terms—not today or in the months ahead, but in November 1960. The old law of action and reaction will operate then. I would love to be a candidate in the district of some Members who voted to sustain the veto, particularly with projects located in that district. But now you have a chance to undo it. You have a chance to correct your error of a few days ago. We have not brought in a recriminatory bill, we are not striking out the projects that were located in districts represented by friends of mine on the Republican side. That would not be right, and I would not stand for it. They are human beings living in your districts, the same as human beings living in my district and other districts. They are Americans, too. We reported out a fair bill and an honest bill. We have treated them all alike, deducting 2½ percent to try to meet the objections of the President. And, we are exercising our constitutional power and our judgment in so doing. Now, if the President vetoes it again, that is his responsibility.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Oh, I am always glad to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman is very fair in that regard, and I thank him for it. I want to say, first of all, that there has been no recrimination, I appreciate that, but I want to understand correctly, if I may, the gentleman's words about political reprisals in November of 1960.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Oh, I did not say political reprisals.

Mr. HALLECK. Let me conclude my question, please. Is the gentleman arguing that this sort of political consideration should govern in connection with a bill like this instead of a Member's own conviction about what he thinks is right?

Mr. MCCORMACK. What I said was that the veto and the vote will be considered politically in terms of November 1960. What is wrong with that? You are here because of politics. I am here because of politics. We are politicians. And, what is wrong with talking about the next election? Let me say to my friend from Indiana that it is Members on his side that are worried; not Members on my side that are worried.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Of course, I am always glad to yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has been here longer than I have.

Mr. MCCORMACK. By the way, there are a couple of projects right up there in Indiana, too; a couple of rivers right around the gentleman's district.

Mr. HALLECK. I understand. But, let me just say to the gentleman that in my time in politics—and I am a politician; I come from Indiana, and that comes natural, of course—but may I just say this, that I have found, in the long run, the best politics is to do right.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Ah, that is what we are doing in this bill. We are doing the right thing because we are treating everybody decent. There is no project taken out of this bill reported now that was not in the original bill. You might disagree with our judgment, but remember one thing, we are fair to every Member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 91, noes 216.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remainder of the bill be dispensed with and that amendments shall be in order at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order to the bill?

If not, the Chair will receive amendments.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: On page 18, after line 19 insert:

"TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 401. Each of the appropriations in this bill are hereby reduced by 2½ percent."

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment in the Public Works Subcommittee on Appropriations when the bill was marked up in the first instance. My amendment lost by an almost strict party vote. Then Mr. TABER offered it on the floor of the House in a motion to recommit and that lost. Now, in order to carry out my original intent to reduce the bill 5 percent across the board, I offer this amendment to reduce the bill an additional 2½ percent, which would make a 5 percent reduction on the original bill as it came from the conference committee. A 5 percent reduction can be lived with not only in construction funds, but also in planning funds and also in personnel funds which are provided in this bill.

A further reduction of 2½ percent would reduce the amount appropriated in this bill as it comes to the floor $30 million in round figures. Hence if the amendment is approved the bill would provide approximately $30 million below the President's budget request. I think it is very reasonable that we do this for two reasons. First, we should save this $30 million; and, second, it might encourage the President to sign the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. WEAVER. It has been stated here that the President received considerable misinformation and poor advice when he vetoed this bill. Can the gentleman state whether he was ever consulted by the President on this matter?

Mr. JENSEN. No, not at all in connection with this bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I did not want the gentleman to be blamed for the misinformation that was given the President.

Mr. JENSEN. I thank the gentleman. In the 17 years I have served on the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives I have been very active in helping the economy-minded members on that committee, both Democrats and Republicans, to strike out all unnecessary and wasteful spending as we saw such waste in the bills. I yield to no man in this House of Representatives so far as an economy record is concerned, and I do not apologize for this bill. There are, as I said previously, a few projects in this bill that I would not have put in the bill. But as a whole it is a good bill. It is for the conservation and the preservation of our country, to stop destructive floods, and to save life and property.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, we ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, Interior Secretary Seaton's statement on the President's veto of the former public works appropriation bill has come to my attention, and I would like to make a few comments with respect to it.

Secretary Seaton, as a spokesman for the administration, in such release, voices his alleged friendship and support of a strong Federal reclamation program. I do not see how this claim can be made successfully by an administration spokesman in the face of such actions as the aforesaid veto and its accompanying message. In my opinion, this administration is just not being honest with the American people in purporting to favor a strong reclamation program on the one hand while refusing on the other hand to recommend adequate expenditures for such a program.

I renew the contention I have stated several times previously to this body that this administration has neglected without justifiable cause the reclamation program, and I submit that one needs only to examine the annual budget requests to confirm this statement. I submit further that it is due almost entirely to actions by the Congress, such as adding a few new starts, that the annual level of spending has been boosted a little, an insignificant amount in my opinion, in recent years.

How can Secretary Seaton justifiably say, as he did in his statement on the President's veto of the public works bill, "I am personally 100 percent in favor of a strong, continuing reclamation construction program" and in the same statement say, "I support without reservations the President's veto of the public works appropriation bill for 1960"? These statements are just not consistent.

Secretary Seaton also indicates his agreement with the President's statement that the former appropriation bill as delivered to the President ignored the necessity for an orderly development of America's water resources. With respect to the reclamation program, this is certainly not a constructive or factual statement. I have previously discussed before this body the studies which my staff and I have made to demonstrate that we can start the projects included in the bill which the President vetoed and additional projects annually without excessive pyramiding of future fund requirements.

Secretary Seaton says that he is for a progressive construction program, but how can a program be progressive unless we continue to add needed and feasible projects to take the place of those which are being completed and unless that program maintains its relative position with other Federal programs in an expanding economy?

There are two sets of figures in the Secretary's statement that I would like to refer to briefly. He states that the program envisioned by the vetoed bill would have required as a minimum $310 million in fiscal year 1961 and $296 million in fiscal year 1962. While I do not agree with these figures because of the studies I have made and I believe they can be reduced without adversely affecting efficient scheduling of construction, at this time I want to question whether they actually are unreasonably high in view of the fact that if the reclamation program had maintained a relative position in our overall Government spending that it held prior to World War II we would be spending about $370 million annually.

Secretary Seaton states that if the new starts included in the vetoed bill are initiated in fiscal year 1961 instead of 1960 our requirements would be approximately $275 million in fiscal year 1961 and $289 million in fiscal year 1962, and refers to these figures as much more realistic in the light of the overall Federal budget situation. Both these sets of figures are only someone's estimate as to the amounts that may be required to maintain an efficient construction schedule and I cannot understand this great importance that has been attached to them for the purpose of explaining the veto. They have no sounder basis than the estimates of future requirements developed in my study and therefore I maintain that Secretary Seaton's "realistic fund requirements" for fiscal year 1961 and for fiscal year 1962 could be adhered to even with the new starts in.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is that the administration and the Secretary of the Interior, while openly claiming to be strong supporters of the reclamation program, have, by the actions taken and statements made, done great damage to the program. Such actions amount to strangling the child immediately after its birth. Support for project authorizations does not indicate support of the program if the administration continues to refuse financial support for construction. There is no point in continuing to authorize projects if we are not going to build them. The information and data which is the basis for project authorizations soon becomes obsolete and out of date. With extended delays, quite correctly, the Committees on Appropriations ask for reviews and in some instances for reauthorization.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, without amendment and with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOGGS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 9105) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations for further consideration.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken and there were—yeas 304, nays 93, not voting 38, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

HON. DALE ALFORD DULY ELECTED TO THE 86TH CONGRESS

Mr. ASHMORE from the Committee on House Administration reported a privileged resolution (H. Res. 380, Rept. No. 1172) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHMORE. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a privileged resolution (H. Res. 380) relative to the investigation of the November 4, 1958, election in the Fifth Congressional District of Arkansas, and declaring that DALE ALFORD was duly elected to the 86th Congress, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Committee on House Administration has concluded its investigation of the election of November 4, 1958, in the Fifth Congressional District of Arkansas pursuant to House Resolution 1; and

Whereas such investigation reveals no cause to question the right of DALE ALFORD to his seat in the Eighty-sixth Congress; Therefore be it

Resolved, That DALE ALFORD was duly elected a Representative to the Eighty-sixth Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of Arkansas, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention or purpose in my comments to enter into the discussion in any way as to the relative merits of either candidate to represent the Fifth Congressional District of Arkansas here in the House of Representatives. Such a decision rests completely, and properly so, in the hands and judgment of the qualified electors of that district.

The existence of rumors and statements attributed to various people, Mr. Speaker, alleging fraud and dishonesty in this election apparently indicated to to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, the possibility that an objection might be made to the seating of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALFORD]. It will be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that House Resolution 1, presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], was adopted here in the House of Representatives on January 7, 1959, and that under its provisions the final right of DALE ALFORD to a seat in the 86th Congress was referred to the Committee on House Administration on which I have the honor to serve as the ranking Republican member. Thus it became the duty of this committee, through its Subcommittee on Elections, to conduct a thorough, complete, and unbiased investigation into all factors, circumstances, records, and phases of this election. Therefore, I supported the motion made in the Committee on House Administration to authorize and order such an investigation.

The Subcommittee on Elections, Mr. Speaker, has made a very thorough and complete investigation. It has been assisted by a well-qualified staff and by expert consultants. The printed report of this subcommittee, Mr. Speaker, contains 217 pages and illustrates the thorough and unbiased way in which this investigation was made. I want to extend my appreciation and my thanks to the members of the subcommittee, its staff, and its consultants for the very able and thorough manner in which they did their work.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has made a very fine statement and one in which I concur. The gentleman has been helpful and cooperative in this matter as well as the other members of the minority.

Mr. Speaker, I take full responsibility for what has heretofore, both on the RECORD and in private, been described as a delay in the consideration of this matter. However, the delay from January, at the time House Resolution 1 was adopted, to April, was not unusual. As a matter of fact, the Federal court in Little Rock, Ark., had the ballots impounded and not available for the subcommittee's inspection until after it was decided by the House Administration Committee to investigate the congressional election in the Fifth District.

Mr. Speaker, before this matter is closed I wish to compliment the Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration for having performed in a highly responsible manner.

As everyone is aware, this matter has been charged with considerable emotion. Facing some unfavorable circumstances and difficulty the subcommittee proceeded with diligence and objectivity. It spent many hours of hard work. It spared no effort. The gentlemen on the committee traveled to Little Rock and worked on weekends and a holiday. An able and competent staff worked with them and rendered an indispensable service in determining facts and circumstances on which a correct conclusion could be reached.

The House owes the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ASHMORE], and members of his committee on both sides, a vote of thanks which can be shown by supporting their report and the resolution pending.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred seventy-five Members are present, a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FULTON), there were—ayes 245, noes 5.

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks immediately preceding the vote on this question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL PROGRAM FOR SEPTEMBER 9

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the Members of the House that in addition to the other bills that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS], will call up under unanimous consent, probably tomorrow, there will be included the bill H.R. 8685, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the Presidential appointment of a general counsel for Internal Revenue and to provide for the appointing of other officers for the Internal Revenue Service.

PROVIDING STANDARDS FOR THE ISSUANCE OF PASSPORTS

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 9069) to provide standards for the issuance of passports, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 9069 with Mr. RILEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SELDEN], had 4 minutes remaining; the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR], had 15 minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COLLIER].

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I requested time to speak on this vitally important legislation today because, as the records will show, I introduced the first bill in Congress on passport control just 2 days after the Supreme Court decision was rendered in the Kent against Dulles case on June 16, 1958. Several other bills of a similar nature were introduced in the weeks that followed, without any action being taken before adjournment of the 85th Congress.

I would be remiss if I did not thank my Illinois colleague, Mrs. CHURCH, for having relinquished her time to me, particularly so because I did not have the opportunity to personally testify before the subcommittee when I appeared for that purpose recently.

For fifteen months now we have lived with a Supreme Court decision which has virtually opened the gates to unlimited travel abroad by native-grown subversives, Communists, and fellow travelers. We spend billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money in this country to maintain the defense and security of these United States. A wide variety of legislation, good and bad, is brought before this Congress with a defense label and defense, to me, means nothing more than an investment in the security of every American who believes in our way of life. Yet there are those who are apparently reluctant to support this legislation which is as vital to the security of this Nation as any so-called defense program we might possibly consider.

One of the real advantages we have in our efforts to control or counter the Communist conspiracy within the United States is that our counterintelligence agents have been able to keep a watch on the Communists and fellow travelers. Through this close scrutiny they have been able to discover who enemy agents were, maintain a line upon Communists and equally close surveillance over them. Now, however, we must allow these fifth columnists to move abroad easily and often with a travel permit bearing the seal of the United States. Even under the protection of a Court decision and the clamor of the civil liberties advocates, it seems tragic to me that those who are charged with the responsibility of maintaining our security must stand by in forced idleness, frustrated because they are kept powerless by the law to act. Anyone who knows anything about communism and its fifth-column activities knows full well that the success of their operation depends upon their ability to get together without undue difficulty.

Certainly, we all believe in the principle of civil liberties. But, by the same token, I do not believe that we can risk the rights and the the securities of millions of Americans, who are paying dearly for the functions of our internal security in this country, to appease any conspirators who hide behind some impractical philosophy of which there is an abundance within a small but vocal group of our people these days. And in this regard may I say some of these ill conceived virtues become our sins of self-destruction. Just yesterday we heard the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, Mr. WALTER, point to some very significant factors regarding the growth of communism and subversion in this country. Hence the responsibility of this Congress is as clear as crystal. In the interest of the security of millions of God-fearing, loyal Americans, who are entitled to every ounce of internal security we can provide, it is our duty to pass this legislation without further delay. We must legislate to spell out the positive intent of Congress to grant to the State Department such authority as is necessary to do this job so that we do not adjourn this year and again leave a vacuum in this vitally important area of our national security.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, on June 16, 1958, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Rockwell Kent and Walter Briehl against the Secretary of State, rendered a decision, the effect of which is to completely nullify any control on a security basis in the issuance of passports.

In these two cases, the Secretary of State exercising the authority which has had the sanction of this Government since its founding, denied passports to two Communists in the interest of national security. The majority opinion of the Court, which struck down the authority of the Secretary of State, stems from this basic misconception of Communists and the Communist conspiracy:

> They are being denied their freedom of movement solely because of their refusal to be subjected to inquiry into their beliefs and associations.

The nub of this case, Mr. Chairman, is the misconception by a majority of the Court, that communism is merely a political philosophy or ideology. Notwithstanding the overwhelming evidence that Communism is a world conspiracy and that Communists are conspirators dedicated irrevocably to world revolution, the majority of the Court has yet to accept this elemental fact.

Several months after the decision was rendered in the Kent-Briehl case, the Committee on Un-American Activities conducted a series of public hearings on this very issue. The first witness who was interrogated was Mr. Harry Bridges, an international Communist agent, who, at the time of his interrogation by the committee, had just returned from Europe where he traveled on a U.S. passport for the purpose of conferring with other Communist agents with whom he worked out arrangements for intermeshing of his Communist-dominated Longshoremen. Bridges flatly stated to our committee that he would advocate a strike to impede the shipment of supplies to Formosa, if the U.S. Government were shipping supplies there in the event of our conflict with the Communists. Shortly after this committee session with Bridges, he left again on a U.S. passport to go to Tokyo to participate in an Asian dock conference consisting principally of representatives of Communist-led labor organizations.

Continuing this series of hearings, the Committee on Un-American Activities interrogated witness after witness who had been identified as hard-core agents of the international Communist conspiracy and who had procured passports to travel abroad in the interest of the conspiracy. Here are a few of the witnesses whom we interrogated:

William L. Patterson, general manager of the Communist Worker: Some several years ago, Patterson's passport was taken up by the State Department because he had violated the security restrictions which had been imposed on him in his travels to Iron Curtain countries. Immediately after the Kent-Briehl decision, Patterson procured a passport without any difficulty to use in the interest of the conspiracy.

Casimir T. Nowacki at one time had procured a passport under such circumstances that it was seized on the ship's gangplank by Department of State officials. After the Kent-Briehl case, this Communist was promptly issued a passport.

Dorothy Ray Friedman was identified in hearings of the committee in Boston by an FBI undercover agent as a Communist agent. Immediately after the Kent-Briehl decision she received a passport.

Fred Paul Muller, in 1956, was cited by the international Communist apparatus for doing "fine international work for the party." Immediately after the Kent-Briehl decision, Muller received a passport.

Arthur David Kahn, of New York, who, over the course of many years time, served as a member of the Communist conspiracy while serving with the OSS of the U.S. Government in Germany, and who had, on numerous occasions been refused U.S. passports on security grounds, was issued a passport promptly after the Kent-Briehl decision.

These are only a sampling, Mr. Speaker, of hundreds of cases in which passports have been issued to Communists to carry out their nefarious work in the interest of the international conspiracy. Incidentally, each of the witnesses whom I have mentioned invoked the fifth amendment right down the line in response to almost every question concerning their activities.

In the course of these hearings by the Committee on Un-American Activities, we received the testimony of John W. Hanes, Administrator, Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs of the Department of State.

Characterizing existing passport control as a "particularly dangerous hole in our defenses against the operations of the international Communist conspiracy," Mr. Hanes stated that at the present time the Department of State has no alternative but to issue passports upon demand to hard-core active Communist supporters.

Continuing, Mr. Hanes testified:

> I don't know exactly how many members the Communist Party of the United States now has—perhaps 15,000 or 20,000. But, however many there are, each and every party member as of today can get a passport from the Department of State, except in the rare instance that he happens to be ineligible for some other reason, such as being a fugitive from justice. This is a breach in our defenses which our enemies have been quick to take advantage of. Many persons with known Communist affiliations have applied for passports since the decision of the Supreme Court, some of them even though they have no present intention of going abroad.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this bill. It sets up a chancellor's foot or, if you like, a secretary's foot in regard to who gets a passport or whose passport is revoked. It gives the President unlimited power to say who can go to particular areas of the world—unlimited power. It even gives the President the power to say that a committee of this Congress cannot go to a particular place in the world.

Mr. Chairman, I think the bill is unnecessary. I think it is dangerous. Are we afraid of the slurs, the criticisms, and the lies which Communists and Communist supporters will tell about us in other countries any more than we are afraid of the slurs and the criticisms and the lies they tell about us here in this country? Is our foreign policy so frail that we have to keep these people here? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHELF], yesterday said they should stay here and listen. Who is going to make them listen? We cannot make them listen. And, do we believe in the right of dissent? Are we a land of the free and a home of the brave? Or, are we afraid? I know that Soviet Russia would never allow its people to come over here and criticize its government, but the very fact that these people go overseas and speak against us is living proof of the strength of our system, of the right to dissent. We are not afraid. We are a strong Nation. We have powerful traditions. We love freedom; we love democracy. We do not need to tie our hands either as a Congress or as a people to get facts or to try to stop dissent. You will not stop dissent. The bill says that we do not want these couriers to go abroad. Read page 3 of the report. They admit that this bill will not cut off Communist communication. The couriers will get there anyway; they will go to South America. They will use diplomatic pouches.

Mr. Chairman, the bill is unnecessary. It is dangerous. It sets up a secretary's foot, a security standard that is meaningless, and it allows the President of the United States to say, in his wisdom, that the Congress cannot go out into all the world and get the facts that it needs through its own Members personally to make important legislative decisions. It is an unnecessary bill. It is a dangerous bill.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. COFFIN].

Mr. FARBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FARBSTEIN. Inasmuch as there seems to be some question as to the definition of the phrase "on the record" I would like to have the author of the bill inform the House whether or not the following reflects the intent of the House insofar as the foregoing phrase is concerned: No passport shall be finally denied unless there is presented at a hearing and made a part of the record testimony sufficient to warrant denial of a passport. The entire record of the hearings shall be made available to the court on appeal.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to the gentleman from New York that he is correct, I think, in stating that the Department's position must stand on the record that is made at the administrative hearing. If the court ascertains that the record before it meets the requirements of law, then the Department's position will be sustained; otherwise the Department will be ordered to issue a passport, as I understand the legislation.

Mr. FARBSTEIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, would the gentleman from Alabama answer the question in a responsive way? The gentleman from New York asked whether or not the record would include testimony. He did not say anything about testimony. I would suggest that your answer be directed to the word "testimony." That is very important.

Mr. SELDEN. I would say to the gentleman from New York that the record would include what was brought before the administrative hearing, and that would go before the court on review.

Mr. CELLER. Will it include testimony, oral testimony, that might be given either for or against?

Mr. COFFIN. Is it not true that if there were oral testimony given at the hearing it would be part of the RECORD?

Mr. SELDEN. It would be in the RECORD, as I understand it.

Mr. COFFIN. I thank the gentleman. I was happy to yield for this question because in the discusion of this bill there has been a great deal of confusion as to how repressive or how dangerous this bill might be.

I join my other colleagues on the committee in thinking that we have done a remarkable job in preserving a judicial review of the record. I might as well continue on this theme because it comes very close to the heart of what many of the Members are interested in.

A passport case involves an investigation of an applicant. It involves the giving of evidence. And the State Department eventually will be called upon to say to itself whether it will or will not reveal the evidence that it has gathered and the source of this evidence on the record for the court and eventually for the applicant to see. We on the committee realize that many cases will result in the State Department's saying to itself, "Rather than reveal this evidence to the court and the applicant, we are just not going to push this case. We will let this passport be issued."

We on the committee have taken this as a calculated risk. We do feel the provision will result in the denial or the delay of many passports where such is justified. In other words, we think that in this case we have balanced quite fairly, as fairly as our ingenuity has permitted us, the rights of the individual and the right of this country to guard its national security.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFIN. On this point?

Mr. HOLTZMAN. On that point, yes.

Mr. COFFIN. I yield.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. In other words, is the gentleman saying that in the event there is a denial, every part of the record including the testimony will be afforded to the traveler in an effort to review or to seek review?

Mr. COFFIN. That is the record that will be presented to the court.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. The court, yes.

Mr. COFFIN. Yes.

Mr. HOLTZMAN. Very good.

Mr. COFFIN. The gentleman is correct, that is my understanding and the understanding of the sponsor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. COFFIN] has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, during the hearings conducted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the need for legislation to grant the Secretary of State authority to deny passports to persons knowingly engaged in activities intended to further the international Communist movement was adequately illustrated and documented. The discussions in the House on this bill have further confirmed the fact that the Department of State needs reasonable authority to deny passports to supporters of the world Communist movement whose travel abroad is found to be detrimental to U.S. security.

The purpose of this bill is to grant such necessary authority, subject to specific delineation and delimitation. I am convinced that the bill accomplishes this purpose.

The basic problem which confronted the committee in drafting this bill was the inevitable conflict between the grant to the executive of the necessary authority and discretion to deny or revoke passports to individuals active in the international Communist movement and the necessity of protecting the liberties guaranteed to U.S. citizens by our Constitution.

The bill as reported by the committee succeeds in reconciling this fundamental conflict between the grant of authority and the protection of the rights of the individual. Such a reconciliation inevitably involves compromise. The bill does not give the Secretary of State sufficient authority to bring to an end all travel outside the United States by active supporters of world communism. On the other hand, it does give the Secretary authority he does not now possess and which will assist him in meeting the responsibility he faces in dealing with the present world situation.

Section 8 of the bill sets forth in detail specific measures for protecting the rights of the individual. First, it provides that no application for a passport can be denied or a passport revoked without a departmental hearing. The procedure for conducting such hearings will be pursuant to law and rules and regulations established by the Department of State. As a convenience to the applicant and to assure him an opportunity for a hearing the section includes a specific requirement that such hearings shall be held in the judicial district of the United States court in which the resident resides or is present at the time of his application, unless the applicant waives such requirement.

Finally, the section provides that the denial of a passport by the Department as a result of such hearing shall be subject to judicial review in the district courts of the United States. The words "on the record" were included in the section to make clear that the court can consider in reviewing a case only the information on the record. If such information is sufficient to meet the requirements of the law, the passport may be denied. Otherwise, the denial may be overruled by the court. This eliminates consideration by the court on review of undisclosed sources of information and of secret information. In other words, if the Department wishes to insure on review that denial of a passport will be sustained and such denial has been based on confidential information, the Department must decide whether or not it wishes to put all such information in the record at the time the record is being made.

Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of this important legislation I was happy to have played a part in the committee and House consideration of the bill. I congratulate and commend my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Mr. SELDEN, for his remarkable effort in steering this bill from introduction through passage. His perseverance, amiable personality, and outstanding ability were the primary factors in making possible consideration of this measure which was extremely difficult to write and get out of committee. It now represents a very genuine committee effort to amalgamate varying viewpoints into a much-needed law.

I close by commending our distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Dr. MORGAN. His leadership, fairness, and cooperation during lengthy committee sessions were a significant contribution to this effort.

Mr. Chairman, I urge overwhelming support of this bill.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, the issues in controversy on the passport bill were clearly spelled out during the debate yesterday. I feel that the committee, and considering the magnitude of the problem involved, has produced a measure while not approved by all of the Members of this body, is nonetheless a workable program involving considerable compromise as between those who hold that there should be the strongest type of legislation to meet the problem posed by unrestricted travel abroad by Communists, and on the other hand, those who profess to see a loss of some treasured rights of citizenship in any bill which might be passed.

As a member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the gentleman from California recently participated in hearings before that committee designed to determine the scope of the passport problem and the actual necessity for restoring to the Department of State some measure of authority in the regulation of the issuance of passports to those whose purpose in traveling in foreign countries is the embarrassment of the United States and its allies. Communist witness after Communist witness arrogantly invoked the provisions of the fifth amendment when questioned about the use of passports forced from the State Department following recent decisions of the Supreme Court. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHERER], on yesterday gave several examples of the type of travel this measure is designed to prevent. I should like to add another to the end that the membership of the House may understand clearly what type of travel is involved and by whom.

Hugh Hardyman, a resident of the city of Los Angeles at the time of the incident I am about to relate, was granted a passport for travel in the Far East. This in spite of the fact that Hardyman has a long and spectacular record of support of Communist causes. Armed with a valid U.S. passport for travel in certain specified countries, but not including Communist China and North Korea, Hardyman departed for the Far East. Upon his arrival he contacted, or was contacted by, agents of the Red China regime and, in violation of the provisions governing the issuance of his passport, he proceeded to Red China, where he made a series of broadcasts for Radio Peiping. In these broadcasts Hardyman accused the United States and its armed services of having engaged in bacteriological and gas warfare against the North Koreans and Chinese during the Korean operation. The charges were given the widest possible circulation throughout China and the rest of the Far East, and did irreparable damage to this country and its allies throughout that area.

On his previous record, Mr. Chairman, Hardyman should never have been issued a U.S. passport. It was a foregone conclusion that he would make every effort to undermine U.S. foreign policy in that vital area of the world, and lend whatever assistance he could to the Red Chinese propaganda effort. I do not concur with those who contend that the right to travel is an absolute right. As the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. POFF, pointed out on yesterday, the sovereign has a right to defend itself against the irresponsible or malicious acts of those who seek its overthrow.

A legislative body, representing, as this one does, some 170-odd million citizens, has a duty and a clear responsibility to insure that those who leave the shores of the United States for foreign countries do not go abroad for the purpose of subverting American institutions or doing violence to American foreign policy. Some of our colleagues here in the House profess to believe that their individual freedom of movement might conceivably be restricted by virtue of this legislation. While some might hope that this would prove to be the case, there is nothing in the bill to indicate that the legitimate travel, nay, even legitimate criticism, would in any manner be restricted if the measure were passed.

This country maintains a Military Establishment which costs us a staggering sum annually to keep in a state of instant readiness against military aggression. No matter how ready nor how well equipped our military forces may be, political subversion carried on by those whose allegiance is owed to foreign philosophies, can and does play an important role in the enemy's cold war strategy. It has been pointed out that the measure will not stop the travel of all Communist agents, nor will it put an end to propaganda spread by traitors to their own land, but it will restore, under reasonable safeguards clear to any reasonable man, the measure of authority required by the U.S. Secretary of State to prevent organized subversion by U.S. citizens traveling on valid U.S. passports.

A note of warning, Mr. Chairman. Many of us consider the provisions in the instant measure to be minimal in nature. Efforts will unquestionably be made to dilute the bill by amendments which will have the effect of maintaining the situation in status quo. I would urge the membership of the House to stay with the committee bill and resist any and all efforts to emasculate it by attempting to lay further restraints upon the Secretary, or adding to the criteria established in the bill for arrival at the decisions which must be made under its provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 887), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. The Congress finds that the international Communist movement, of which the Communist Party of the United States of America is an integral part, seeks everywhere to thwart United States policy, to influence foreign governments and peoples against the United States, and by every means, including force and violence, to weaken the United States and ultimately to bring it under Communist domination; that the activities of the international Communist movement constitute a clear, present, and continuing danger to the security of the United States; that travel by couriers and agents is a major and essential means by which the international Communist movement is promoted and directed; that a United States passport requests other countries not only to permit the holder to pass freely and safely, but also to give all lawful aid and protection to the holder, and thereby facilitates the travel of such holder to and in foreign countries; and that, in view of the history of the use of United States passports by supporters of the international Communist movement to further the purposes of that movement, the issuance of passports to any person described in section 6 is harmful to the security of the United States and therefore passports should be denied to such persons.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of State is authorized to deny a passport to, or revoke the passport of, any person who is, or has been since January 1, 1951, a member of, or affiliated with, the Communist Party, or who knowingly engages or has engaged, since January 1, 1951, in activities intended to further the international Communist movement, as to whom it is determined that his or her activities or presence abroad would under the findings made in section 5 be harmful to the security of the United States. The Secretary of State shall not deny a passport to any person solely on the basis of membership in any organization, association with any individual or group, adherence to unpopular views, or criticisms of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies.

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of State may require, as a prerequisite to the issuance of a passport, that the applicant subscribe to and submit a written statement duly verified by his oath or affirmation whether he is presently, or has been since January 1, 1951, a member of the Communist Party or a supporter of the international Communist movement, and to state the circumstances of any such membership or to state his activities in support of the international Communist movement.

"SEC. 8. No application for a passport may be denied, and no passport may be revoked, under section 6 of this Act except after opportunity for a hearing. In the case of a denial, such hearing shall be held in the judicial district (as defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code) in which the applicant resides or is present at the time of his application, unless the applicant waives such requirement. A denial or revocation of a passport pursuant to section 6 of this Act shall be subject to judicial review on the record in the district courts of the United States.

"SEC. 9. (a) A passport issued under this Act shall at all times remain the property of the United States. It shall be unlawful for any holder of a passport to refuse to surrender it upon proper demand by the Secretary of State or his authorized agent.

"(b) Whoever willfully violates subsection (a) of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000.

"TITLE II—GEOGRAPHICAL LIMITATIONS; PENALTIES

"SEC. 201. (a) The President shall have the power, by appropriate annual declaration pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, to restrain the travel of all citizens and to limit the validity of all passports with respect to travel to the following places:

"(1) Countries with which the United States is at war;

"(2) Countries or areas where armed hostilities are in progress;

"(3) Countries or areas to which the President finds that travel must be restricted in the national interest either because the United States Government is unable to provide adequate protection to citizens traveling therein or because such travel would seriously impair the foreign relations of the United States.

"(b) In the event that the President determines the necessity of promulgating a general geographical restraint upon travel and the use of passports under subsection (a) of this section, he shall annually declare and publish such determination, stating specifically and in detail the reasons for the necessity of such action, and shall cause notice thereof to be stamped on each passport thereafter issued, renewed, or amended.

"(c) In the national interest the President, without stating his reasons, may make exceptions to any such general geographical restraint for particular individuals or categories of persons.

"SEC. 202. (a) No citizen shall travel to any country or area as to which there is in effect, to his knowledge, a declaration made and published by the President under section 201.

"(b) Whoever willfully violates this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment on page 2, line 20, strike out the word "who".

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment on page 2, line 21, after "has" insert "knowingly".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENTLEY: On page 3, lines 23 and 24, after the word "review" strike out the words "on the record".

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, the words "on the record" contained in lines 23 and 24, page 3 of the legislation probably constitute the most controversial language in the entire bill which is before us. Those Members who were on the floor yesterday, or who read the RECORD of yesterday, will recall that there were almost as many interpretations of the phrase "on the record" as there were Members who spoke.

The purpose of the amendment would be to remove the phrase "on the record" so that there would be no question that when this matter comes before the courts as I presume it will at some subsequent date, there will be no question as to the interpretation of this particular phrase.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENTLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does the language after the word "review" in line 23 mean anything at all?

Mr. BENTLEY. Actually, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that it was felt that judicial review would have to be held in a district court of the United States, and I presume that is where this would be reviewed—in any event, my personal belief is that the words "on the record" do not add anything to the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the State Department has expressed substantial opposition to the inclusion of these words, and attempts were made in committee to remove them.

The State Department feels, and I think quite properly, that if these words remain in the bill it might very well require the Department of State in presenting its case before the district courts to reveal not only confidential information which would be used in determining the merits of the particular passport application, but also perhaps even the sources of this information.

I read, Mr. Chairman, from page 11 of the hearings. When the Administrator of the Department's Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs, Mr. Hanes, was requested for an interpretation on page 11, he said, referring to this particular provision, that "the phrase is a little obscure in its meaning, but we interpret this as very possibly effectively negating this section of the bill":

Now that provision is a little obscure in its meaning but we interpret this as very possibly effectively negating those sections of the bill which permit us to have some utilization of confidential information.

On page 49, the legal adviser of the State Department, Mr. Becker, referring to the same phrase, said, and I quote:

Mr. BECKER. I think those words "on the record" might be interpreted by the court as requiring us to furnish the confidential information that we had. I think our attitude as a matter of policy, nevertheless would have been to refuse to furnish it.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious, I believe, that no one in the legislative branch of our Government can require the Secretary of State to go into court and spread upon the record the sources of confidential information, particularly if those sources happened to emanate from abroad. In other words, in effect, the State Department would be estopped in many of these cases and would be required to grant passports even in cases where it has clear-cut proof and evidence that the applicant had no right to the passport and was traveling abroad for purposes inimical to our national security and welfare.

Mr. Chairman, I have very carefully reviewed the committee report to see if the committee itself had any remarks to make regarding the interpretation of the phrase "on the record" and I find on page 4 of the committee print the following:

The committee has given careful consideration to the problems involved in the denial of passports on the basis of secret information, the nature and source of which are kept from the applicant to his detriment. The bill provides (sec. 8) that denial or revocation of a passport under section 6 shall be subject to judicial review on the record in the district courts of the United States.

Nevertheless, the committee is convinced that in order to protect the rights of the individual, the use of secret information must be carefully circumscribed even though as a result passports may be issued to persons who should not be permitted to leave the United States and who will abuse the benefits conferred by the possession of a valid U.S. passport.

I submit that the State Department in view of that interpretation of the language, will be estopped from pursuing many of these cases in court because of this particular phrase "on the record," for fear that confidential information and even confidential sources of information will have to be disclosed in open court, and rather than run that risk which would be prejudicial to the national security it would have to issue the passport.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan offered this same amendment in committee. I am trusting to my memory. I believe he got three votes, certainly not more than three or four votes.

So the reason this phrase "on the record" is in the bill—very frankly, as I am sure the gentleman has been very honest in his presentation—is that if a person is denied a passport and appeals it that they shall have a chance to find out why it was denied in court. It is just as simple as that.

There is a lot of argument about whether or not those words are necessary or whether it would automatically if judicial review is granted require the disclosure of such information. I cannot answer that, but I certainly can say that by putting that language in the bill it makes it pretty clear that the record must be submitted.

The gentleman says that the State Department will have to divulge some confidential sources of information. Not at all. If the State Department in making a case, as the gentleman from the Un-American Activities Committee said, cannot submit the data on which they relied to support their decision, they can just issue the passport.

I think we are treading on a very serious borderline area here and I believe this may establish a precedent for years to come. That is, Do American citizens have the right to redress from wrongful acts in the courts?

The gentleman said these are the most controversial three words in the bill. I do not think they are. It may be controversial in the minds of a small minority in the committee. It may be controversial in the minds of a small minority of the members of the Committee of the Whole; but, in my opinion, it is crystal clear what this does. It simply reiterates that the hearings shall be on the record of the denial hearing down in the Department of State, nothing more nor less.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that these words are unnecessary, that they do not mean anything. I am not prepared to debate that because I think we would be engaging in the exercise of semantics. I will say to the gentleman, brilliant attorney that he is, he will admit that the words "on the record" being in there certainly do not detract from the fact that the full record shall be the basis of the decision of the Court. That is all anybody is seeking, that is all anybody asks. I think it is a fundamental right of Americans. The matter was debated for parts of two sessions in the committee, and the overwhelming majority of the committee after study, after having exhaustive hearings, after listening to the testimony, decided this should be put in.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BENTLEY. I do not think any of us want to withhold from the courts all the information upon which determination of the Department of State with respect to passport application is based, but some of us have serious and legitimate views as to whether all information regarding the passport applicant should be spread upon the public records, regardless of where it comes from.

Mr. HAYS. I do not believe the gentleman was here yesterday. If I am wrong he may correct me. But he has read the RECORD because he is a careful student of whatever amendments he offers. He was at the hearings on the bill and I think the thing was made crystal clear yesterday when I quoted from an editorial appearing in the New York Times, stating, substantially, that you cannot deny a person a passport because you do not like the color of his hair. The editorial said further that if the Secretary of State has evidence he will have to trot it out.

I think that is fair enough. I do not like this idea of whispering about somebody, having someone say it is reported, or that it is rumored, or we have secret information. This is a serious business. If you deny a person a passport and it is sustained, you have blighted his character. Maybe it needs to be blighted. I do not say it should not be. But I do not think it should be done lightly, I do not think it should be done frivolously, and I think these words in there protect his rights to have his character cleared if it does not deserve a smudge.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: On page 3, line 23, after the word "review" insert a period and strike out the balance of lines 23 and 24.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, we have a great body of law on the administrative side that has been built up over a period of years. Starting with the turn of the century we developed the theory that the decision of an Administrator would not stand if that decision was capricious or arbitrary. Recently we enacted the Administrative Procedure Act in which we wrote the rule requiring substantial evidence to support a finding. We adopted the rule that was laid down in the case of Consolidated Edison Co. against National Labor Relations Board where the Court held there must be more than a mere scintilla of evidence.

In the Administrative Procedure Act we stipulate that this law shall be applicable unless it is specifically repealed. There is nothing in this statute that specifically repeals the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. So that if we insert a period after the word "review" and strike the rest of the sentence, which would make it read "A denial or revocation of a passport pursuant to section 6 of this Act shall be subject to judicial review," it means in the U.S. courts. Where else could there be a review of a decision of an administrative agency?

A review of what? A review of the record. Now, that record must contain substantial evidence to justify a finding that it would not be in the interest of the United States to issue a passport.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, as I have pointed out, knows a lot more about the law than I do. But, if what the gentleman says is true and all of this is guaranteed without the words in, then what is wrong with leaving the words in?

Mr. WALTER. Because I do not know what those words mean, actually, and I certainly do not think that we ought to do anything here that would disturb this great mass of administrative precedents that we have followed for so many years.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman certainly knows what the words "in the District Court of the United States" mean, because he has already said, "Where else would you go?" and those words might be superfluous. The crux of the matter is that the gentleman says he does not know what the words "of the record" mean, but he went in his statement far enough to say that it meant of the record made on the hearing where the passport is denied. Now, that is all it is, is it not?

Mr. WALTER. It should be "of the record" not "on the record." Of course "on the record" means nothing, but "of the record" is language that, of course, is understood when there is an appeal taken from the finding of an administrative agency.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PORTER. What is being reviewed? Now, there will be a hearing before the agency, but there is nothing in this bill that says there will be a fair hearing in the sense of a hearing with due process of law, which would require an opportunity to be heard and cross-examine the witnesses and all of the other things.

Mr. WALTER. Well, I would hate to think that an officer of the Government would not give a citizen of the Government a fair hearing.

Mr. PORTER. As the Supreme Court requires; in other words, a hearing with due process of law, is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. WALTER. Of course.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. On the question of whether we are right in using the words "judicial review" do we mean review on appeal or do we mean review of the record, looking at it de novo?

Mr. WALTER. Of course, it would not be a hearing de novo. The appeal under the provisions of the APA is from the findings to the United States Court. That is the well-known procedure, and I do not think we ought to depart from those procedures certainly by using this very nebulous language.

Mr. FULTON. Why do we not do this? Why do we not put it under this act?

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I will need to use 5 minutes, because actually the same argument that I used against the Bentley amendment is applicable to the substitute. But, I would like to reiterate one point I made. The gist of the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania was that these words are unnecessary. That is what he based his case on. Now, I am not sure whether they are unnecessary or not, but it certainly will not hurt anything by having them in there, because it makes the intent of the committee and the Congress perfectly clear. Now, why were they put in? Let me give you a little history of this, because those who are not members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, may not be aware of this. When the Department of State first came up last year they asked for legislation which would permit them to deny a passport, and then they asked that if the person denied the passport took his case into court, would permit them to write a letter to the court and say, "The reasons we denied this are so sensitive that we cannot divulge them in court, and you will have to accept this." The law they wanted was to the effect, therefore, that the court decision would have to be on a certification from the Department of State. Now, I cannot conceive of too many people in the Congress wanting that. I asked the security secretary this question: I said, "Then, under your legislation, if I am critical on the floor of the House of some policy of the Department of State—" and remember, this could be under any kind of an administration, Republican or Democratic—"you could deny a passport and you could certify to the court that you did not want to come into court and give your reasons." He said, "Well, of course, we would not be capricious. We would not do that kind of thing." I said, "Now, it is not what you would or would not do. Could you do it?" And his answer was, "Well, yes, we could do it."

That is why the committee labored and perspired and worked and talked and came up with these words "on the record" to be sure that there would not be any capriciousness.

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. COFFIN. Is it not also true that there was a good deal of discussion as to various kinds of judicial review; whether the evidence would be on both a closed and open record, whether it would be considered in camera or considered not in camera, so that this phrase was deemed necessary by the committee this year, just as it was in the legislation which passed this body last year?

Mr. HAYS. The gentleman is exactly right. And I will say further that under the language as it is now written a man who is a known Communist and whose purpose in traveling abroad is to harm or destroy or embarrass the foreign policy of the United States, under this legislation could be denied a passport, and it could be sustained in the courts.

I ask that both amendments be defeated.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. BENTLEY. I should like to read from page 18449 of the RECORD where the gentleman from Ohio said the following. He said "that the record shall be complete and that the accused shall have the right to know who his accusers are, and he shall have the right to see the record on which the Secretary made his determination."

Would the gentleman carry that interpretation to the point where if a man's accusers happened to be secret sources in this Government or foreign friendly governments he would still demand that the accused have the right to know who they were?

Mr. HAYS. If the State Department could not convince the court without using that then I think the court would have the right to know that, absolutely.

Mr. BENTLEY. Would the accused have the right to know it?

Mr. HAYS. The court would determine that. I do not know what the court would decide in that case. But he would have to present the evidence and the court would decide.

Mr. BENTLEY. The gentleman used the words "on the record."

Mr. HAYS. My words yesterday mean what they say, that if the matter were presented to the court and they could not make their case, then they would have to confront him.

Mr. BENTLEY. I am trying to ask the gentleman whether the gentleman's phrase means that any evidence furnished the court has to be spread on the record for the benefit of the accused.

Mr. HAYS. If they cannot make their case without it; they will have to decide whether they can make their case with or without it.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. MEYER. Is it not also true that if these three words were not in the bill it is quite probable that the committee would not have voted it out?

Mr. HAYS. I think that is a fair statement; yes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the committee and hope that section 8 will remain intact. I am opposed to the amendment and the substitute amendment.

If I know anything about the history of this bill—I know a little about it, although I did not attend the executive sessions of the committee—I believe the committee was striving to have this bill impervious to the charge of its being unconstitutional.

We have to go back to the case of Kent against Dulles where the court said:

> The right to travel is a part of the liberty of which the citizen cannot be deprived without the due process of law of the fifth amendment.

I take it that the purpose of the words "on the record in the district courts of the United States" in lines 23 and 24 on page 3 of the bill and the word "hearing" in page 3, line 17 was to insure due process without which you would be back where you started and the act undoubtedly would be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court when the case reached it.

The Court also said very significantly:

> The right of exit is a personal right included within the word "liberty" as used in the fifth amendment. If that "liberty" is to be regulated, it must be pursuant to the lawmaking functions of the Congress.
> And if that power is delegated, the standards must be adequate to pass scrutiny by the accepted tests.
> Where activities of enjoyment, natural and often necessary to the well-being of an American citizen, such as travel, are involved, we will construe narrowly all delegated powers that curtail or dilute them.

Meaning those rights.

And since the Court will construe narrowly, if you take out the words "on the record in the district courts of the United States" there is a grave question in my own mind as to whether or not the Court would not throw this law out, if the bill passes, on the ground that it did not meet the due process test.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BENTLEY. From the gentleman's remarks of yesterday I got the impression that he thought the words "on the record" were very difficult of interpretation and very vague and he went further and said he did not believe as the bill was presently written that it would satisfy the due process; is that correct?

Mr. CELLER. I admit that the language here is very, very vague. I would not have drawn the bill this way. It could be greatly improved upon. But, if you strike out the words "on the record" then you have something which does not meet the test of procedural due process. Therefore, I think it is quite essential that you preserve the words "on the record in the district courts of the United States."

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I read from the gentleman's remarks where he said, "I cannot conceive how the Supreme Court's demand that there be due process is satisfied by this bill."

Mr. CELLER. I was speaking to the entire bill.

Mr. BENTLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HAYS. That is exactly, of course, what the gentleman from Michigan wants to do by his amendment, and I give him credit because he is frank enough to say so.

Mr. CELLER. That is why I am opposed to this amendment and why I am opposed to the substitute.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HAYS. The gentleman had some doubts and the members of the committee yesterday told him what the intent of the committee was. I think his doubts were pretty well resolved, and I just hope that the gentleman from Michigan does not confuse him any further.

Mr. CELLER. I think the debate helped greatly all Members as to what these words mean. They did not satisfy me completely, but I suppose words are bound to mean different things to different people. We cannot avoid that.

Mr. HAYS. We tried very diligently to say what the intent was yesterday, and the gentleman made a contribution, as to that.

Mr. CELLER. I am very happy that the committee has improved upon the bill, particularly with reference to section 8. I hope the amendments do not prevail.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto, close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FORRESTER].

Mr. FORRESTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield that time back. I cannot talk in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Chairman, I have spent some time studying this subject. I testified before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, and in each case I made this statement:

> Authority to use confidential information in the administrative process, under unprecise standards coupled with the power to delegate the authority to subordinates, and without full judicial review, can and probably will result in a breeding ground of arbitrariness in the course of which innocent people may, and probably will, suffer.

Mr. Chairman, I am in opposition to these amendments. I support the bill as it stands. I introduced my own bill, which is a middle ground, carefully drafted in some respects, and in some respects I think better than the committee bill. On the other hand, I think the committee bill is surprisingly good. I say surprisingly good because there was such a flood of restrictive proposals following the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Kent, Briehl and Dayton cases that I was fearful legislation would be reported out which would be highly restrictive in its nature. I think the committee is to be applauded in being virtually unanimous, with two or three exceptions, in their support of this bill. I also think Members of the committee did a splendid job on the floor of this Chamber yesterday when they did their utmost to clarify and to establish the legislative history on the subject we are now talking about, the matter of this amendment. In my view, although any number of members in this House may have different ideas from mine on various aspects as to how this problem should be handled, the committee on the whole has done an excellent job.

The right to travel, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most fundamental rights that we have. In my judgment it is a concomitant of, and conjoint with, the first amendment of the Constitution. A denial of a passport may, therefore, result in violations of both the fifth and first amendments.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, gives to the Secretary of State the authority in this field which he needs. At the same time it provides the necessary safeguards for the rights and freedoms of the individual.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I am against both of the amendments that are pending on the ground that there is too little due process of law in this bill as it is, and this is certainly a very good time to see that there is fairness in the revocation or the denial of a passport.

You will remember I mentioned the "chancellor's foot" which is ancient satirical standard for equity cases. I said that there was a Secretary's foot provided in this bill. I point out to members of the committee that on page 2 at the bottom there is the phrase "be harmful to the security of the United States." I say to you that is a very vague and indefinite standard and that the Secretary could decide it on almost any basis in connection with security and then, therefore, this runs afoul the due process of law that is required by the Kent against Dulles case cited on page 3 of the report. There are not sufficient safeguards in the bill.

Under the paragraph "Area Restrictions" there are no limitations whatsoever. The President is given unlimited discretion to put areas of the world off limits and to allow whomever he pleases to go there. In that part of the bill there are no procedural restrictions whatsoever, but it gives to the President of the United States complete power to say who may go to these areas, and he may keep Members of this body and of the other body from going there if he does not want them to go. To my mind that is an unconscionable and unconstitutional surrender of our powers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARBSTEIN].

Mr. FARBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, according to the deliberations of the committee, a majority of the members came to the conclusion that the innocent were entitled to at least as much consideration as the guilty. I know that I, for one, felt that the denial of a passport would attach to the applicant opprobrium synonymous with treason. We felt that we should go into things very carefully before there was such a denial and that was the reason why we spent so much time in trying to determine what was the honest, the decent, and the proper thing to do. That was the reason that last year it was not until the very last week that we were able to reach any agreement on language, and that same language has been carried over until today.

Believe me, it was a considered opinion of the majority of the members of the committee that this language was included. We did not seek advantage for anyone, we just felt that that language that we had in the bill was language that could be understood by the State Department as well as by the court so that there would be justice under law.

Mr. Chairman, I think both amendments should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COLLIER] for the 2 minutes.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I take this time just to say that the question in my mind has since been answered, so I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SELDEN] to close the debate.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to both the Bentley amendment and the Walter substitute.

Let us assume that the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct, that is, the language stricken by the substitute amendment is unnecessary in that under law any administrative decision would be subject to judicial review on the record of the denial, nevertheless it would, I think, be unfortunate legislative history to strike these words from the bill, and I trust that these amendments will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENTLEY) there were—ayes 29, noes 98.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENTLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENTLEY: On page 3, line 24, after the word "record" insert "presented."

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very simple, in that it merely inserts the word "presented" after the words "on the record", so that section 8 would specifically spell out that the record which is being presented to the district courts for judicial review would only be that as presented by the Department of State. In other words, the language of the bill would read as follows:

A denial or revocation of a passport pursuant to section 6 of this Act shall be subject to judicial review on the record presented in the district courts of the United States.

The whole intent of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to give the Secretary of State some flexibility in deciding what he shall offer the court insofar as determination of a passport application is concerned.

I would hope the committee would see fit to adopt this one word amendment because I do not believe it would change anything and I think it would spell out a little clearer what the committee members themselves have stated as their actual intent in the use of the word "on the record." By that I mean only the records that would actually be presented in the district courts. I would hope that the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENTLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Could that conceivably mean that the Department of State would present only part of the record and withhold another part of the record?

Mr. BENTLEY. Of course it would. In that case the court would decide the case on the basis of the record which the Department actually presented to them.

Mr. CELLER. Under this practice the record which would be harmful to the applicant could be shown and that part of the record which would be helpful to the applicant would be withheld by the State Department?

Mr. BENTLEY. Yes. But I think that the court would have to make a decision on the basis of the evidence presented. I am certain the gentleman who is as anxious for protection of the rights of individuals as anyone would not insist that the Secretary of State send up sources of confidential information for the purpose of the court.

Mr. CELLER. What good would a record be if the Department of State could determine what shall go in the record and what shall not go in the record to go to the court?

Mr. BENTLEY. It would only refer to that part of the record which the administrative decision was based on.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENTLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. What the gentleman is trying to get at is this: He is trying to keep from forcing the Secretary of State to bring in a witness it does not want to. You cannot force him to do that anyway. In other words, if the Secretary of State does not want to present that evidence he does not have to and will probably lose his case. But he does not have to. By putting in this word you are cluttering up the intention, and you might even get into the absurd position that the gentleman from New York has described where you could send up derogatory information and hold back the other. You cannot make the Secretary of State present any testimony. His alternative he just loses the case and the fellow gets the passport.

Mr. BENTLEY. If the gentleman will permit me to continue, on that basis you cannot force the Secretary of State to send up any information he does not want to now.

Mr. HAYS. That is exactly what we are saying. Therefore, the gentleman's amendment is not necessary and it might lead to implications we do not want in the bill.

Mr. BENTLEY. I do not think so.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I want to direct an inquiry to the author of the amendment and also to the chairman of the committee. I would like to know what the situation would be under the provisions of the bill as presently written if an individual known to the CIA or the Federal Bureau of Investigation to be a courier for the Communist Party makes application for a passport. I am assuming the the security agency involved knows a great deal about a group of Communist couriers of which the applicant is one. In developing the case the agency does not want at this time, or at the time of the application, to make public the information on the activities of the individual couriers. Under the bill as presently written would the Department of State, failing to send all of the information and conceivably making it available to the accused himself, be under the obligation to issue a passport?

Mr. BENTLEY. It would.

Mr. JACKSON. May I direct a question to the chairman of the committee or to the gentleman from Florida? Would that be the case under the circumstances I have outlined?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, if the Department was not able to make a case which met the requirements of this law on the record then, conceivably, on judicial review, they would be overruled if they denied the man a passport. That is the answer to the gentleman's question. But, there is nothing mandatory, if I may complete my statement, which would require the production of witnesses, documents, or anything else.

Mr. JACKSON. But upon refusal of the Secretary of State to issue the passport requested, that would not be true?

Mr. FASCELL. If he does not have evidence sufficient to meet the requirements of the law.

Mr. JACKSON. Assuming that he has the evidence. He has the evidence in front of him. I ask this not in a contentious spirit. I am trying to get an important point straightened out. Assuming there is evidence, abundant evidence, which has been furnished by the security agency and which deals with a widespread operation. For some good reason it is not desired to place the individual under arrest at the time, but rather continue surveillance of his activities, and that of others. The Secretary of State says to the Communist applicant "You are not going to get a passport," and the applicant seeks and obtains a judicial review. At this stage is the Secretary of State forced under the provisions of the bill to furnish the information which has been developed to the court?

Mr. FASCELL. He is not.

Mr. JACKSON. He is not?

Mr. FASCELL. No. He is not required to present the information.

Mr. BENTLEY. Then he has to issue a passport, though.

Mr. FASCELL. If there is no other evidence on the record which meets the requirements of the law, then conceivably he could be overruled.

Mr. JACKSON. I think the crux of the whole matter, as I see it, is in this point. Cases have occurred where it is not in the national interest of the United States to issue a passport, and at the same time the evidence, which may be far-reaching, should not be spread upon the public record.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman is right in saying this is the crux of the matter. The Secretary has got to weigh which is the greater danger to the United States: to allow a court to overthrow the administrative denial and order the passport issued because the Secretary has not given the court all the information he has, or to give all the information and thereby reveal important sources or channels of securing information. Which would be more dangerous to our security? Now, we recognize this is a loophole and that this bill will not stop all dangerous Communists from getting passports. But the bill protects the rights and reputation of every innocent citizen and we think it will stop a lot of dangerous Communists from getting passports. Furthermore we believe that a good many more will not apply for passports under this law because they cannot be sure what evidence the FBI and the State Department have on them and might reveal to the court and the public. Still more will hesitate to ask for a judicial review, because, knowing their own guilt, they will not want the Department to put on the record the information about them which they fear it may have. Thus it will deter applications of some as well as deny them to others. The desired end of preventing their misuse of passports to injure the security of our country will be achieved in either case.

Mr. JACKSON. I take this time because I think this point is very important. I think it is a point that is not entirely clear to all the Members of the House.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to the gentleman that this is illustrative of the fact that the committee did lean over backward in its efforts to protect the rights of the individual.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENTLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just to have a brief colloquy with my colleague on the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. COFFIN]. I have spoken to him about this, because part of one statement he made yesterday, appearing in the RECORD on page 18451, should not, I think, be left without some amplification. It might give the courts a wrong impression as to the intent of the Congress, whereas I know that was not the gentleman's intention. He said:

> The State Department, when challenged, would have to divulge all of its information or none.

Now, I believe the gentleman is in agreement with what the gentleman from Ohio said yesterday in another place:

> He shall have the right to see the record on which the Secretary made his determination.

I am sure that is what the gentleman from Maine meant, that the Secretary will have to divulge not necessarily all the information he has, but all of the information on which he made his determination. In the man's file there may be mere gossip, or all sorts of unreliable derogatory material that came from whatever enemy or crackpot in the land. But such material was not the basis on which the Secretary made his determination that the person's activities or presence would be harmful to the Nation's security. He must reveal on judicial review the information he had which he considered valid and reliable and substantial, and on which he based his determination. Is that not the intent of the bill as the gentleman understands it?

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that is correct. The Secretary has to choose his ammunition to make his case. He has to elect from that material. He has no choice, however, but that between submitting to the court all of the evidence which constitutes the basis for the denial, or, if this would involve the revealing of critical data to the prejudice of future investigatory work, issuing the passport.

Mr. JUDD. I thank the gentlemen, because he is a very precise lawyer and a very influential Member of the Congress and I would not want his remark to stand as it appeared in the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. HAYS. I should like to concur in that. I think we have tried to make it very clear that the Secretary is to send up only the information in the hearing and that the decision shall be based on that record.

Mr. JUDD. That is right.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. BENTLEY. As long as we are clarifying the intent of members of the committee, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA], when he said yesterday that nothing shall be withheld from the court, if his interpretation is the same as that of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. JUDD. I should be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois for that purpose. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois had exactly the same thing in mind as did the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Maine; is that not correct?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman is now yielding to me to answer the question?

Mr. JUDD. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. What I had in mind in my statement of yesterday is that one who has been denied a passport is in the same position when he is taking his matter up on appeal as is one who had been convicted of a crime or a felony and who is carrying that matter up on appeal. That, briefly, is what I intended to convey and I did, as I understand it.

Mr. JUDD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FORRESTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am just a little amazed over this legislation. I intend to support this legislation but I do it with the frank realization that it is just a little better than nothing.

I am not content to fail to express myself as a lawyer and as a citizen concerning the situation we find ourselves in.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most unfortunate things that has happened in our country was the decision of the United States Supreme Court regarding the school segregation cases in 1954, because since that time it has caused so many good people to crawl in their shell and fail to realize the impact of the many Supreme Court decisions such as the Kent Passport case, which are utterly destroying all of the landmarks in this country. The truth is that the Kent against Dulles case, which was just referred to by the gentleman from New York, is one of those 5 to 4 decisions, and one of those men, the five men on that Court constituting the majority, destroyed every landmark in all of the law and all of the custom that had existed in this country from the very foundation up to that time, so far as passport law is concerned.

In the War Between the States the President had the right to deny passports and he has got it now. In World War I he had the right and he has got it now. President Wilson laid down the rule—and I do not see how any honest man could object to it—that a passport would be denied unless the person could prove that his travel would not prejudice the interests of this country.

This is a newfangled thing, this fool idea that you have got the right to travel anywhere and at all times, whether you are a Communist, or whether you want to strike at the vitals and want to destroy the country to which you owe your duty and your obligations and even your life.

I am amazed. You appropriate $40 billion for defense against communism and here you are taking up all of this time on this bill. Will you tell me whom you are defending? Do you think you are defending some really good Americans? Who do you think is going to be interfered with by legislation of this kind? It is the Kents, it is the Paul Robesons, it is the Communists, it is those who want to destroy us. They are not real loyal citizens.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORRESTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAYS. You are asking whom we want to protect. I will say to the gentleman that there was an amendment offered in committee—at least someone said he was about to offer it—to include along with Communists, members of the White Citizens Councils, and I fought that amendment.

Mr. FORRESTER. I will tell you this. It was good that you did. The White Citizens Councils are mighty honorable men and you are going to thank God for them before this thing is over. I am tired of these pseudo-Americans. I am tired of these persons of dual citizenship.

You are either an American or you are not an American. I am tired of the people who are so solicitous of Communists.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORRESTER. I yield.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman afraid that the foreign policy of the United States will be destroyed or hurt severely by what Communists or their supporters will say overseas any more than they can hurt us here in the United States by the exercise of their right of free speech?

Mr. FORRESTER. It is not a question of being afraid. Let me tell you something. You say a Congressman has the right to go to Russia. I say you have no such right if the President does not want you to go. I will tell you another thing. Thank God that such a principle or idea did not exist during World War I when I was in the Army as a private soldier because it might have been, if you had let them—this trash trying to go—go over there then, that I might not be here today and I might not be a Congressman today. I say you have no business over there. I do not want to go. I love this country so well, I never want to go over there. I am talking for keeps now. I will tell you another thing. You can go ahead and make weak laws, but thank God under the Constitution, the President of the United States has the right to defend this country, and if you will not defend it, I hope to God he will. The right to protect is an act of sovereignty, and you cannot take it away from him. I do not think you will get a President from down my way in my lifetime, but regardless, I will be with him every step of the way in trying to defend America.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I said I would try to get the gentleman some more time, and if his cerebral continuity has not been interfered with too much and he can get back into high gear, I ask unanimous consent that he be given 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORRESTER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that. I am always glad to get in high gear for my country. There are three things I never will be ashamed of. They are, the country I live in, the church I belong to; and the woman I married. I will defend them any time and any place.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORRESTER. I yield.

Mr. PORTER. I thought the gentleman had really made his point. But I did want to ask him if he thought, as a Member of the Congress, we had a duty to get all the facts we can before we make important decisions having to do with freedom and peace. Does the gentleman believe that?

Mr. FORRESTER. So far as a Congressman having the right to go to Russia, I think that statement is absolutely ridiculous—if you want to know what I honestly think.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, it would be a lot easier for me to sit down and not say anything. I do realize that my committee tried to come out with a good bill. I think in many ways they did. However, I feel we have been pushed by the claim of urgency and to a certain extent we have been panicked. Whereas this section has much in it that is true, and I believe that almost all of it is true, I do not believe it is a good section. I recall vividly the words of Thomas Jefferson when he, more or less, said that he had sworn eternal hostility to all forms of tyranny over the minds of men. I think if we are to join with Thomas Jefferson in swearing hostility to foreign tyranny, we must also swear hostility to tyranny here at home. There are dangers in this bill that can lead to tyranny.

I offered a couple of amendments when we were talking about this bill in the committee, and I feel that if we are going to be consistent and write a bill that specifically points to the Communist Party—and I assure you I am as much against it as anyone else—that if we are going to do a thing against a party that has not been outlawed and probably get into a situation where we are violating the Constitution, we might as well be consistent. We might as well say we are opposed to all groups, Communists, Fascists, or subversives of any kind. If we are going to do it we should do it and not beat around the bush. Therefore I think the language in this particular section is somewhat faulty in a constitutional sense.

We have already seen one of the motivating forces behind the drive to get a passport bill; I do not mean that it is the main one, but it is a contributory one. This is an attempt to strike again at the Supreme Court of the United States just because the Supreme Court does something some people perhaps do not agree with.

There was an editorial in a New York paper which was read in part. It all depends on how you read the editorial and how you want to read it. It is dated September 6:

The House Foreign Affairs Committee has passed a bill that would in some respects override last year's Supreme Court decision that the Secretary of State was not authorized to deny passports because of an applicant's associations or beliefs.

Then it goes on to say—depending on how you read, or how you think the editors intended it:

It is pleasant to note that under the bill's terms the Secretary of State may not deny a passport to any individual because of adherence to unpopular views or criticisms of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies.

That is a mild form of sarcasm or a general irony.

In regard to section 5 there was a time in our history when we could just as well have said about American citizens that if they sympathized with the British that they in turn would have been somewhat like the Communists today, because the whole language of this section hinges around the word "security" and the British could have been said "in every way to be trying to thwart the United States policy," and so forth.

So I ask you, Why do we not try to use existing laws, rather than putting this type of language into the bill? Get the Communists or any people who are subverting our form of Government; put them in jail, if we can; handle them in whatever way we can under constitutional law, and try not to write provisions of this type.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to yield if I have time to my distinguished colleague from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], because I wanted to say some very complimentary words about him. I appreciate the kindness of the members of the Committee in permitting me this privilege of speaking against this amendment, because I am against it and I am for this bill.

I want sincerely to thank the members of this great Committee on Foreign Affairs for dealing with a very troublesome problem. I wanted to have just a few minutes because last year on July 21, Mr. Chairman, I had a special order, the second time I have asked for a special order in the House. I appealed to the House to consider passport legislation. I could not see then as I cannot see now how we can with one hand spend millions of dollars on the Voice of America on friendly propaganda, let us say, for our beloved country, and with the other hand we push traitors and Communists and plead with them to go abroad and allow them to have the advantages of forums about which we know not to spread their insidious misinformation about this land that we love.

And I tell you another thing, Mr. Chairman, that concerns me, and that is the 9,000 boys of America who each month come from the fields and the factories in the service of our beloved country; and then with another accent on our voice we say to the fellow travelers that although they have no sense of responsibility to America it is all right for them to go abroad and preach all kinds of false information.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATTHEWS. I want to yield to the gentleman from Oregon because perhaps I can give him some information.

Mr. PORTER. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that these people should have the right to spread their insidious propaganda in foreign lands? Does the gentleman also support legislation to stop them from spreading their insidious propaganda in the United States of America?

Mr. MATTHEWS. No, sir; I do not believe these people should have the right to spread their insidious propaganda in foreign lands because this is the difference, let me say to the gentleman. If you would give these Communists who travel abroad an opportunity to spread their propaganda where we have an opportunity to control it, where they do not have the privilege to spread their propaganda to all people, but just to a selected few who might be given to them for an audience, I think I would go along with the gentleman. Let us have the same rules of communication as we have in America. Is the gentleman so naive as to think for 1 minute that he could travel abroad and get before any forum other than the forum that the Communists wanted him to appear before?

Let me ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. PORTER. I do not know how naive I am, but I do believe that our Government is far enough advanced, our traditions are strong enough, so that we can allow these people to talk any place in the world and I do not think it will hurt our foreign policy and our basic traditions.

Mr. MATTHEWS. That is where the gentleman and I disagree 100 percent. My point of view is they are members of the international Communist conspiracy. This Government has declared the international Communist conspiracy as dedicated to the overthrow of our form of government. When they travel under this conspiracy or observe that conspiracy, I think it is something a little different from a friendly debate here on the floor of the House.

I want to say to the gentleman that I respect him. I do not intend this in any mean sense at all, but I just feel very deeply about this particular proposition.

Mr. PORTER. From discussion comes wisdom. Out of world discussion may come a broader kind of wisdom. Should we try to stultify discussion on a worldwide scale, even though we are handicapped, and undoubtedly we are, outside of the United States?

Mr. MATTHEWS. My answer to the gentleman is if the rules for communications were the same, this would be a different matter. We enjoyed seeing on TV the Vice President of the United States over in Russia when he was talking to Khrushchev. Perhaps Mr. Stevenson, or Mr. Kennedy, or Mr. Johnson could have done a better job. But I think the Vice President did a good job. How many people do you think in Russia saw that particular program? Do you think for one moment they had the same communications in Russia that we have here in the United States? Let me say to the gentleman that the forum in Russia was limited, the forum was motivated by only one reason and that reason was, What is best for Communist Russia?

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont if adopted would strike from the bill statements concerning the danger of communism. This House, and indeed both Houses of Congress, have on a number of occasions indicated an awareness of the dangers of communistic philosophy. This is simply restating, in connection with this legislation, the feeling of the House in this respect. Furthermore, that wording points out dangers that exist if we permit Communist couriers and agents to have United States passports and to travel freely. This is a basic and important part of this legislation. It should by all means remain in, and the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Will the gentleman not admit that the findings in section 5 are the framework within which the findings of section 6 are required to be made, and it is so stated in the language of the bill?

Mr. ADAIR. That is correct.

Mr. FASCELL. Therefore, if we strike out section 5, you would not have 6 delineated in the framework under which the finding in section 6 should be made?

Mr. ADAIR. Yes.

Mr. FASCELL. Therefore, is not the gentleman from Vermont as proponent of the amendment defeating the very argument which he has made?

Mr. ADAIR. I think that is true.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MEYER. Is it not true, then, if this argument is correct, and maybe it could be, that we should be consistent and make the language obtain or cover all groups or all people that might be subversive?

Mr. ADAIR. As has been pointed out, I may say to the gentleman, the bill before us does not attempt to meet all questions with respect to passport legislation. We are dealing with a specific problem. Therefore, my answer to the gentleman is that the wording should be limited to that specific problem.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PORTER. The gentleman spoke of the couriers and I suppose he means agents. The gentleman knows in the report on page 3 there are several statements to the effect that this bill will not stop it, we cannot stop the travel of these people to South America and other places, they can use forged passports. It is wrong to give the impression that this legislation will stop couriers and agents, even substantially.

Mr. ADAIR. No responsible speaker on behalf of this legislation has said that.

Mr. PORTER. The report says it.

Mr. ADAIR. We do not say it will stop all of it. I am sorry we cannot give that assurance. But we do have here legislation which will take a step in the direction of curtailing this kind of travel and that is all we indicate this bill does. It is a measure of control.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. It may not stop them, but it will slow them down. Nobody has ever said it will stop them, but it will make them go to lengths they do not have to go to now.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman is correct, and that is pointed out in detail in our report.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, if there was ever need for legislation to change a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, it is now. This Court will go down in history as the most criticized since the dawn of this Republic. It has been the greatest force on earth in communism's progress in America. It has been a haven of refuge for the missionaries from Moscow. Mr. Speaker, since Earl Warren took the oath of office as Chief Justice, there has been a fantastic total of 39 cases dealing with communism. In all but nine of these cases verdicts have been rendered in favor of the Communists; verdicts have been rendered against the Departments of State and Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, congressional committees, U.S. district and circuit courts, and the several States. It is inconceivable that everybody has been wrong except the Supreme Court and the Communists. That is the record. One of these cases caused the President of the United States to come screaming to Congress on July 7, 1958, urging us to pass legislation giving our Government power to deny passports "where their possession would seriously impair the conduct of the foreign relations of the United States or would be inimical to the security of the United States." The President also said the Secretary of State should be given "clear statutory authority to prevent Americans from using passports for travel to areas where there is no means of protecting them, or where their presence would conflict with our foreign-policy objectives or be inimical to the security of the United States." The President said he wished to emphasize the urgency of enacting such legislation.

Of course, the President is right, and legislation of this nature should be promptly enacted as an emergency measure.

The case in question involved Rockwell Kent. Kent applied for a passport to attend the World Council of Peace in Helsinki, Finland. The State Department knew all about Rockwell Kent. He had sponsored the Paris meeting of April 1949 and was a member of a delegation of the World Peace Congress which was accorded high official Soviet honors when it arrived on March 5, 1950. On this occasion Rockwell Kent spoke as follows:

> I must tell you that I am not an official representative of the American Government. To be quite honest I must declare that the present Government of America is not my Government and does not represent me.

The official organ of the World Peace Congress is a publication, In Defense of Peace. In the issue of In Defense of Peace for April 1950, page 1, Rockwell Kent is shown in a photograph attending a meeting of the World Peace Congress in Stockholm, March 15–19, 1950, in company with the Soviet whip of the Congress, writer Alexander Fadayev, who enjoyed the blessings of the Soviet system so intensely that he recently committed suicide.

The purposes of these world peace congresses and committees are clearly laid down in the Cominform—previously the Communist International—journal, For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy for December 8, 1950, which declares that the Congress "will ruthlessly expose the warmongers, the aggressive foreign policy and reactionary home policy of the United States, the criminal war waged by the United States against Korea and its aggressive adventures against the Chinese People's Republic."

Bryn J. Hovde, an American scholar, who was roped into attending the Wroclaw meeting, has characterized the proceedings as follows:

> Every speech insulting the United States and glorifying the Soviets was wildly applauded. * * * After the first speech by the Soviet novelist, Fadayev, a speech which for vituperation was never excelled and which set the tone for the Congress.

At the Paris meeting in the spring of 1949, its Soviet Commissar Alexander Fadayev clearly described the Congress' attitude toward the nations within the Atlantic Defense Pact, including of course the United States. He said:

> We, the peoples of the world, shall punish you severely.

He lambasted the United States for its "feverish armament drive" and simultaneously lauded "our great Soviet country."

The Supreme Court knew all this, or at least could have known it and should have known it. But the Court's opinion does not show any such knowledge. The Court simply said Kent wanted to attend the World Council of Peace. Not a word, not even a footnote, to show the Court knew this was a Communist-manipulated gathering for world propaganda purposes.

Now, what kind of American is Rockwell Kent? From the time in 1933 that Rockwell Kent contributed $800 to the Communist Party, local arm of the Soviet international conspiracy, to the present, he has been unflagging and outspoken, in his devotion to the cause of the Soviet Union. When he appeared before the Senate Subcommittee on Government Operations on July 1, 1953, he was asked whether he was a member of the Communist Party. In reply he invoked the protection of the fifth amendment in refusing to answer. But time and again he has given public evidence of his allegiance to that subversive organization in coming out for the defense of its outstanding conspirators such as Earl Browder, William Weiner, Jacob Mindel, and the Communist leaders indicted and convicted under the Smith Act. During the infamous Stalin-Hitler pact, he joined in denouncing American war hysteria and was an honored official of the American peace mobilization which picketed the White House. After Hitler's attack on the Soviet Union, he suddenly executed an about-face and contributed his skill as an artist to the Calendar for Victory in 1942. Small wonder, then, that he has been highly acclaimed in the Soviet Union where his works have been prominently exhibited.

So terrible was this 5 to 4 decision by the Supreme Court that Mr. Justice Clark in writing the dissenting opinion said:

> But the Court then determines (1) that the Secretary's denial of passports in peacetime extended to only two categories of cases, those involving allegiance and those involving criminal activity, and (2) that the Secretary's wartime exercise of his discretion, while admittedly more restrictive, has no relevance to the practice which Congress can be said to have approved in 1952. Since the present denials do not involve grounds either of allegiance or criminal activity, the Court concludes that they were beyond the pale of congressional authorization. Both of the propositions set out above are vital to the Court's final conclusion. Neither of them has any validity: the first is contrary to fact, and the second to commonsense.

In other words, the dissenting opinion charged the Court with writing a false opinion. I know of nothing stronger one Justice could say about another.

This bill gives the President, through his Secretary of State, the power to question men of ill will like Robeson, Kent, Walter Briehl, Bridges, and the legion of other Communists and Communist sympathizers from giving aid and comfort to our enemies and misleading innocent peoples of the earth of the peaceful intentions of this Nation. If this bill is enacted, the Secretary can make an applicant for a passport put up or shut up. What less should be expected?

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the bill close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. PORTER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all other amendments to the bill close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SELDEN) there were—ayes 60, noes 92.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments to the pending bill close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAYS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported so that we will know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MEYER: On page 1, line 5, strike out section 5 (the entire section) running to line 16 on page 2.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JACKSON) there were—ayes 5, noes 124.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, in the closing few remarks I say that, I just hope that the good, which we hope can come from this bill, will materialize and that we will not be coming much closer to a police state. I, in my own mind, am sure that we are indeed coming that much closer to the police state. That is why I have fought this bill, even though I could see some good in it. If I am wrong, I will be very happy to be wrong. If I am right, then it will be too late anyhow.

Mr. Chairman, I believe most sincerely in what I have said to you. I believe that some day you all may realize this yourselves and that you will turn back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, on this bill a Member should ask himself three questions:

First. Are you afraid of what our citizens can say abroad?

Second. Do you want to give the President unlimited power to say who can go to particular areas in the world?

Third. Do you want to be limited, as a Member of Congress, in your power to get facts that you need for the vital decisions you must make?

Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk that I would like to have considered. It eliminates title II, which has to do with unlimited power to the President to declare certain areas of the world off limits with such exceptions as he may determine, again with unlimited discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon offer an amendment?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PORTER: On page 4, line 8, strike out all of title II through line 18, on page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENTLEY].

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that I think this bill could probably be improved, I think it is a good bill, and I think it is a sizable step in the right direction. I urge support of the bill. I hope there is a rollcall vote forthcoming.

Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk, I believe, has not yet read section 2; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BENTLEY. I thank the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. COFFIN].

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I have at the desk an amendment which has the approval of the chairman of the committee, the sponsor of the bill [Mr. SELDEN], and I thing a good many other Members. It is at the top of page 3 and would strike out lines 1 through 5 and would put in these words:

The Secretary of State shall not deny a passport to any person solely on the basis of membership in any organization or association with any individual or group.

That leaves in substantially lines 1, 2, and 3, and we avoid the implication that some Members have drawn that we think adherence to unpopular views or criticism of the United States or its policies is any evidence for exclusion. We all criticize, we all have unpopular views a dozen times a day, and we do not want the implication put in this bill that it constitutes any reason for a denial of a passport.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer the amendment?

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COFFIN: On page 3, strike out lines 1 through 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The Secretary of State shall not deny a passport to any person solely on the basis of membership in any organization or association with any individual or group."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. COFFIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT].

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted at the action the Committee has just taken. Certainly, there should never come a time when the holding of unpopular views or the expression of criticism on the part of any American citizen as to our domestic policy should be considered as in any way something that is not within the inherent right of that individual. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted that the gentleman from Maine has offered this amendment. I hope the legislative history will clearly show that such views or criticisms cannot be held by the Department of State in any way to be a detrimental matter concerning any individual citizen of our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and today the House sitting as the Committee of the Whole, have functioned in the spirit truly symbolic of our democracy. There has been concession, there has been acceptance, and there has been the resolving of differences in reason and in tolerance, and a meeting of all minds in the making of a measure that in its entirety pleases no one but is acceptable to all. I feel very happy and proud that I am a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and of this body.

In the debate yesterday and today, and there have been no discordant voices, we have established beyond any doubt whatsoever that the House of Representatives in passing the bill under consideration is denying to the Department of State the power to refuse a passport on secret evidence from undisclosed sources and which in its completeness is not produced for full judicial review when demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that the amendment of the gentleman from Maine does not go far enough. I favored his amendment to cut out as any basis or reason that the Secretary of State should deny a U.S. citizen a passport upon, the following words: adherence to unpopular news, or criticisms of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies. This is clearly an invasion of the liberties guaranteed to each U.S. citizen under the Constitution. I would further strike out the phrase "association with any individual or group," because I do not think that is a valid reason for denying a passport to a U.S. citizen solely on that ground or as a valid reason adding to other reasons, insufficient of themselves in total evidence, without the addition of this guilt by association clause. I strongly oppose this provision of the bill.

May I call the House's attention to line 11 on page 3, the phrase "or supporter of the international Communist movement." I believe under U.S. Supreme Court decisions that merely to be a supporter is not enough—there must be an act or action. I also call the House's attention to the language on page 2 line 18, "any person who is, or has been since January 1, 1956, a member of, or affiliated with, the Communist Party or knowingly engages or has knowingly engaged since January 1, 1951, in activities intended to further the international Communist movement," and so forth. This is much better language as far as statutory draftsmanship is involved.

I believe we must have the word "activities" in the language to stand up in court.

I favor passage of this bill to provide standards for the issuance of U.S. passports to protect our U.S. security.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is one that gives to the Secretary of State the powers that are necessary and one that also goes as far as possible in writing a piece of legislation to guarantee the inherent right of the individual under the Constitution of the country.

I support the bill. I think the committee after long labor brought out a bill that the majority of the House can support.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ZABLOCKI].

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of the bill before us, to provide needed standards for the issuance of American passports.

This legislation is long overdue. Since the Kent and Dayton decisions were handed down by the Supreme Court last year, the State Department has had no authority to withhold passports even from persons known to be active Communists, and known to be working against the interests of our Nation.

Surely such a situation should not be permitted to continue even 1 day longer. It will be rectified by the bill before us. That is why I support this legislation, and that is why I hope that it will be enacted into law without delay.

An American passport is not an insignificant piece of paper. It carries with itself the prestige and the protection which our Government provides for its citizens. It also gives the bearer the right to return to our land. I see absolutely no reason for the issuance of such a document, with all of its rights and privileges, to any person who is known to be an active supporter of world communism.

Let us not forget that world communism is dedicated to the overthrow of our system of government. Communists despise our freedoms, our liberties, our way of life. Our Constitution, with its safeguards and protection for the rights of every man, woman, and child, is repugnant to them.

Why should we, therefore, bend over backward and extend the prestige and support of our Government—through the issuance of passports—to known Communists to aid them in their dirty work?

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of H.R. 9069. I shall continue to support this legislation, and I sincerely hope that the House will approve it overwhelmingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, it has been said here that this bill gives the President unlimited power. Of course, that is not so. On the contrary, the bill very carefully spells out that the administration has to make certain specific determinations before it can act, determinations that have to stand up in court, which is a very different thing from unlimited power.

It was also said that this bill is not necessary and is a dangerous bill. On the contrary, confronted with the threat our country faces today this is a very necessary bill; and not to pass it would be exceedingly dangerous. I am sure it will be passed by an overwhelming majority of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the committee for doing a very fine job. I differ with it only on one fundamental fact, and that goes to the very basis of my concept of this Government. I think it is one that is historically correct: that the citizens are the sovereign, that the state is the creature of the citizens. I feel at least in part this bill even as it is amended, puts sovereignty into the hands of the state, and in effect we say to the citizen, particularly with respect to title 2, that somehow his rights are less than that. If the sovereign citizen has the right to know that he may exercise his decision, then I do not see that we should give anyone the right to deprive him of the right to know what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the debate yesterday and today has disclosed that here is a bill which has been carefully and thoughtfully studied and worked out. It deserves the support of every Member of Congress, and I hope today that it may have the unanimous support of the Members of the House. It is good legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SELDEN].

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us grants to the Secretary of State the necessary authority to meet a situation that endangers the security of the United States. At the same time, the measure provides ample safeguards for the rights of the individual, including both administrative and judicial review.

I urge the defeat of all pending amendments and the adoption of H.R. 9069.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Chairman, the occurrence a few minutes ago wherein the gentleman from Maine [Mr. COFFIN] was instrumental in presenting to this membership the fact that on page 3, beginning at line 3 thereof, the following language: "adherence to unpopular views, or criticisms of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies.", was not appropriate to be continued in the final text which bill I hope will be approved, would make it untimely for me to take further time of the committee to present exactly the same viewpoint of the gentleman from Maine on that very same language. For, Mr. Chairman, adherence to unpopular views should never be improper in any group of American citizens. For, what is unpopular today may be very popular a year from today and vice versa.

Popularity of viewpoint should never be a test of whether or not a passport should issue to an applicant. The popularity of his views, or unpopularity of them, should never be a grounds of judgment by the Secretary of State as to his being entitled to a passport to a foreign country. In fact, dissent and disagreement on viewpoints is basic to arriving at honorable, sound decisions. And in like manner the real essence of sound legislation is constructive criticism of policies and procedures of our own beloved Nation in its domestic or foreign policy, or the administration of its agencies. Let us not be afraid to criticize. But, by saying this I do not mean to state that I am not in sympathy of condemnation of the United States, of its domestic and of its foreign policies such as emanate from the mouths of dedicated Communists and subversives. But, even though criticism comes habitually and systematically and with malice aforethought from their mouths, still these should not be grounds for denying a passport because no doubt we will all recognize that criticism is entirely allowable and constitutional under our constitutional form of government. Thank God it is so. Let us keep it so—forever.

I have often said that I will fight for the right of the man who differs with me to pray as he wishes, think as he wishes, write as he wishes, do as he wishes, providing he does the same within the four corners of the Constitution of the United States of America. By this I mean to say he must do it in accordance with established law.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, of course the Executive has inherent power to protect our national security by our passport power, as by its other powers. I would favor legislation, such as that proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], permitting the Secretary of State to deny a passport where he has reasonable grounds to believe that the applicant, while abroad, will transmit security secrets, or attempt to overthrow the Government of the United States.

But H.R. 9069, the bill before us, is a long way from containing the procedural safeguards which are necessary when we are legislating in the field of the rights of the individual. For example, section 7 authorizes the Secretary of State to require a passport applicant to submit a written statement under oath as to whether he has been "a supporter of the international Communist movement." President Eisenhower, in inviting Khrushchev to visit this country, was doing exactly what Khrushchev and international communism wanted him to do. If this bill became law, and Mr. Eisenhower thereafter applied for a passport and filed an affidavit of nonsupport, does section 7 make him guilty of perjury, and subject to its penalties? If words mean anything, it might. This and other examples of slovenly draftsmanship make it necessary for the appropriate committees to review this legislation before it is presented to the Members.

It has been pointed out during the debate that the other body will not consider this legislation at this session. There is thus plenty of time for the production of a bill that meets the needs of national security, without unduly injuring individual rights.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The first section of the Act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 887; 22 U.S.C. 211a), is amended by striking out "that the Secretary of State may grant and issue passports" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I—PASSPORTS

"SECTION 1. The Secretary of State may grant and issue passports".

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RILEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 9069) to provide standards for the issuance of passports, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 371, nays 18, not voting 46, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR SEPTEMBER 9

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of inquiring of the majority leader as to the program for tomorrow and the rest of the week, if he can give us any information.

Mr. McCORMACK. Tomorrow we will consider under unanimous consent the bills from the Ways and Means Committee I have heretofore announced.

In addition there are two resolutions from the Rules Committee in connection with traveling outside the continental United States by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Committee on Public Works, and then the Alaska-Hawaii airport bill. They will come up tomorrow. That is all I know of now.

Projecting my mind beyond that, I see the housing bill, of course; then the mutual assistance conference report. Action might be taken Wednesday on the highway bill. It is on the Speaker's desk. We have a conference report on an agricultural bill that will be called up tomorrow.

Mr. HALLECK. I may say in connection with the highway bill that so far as I am concerned the Senate amendments are agreeable to me.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that. As far as I am concerned the Senate amendments are agreeable to me. I hope, as does the gentleman from Indiana, that the bill may be taken from the Speaker's desk and the Senate amendments concurred in.

That is all I know of now.

Of course, everything has got to be more or less flexible.

SPECIAL CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of this week it shall be in order to consider conference reports the same day reported, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XXVIII.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on calendar Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks following those of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] on House Resolution 380.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PLAQUE HONORING THE LATE HONORABLE SAM McREYNOLDS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2291) to authorize the erection of a plaque in honor of the late Honorable Sam D. McReynolds on or near the site of the Chickamauga Dam.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Sam D. McReynolds Memorial Committee is hereby authorized to place, at no cost to the United States, on or near the site of the Chickamauga Dam a suitable memorial plaque in honor and appreciation of the late Honorable Sam D. McReynolds, formerly a Member of the House of Representatives, for his contributions to the erection of such dam and for his interest in and contributions to the success of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the purposes for which such Authority was created. The suitability of the size, design, and exact location of such plaque shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

THE OREGON CAVES NATIONAL MONUMENT: A TRIBUTE IN COMMEMORATION OF ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, The Oregon Caves in my district deserve a tribute commemorating the 50th anniversary of having been proclaimed a national monument July 12, 1909.

The caves were discovered in August 1874 by Elijah Davidson. Stories of the discovery differ slightly. One is that Davidson wounded a bear and followed it into a mountain through a hole which is the main entrance to the cave. Another is that the wounded bear died near the cave beside a stream which Davidson followed because, to his surprise, it came out of the mountain. Oregonians and others take pride in noting that he was chasing the bear and not vice versa. That important event is memorialized by the name of Mount Elijah. Located in Josephine County, in one of the many picturesque, beautiful sections of the Siskiyou National Forest, the caves were called Josephine Caves.

In 1877 Frank N. Nickerson, of Kirby, Oreg., discovered four floors or levels to the caves, and several other labyrinths and entrances have since been found.

In 1884 two brothers explored parts of the caves and tried to acquire "squatters rights" and title by remaining near the cave's main entrance, but they gave up. So, later, did some California promoters who wanted the caves but they learned that the caves were in Oregon instead of California.

Under authority of the Antiquities Act of Congress of June 8, 1906, and on the recommendations of the Forest Service, President Taft proclaimed the Oregon Caves and 480 acres of land surrounding their main entrance a national monument. Jurisdiction over the area was transferred from the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture to the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, on August 10, 1933.

Millions of Americans and many persons from other lands have visited these caverns. They differ from other caves in the varieties, beauties, and mysteries of their incrustations.

A few special points of interest among the many whose names conjure up vivid mental pictures are: Paradise Lost, the Beehive, Dragon's Mouth, Niagara Falls, King's Palace, the White House, Yosemite Falls, Bridal Chamber, Bottomless Pit, the Catawampus, Heavenly Boudoir, Old Satan's Cradle, and Judicial Hall. There are about 40 additional interesting names for other entrancing scenes in these caverns.

Highly descriptive, near-poetic terms are needed to try and picture the multivaried aspects of these underground wonders.

Some descriptions have suggested that the limestone deposits which have turned to marble assume grotesque as well as pleasing shapes. Some of the upstanding stalagmites are grotesque, and some stalactites are fantastic, amber-colored pendants.

In many instances they have joined to form columns of shimmering beauty and frequently appear to be delightful, exquisite, miniature waterfalls. They look like draperies, stone flower gardens, clusters of column-like organ pipes, spectral statuary, or strange bric a brac. The ceilings and walls are usually frescoed elegantly. The walls have several coats of marble, each beautiful, but different in design.

The Oregon Caves National Monument has not, even yet, been explored thoroughly.

I do want to point out, too, that although the Forest Service transferred jurisdiction of the caves to the National Park Service more than 25 years ago, the agencies have cooperated in various ways. Earlier this year I learned from Regional Forester J. Herbert Stone, of Portland, that considerable recreational development in the vicinity of the Oregon Caves has been outlined. These areas will receive early examination in the Forest Service national forest outdoor recreation review program. I had contacted the Forest Service to learn what sort of development was being planned because the area attracts thousands of visitors.

Earlier I mentioned the graceful formations found in the Oregon Caves. It should be noted that the splendid natural oddities of the cave are of special interest because they have been formed in a tilted stratum of marble. And the interesting features of the area include rare species of plants and animals.

That famous western poet Joaquin Miller has described the caves as "The Marble Halls of Oregon." Through the years our marble halls in the Siskiyou Mountain area have become nationally known. The halls are open the year around and the Park Service tells me it expects that yearly attendance by 1966 will pass the 100,000 mark.

We Oregonians like to have visitors during this centennial year or any other year. While you are in Oregon take a day out to see the caves; I don't think you'll ever forget the visit.

THE LATE HONORABLE EDMUND P. RADWAN

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to inform the House that the Honorable Edmund P. Radwan, a former Member of Congress who represented the 41st District of New York, passed away yesterday, September 7. Mr. Radwan was forced to retire at the end of his term last year due to illness, and we are all very saddened to learn of his passing. I want to extend my sincerest sympathy to his wife and family.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to insert their remarks in the RECORD in regard to our late former colleague.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of great sadness that I pay final tribute to Ed Radwan.

After serving with distinction in the New York State Senate, he came to Congress in 1951 and, during the following 8 years, we all came to know him as an extremely capable, honest, and outstanding representative of his State's 41st district. During these years I was privileged to have Ed Radwan as a close associate and personal friend.

He was a man of excellent character and background. I often discussed important legislative matters with him and always profited by his insight and understanding. His ability has been, and will be, sorely missed.

My heart goes out to his lovely family, whom I have the pleasure of knowing. I hope it will comfort them somewhat to know that their beloved Ed will long be remembered by those who had the honor of serving with him.

Mr. PILLION. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sadness that I rise to pay respect to the memory of our esteemed departed colleague from the State of New York, the late Honorable Edmund P. Radwan. It was my privilege and good fortune to have served with Congressman Radwan both in the New York State Legislature and in this Congress.

Congressman Radwan was a man of great political and personal courage. He had a keen and high sense of honor. Although it was conceded by everyone that he could have been reelected in this last campaign, Congressman Radwan chose not to seek reelection. This decision was based upon his belief that, due to his illness, he could not give his undivided service to his constituency.

In the State of New York, I can recall his courage and determination in fighting against a proposal to increase taxes in the year 1949. In Congress, Representative Radwan earned the respect of his colleagues for his sincerity and his adherence to principle.

Congressman Radwan was a dedicated public official with a deep sense of responsibility to his constituency and to the people of this Nation.

I extend my deepest sympathy to his family.

Mr. SANTANGELO. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sorrow that I learned of the passing of my beloved and esteemed friend, Edmund P. Radwan. Our Maker called Mr. Radwan at the early age of 48 and we mourn his passing. I met Ed Radwan in 1947 when we served together as senators in the New York State Legislature. He was a senator from the great city of Buffalo where he was born and grew up. He was a dedicated servant and public officer. He was always vibrant, alive, and stimulating. His talents were recognized by his friends and neighbors who promoted him to Congress in 1951 to serve his country further.

Cities and places are just brick and mortar to be admired for their beauty and architecture. People give them meaning and make them come alive. On every occasion that I had a problem in Buffalo, I could always call upon Ed for assistance and he never failed me. Whenever I thought of Buffalo, I would think of Ed Radwan. During the past few years, Ed Radwan did not enjoy good health. He suffered, but made no complaints. When he realized that he could no longer render service to his people, he graciously stepped down to permit another more physically capable to take his place.

He was one of the most courageous men I ever knew. He suffered silently and stoically. He approached his Maker with composure and resignation. He has gone to the great beyond. Because on the way he touched me, I am richer in experience, I am wiser in judgment, and happier in thought. All who knew and met him on his journey through the corridor called "Life," share this feeling and sentiment.

He lives in the hearts of his wife, his three children, his friends, and his brother, Ralph. I extend to his family and those who love him my heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply sorry to learn about the passing away of our former colleague from New York, the late Honorable Edmund P. Radwan.

I had the privilege of serving with Congressman Radwan on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Through our close association over the years, I learned to respect him greatly for his integrity, for the soundness of his judgment, and for his devotion to his legislative duties. I know that many of my colleagues have shared my esteem for him. We are deeply moved by the sad news of his death.

It is indeed tragic that someone so young, so able, and having—to all appearances—the whole world in front of him, should have suffered so much and been called by his Maker in the prime of his life. The illness which ultimately led to Congressman Radwan's death had earlier forced him to resign from the Congress and to abandon the life of public service to which he had devoted himself with such vigor and devotion. That grievous misfortune was compounded by the ordeal of repeated surgeries which he had to undergo, and by great physical pain and suffering.

Although we cannot always understand the workings and designs of the divine providence, we must seek consolation today in the thought that the good Lord had called our late colleague to be among His very own.

I want to extend my deepest sympathy to Congressman Radwan's family and his friends. May the good Lord keep them in His special care during this time of their great sorrow and loss.

WEAKNESS IN THE BENSON FARM POLICIES

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I took the House floor to tell as best I could some of the difficulties and anxieties that beset the American farmer. Today I want to discuss what I believe to be the weaknesses in Secretary Benson's approach to the farm problem. On tomorrow, I plan to take the floor for the third time this week to make some positive suggestions for improving our agricultural economy.

Let us get one central fact clear in our minds. The farm problem is not a matter of concern only to rural people. Our agricultural economy is so intertwined with the national economy, that any weakening of agriculture's position is a loss to every American. Let me say to my colleagues in the Congress who represent metropolitan areas that the welfare of your people is closely tied to the American farmer. Not only do our farm families provide you with the finest supply of food in the world but farm customers buy the products that keep your factories running.

Farmers, for example, use more steel each year than is consumed by the American automobile industry. When farm income drops, so do the sales of steel companies, farm machinery manufacturers, and auto companies. The Detroit auto worker and the Peoria farm machinery worker have as much at stake in a good farm program as does the farmer.

Of course, the wise farmer knows that his welfare is likewise tied to the buying power of the worker and the merchant in the city who consume the products of the farm. Those who divide and confuse the farmer, the worker, and the merchant do a grave injustice to all three of them. Together they comprise a three-legged stool that tumbles if any one of the legs is broken.

It is especially clear that the farm problem is closely tied to the economic well-being of the small businessman. Farm families purchase large quantities of groceries, shoes, clothing, washing machines, medicine, machinery, furniture, haircuts, gasoline, et cetera.

It has often been pointed out that the farmer creates new wealth from the soil. The rest of us depend so directly or indirectly upon that new wealth that we all suffer every time the farmer's income takes a dip. In fact, it is estimated that the farm dollar turns over six or seven times in its impact on the economy.

The Conference on Economic Progress report, prepared in December 1958, reached the conclusion that from one-fourth to one-half of our entire national production lag since the end of the Korean war in 1953 stems from depressed farm purchasing power. With farm income for the first 5 Benson years $12 billion less than the previous 5 years, the cash registers in towns and cities across the Nation have been slowed down.

Who can deny that the farm problem is America's problem—the problem of each one of us? It will take the best efforts of a great many of us to meet that problem successfully.

I am convinced that no proper answer to the difficulties of agriculture is to be found in the approaches recommended by Secretary Benson. He is doubtless a man of good character and sincere purpose, but he seems to be totally lacking in understanding of farmers and their problems. Since he took command of our agricultural programs in 1953, he has repeatedly made administrative rulings and exerted pressures that have aggravated rather than helped our farm economy. Nearly all of the major farm bills passed by the Congress in recent years have been vetoed by the President on the advice of Mr. Benson.

Many of us in the Congress were dismayed when the administration vetoed our wheat bill earlier this year. That bill would have reduced surplus wheat production by 480 million bushels, cut Government costs by $528 million, and protected the farmer's income. The bill was further improved on the floor when Congress accepted my amendment to place a $35,000 ceiling on the amount of price support loan that any one farmer could receive. Yet, the President vetoed this bill at Mr. Benson's insistence.

In a nutshell, Secretary Benson's program has consisted of lowering the farm price-support level to accomplish three objectives: First, reduction in farm surpluses; second, reduced Government costs; and third, reduced food prices to the consumer.

The policy has been an enormous failure on all three counts. The Secretary has cut farm prices to be sure, but in doing so he has sharply reduced farm income, driven many farm families from the land and most frustrating of all, instead of reducing surpluses, tax costs and food prices, the reverse has happened.

While farm income was falling, farm surpluses and farm program costs to the taxpayer have skyrocketed and food prices are up instead of down.

Here is the record based on Government statistics for the Benson administration from 1953 until the present:

Farm income down by one-fifth.

Farm purchasing power down by one-third.

Farm surpluses have quadrupled from $2.4 billion in 1953 to $9.1 billion in 1959.

Department of Agriculture budget now seven times greater than in 1952.

Food prices up 5 percent.

Four million Americans have left the farm. Instead of eliminating surplus production, the Benson policies have eliminated farmers whose farms have been incorporated in larger units. Many of these family size farms have been swallowed by vertical integration or corporation farming.

A year ago, the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture [Mr. COOLEY] summarized the results of Secretary Benson's policies as follows:

> Since Mr. Benson began to bring down farm prices 5 years ago, farm income has dropped about $1 billion a year, the cost of farm programs has increased by about $1 billion a year, farm debt has climbed about $1 billion a year—and farm people have been leaving the farms at the rate of about 1 million a year.

No fair-minded person would argue that Secretary Benson is solely responsible for the current agricultural problem. The evidence is clear, however, that he is promoting a discredited theory which may sound convincing to those who preach it but which has disastrous consequences when applied.

The Benson theory is "the free market theory." According to this view, farmers are overproducing because of Government price supports; overproduction depresses farm income; take away firm price supports and farmers will balance supply with demand so that all will be well.

The only trouble with this "free market" or "supply and demand" theory when applied to agriculture is that every time it is applied it leads to economic disaster. Farmers have wryly observed that the law of supply and demand means that when there is a supply there is no demand.

When the farmer brings his produce into a free market, he is more often than not like a lamb going to slaughter. He has nothing to say about either the price he shall be paid for what he sells nor the price he himself will pay for the things that he must buy.

Before the advent of the Federal farm program which Mr. Benson has been gradually taking apart, farmers were taken for an economic ride each year by the speculators. During the marketing period following harvest, speculators enjoyed a hey-day as they watched the temporarily-flooded market sink. They would then move into the glutted market and buy low knowing that the farmer had to sell to pay his bills and his expenses. They could then sit back and wait for the market to rise before they unloaded at a neat profit.

We need not rely on theory to know how the "free market" would work in the absence of a Government farm program. We had such a market in the 1920's and early 1930's. During that period the stock market boomed to an all-time high in 1929. Industry was prospering. The farmer, however, saw his markets collapse in late 1920 and 1921 and from then on for the next decade he was in serious trouble.

All across rural America while prosperity reigned in the cities, farm families were forced to the walls, mortgages were foreclosed, mainstreet businesses and banks closed and everyone suffered.

That is why farm State Republicans and Democrats joined in demanding a program that would bring order out of chaos in our agricultural economy. Great champions of the farmer in Congress such as Norbeck, of South Dakota; Norris, of Nebraska; and LaFollette, of Wisconsin; tried unsuccessfully to convince Presidents Harding, Coolidge and Hoover that the Federal Government had a responsibility to meet the crisis in agriculture. Their efforts fell on deaf ears, however, with Coolidge typifying administration attitudes when he said:

> Farmers have always been poor and there isn't much that can be done about it.

It was this lack of administration understanding of agricultural people and their problems that led Norbeck, Norris and other farm State Republicans in the Congress to shift their support to the Democratic President, Franklin Roosevelt. Norris campaigned for the Democratic presidential candidate as early as 1928.

These men knew that in the absence of a national farm program, millions of individual farmers have no way of keeping supply and demand factors in balance. They can never know whether Mother Nature will bring drought, hailstorms, or bumper harvests.

Nor can the farmer know what the impact will be of shifts in production by other farmers, or a change in the pattern of international trade and foreign production. The farmer, for example, who might decide that a 10 percent cut in corn production would help stabilize prices, is powerless to do anything about his hunch if other millions of farmers should fail to act on the same impulse. Even then, in a free market, during the period when the crop is brought to market, the price would sink, giving the speculators their opportunity to profiteer on the farmer's toil.

It is only through a carefully planned farm program that supply and demand factors can be made effective.

The Federal farm program established in the 1930's and 1940's gave farmers an opportunity for the first time in American history to market certain basic commodities in an orderly and profitable manner. Under this program, farmers were assured price support loans up to 90 percent of the parity value of their crop, provided they complied with production limitations. The farmer paid interest on his loan, and had the option of either redeeming his stored commodities by paying off his loan or letting the Government keep the commodities. For 20 years, 1933–53, this program operated for six basic farm commodities. Not only did it stabilize farm production, marketing, and income, but at the end of two decades the Government, instead of subsidizing farmers, had actually made a $13 million profit.

Furthermore, there were no burdensome surpluses. The Government farm storages were a great blessing during World War II and the Korean war. Even in peacetime years, the surpluses were never larger than that needed for a national reserve.

There were, of course, weaknesses in the farm program. One basic weakness was that it was never geared sufficiently to the needs of the smaller farmers. There was no graduated scale of acreage allotments and parity guarantees similar to the Federal income tax principle. As a result, acreage restrictions worked a hardship on the small producer. Likewise, big producers parlayed price support profits into investments in bigger and bigger farms that made it increasingly difficult for the little man to enlarge his holdings.

Another fundamental failure has been our slowness to convert our farm abundance into an effective foreign policy instrument in a world overrun with hungry inhabitants. There is something immoral about the constant deploring of farm surpluses while other human beings in Asia, Africa, and the Middle East are yearning for food. Indeed, there are hungry Americans here in the United States who ought to be benefiting from our surplus food.

But the lack of family farm considerations and an imaginative food for peace concept have not been the weaknesses that Secretary Benson has sought to correct.

Because of a deepseated prejudice against Government intervention in economic life, Secretary Benson set out in 1953 to dismantle the Federal farm program. Mr. Benson was not motivated by any desire to remedy the weakness of the program for the benefit of the small farmer. He was determined to do away with the entire program by a series of reductions in the farm price support level.

Mr. Benson's biggest error is the basic assumption that he could reduce farm production by reducing farm price supports. Each time that he has lowered farm price supports, production has gone up—not down.

The reason is clear. Farmers have high, fixed operating costs which can only be met by multiplying the volume of production times the price. If their prices are lowered, they have no recourse other than to increase their volume. This they have done in the case of every commodity following reductions in the price support level. Cuts in farm prices, combined with acreage cuts and rising costs, comprise a three-way pressure on farmers to increase the yield per acre as much as humanly possible. Scores of farmers have told me that Secretary Benson's policy of lower prices, combined with reduced acreage allotments, has forced the very surplus production it was supposed to prevent. Thus, the $2.4 billion in Government-held farm surplus of 1952 has mushroomed to $9.1 since Mr. Benson has been handling the program.

We have already seen that Benson has failed equally in his two other objectives—that of lowering food prices and reducing Government costs. During the years that Benson has been administering our farm program, each time he has lowered farm price supports, middlemen have simply widened their profit margins. Neither farmers nor consumers have benefited from lower farm prices.

Consider, for example, the case of bread. During the past 10 years the price of a bushel of wheat has declined 20 percent, but the cost of bread has increased 54 percent.

The record of failure is equally clear in the case of Mr. Benson's claim that his approach would lower costs of the farm program to the taxpayers. His policies, including his highly advertised soil bank, have been vastly more expensive than any previous farm program in our history.

The annual budget of the Department of Agriculture, prior to Secretary Benson, was approximately $1 billion. This year's fiscal budget has reached the astounding total of $7 billion.

A news item in the Washington Post of June 1, 1959 tells the story as follows:

> A Library of Congress study shows that Agriculture Department appropriations from 1862 to 1931 totaled $2.4 billion. From 1932 to 1953, expenditures were $25.2 billion. Since Benson took over in 1953, net budget expenditures have reached $31 billion. In other words, the present Secretary has spent more than all his predecessors combined.

Let us see briefly how this has happened. First of all, although there are 4 million less Americans engaged in farming today than in 1952, Mr. Benson has increased the number of employees in his Department from 67,406 in 1952 to 98,487 as of June 30, 1959—an increase of more than 31,000.

Second, price support losses by the Commodity Credit Corporation which formerly were either very small or actually net profits to the Treasury, have increased enormously in recent years.

The Department of Agriculture supported the prices of major storable crops for 20 years prior to 1953 and ended that 20-year period with a net profit of $13 million. During this same period, even with the price support losses on the perishable commodities included, the Government cost was only slightly above $1 billion. By contrast, Mr. Benson lost more than $4 billion during the first 5 years that he handled the price support program.

Because Mr. Benson has been protected by the big metropolitan press and friendly commentators, the shocking cost to the taxpayers of his policies is not generally known. Yet, the record is clear. He has lost more than four times as much in price support operations in 5 years as was lost in the 20 previous years by Secretaries who believed in the program they were administering and did their best to make it work rather than trying to prove it would not work.

Here are some of the other factors in the Benson financial record:

First. Interest charges in the Department of Agriculture have increased from $16 million in 1952 to $323 million in 1958.

Second. Storage and handling charges have gone from $73 million to $409 million.

Third. Transportation costs for moving Government commodities have risen from $45 million to $178 million.

Fourth. Administrative expenses for Mr. Benson's office have jumped from $15 million to $34 million.

Fifth. County office expenses have zoomed from $13 million to $50 million.

The biggest expense of all in the Benson years was his highly administered soil bank. That program has cost the taxpayers $2½ billion and has benefited only a small minority of our farm families. When Mr. Benson and his supporters in the Congress told us in 1956 that the soil bank was the answer to the farm problem, I publicly protested this false claim. "The soil bank may have certain conservation values, but it is a poor substitute for a strong price support program," I warned repeatedly during the months this new program was being advanced.

The soil bank was actually promoted by Secretary Benson in 1956 as an election-year scheme to get some quick cash into the pockets of farmers who had been hurt by his policies. The Secretary recommended that $1,200 million be paid out to farmers just before the 1956 election on the farmer's promise that he would take acreage out of production the following year. "I wonder what would have been the reaction of the press and the Nation if a Democrat had offered any such thing just before an election," observed Congressman WHITTEN, of Mississippi, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations.

Although the Government has spent nearly $2½ billion on the soil bank, it has had little effect on reducing production. The acreage reserve costing $1¾ billion was junked by Congress this year after Mr. Benson publicly admitted his plan had not worked.

The conservation reserve of the soil bank, which remains, has some good features, but involves only a small fraction of the Nation's 4 million farmers—125,000 in 1957–58. It has cost three-quarters billion dollars to date, and we are committed under this program to some contracts running 10 or 15 years.

Here, too, the effect on production has been slight. Congressman WHITTEN reports that his committee investigations revealed that "all sorts of nefarious schemes were used, in some instances, to bilk the Treasury in connection with the program. Most of the lands rented had little real production history anyway." Chairman WHITTEN concluded, after an intense committee study of the soil bank, that its chief purpose was "to place in the hands of some farmers cash which they have lost under the policies of Secretary Benson."

Strangely enough, while pouring $2½ billion into the soil bank, Secretary Benson has tried to undercut such programs as the agricultural conservation program in which 1¼ million farmers participate. He has recommended cuts in the already small school lunch and milk program, has resisted efforts by the Congress to expand the use of our farm surpluses overseas, and for needy American families, and has strongly urged higher interest rates for our rural electric users.

The more I study Mr. Benson's record, the more convinced I become that he is a representative not of the farmers, but of the powerful and influential middlemen who process, store, transport, and handle the farmer's products.

I fully recognize that it is not enough simply to criticize Secretary Benson's policies. My purpose in doing so is my conviction that any improved program must begin with a recognition of the mistakes that have been made in the recent past. I have given a great deal of time and thought to the farm problem in recent years and have discussed it with hundreds of farmers in my home State of South Dakota. The suggestions which I shall make tomorrow for improving our farm economy are offered in humble recognition of the fact that no one of us has any quick and easy solution to this tough national problem.

WORLD TRADE

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, world trade, the flow of commerce between nations, is a subject of deep interest to me, my State and, indeed, to all the people of the United States and of the free world. We recognize how utterly impossible it would have been to attain the standards of living we enjoy were it not for the availability of the raw materials, the foodstuffs, the crafts, and the advanced manufactures other countries can offer us. We also know the contribution that U.S. exports have made to the standards of living and productive capacity of the countries with which we trade.

Since 1934, United States has worked through the reciprocal trade agreements program to encourage the flow of trade in recognition of the fact that through reciprocal trade we promote mutual cooperation. We have sought under the trade agreements program to remove artificial restrictions on trade and to develop sound rules for the conduct of trade between nations. To this end we have negotiated trade agreements such as the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade under which we have lowered our tariffs on a reciprocal basis and have developed rules of trade policy designed to avoid discrimination and unfair trade practices.

Although I have been critical of some of the things that we have done, I believe that the United States has, on the whole, made a good record in its trade policy. We have also been realistic about the problems and needs of other countries. For example, during the postwar period of reconstruction and imbalance in trade we recognized, under the GATT, that countries suffering balance of payments and currency problems would have to resort to quota restrictions on imports in order to conserve their scarce foreign exchange. We recognized that, in particular, it was necessary in a dollar-short world for countries to limit their imports from the United States in order to husband their limited dollar resources.

The world economic picture has, however, changed from the condition that it was in only a few years ago. Economic recovery has taken place. National incomes and standards of living, particularly in the industrialized countries of the world, are on the rise. This improvement in the economic health of many countries has been reflected in an improvement in their foreign trade position. There is no longer today a problem of dollar shortage. With the accumulation of foreign exchange reserves and the expansion of export trade, many countries, particularly those of Western Europe, have been able to bring their currencies closer to full convertibility with the dollar.

Along with these developments there has also been substantial progress in the elimination of special restrictions against imports from the United States and the reduction of quota restrictions against imports generally.

A few weeks ago I wrote to the Under Secretary of State, the Honorable C. Douglas Dillon, requesting information on the progress that had been recorded in the first half of 1959 in dollar trade liberalization. In his reply Mr. Dillon noted the advances that had been made. His statement ended with the following paragraph:

> Despite the progress which has been made, however, a number of countries continue to discriminate against U.S. exports. In the coming months, the U.S. Government, through such forums as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the International Monetary Fund, and in bilateral discussions, will continue vigorous efforts—based upon the new financial situation which exists in international trade—to bring about further rapid elimination of dollar trade discrimination.

I welcome the progress that has already been made in the removal of artificial restrictions placed against U.S. exports. I applaud the vigorous efforts of our Government to this end and I am reassured by the commitment of our Government that it will try to accelerate the pace of progress in this field.

I think that it is very important to emphasize to our trading partners throughout the world the urgent necessity of taking additional and bold measures to eliminate, as soon as possible, the remaining discriminations against U.S. trade. Furthermore, in those countries that have achieved a measure of stability in their foreign trade which has permitted greater currency convertibility, I would hope that they, too, would soon eliminate all their remaining quota restrictions that have been imposed to protect their balance of payments. I recognize that many of the less-developed countries that have been faced with adverse trade conditions due to the low prices at which their products have been selling in world markets, may not be able to undertake such a fast pace of trade liberalization although I feel that, even in the case of these countries, discriminatory restrictions against U.S. goods are unwarranted.

I cannot emphasize too much that this is one of the most important issues in our foreign trade relations today. Involved is the question of honoring the GATT commitments and other trade agreement obligations that our trading partners have assumed. As I mentioned earlier, the GATT recognized that quantitive restrictions on trade may be necessary for balance of payment reasons. But the GATT also requires that these restrictions be removed as soon as the balance of payments situation permits. This is particularly true in the case of discriminatory restrictions. The removal of such restrictions therefore involves the integrity of the trade-agreements system which is essential for the orderly growth and expansion of world trade. It is likewise important for the development of a trading system in the free world that will bring the kinds of economic gains to all that we seek through trade.

Finally, and very importantly, our trading partners have in their power to make important decisions about their own trade policies which cannot fail to have important effects on the future course of United States trade policy.

I hope that through the consultations under GATT and the International Monetary Fund we will see an acceleration of the progress in trade liberalization and the removal of discriminatory restrictions and that our delegation to the XVth session of the contracting parties to the GATT which meets at the end of October will have good progress to report when those meetings are completed.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in the RECORD materials on the subject that I have been discussing, including detailed information supplied to me by the Department of Commerce on the remaining restrictions against dollar imports in effect in various countries:

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN ACTING SECRETARY DILLON AND CONGRESSMAN BOGGS ON PROGRESS IN DOLLAR TRADE LIBERALIZATION

HALE BOGGS, chairman of the Subcommittee on the Administration of Foreign Trade Laws and Policy of the Committee on Ways and Means, wrote to Acting Secretary Dillon requesting a statement on actions taken by foreign governments to remove discriminatory restrictions against imports from the dollar area. The letter from Mr. BOGGS and Mr. Dillon's reply transmitting the information follow. As this correspondence indicates, the U.S. Government welcomes the progress made in dollar liberalization and intends to continue its vigorous efforts to achieve the elimination of quantitative restrictions and discrimination against imports from the United States.

JULY 13, 1959.

The Honorable C. DOUGLAS DILLON,
Under Secretary of State, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DOUG: With the improvement in the balance-of-payments and foreign exchange positions of many of our trading partners, particularly those in Western Europe, and with the reduction in the U.S. export surplus, it has become increasingly important that the United States pursue aggressively the elimination of discriminatory restrictions imposed against dollar imports. I know that our Government has been working hard on this task, principally through the vehicle of the consultations on balance-of-payments import restrictions that have been going forward under the aegis of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This is an effort which deserves full support.

From time to time in the past, particularly in connection with the periodic extensions of the trade agreements legislations, the Department of State has issued reports on the progress of trade and currency liberalization, particularly with respect to dollar trade and payments. I think it would be very useful if this information could be brought up to date and made available to the Congress and the American public. To a limited extent this has been done in the annual report of the President on the trade agreements program although the latest report covers only the development up to the close of calendar year 1958.

It would be particularly useful if information covering developments in trade and currency liberalization during the first half of 1959 were made available. It is my impression that noteworthy progress was recorded during the first half of this year, especially in Western Europe and that far from increasing restrictions against imports from the United States, the advent of the Common Market has, at least, for this brief period, brought with it a relaxation of such restrictions.

Sincerely yours,

HALE BOGGS.

JULY 25,1959.

The Honorable HALE BOGGS,
Chairman, Subcommittee on the Administration of Foreign Trade Laws and Policy, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

DEAR HALE: I am enclosing a statement concerning the progress made during the first half of 1959 in eliminating dollar discrimination in international trade, which you requested in your letter of July 13, 1959. This progress has continued in the current month. Most recently, Ghana, Malaya, Nigeria, and Singapore have taken additional measures to liberalize their treatment of dollar goods.

In accordance with your suggestion that information on advances in trade and currency liberalization be made available to the public, the Department plans to release this statement to the press.

The U.S. Government will continue vigorous efforts to bring about further rapid elimination of discrimination against U.S. exports.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS DILLON,
Acting Secretary.

PROGRESS IN ELIMINATION OF DOLLAR DISCRIMINATION IN INTERNATIONAL TRADE DURING THE FIRST HALF OF 1959

In the past 6 months a number of the world's leading trading nations have taken important steps toward the removal of remaining discrimination in their treatment of imports from the United States and other countries of the dollar area. Among these nations are Argentina, Australia, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Malaya, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, and the United Kingdom.[1]

This acceleration in the dismantling of discriminatory dollar trade controls during 1959 has occurred not only in the important trading nations listed above but also in North Borneo, Jamaica, British Guiana, British Honduras, and elsewhere. Its significance lies not only in the substantial trade opportunities which the liberalization moves will afford to U.S. exporters but also in the new international financial situation which the moves reflect.

The new financial situation is actually the result of dramatic measures taken by most Western European countries at the beginning of the year to establish nonresident convertibility for their currencies. In the opinion of the United States and many other countries these measures ended whatever financial logic may have existed in trade discrimination. Because of the convertibility actions, a merchant in South America, Africa, Asia, who receives British pounds sterling, German marks, Italian lire, or other convertible European currencies for his exports now earns currency which is as usable as the dollar in international trade and which, in fact, he can convert into dollars at will.

In Europe, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, and Norway took important steps to free their dollar imports early in the year. As a result of these measures Denmark, the Netherlands, and Norway now permit all products which can be imported without licensing restrictions from Western European countries to be imported freely from the United States as well. France, in removing controls on such dollar imports as cotton, copper, scrap iron, aluminum, and other raw and semifinished products, raised its dollar liberalization to the highest level since the end of the war. Germany, in the course of consultations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, has in the past 6 months announced the removal of a number of import restrictions and has undertaken a program for further liberalization over the next 3 years.

In the past few weeks, Italy and the United Kingdom announced new dollar liberalization measures which have narrowed, although not yet eliminated, discrimination against U.S. goods. In Italy restrictions were removed from such important products as tanned leather, gasoline and diesel engines, phonograph records, turbines, reactors, jets, most types of pumps, industrial heating and cooling equipment, machine tools, and a large variety of iron and steel products. In the United Kingdom, dollar restrictions were lifted June 8 on about 45 items, including fresh, frozen, and canned vegetables, cheese, eggs, honey, cereal breakfast foods, musical instruments, shoes, and household appliances. The United Kingdom also opened a number of its so-called global quotas[2] to U.S. exporters and increased dollar quotas for a number of imports, including automobiles.

Elsewhere in the world, the Government of New Zealand recently announced adjustments in its import quotas designed to remove inequalities which have remained from discriminatory restrictions of previous years, despite the largely nondiscriminatory form of New Zealand import restrictions adopted in 1958. In April, Australia abolished discriminatory licensing treatment of 330 dollar import items, among them agricultural machines, tractors, earthmoving equipment, diesel engines, locomotives, aircraft, scientific instruments, and motorcycles. Brazil has eliminated the distinction between dollar and European currencies in its exchange auctions. Japan has, for the most part, abandoned import allocations by currency areas, and a majority of the British colonial governments have followed the lead of the United Kingdom in removing many import controls which formerly discriminated against dollar goods.

Despite the progress which has been made, however, a number of countries continue to discriminate against U.S. exports. In the coming months, the U.S. Government, through such forums as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the International Monetary Fund, and in bilateral discussions, will continue vigorous efforts—based upon the new financial situation which exists in international trade—to bring about further rapid elimination of dollar trade discrimination.

[1] Just prior to issuing this statement, the Department of State received information that France had announced a further liberalization measure, and that Kenya, the Sudan, Trinidad, and Uganda also had reduced their discrimination against dollar products. These developments are in addition to those which occurred in Ghana, Malaya, Nigeria, and Singapore in July, as noted in Mr. Dillon's letter to Mr. BOGGS.

[2] Global quotas in theory, while limiting the total value or amount of imports, permit purchases from any country. In practice, a number of so-called global quotas permit imports only from a designated group of countries.

TRADE DISCRIMINATION AND CURRENCY CONVERTIBILITY

(Statement by W. T. M. Beale, chairman of the U.S. delegation, at the opening plenary of the 14th session of the contracting parties to the GATT, May 11, 1959)

Mr. Chairman, when the contracting parties agreed last fall to wait until this session to act on the review of import restrictions under articles XII and XVIII, all of us, I believe, had in mind no more than the advisability of providing additional time for improving the text. I know that we in the U.S. delegation did not expect that, within a few weeks after the end of the 13th session, the contracting parties would be able to add a new and important page to the review, namely, a report on fundamental changes in the international payments situation.

The changes in the situation to which I refer were, of course, brought about by the measures taken by a number of contracting parties in Europe and elsewhere to establish the external convertibility of their currencies. As the result of a series of dramatic and welcome actions that crowned the progress of several years, the currencies used to finance the bulk of world trade are now generally convertible into one another for nonresidents at official rates of exchange. All of the countries that acted applied their convertibility measures to current transactions, including trade, and some of them extended convertibility to the capital sector also. At the same time, the European Payments Union, with its provisions for automatic credit facilities, was liquidated; and the European Fund, with its provisions for discretionary credits repayable in gold, was put into operation along with the other arrangements provided for in the European Monetary Agreement.

These measures formally brought to an end the basic difference that had previously existed between the dollar area currencies, on the one hand, and sterling and many other currencies of continental Europe, on the other. In a broad and practical sense, the phrase "dollar area" broke out of its old geographic definition and came to include not only a few countries mainly concentrated in the Western Hemisphere but also the United Kingdom and a large part of the continent of Europe, as well as the countries in other parts of the world which are members of the currency areas centered in Europe.

The practical significance of these measures may be clarified by a few illustrations. Today, any country that earns sterling, for instance, is free to use it for financing its imports from any supplier in the world. Today, countries include in their published accounts of gold and convertible currency holdings their balances in the newly convertible currencies, such as the French franc and the deutsche mark. Today, a merchant in South America, Asia, or Africa who buys goods, whether in Europe or elsewhere, for Belgian francs, Italian lire, or Austrian schillings pays in currency that is, in fact, as usable as dollar currency.

In the new situation, the effect on Chile's or Norway's balance-of-payments position and monetary reserves of a given amount of foreign exchange expenditure is the same, whether the money is spent in Canada or Denmark. Similarly, the effect of a given amount of foreign exchange income is the same, whether it is received from the Dominican Republic or India. Thus we note that Brazil no longer has separate exchange auctions for the dollar and the so-called A.C.L. currencies but has a combined auction where dollars and the European convertible currencies are traded on the same basis. In short, the broad establishment of external convertibility has generally removed the substantive distinction that existed for two decades between the currencies of the dollar countries and the currencies of other countries and thus has ended the relevance of this distinction to trade policy and to the appraisal of balance-of-payments and exchange reserve positions.

Before commenting in more detail on the implications for trade policy of the convertibility moves, I would like to refer to some of the considerations that appear to have made it possible for the European countries to move forward. First, the countries of Europe had, by and large, achieved a notable degree of financial stability and high levels of productive capacity and productivity. Secondly, although some of the less-developed countries as well as some of the industrialized countries had individual balance-of-payments problems, the general international payments situation was propitious. In this respect, may I point out that in the period following the postwar realinement of exchange rates—that is, in the 9 years from 1950 through 1958—the rest of the free world, as a result of transactions with the United States, increased its gold and liquid dollar reserves and working balances by almost $14 billion, or an average of about $1.5 billion a year. Other transactions, including official receipts of gold from new production, brought the increase to $18 billion for the period. Thirdly, there was the long-standing realization, reflected both in the articles of the Agreement of the International Monetary Fund and in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, that inconvertibility and the trade restrictions that accompany it are costly obstacles to the economic allocation of resources, both nationally and internationally, and hence to economic growth and standards of living. Finally, but not least in importance, the governments which acted had the courage of their convictions.

When the convertibility measures were announced, Government officials and businessmen all over the world undoubtedly asked themselves the same question: What practical effect would these measures have on trade, investment, foreign exchange markets, and so on? To answer the question as it applies to trade, we must, of course, consider the relationship between convertibility and the principles of the general agreement.

The general agreement, in essence, is a cooperative venture of a group of nations designed to achieve common economic objectives under agreed trade rules for the benefit of all participants. It is natural that we should find running through an agreement of this character the historic principle of the most-favored-nation or, as we sometimes call it, the principle of nondiscrimination. The general agreement tolerates little deviation from this principle and defines in strict terms the situations in which discriminatory practices may be followed.

With regard to quantitative import restrictions, the provisions of the general agreement establish a close relationship between the balance-of-payments criterion and the privilege of departing from the rule of nondiscrimination. Thus, article XIV permits a contracting party to deviate from the rule of nondiscrimination in article XIII only with regard to import restrictions maintained to safeguard its balance of payments, that is, under articles XII or XVIII:B. Article XIV does not authorize the discriminatory application of restrictions maintained, for example, under article XI.

The character of the rules in the general agreement governing the discriminatory application of quantitative restrictions reflects the extraordinary balance-of-payments problems and shortages of monetary reserves that many countries experienced after the war. Few currencies were convertible when the general agreement was negotiated; and of course, supplies of convertible means of payment were short. In these circumstances, had the general agreement required absolute adherence to the rule of nondiscrimination, many countries might have found it necessary to limit their imports according to standards dictated by the availability of their least plentiful means of payment. In other words, article XIV was written to take account of peculiar balance-of-payment situations arising out of the inconvertibility of currencies and to allow for discriminatory import policies based on the proposition that, in the circumstances, increased imports from some suppliers would not endanger slender monetary reserves to the extent that imports from others might. The various formulas found in the article were all designed with this end in mind.

It may be noted that the formula utilized by most contracting parties that have resorted to article XIV is the one given in paragraph 1(b). This paragraph permits the discriminatory application of import restrictions only to the extent that discriminatory payments restrictions may be applied under article XIV of the fund agreement. The fund agreement, in turn, provides that members shall withdraw payments restrictions under article XIV no longer needed for balance-of-payments reasons.

In this context, the United States believes that the recent convertibility measures have created a new setting for commercial policy. As inconvertibility has given way to convertibility, so discrimination and bilateralism should now give way to nondiscrimination and multilateralism. This observation applies not only to a country whose balance of payments has been put on a convertible basis by its own convertibility measures; it applies in general to other countries also since, with sterling and other currencies of Western Europe added to the previous list of convertible currencies, the bulk of world exports is now being paid for with convertible currency. All countries, whether or not their currencies have been made convertible, are affected by the new convertibility situation; some because payments in their own currency are on a convertible basis; others because their foreign exchange income and payments are made in the form of the convertible currencies of other countries.

Discrimination in the application of import restrictions has taken various forms, for example:

The maintenance against some suppliers of restrictions on imports that have been liberalized—that is, freed of restraints—for other suppliers;

The maintenance against some suppliers of prohibitions on imports for which quotas have been opened for other suppliers;

The administration of quotas in a manner not in harmony with the central concept of article XIII, paragraph 2, which calls for a distribution of quotas aimed at a pattern of trade which might be expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions; deviations from this concept sometimes take the form of bilateral exchange of quota privileges not open to third countries; and, finally,

The application to the imports of some suppliers of procedural requirements that are not applied to like imports from others.

May I make a further comment with regard to the last situation. It has been said that certain regulations applicable to imports are merely formalities, not restrictions, and therefore do not constitute discriminatory import restrictions even though they are unevenly applied among exporting countries. We are not sure that this assertion is valid; but if it is, we should not forget that article I, paragraph 1, of the general agreement requires unconditional most-favored-nation treatment with respect to all rules and formalities in connection with importation and exportation.

The United States considers that the advent of convertibility has refuted whatever financial logic may have been found in trade discrimination. Convertibility should mean the rapid removal of the inequalities that have proved costly both to the countries whose export interests have felt the sharper edge of import restrictions and to the countries which have considered it necessary to apply import restrictions in a discriminatory way. May I repeat what the U.S. delegations to the meetings of the contracting parties have said many times: All import restrictions carry some economic cost, but discriminatory import restrictions are likely to be especially costly since they tend to divert from cheap sources to expensive ones the purchase of whatever volume of imports is permitted. Countries with the greatest need for foreign exchange—including the less developed countries, a number of which continue to have overall balance-of-payments difficulties—are least able to afford the extra costs that discriminatory import restrictions entail.

We have noted with appreciation the quick action taken by a number of countries following the establishment of convertibility to eliminate various discriminatory elements in their restrictive systems. Some of them have opened for non-European suppliers the liberalization lists that had been established for European suppliers. Others have put quotas on a nondiscriminatory basis. When the recent advances toward nondiscrimination are added to the advances of previous years, it is apparent that the contracting parties have moved a good part of the way toward the goal of nondiscrimination enunciated in the general agreement. But there is much left to be done, and we believe that the opportunity afforded by the new financial situation should be seized by all contracting parties that are still resorting to discriminatory import practices.

At the same time as progress has been made in the elimination of discrimination since the advent of convertibility in Europe, consideration has been given to new measures and arrangements that would have the effect of increasing the scope or intensifying the incidence of discriminatory import restrictions. The introduction of measures and arrangements of this kind would be a singularly disconcerting way of responding to the new convertibility situation. The United States believes that, at this juncture, the contracting parties can reasonably expect that changes in quantitative import restrictions will run in the direction of eliminating rather than expanding the impact of discrimination.

At this point, I wish to say a few words specifically about the trade interests of the United States in relation to the discriminatory import restrictions still in force. Over the years the United States has, I believe, approached the question of discrimination against its exports with a reasonable degree of understanding. We have cited the disadvantages and economic cost of discriminatory restrictions; we have encouraged their relaxation and removal; and we have pointed out—no doubt with vigor on occasion—particular restrictions that were proving to be specially harmful to our legitimate trade interests. Many of you have heard us expound the virtues of American bean-sorting machines, mild-cured salmon, honey, office equipment, automobiles, apples and pears, machine tools, bourbon whisky, and so on. But in doing this I do not believe that we have been unmindful of the serious problems faced by many contracting parties during the postwar period, and I know that we have not been unmindful of the resolute efforts made to solve them.

It is only too clear, however, that the period of postwar adjustment is behind us. The old arguments about the dollar shortage and the unique export position of U.S. goods have lost their relevance. The last 10 years have seen a remarkable growth of productive capacity and efficiency in many areas of the world. The revival of productive power in other countries has been revealed by their sales, not only in the United States, but also in other markets. American producers and exporters can testify, from firsthand experience, to the revival of effective competition from oversea producers.

For some years, we in the U.S. Government have had to answer the following question put to us by American exporters: If a country is able to open its doors to goods produced in the countries of Europe and other areas, is there any good reason why it cannot open up its doors to like goods produced in the United States? Speaking plainly, I must say that in present circumstances, we do not believe that there is a persuasive answer to that question.

The periodic consultations now called for by the revised provisions of articles XII and XVIII–B will enable the contracting parties to examine systematically the remaining area of discrimination in the restrictions applied under those articles. The United States and the other countries whose exports have been affected by restrictions against the dollar area, will, of course, be highly interested in this aspect of the consultations. Discrimination does not affect dollar countries alone, however. When we speak of nondiscrimination we have in mind not only the interests of the Western Hemisphere dollar countries but the interests of others as well. All contracting parties stand to gain by the achievement of a fully multilateral trading system. We therefore look forward to the consultations, and the constructive encouragement they can give to the early elimination of discrimination, as a source of benefit to all contracting parties.

By the timely application of the logic of convertibility to their commercial policies, contracting parties will not only promote their immediate economic welfare but will also make a lasting contribution to the system of multilateral trade that they have been striving for so long to attain through the general agreement.

QUANTITATIVE IMPORT RESTRICTIONS MAINTAINED BY COUNTRIES PARTICIPATING IN THE GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

1. The general agreement prohibits the use of quantitative import restrictions by participating countries but allows certain exceptions to be made. These include controls necessary to protect human, animal or plant life or health; controls designed to prevent interference with certain types of domestic programs relating to agriculture or fisheries products; measures necessary to the protection of a country's security interests; and restrictions authorized for particular countries in exceptional circumstances; e.g., —. the U.S. section 22 waiver, the Belgian "hard core" waiver and the decision of the Contracting Parties permitting Germany to continue temporarily certain restrictions originally imposed for payments reasons.

2. By far the most important restrictions, however, from the standpoint of their effect on U.S. exports, have been those permitted for balance of payments reasons under articles XII and XVIII and the discriminatory application of these restrictions permitted under Article XIV.

3. Countries employing balance of payments restrictions are required to remove their restrictions as rapidly as conditions permit and a regular consultation procedure is provided to keep these controls under constant review. Countries operating under article XII are required to consult annually and those operating under article XVIII consult every two years.

4. In view of improved conditions in recent years the U.S. feels that progress in eliminating balance of payments restrictions can be accelerated. In particular, actions taken by a number of countries making their currencies convertible for nonresidents has virtually eliminated the financial justification for discrimination against U.S. goods. At present, of the 37 countries participating in the GATT, 25 maintain balance of payments restrictions and 21 maintain some distinctions as to source of supply, which usually means discrimination against U.S. goods. The current situation is as follows:

Countries maintaining restrictions under article XII: Australia, Austria, Denmark, Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Finland, France, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Union of South Africa,[3] United Kingdom.

Countries maintaining restrictions under article XVIII: Brazil, Burma, Ceylon,[4] Chile, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia,[3] Malaya, Pakistan,[3] Turkey, Uruguay.

5. The great variety of import controls in use and the frequency of changes in the various systems make it difficult to assess their effects or to compare different control systems. The most common form of quantitative restriction is administrative licensing, which to a large extent is operated on a case-by-case basis. Some countries have announced "prohibited lists" of goods for which licenses are normally not issued, while licenses for other goods are issued on an ad hoc basis. Some countries, notably those belonging to the Organization for European Economic Cooperation and the British Commonwealth have published liberalization lists; i.e., lists of goods for which no licenses are required or for which licenses are automatically issued. A country will usually have several such lists, each pertaining to imports from a different group of countries or currency area.

Comparison is difficult, however. One country might have a "prohibited list" while another country has none but simply does not, in practice, issue licenses for certain goods. One country might have a sizable liberalization list but restrict goods in the unliberalized sector severely, while another country has no liberalization list, but, in practice, issues licenses liberally across the board. A country might have a fairly long liberalization list but restrict goods in the nonliberalized sector severely, while another has a shorter list but issues licenses for nonliberalized goods rather freely.

There are, of course, many other types of restrictions. In some countries, foreign exchange is allocated annually, semiannually or even quarterly for imports from different sources of supply and frequently exchange is allocated among different classes of goods. A number of countries requires importers to make advance deposits ranging from a fraction of the value of the goods to be imported to many times their value. Deposits in excess of the value of the merchandise are usually refunded but the importer may have funds tied up in deposits for many months. In addition, in many countries, certain goods can be imported only by government agencies.

6. Table I, attached, shows the principal types of nontariff import restrictions employed by GATT countries and in a number of cases gives a rough indication of the severity of controls and the extent of discrimination. Table II indicates in a general way the types of commodities affected by these controls. Neither table is intended to be exhaustive. Annex I contains more detailed notes on restrictions employed by individual countries.

TABLE II.—PARTIAL LIST OF GOODS UPON WHICH THERE IS DISCRIMINATORY RESTRICTION AGAINST U.S. EXPORTS

Austria: Cow's milk, certain dairy products, bread and coarse grains, livestock and meat products, sugar and tobacco, television sets, files, button blanks and buttons, metal and plastic skis, cosmetics, oil burners. Textiles—most woven piece goods, upholstery fabrics, cotton yarn and gauze, bed and furniture covers, shawls, scarves; handkerchiefs, and some carpets. Corn and wheat.

Australia: Complete automobiles and lumber.

Benelux: Fruits and vegetables, meat and meat products, dairy products and eggs, potatoes and seed grain, polished rice, methyl chloride, penicillin, automobiles. Netherlands, in addition: Coal, coke, women's stockings, petroleum and petroleum products, a few chemicals, nitrogenous fertilizers, penicillin, soup, nuclear products, sheet glass and glassware, bolts, nails and screws of iron, steel, and automobiles and chassis.

Brazil: All luxury goods and items produced in Brazil in sufficient quantity for domestic consumption. Fresh fruit and wheat by preferential bilateral agreement with Argentina and other items such as oils, ships, and fertilizers by bilateral barter arrangements with East bloc countries.

Burma: Capital and producer goods.

Italy: Milk and cream, grapes, seminola, most crude sugar, soap-making pastes, wines, sulfur, citric acid, crude calcium acetate, tetraethyl lead, certain printing machines and parts, motor vehicles and parts, and small motorcycles and parts, gold and jewelry. Almost all agricultural products and foodstuffs, including beverages and tobacco, explosives, unsensitized film, paper and paper products, textiles, parts of copper, aluminum, magnesium, lead and zinc, certain machines and very many parts of machines. In addition, plastic materials, vulcanized rubber, conveyor and drive belts, fiber glass products, tinplate, packaging machines, electric dishwashers, household refrigerators, power excavators, certain looms and other textile machinery, single-head industrial sewing machines, adding machines, certain calculators and certain cash registers, electric rotary motors and converters and vacuum cleaners, radio and TV receivers, fluorescent lamps, electric tubes, carbons and graphites for use in electricity, motors, picture cameras and sound production equipment, motion picture projectors, and sound recording apparatus, perforated magnetic film and sound pickups. Also meat and fish preparations, wheat, fats and oils, natural honey, food preparations containing cereals, flours and meals, including infant foods or containing vegetables, beverages, including all alcoholic beverages and pharmaceutical products and automobiles for which the present annual quota is $1.6 million.

Canada: Butter, butterfat, cheddar cheese, and dried skim milk. An import quota of 4 million pounds a year for turkeys which is nondiscriminatory. However, the United States is sole foreign supplier of turkeys. Also wheat, wheat flour, and wheat starch; oats, including ground, crushed, and rolled and meals and barley, including ground, crimped meal and flour. Also secondhand automobiles and secondhand aircraft imports are embargoed. Also there are import controls over natural gas and fissionable products and over alcoholic beverages by the various Provinces (States).

Ceylon: Consumer goods, such as radios, refrigerators, automobiles, photographic instruments, and textiles and manufactures.

Chile: All goods require import deposits, depending upon essentiality of the merchandise. These are applied in a nondiscriminatory manner, except for countries with which Chile has compensation agreements.

Cuba: Foodstuffs, beverages, certain office equipment, toilet articles, electrical appliances, photographic equipment, certain automotive chassis, chinaware, and luxury goods are subject to import licenses although these have been granted automatically so far and have had no restrictive effect on Cuban imports. Registration taxes on cars are applicable on an increased scale, depending on the value of the car, which has the effect of being discriminatory on U.S. automobiles. Other restrictive taxes include 15 percent on photographic films and a 20 percent tax on cameras, projectors, and automobiles having a value between $2,300–$3,000 and a 30 percent tax on automobiles with a value of over $3,000. The automobile taxes are in addition to the registration taxes for automobiles previously mentioned.

Denmark: Packaged rice and tobacco manufactures.

Dominican Republic: Rice, wheat, wheat products, sugar products, edible oils, except olive oil, lard and lard products, a 12 percent customs surtax on all imports, internal consumption taxes on hundreds of commodities including many U.S. manufactures.

Federation of Malaya: Motor vehicles, radio receiving sets and watches (the assumption is that these items will be freely licensed).

Finland: Many goods, including chemical raw materials for the pharmaceutical and forest products industries. Many U.S. consumer goods such as refrigerators, washing machines, hand tools, fabrics, yarns, and other textile materials.

France: Hundreds of machinery, industrial equipment, and manufactured consumer goods. Various types of manmade fibers, industrial and laboratory electrical furnaces and ovens, certain types of calculating machines, accounting machines, various chemicals, bearings of all kinds, much electrical and electronic equipment, and various types of machine tools. Dollar automobiles and whisky are treated less favorably in import licensing from the dollar area than from the nondollar area. In addition, though nondiscriminatory, the internal tax on cars is particularly high on those over 16 horsepower.

Germany: Fresh and frozen meats, lard, dairy products, wheat, rye and barley, oats, corn, grain meals, vegetable fats and oils, and fish oils. In addition, vegetable preparations and fruits in small containers, apple juice and pear juice, fresh apples and pears, honey and some dairy products. Also textiles and ceramics. The principal discrimination against U.S. goods is found in meat (bovine) leather. Also, a recently imposed temporary duty on coal imports above a certain duty-free import quota, although nondiscriminatory in application, strongly affects German imports of U.S. coal.

Greece: Textiles, motor vehicles, and certain luxury products, including fur, gold and silver articles, watches and perfumery products. Very rarely licensed are over 50 classes of mechanical equipment considered adequately manufactured in Greece, including a wide variety of agricultural machinery implements, hoisting equipment, power pumps, electric motors, diesel motors, gasoline engines, and generators, all up to 20 horsepower, certain textile machinery and equipment, electric fans, and a variety of other goods. Quotas on tires and tubes, electrical equipment, steel sheets, frozen meat, lumber, coal, woodpulp, and newsprint discriminate against all countries with which Greece does not have clearing agreements. (Greece does not have a clearing agreement with the United States.) Greece requires prior import deposits of 70 to 140 percent and on textiles up to 280 percent. Heavy consumption taxes fall primarily on imports, among them 25 percent on tires and tubes, 45 percent on air conditioners, 20 percent on washing machines, 35 percent on shoes, 40 percent on cameras, 45 percent on elevators, and 25 percent on photographic paper and unexposed film.

Haiti: Firearms, ammunition, explosives, tobacco, matches, and wheat. Internal tax on wheat flour.

India: All goods. Especially motor vehicles.

Indonesia: All goods. Some goods in bilateral trade agreements are favored.

Japan: All commercial imports must be licensed. Cowhides, beef tallow, lard, soybeans, copper scraps, steel scrap, and pig iron. Also automobiles, industrial and household type sewing machines, band instruments, office equipment, television sets, air conditioners, refrigerators, whisky, fountain pens, and mechanical pencils, fresh blue fin and big-eye tuna, shrimp, and salted salmon eggs.

New Zealand: Practically all imports require import licenses. The principal items from the United States subject to possible discriminatory licensing treatment are: motor vehicles and parts, tractors, engines and parts, sewing machines. Artificial jewels, tire cord fabrics, most textile piece goods, timber, plywood, plastic materials, and synthetic rubber.

Nicaragua: All goods are subject to prior deposits. The size of the prior deposit and the length of time between the making of a prior deposit, and the time of issuing of import license are dependent on the essentiality of the imports.

Norway: Consumer goods. Passenger automobiles.

Pakistan: Luxury goods. Only certain standard makes of automobiles may be imported into Pakistan and all automobiles valued at over $1,155 are prohibited from importation.

Peru: Automobiles. 4,500 vehicles for 1959.

Turkey: All goods are subject to global import quotas. Many goods are prohibited from importation. These are primarily consumer goods and semiluxury products, such as refrigerators; and luxury products such as larger automobiles. Also in the prohibited class are products under state monopoly such as alcoholic and tobacco products.

Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland: Over 100 tariff items. Among those for which dollar quotas have been allocated are wheat, piece goods for clothing manufactures, commercial and passenger motor vehicles, stoves, washing machines and refrigerators. Among the goods which are effectively prohibited from importation are many food items such as cheese, jams and macaroni; products of secondary industries such as bags and sacks, hats and clothing and many other consumer and semiindustrial items, among them outer garments, cotton piece goods, hosiery, clothing, electrical machinery and appliances, not industrial, office machines, radios and gramaphones and the like, and bottled and canned soup.

Sweden: Some agricultural, fishery, and a very small number of industrial products.

Union of South Africa: Most imports are subject to license from all countries. Some consumer goods, such as periodical magazines of the pulp variety, jukeboxes and pin tables are effectively not permitted importation. Also cars, exceeding $2,240 in cost are not allowed importation. In effect this latter imposition most adversely affects U.S. exports of automobiles.

United Kingdom: Scientific instruments, certain photographic apparatus and equipment, certain fresh and canned fruit, certain paper and board. Fresh fish, meats, textiles. A number of machinery items including air and gas compressors, and exhausters, dredging equipment, gas and chemical plants, lifting, hauling and transportation equipment, machinery pumps, refrigerators and refrigerating machinery, welding machinery. Valves and tubes, X-ray apparatus. In addition, cotton, tobacco, aircraft, petroleum products and also tobacco and seasonal restrictions on fresh grapefruit.

Uruguay: All goods are subject to import restrictions depending upon the essentiality of the goods in question. The restrictions are more or less levelly applied.

ANNEX I

IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON U.S. EXPORTS

AUSTRALIA

Australia revised substantially its import licensing regulations on August 1, principally by raising the level of overall imports and by easing the discrimination against dollar goods.

The new regulations authorized an increase in overall annual imports from $1,792 million to $1,904 million, or $112 million, and eased or removed dollar discrimination on about 90 percent of total imports. The principal products remaining subject to a modified form of discrimination are complete motor vehicles and lumber, which constitute a large proportion of the 10 percent of imports still subject to discriminatory licensing. (U.S. exports of motor vehicles and lumber to Australia in 1958 were valued at $12.4 million, and $5.5 million, respectively.)[5]

Almost all other imports into Australia from the United States will be favorably treated one way or another under the amended licensing categories which, provide for new exemptions from licensing, increased quotas, and participation by new importers. Many products are still subject to import licensing, but such licenses once granted may now be used to import the items authorized from any source of supply including the United States. (Prepared by: British Commonwealth Division, Office of Economic Affairs, Bureau of Foreign Commerce, Department of Commerce, August 20, 1959.)

AUSTRIA

Description of import restrictions

The Austrian foreign trade law provides that all goods enumerated in several appended lists must be exported or imported under license. By means of these lists imports are divided into two major categories, for licensing purposes: liberalized goods and controlled goods. Liberalized goods may be imported pursuant to a so-called general license consisting of a general, published authorization under which individual permits need not be obtained, while controlled goods require an individually validated import license for each shipment. Dependent upon the nature of the goods, application for license must be submitted to the Ministry of Trade and Reconstruction or its field office, to the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, or the Ministry of the Interior for approval. The decision of the competent Ministry may be made dependent upon the opinion of an interested trade association, to which the application will be referred for comment.

In allocating licenses to importers account is taken of price, quality, the market situation, the availability of comparable products, and the capacity and status of the importers concerned. Sometimes a comprehensive quota may be granted to an individual firm by means of a general license for the importation of a particular commodity during a limited period of time. On other occasions imports may be subject to certain so-called global quotas which apply either to imports from all sources or to imports from GATT countries and members of the OEEC. For such imports, licenses generally are granted on a pro rata basis. And in other cases reference may be made to the shares of imports of importers in a previous period, but other factors may also be taken into account.

In cases where import licenses are granted there appears to be no unreasonable amount of redtape or bureaucratic delay. The unknown and arbitrary feature of Austria's licensing procedures is the criteria employed in determining what licenses will be granted and to whom.

Exchange regulations which complement the foreign trade law do not restrict payments for imports from countries with which payments are arranged in freely convertible currencies, and from Greece and Turkey. Imports from these countries, among which is the United States, may be paid for in Austrian schillings or in any other freely convertible currency.

Special systems of control and regulation which aim mainly at stabilizing internal prices are in effect for some imports of agricultural products. There are, for example, special marketing laws for cow's milk and certain dairy products, bread and coarse grains, livestock and meat products, and a State price-fixing arrangement for sugar. Generally, price stabilization schemes involve deficiency payments or surcharges on imports depending on whether the price of the imported product is above or below a predetermined price or price margin. Hence, approval for importing commodities within the purview of autonomous agricultural marketing boards must first be received before the import license application may be submitted to the appropriate Ministry for final decision.

Austria's only state trading agency is its Tobacco Monopoly, which is that country's sole importer of tobacco and tobacco products. It tends to favor Near East sources but during postwar years has been obliged to purchase substantial quantities of American tobacco for blending in order to meet consumer preferences sufficiently to maintain sales volume.

Bilateral trade agreements with seven Soviet bloc countries, Chile, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Israel, Morocco, Pakistan, Spain, Uruguay, and Yugoslavia are other significant means by which Austria restricts imports. Some of these agreements establish import quotas for goods still subject to individually validated import licenses. Some provide that import licenses will be granted without restriction. And others contain only indicative lists of commodities without fixed quotas.

U.S. commodities against which restrictions are effective

In September 1958, the Austrian cabinet decided to increase liberalization of Austria's

[5] It will be noted that there have been substantial imports of these two items from the United States. Whether or not the removal of discriminatory licensing on motor vehicles and lumber would result in increased imports of these products from the United States would depend largely on the competitive position of such products in the Australian market. There would possibly be some increase in the imports from the United States of lower-priced motor vehicles, particularly those made by Studebaker and American Motors, the so-called independents who presently do not have manufacturing or assembly facilities in Australia. The principal suppliers of lumber to Australia at present are Canada and the United States. However, Canada receives certain duty preferences in Australia on motor vehicles and lumber which might tend to benefit Canada more than the United States if dollar licensing discriminations were removed.

imports from the United States and Canada from 40 to 44 percent (based on 1953 trade with the United States and Canada in private account). This measure, the Austrians declared, would substantially eliminate discrimination in the industrial sector between the licensing treatment accorded Austrian imports from the OEEC area and that accorded imports from the United States and Canada—except for certain textile items which would continue to require licenses for dollar imports. The new list of liberalized commodities, originally promised for November 15, 1958, remains unpublished and there are as yet no positive indications when it will be issued. The Austrian authorities have announced that, in the interim (presumably dating from September 1958) dollar imports of items which will appear on the promised list are to be licensed freely—resulting in de facto liberalization for these items.

Restrictions remain in effect on a long list of U.S. commodities. Included are most agricultural products, some textiles, and relatively few manufactured finished goods, such as television sets, files, button blanks, metal and plastic skis, oil burners, and cosmetics.

Restrictions that are discriminatory against U.S. goods

Discriminatory restrictions against U.S. goods are clearly evident in the agricultural and textile sectors and for some commodities in the industrial sector. While Austria has liberalized about 79 percent of agricultural imports from the OEEC area (1952 base), only 4.5 percent of imports of similar commodities have been liberalized from the United States and Canada (1953 base). Playing a major role in preserving this discrimination is Austria's reliance on bilateral trade agreements, which favor imports of agricultural products from East European and bloc countries. Austrian officials feel that these agreements are needed to protect Austria's export markets. Since the bloc has been either unable or unwilling to supply Austria with acceptable imports other than certain agricultural products, especially grains, to balance its trade deficits, the Austrians are fearful that if Austria's quotas for these products are filled by American commodities, the deficits with the East would remain unresolved. In the textile sector, Austrian officials say that continued Austrian discrimination against certain textile imports reflects world conditions in the textile industry and that restrictions against dollar imports are essential to protect the domestic textile industry which simply cannot compete against the American industry and its lower prices. Some of the textiles on which discriminatory restrictions are expected to remain are most woven piece goods, upholstery fabrics, cotton yarn and gauze, lace bed and furniture covers, shawls, scarves, handkerchiefs, and some carpets. And in the industrial sector, continued discriminatory restrictions are expected inter alia on metal and plastic skis, television sets, and plastic buttons and button blanks.

BELGIUM-LUXEMBOURG

Description of import restrictions

The licensing system of the Belgium-Luxembourg Economic Union (BLEU) has its legal basis in a number of laws passed in these countries which empower the two Governments to control under a common system their import, export, and transit trade. As a result of a simplification of the BLEU licensing procedures effected in October 1957, and subsequently amended, at present only 160 tariff positions, out of several thousand positions and subpositions, are wholly or partly subject to import licensing including the items under the so-called "Benelux global quotas." Most commodities imported into BLEU, therefore, are subject only to the ordinary customs documentation, which includes an avis d'importation (notice of importation) for the purpose of informing the Belgo-Luxembourg Exchange Institute of completed transactions. BLEU controls over imports from both dollar and nondollar sources are identical. In a few cases where licenses are required, they are almost always granted, except for agricultural commodities.

U.S. commodities against which restrictions are effective

Global Benelux quotas exist on a small number of items. These quotas are subdivided into two parts, one of which applies to imports from common market countries and the other to imports from third countries, including the United States. The commodities concerned are: Completely polished rice for human consumption, castor oil other than crude, certain fatty acids, methyl chloride, penicillin, wooden packing cases, fish nets, and new and used automobiles.

Although the United States has particular interest in polished rice, methyl chloride, penicillin, and automobiles, the Benelux countries have stated that the size of the quotas satisfies normal import requirements. There have been no complaints by U.S. exporters about the size of these quotas.

In addition to the global quotas, the BLEU maintains import restrictions on some agricultural products for which BLEU obtained a waiver from GATT in 1955. These products include: Fruits and vegetables, subject to seasonal controls, meats and meat products, dairy products and eggs, potatoes and seed grain.

The above restrictions are applied equally to imports from the United States and third countries.

Restrictions that are discriminatory against U.S. goods

There has, however, been some Belgian interference with the importation of U.S. coal in connection with the current coal crisis in Belgium. At the behest of the Belgian Government, Belgian importers of U.S. coal have privately negotiated with U.S. shippers to reduce the size of coal contracts and to stretch out deliveries of coal beyond the time called for in coal contracts.

BRAZIL

Nontariff restrictions against imports from the United States

Because Brazil currently is faced with a shortage of foreign exchange, a strictly enforced system of exchange controls has been established. The nontariff restrictions against imports are aimed in general at protecting Brazil's balance of payments position and are usually effected through exchange controls.

The amount of foreign exchange to be offered for imports is established in a semiannual foreign exchange budget. The exchange control system of Brazil permits the importation of almost any goods desired, on the basis of open competitive bidding at weekly public auctions for exchange commitment certificates which entitle the holder to apply for foreign exchange cover for imports. Exchange commitment certificates having been obtained, the necessary import license or certificate is automatically issued. The total amount of exchange offered at auction each week is limited. There are two categories of commodities for exchange auction purposes—the general and the special. The largest portion of exchange available for import is allocated to the auction for general category goods, which include those items considered essential to the economy of Brazil. A relatively small amount of exchange is offered for imports of special category goods, which include all items not specifically included in the general category list, and in general include items produced in Brazil in sufficient quantities for domestic consumption and all luxury or nonessential goods.

Exchange is offered at separate auctions for convertible currencies and for various bilateral agreement currencies. Because of the greater demand for convertible currencies and as a result of competitive bidding, the cost of such currencies usually is higher than the cost of other currencies in the same category. The Brazilian authorities set minimum auction rates for all the various nonconvertible currencies, however, to reduce the differences in cost between them and convertible currencies. Exchange commitment certificates for bilateral currencies are auctioned in accordance with the availabilities of such currencies, and import licenses are generally limited to specific commodities and to the individual quotas specified in Brazil's trade agreement with the respective country.

Certain essential imports such as petroleum, wheat, books, newsprint, and government imports, are affected through preferential exchange rates, within specific exchange quotas in the semiannual exchange budget. The preferential exchange rate, however, is the same for all currencies.

Through a bilateral agreement with Argentina, foreign exchange for imports of fresh fruit is negotiated on the free market. Because the free market rate is much lower than the average exchange rate for the special exchange category, in which fruit is classified, this may be considered a discriminatory practice.

The importation of wheat is restricted to purchases by the Brazilian Government, and for the most part is in accordance with a bilateral agreement with Argentina.

Although private barter arrangements are generally not allowed under existing regulations, the Government of Brazil has been entering into barter arrangements, usually with countries outside of the convertible currency area, such as the exchange of coffee or cacao for Russian oil, Polish ships, East German fertilizers, and the like.

Although such discriminatory practices as the fruit and wheat agreements and the barter arrangements give competitors, especially in nonconvertible currency countries, certain advantages as against U.S. suppliers, the total amount of convertible currencies offered for imports is always used. It is doubtful to what degree a reduction of such practices would increase U.S. exports to Brazil, because of the Brazilian balance of payments deficit, unless Brazil reduced exchange controls and allowed commercial imports on the free market.

BURMA

Burma has recently taken steps to eliminate one important feature of her restrictive licensing policy toward dollar imports. Heretofore, almost all Burmese open general licenses have been restricted in validity to imports from nondollar resources. In addition, imports of capital goods not covered by open general licenses have been rigidly screened by various foreign exchange control boards which restricted capital goods imports (mainly imported for us by Government agencies) to nondollar sources. As a consequence, purchases from the dollar area were limited largely to imports of specialized machinery or equipment needed for development purposes and not procurable elsewhere or to U.S. agricultural products imported under Public Law 480 agreements.

Since early 1959, the Burmese Government has indicated that numerous items covered by open general licenses may now be imported also from the dollar area. This move has increased the possibility of selling U.S. goods in the Burmese market except to the limited extent in which some commodities eligible for this liberalized treatment may already be subject to special treatment under Burma's reparations agreement with Japan or under clearing agreements which Burma has with various Sino-Soviet bloc countries. There is also a strong possibility that the foreign exchange control authorities will now take a more liberal attitude toward the purchase from dollar countries of capital goods and other items not covered under general licenses.

CANADA

Summary of present import restrictions imposed by Canada—material for speech by Assistant Secretary Kearns Canada eliminated foreign exchange licensing in 1951 and has only a few items subject to quantitative controls. There is no discrimination against the United States.

There are some quotas arising out of the agricultural price support system. (Cf. Annex 1.)

The permanent statutory embargo on the import of oleomargarine, which arises from agricultural protectionism in some provinces, handicaps imports vis-a-vis production in other provinces, but it is of long standing and is not too much removed in purpose from our own import control on butterfat.

The customs tariff prohibits the importation of used or second-hand automobiles and used motor vehicles of all kinds manufactured prior to the year in which importation is sought. Second-hand aircraft imports, regardless of the year of manufacture, are also embargoed.

In view of the size of the Canadian market vis-a-vis the United States, these would not seem to be prohibitions the Assistant Secretary would want to make a case on. Canada would be too vulnerable.

The control over the import of natural gas would also seem unsuitable for publicity purposes because of the relation of the item to the continental supply picture. The import control on fissionable products may ultimately be important in the protective sense but it is not now.

Imports of alcoholic beverages are controlled by license of the provinces which have a monopoly of sale. Most provinces are willing to give hotels and clubs permits to import but the provincial liquor board stores will carry only token quantities because of the alleged small demand. There is only a small import but it is difficult to state the reasons precisely. Some of our States have similar monopoly practices in whiskey sales. There is apparently some discrimination in provincial taxation of imported beer. Wine imports from the United States are discriminated against by the tariff preference to Commonwealth suppliers. (Prepared by British Commonwealth Division, Bureau of Foreign Commerce, August 20, 1959.)

Annex 1.—Canadian import restrictions on price supported agricultural products

At the present time there is a virtual embargo on commercial imports of butter, butterfat, cheddar cheese, and dried skim milk with imports in small quantities for personal use, permitted under general license. An import quota of 1 million pounds per quarter has been established for turkeys but this total of 4 million pounds a year is considably below the 13 million pounds imported from the United States in 1956, the last complete year during which imports were unrestricted. The restrictions affect only the United States as the United States has been Canada's sole foreign supplier of turkeys.

Wheat, wheat flour, and wheat starch; oats, including ground, crimped, crushed, rolled, and meal; and barley, including ground, crimped, meal, and flour are subject to import licensing by the Canadian Wheat Board, which is the Government marketing agency for these grains produced in the prairie Provinces. Imports are small but in view of the competitive strength of Canadian production cannot be said to be directly reduced by the restriction.

CEYLON

Ceylon's import control policies have been directed toward the regulation of the country's imports in the light of its balance-of-payments position, the protection of domestic industries, and the diversion of the country's trade into the hands of Ceylonese nationals.

While most goods may be imported into Ceylon either under open general license or general import license from most countries of the world, a substantial number of items require an individual import license if imported from the dollar area. Ceylonese traders are issued licenses freely for all goods under license from the dollar area but non-Ceylonese firms are issued limited licenses based on their past trade. In the case of new products, the latter firms must rely upon ad hoc import licenses, which are often difficult to obtain.

Most of the goods under individual import license from the dollar area are considered consumer goods, such as radios, refrigerators, automobiles, photographic instruments, and textiles and manufactures.

CHILE

The only nontariff restriction imposed by Chile is a requirement that importers must place a prior import deposit ranging from 5 to 5,000 percent of the value of the importation, depending on the essentiality of the merchandise. The import deposit is made prior to the importation of the goods and is retained by the Central Bank for a period of 30 or 90 days, again depending on the essentiality of the goods. In general, the import deposits are highest on consumer and luxury goods, and those goods that are produced by Chilean industry in sufficient quantities. The import deposit system, in general, is applied without discrimination, the only exception being that in regard to imports emanating from countries with which Chile has compensation agreements the import deposit may be waived.[6]

Apart from the import deposit requirement, the only other restrictions on imports into Chile are the import duties, sanitary and other public health requirements, etc.

CUBA

Cuba does not employ any direct discriminatory trade restrictions against U.S. goods. In February of this year, a selected list of approximately 187 commodities were placed under import control. Importers require import licenses from the Monetary Stabilization Fund for those commodities shown on the list, and such imports must be financed by letter of credit only within 30 days after the issuance of the license. Those regulations have not yet been applied in a restrictive manner, other than the requirement of financing by letter of credit. The list covers a wide range of commodities, including foodstuffs, beverages, certain office equipment, toilet articles, electrical appliances, photographic equipment, certain automotive chassis, chinaware and luxury goods.

The new tax reform law provides for certain internal taxes which are of a discriminatory nature as regards U.S. goods. One is the automobile annual registration tax which ranges from $29 to $5,000 for the first year of registration, the amount of the tax depending on the value of the auto. The minimum tax of $29 applies to autos having a value of up to $1,500; this would exclude all U.S.-origin autos, but would apply to automobiles from practically all other automobile manufacturing countries. Cars having a value of $1,501 to $2,300 are subject to a tax of $75; from $2,651 to $3,000, a tax of $500 is payable; and over $3,000, the first year registration tax will amount to $5,000. This legislation will undoubtedly have a restrictive effect on American car imports in favor of English, German, and French autos.

Other restrictive taxes include the new internal consumption taxes provided for in the new law on manufactured goods not made in Cuba for example, there is a 15 percent tax on photographic film, 20 percent tax on such items as cameras, projectors, and automobiles having a value between $2,300 and $3,000, and a 30 percent tax on autos with a value of over $3,000. Items not classified in the consumption tax schedule are subject to a 10 percent tax which would cover a wide range of American goods not manufactured in Cuba.

The import licensing requirements, as mentioned previously, do not appear to have had any restrictive effect on imports of U.S. goods up to the present time. Because of the proximity of Cuba and frequent sailings, it would also appear that the letter of credit requirement on imports of the commodities on the controlled list, has not had a significant restrictive effect on imports since bank credit has reportedly been available.

DENMARK

Denmark maintains import controls on a limited number of agricultural and industrial products. Licenses are granted for non-liberalized goods either on a regional quota basis or by individual license on a case-by-case basis.

On April 1, 1959, Denmark increased its dollar liberalization from 70 to 88 percent (on the basis of 1953 imports), eliminating all discrimination against dollar goods in the liberalized sector of Danish import trade.

In general, Danish import regulations have more restrictive effect on consumer goods than on commodities used by industry. Among the goods against which restrictive measures are effective are packaged rice and tobacco manufactures. Rice, except rice in retail packages, may be imported freely. Denmark has required an import license for rice in retail packages since 1932, effective for all countries. Cigarettes are still among the products subject to import license from all sources. Tobacco products, including cigarettes, may not be imported into Denmark for internal consumption. Imports of tobacco products for internal consumption are not expected to be liberalized in the near future.

Effective March 1, 1959, the same liberalized list was applied to the OEEC and the dollar areas. Technically, there is no discrimination in import licensing between the two areas. However, the regionalized quotas do not apply to the dollar area, and the purchase of those commodities from the dollar area requires an individual import license, which is granted provided price and quality conditions make the import desirable.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

The Dominican Republic does not employ any discriminatory import restrictions on U.S. products. Quantitative restrictions were imposed on milk (in all forms) in September 1958 but they were relaxed in June 1959 by the granting of import quotas to importers on a historical basis. Milk imports from the United States have not been significant.

Import licenses are required for few commodities, including rice, wheat and wheat products, sugar products, edible oils (except olive), lard and lard products. Rice imports are negligible; wheat and wheat flour imports are principally from the United States (about 65 percent of total).

An internal consumption tax was established on 55 different commodity classifications, including many manufactured goods which are generally imported from the United States. The internal consumption tax ranges from 5 to 15 percent ad valorem on most commodities while the remaining are taxed on a specific basis. The tax is applicable to imported commodities only. Since some of the items covered by the list are not manufactured domestically, the tax is discriminatory against imports. The internal consumption tax is an import restrictive tax.

A customs surtax of 12 percent is imposed on all imports and exports. As it applies to commodities not manufactured in the Dominican Republic, the surtax is restrictive in nature.

There are no exchange restrictions.

FINLAND

Under the import control procedures which the Finnish Government maintains for balance-of-payments reasons goods subject to import licensing requirements may be divided into two main categories (1) imports which are licensed automatically or without quantitative restrictions (2) goods which are licensed under a global quota system. In addition certain commodities such as chemical raw materials for the pharmaceutical and forest products industries are licensed according to existing need.

Import licenses are issued automatically for certain specified goods which may be imported from (1) countries with which Finland still has bilateral trade agreements (2) from the dollar area (3) from those sterling area countries which remain outside the free list system. Certain goods, which for technical reasons have been designated for automatic licensing, are licensed automatically when they are imported from and originate in free list countries and sterling area countries outside the free list system. Under global quota licensing only certain quotas are open for dollar area participation.

On April 10, 1959, further relaxation of restrictions on imports from the dollar area were undertaken. Additional global quotas were opened to dollar imports and licensing of dollar imports without quantitative restriction was administratively extended to a broad range of commodities.

In the latest relaxation there have been important gains in items in which the United States is interested, e.g., dried fruits, auto parts, raw materials, additives, and production materials for the food industry; raw and other materials for the chemical industry.

The Finnish import restriction effectively limits imports of many U.S. consumer goods, especially such durables as refrigerators, washing machines, handtools, and fabrics, yarns, and other textile materials.

The disparity between treatment accorded United States and Western European imports has been reduced rapidly over the last few years.

FRANCE

At the present time, France's principal import regulatory instrument is the quota restriction, implemented through a licensing system. All nonliberalized goods require an import license, which, if granted, automatically assures the importer of access to the necessary foreign exchange.

Internal taxes affecting U.S. imports may be considered significant deterrents to importation in only a limited number of instances. For example, an automobile tax applies to cars; it is particularly high on cars of over 16 horsepower, and thus principally affects U.S. automobiles.

The French import licensing system has restricted the French market for imports of U.S. machinery, industrial equipment, and manufactured consumer goods of all kinds.

There are two main areas of discrimination against U.S. exports currently in effect. One is the significant disparity between the OEEC and dollar liberalization lists. The other is discrimination in the administration of the licensing system for nonliberalized products. Although a percentage comparison may not be completely accurate because of different base years involved some idea of the difference in liberalization existing is given by the fact that to date France has freed approximately 93 percent of OEEC imports from quantitative restrictions, but only about 60 percent of dollar goods. Products liberalized for import from OEEC countries but as yet still under license from the United States include, for example, various types of manmade fibers; industrial and laboratory electric furnaces and ovens; certain types of calculating machines; accounting machines; various chemicals; bearings of all kinds; much electrical and electronic equipment; and various types of machine tools.

Each request for an import license for nonliberalized goods is considered on a case-by-case basis and the decision as to whether to grant a particular license is made by French authorities after considering the essentiality of the goods to the French economy, availability in the local market and other factors. Except for a few items (automobiles, whisky, e.g.) the size of quotas is not disclosed by the French Government. Dollar automobiles and whisky are treated less favorably than are similar items from nondollar areas. The licensing authorities in the past, however, have tended to grant licenses more liberally for goods from France's Common Market partners and other OEEC countries than from the United States. This has affected U.S. machinery and equipment and many consumer durable goods, such as radios, television sets, etc.

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Description of import restrictions

German import restrictions, other than those maintained for sanitary reasons, operate through a system of import licensing which differentiates among imports from three broad areas, to each of which a list of license-free commodities is applied. List A countries are those of the OEEC area; list B countires are the so-called "other soft currency area"; and list C countries are those effecting payments in dollars—the so-called dollar area countries.

A larger number of commodities have consistently appeared in list A than in lists B and C. This difference, representing a more liberal licensing treatment toward imports from OEEC countries than from all other countries including the dollar area, has been termed the discriminatory gap. At the 14th session of the GATT in June 1959, Germany undertook a program to liberalize imports from all areas in several steps, beginning in July 1959 and continuing on January 1, 1960, December 31, 1960, and July 1, 1961, with a reexamination of the status of the program in July 1962. At the same time Germany identified a list of items, primarily textiles, which could not presently be scheduled for liberalization but which would be the subject of continuing consultations looking toward specific dates for liberalization. Germany was also authorized by the GATT to maintain import controls for 3 years on various agricultural items (marketing law items) subject to domestic agricultural support programs, and was permitted to restrict imports of neat leather, imitation pearls and jute fabrics for 5 years (the so-called hard-core waiver) under progressively expanding quotas. The same GATT session authorized de facto liberalization (unlimited global import tenders) for certain agricultural items.

U.S. commodities against which restrictions are effective

The principal U.S. commodities against which German import restrictions are effective are included in the list of marketing law items, which are subject to state trading and domestic agricultural support programs. These include fresh and frozen meats, lard, dairy products, wheat, rye, barley, oats, corn, grain meals, vegetable fats and oils, and fish oils. Outside the marketing laws, but subject to continuing restrictions, are vegetable preparations and fruits in small containers, apple juice and pear juice, fresh apples and pears, honey, and some dairy products.

The industrial sector, except for about 50 low-cost Asian items—textiles and ceramics—is substantially covered by specific schedules for future liberalization.

Restrictions that are discriminatory against U.S. goods

The principal discrimination against U.S. goods is found in neat (bovine) leather which has been made the subject of a 5-year hard core GATT waiver under progressively expanding quotas. This waiver was obtained because of fear of the effects of competition from U.S. neat leather.

A recently-imported temporary duty on coal imports above a certain duty-free import quota strongly affects German imports of U.S. coal. This measure was taken in the context of rapidly increasing stockpiles of German domestically mined coal which posed serious economic and political problems.

GHANA

Summary

Ghana maintains a system of trade controls which in theory discriminates against U.S. imports in the sense that licenses are required for most dollar imports while nondollar imports are freely permitted under open general license. However, in practice licenses are issued as a matter of routine upon application. Some dollar imports are decontrolled entirely.

Description of control system

Ghana's trade control legislation is modeled after the United Kingdom's trade control system with specific import licenses being required for dollar purchases. The intent of the screening in the past (prior to independence) was to restrict dollar purchases to essential goods not available in soft currency countries. Since independence, the system has been maintained because the Government, as an economy dependent on cocoa, wished to retain a control system on foreign trade "in the event an emergency arose."

However, in practice the control system of Ghana has been so liberally administered that there has been no difficulty in importing U.S. products into Ghana. There have been no known instances where import licenses for dollar goods have been refused within the past 18 months. As a matter of fact, Ghanian officials have pointed out that with additional sales efforts purchases of dollar goods, including luxury items, could be significantly increased.

Import restrictions of Ghana

In July 1959 Ghana announced decontrols on several significant categories of goods, by permitting the importation under open general license of motor vehicles and spare parts, cash registers and parts, tractors and parts, earth moving machinery and parts, newsprint, salmon and salmon trout, in addition to wheat flour which was previously decontrolled.

GREECE

Although more than three-quarters of imports into Greece are free from licensing and exchange controls, Greece restricts imports of both freed and licensed items by requiring advance deposits, by denying in-bond privileges to a number of items, and by application of heavy-consumption taxes.

Three categories of goods remain subject to licensing controls. The first includes textiles, motor vehicles and certain luxury products (fur, gold and silver articles, watches and perfumery products).

The second covers over 50 classes of mechanical equipment considered adequately manufactured in Greece (including a wide variety of agricultural machinery and implements; hoisting equipment; power pumps, electric motors, diesel motors, gasoline engines and generators, all up to 20 horsepower; certain textile machinery and equipment; electric fans and a variety of other goods). For all practicable purposes, products included in this category are prohibited since licenses are seldom issued.

The third category consists of nine commodities which are subject to global quotas which are not applicable to countries with which Greece has clearing agreements. Under quota controls are tires and tubes, electrical equipment, steel sheets, frozen meat, lumber, coal, woodpulp, and newsprint.

For virtually all items imported by sight draft, a deposit of either 70 or 140 percent of the cost, insurance, and freight invoice value is required and all such items are denied in-bond privileges, precluding partial delivery to importers. For textiles the advance deposit was recently increased to 280 percent with a simultaneous increase in duty.

Heavy consumption taxes, in theory applicable to both imports and domestic goods but in reality levied on imports alone in absence of domestic production, also have a restrictive effect. Tires and tubes are taxed at 25 percent, air-conditioners 45 percent, washing machines 20 percent, cheese 35 percent, cameras 40 percent, elevators 45 percent, and photographic paper and unexposed film 25 percent.

The depressive effect of Greek restrictions on imports is difficult to measure except that goods considered adequately manufactured in Greece and subject to licensing are prohibited for all practical purposes. Quota controls do not appear to have affected U.S. trade in tires and tubes and no complaints have been received about the licensing of vehicles.

While there is no discrimination specifically directed at U.S. goods, importers of U.S. goods are at a disadvantage since duties and taxes are levied on cost, insurance, and freight value making transportation costs a heavier factor in landed cost than is the case for competing European goods. Similarly, importers of goods requiring advance deposits have higher financing costs when importing from the United States because of the longer time interval between ordering and arrival of goods.

Net effect of all restrictions is incalculable since total imports into Greece have increased every year since 1952 with the result that in 1958 imports of $565 million were 63 percent above 1952. Imports from the United States have fluctuated widely, depending on the level of aid and Public Law 480 shipments.

HAITI

Import licenses are required only for the importation of firearms, ammunition, explosives, tobacco, matches, and wheat.

Foreign and domestic sales and purchases of tobacco and matches are controlled by the Haitian Regie du Tabac et des Allumettes, the Government tobacco and match monopoly.

Haiti is signatory to the International Wheat Agreement and a license is necessary for wheat grain or wheat flour imported under the agreement. There are no restrictive regulations relative to the importation of wheat or wheat flour outside the agreement. There is also an internal tax imposed upon wheat flour, which combined with the import duty on wheat flour makes the importation of this item into Haiti prohibitive, not only for U.S. flour but for flour from other sources as well.

None of these restrictions are technically discriminatory against the United States as compared with other countries nor are they imposed more severely upon U.S. goods than upon imports from third countries.

INDIA

While India continues to maintain a tight overall restriction of imports which limits foreign purchases largely to capital goods or other commodities satisfying a strict criteria of essentiality, it has reduced considerably the disparity which formerly favored "soft currency" imports over dollars goods. Until recent years, imports of dollar goods were limited essentially to specialized types of goods and equipment not procurable from other sources because of quotas which specified the sterling area as the only permissible source of imports of other types of merchandise. This requirement was enforced because of India's obligations under her sterling bloc participation and because of India's relatively favorable sterling position.

Now, however, the range of potential dollar imports has been widened considerably by an enlargement of the number of individual commodities which can be imported from either general (dollar area) or sterling sources and by the ruling that even where import quotas are shown only for sterling areas, a percentage of the quota may be used for purchase from the dollar area. For example, India now permits importers to use at least 50 percent of the value of "soft currency" licenses for imports from the dollar area and also provides that importers desiring to utilize a higher proportion of licenses for dollar imports may be permitted to do so under certain circumstances. Licenses with a face value of less than 5,000 rupees (1 rupee equals US$0.21) can be utilized to the full extent for imports from the dollar area.

With the adoption of this more liberalized treatment of dollar area imports, there is only one other remaining major nontariff procedure which in effect discriminates against U.S. exports. This is the limitation of imports of (completely C.K.D.) automobile, bus, and truck units to manufacturers in India (both foreign and domestically owned) which have approved plans for progressive manufacture of those vehicles in India. No American companies were willing to agree to a phased program leading to full-scale manufacture of such vehicles in India.

It might be noted, also, that with a view to conserving foreign exchange expenditures on capital goods imports, the Indian Government has been requiring for the past 2 years that importers arrange to purchase many categories of capital goods through deferred credit arrangements. Since April 1959, the Government has imposed this procedure even more strictly and now permits imports of many types of capital goods only if covered by long-term credits or by equity investments. This requirement is imposed with no intention of discrimination as between currency areas but to the extent that American suppliers find it more difficult to furnish long-term credit or equity investment than some principal competitors, it could indirectly limit the scope for U.S. exports to India.

INDONESIA

Indonesian regulations do not provide for quotas or discrimination as to country of origin of goods. However, there is some administrative screening of import applications with a view to fulfilling tentative bilateral trade agreement commitments and restricting the overall amount of foreign currencies allocated for imports.

Imports must be paid for by coverage with export certificates, the cost of which has been officially maintained at 332 percent of the rupiah's nominal value (i.e., 37.8 rupiah per U.S. dollar). Goods for importation are classified into six priority groupings ranging from highly essential to luxury. For each group, an additional import surcharge, expressed as a percentage of the c. & f. value of the goods (from 0 to 175 percent), is fixed. The classifications are subject to continual review and there are frequent transfers of individual goods from one group to another. Large advance deposits must be paid by importers at the time import applications are submitted.

Some imports are restricted to Government-controlled companies. For example, rice, textiles, cement, tinplate, raw cotton, cotton and rayon yarns, paper, flour, and fertilizers can only be imported by designated companies which are controlled by the Government.

ITALY

Description of import restrictions

These vary according to currency area. For the OEEC area and since, June 9, 1959, for the dollar area, so-called "negative" lists name the items that are subject to quantitative restrictions and individual import license. All items not on those lists are free of quantitative restrictions and in the case of the OEEC countries require no license. In that of the dollar area, they still require a license as a matter of form. Goods on the aforementioned negative lists are licensed on an ad hoc basis within quota limitations. The negative dollar-area list of goods subject to individual license is very long, including about 45 percent of the Italian tariff positions. The OEEC negative list amounts to a bit more than 1 percent of the same. There is a free list of imports from certain non-dollar and non-OEEC countries with which payments are settled in transferable lire through clearing accounts in accordance with multilateral payments agreements. Imports from other countries are effected, as a rule, on the basis of global compensation.

The 45 percent of Italian tariff positions (3,006 items or sub items of 6,785) still subject to quantitative restrictions, that is, to license on an ad hoc basis include almost all agricultural products and foodstuffs, including beverages, and tobacco; explosives; unsensitized film; paper and paper products; textiles; products of copper, aluminum, magnesium, lead and zinc; certain machines and very many parts of machines, and other categories of goods of varying export possibility and interest with respect to Italy.

Many of the dollar-area liberalized items have little or no trade significance for the United States. Many of the items not liberalized as of June 9, 1959, the effective date of the latest and very considerable extension of Italy's dollar-area liberalization, are, however, freely licensed and their inclusion on the negative list (of items still de jure subject to quantitative restrictions) is no real barrier to the U.S. export trade. Again, many of the items not liberalized have little or no importance in real trade, actual or potential, so far as the United States is concerned.

Among the more important U.S. export commodities against which Italian restrictions are effective and are real barriers to our export trade we may mention, in addition to the many parts of machines for which the license requirement is perhaps more of a nuisance than a barrier, the following as examples: Certain plastic materials (condensation, polymerization, and copolymerization products), especially regenerated cellulose, cellulose acetate plastics, and vulcanized fiber; valcanized rubber conveyer and drive belts, fiberglass products, tinplate (which is not even licensed in Italy from the United States except on a temporary basis to be made into cans for good export); packaging machines; electric dishwashers; household refrigerators; power excavators; certain printing machines; certain looms and other textile machinery; single-head industrial sewing machines; adding machines; certain calculators; cash registers (except keyboard models with over five totalisators, etc.); electric rotary motors and converters; vacuum cleaners; radio and TV receivers; fluorescent lamps; electric tubes; carbons and graphites for use in electricity (about which complaints of refusal to license have been received; motors; picture cameras and sound reproduction equipment (except 8 mm.); motion picture projectors; sound recording apparatus (except with discs and plastic belts), playbacks, and combined recording and playback sets; perforated magnetic film and sound pickups.

In addition to the above items, on most of which the United States has obtained direct tariff concessions from Italy under the GATT, certain agricultural items of interest, some of them likewise the object of direct Italian GATT concessions to the United States, may be mentioned in addition to wheat (which is imported by the Italian Government Federconsorzio (Farmers Cooperative Confederation)—e.g., meat and fish preparations; fats and oils; natural honey; food preparations containing cereals, flours and meals (including infant foods) or containing vegetables; beverages, including all alcoholic beverages; pharmaceutical products.

Restrictions that are discriminatory against U.S. goods

Discrimination against United States and other dollar goods is obvious and its measure indicated by the fact that the dollar negative list comprises about 45 percent of the Italian separate tariff (statistical) classifications or 3,006 of the 6,785 positions, while the OEEC negative list includes only slightly over 1 percent of the same or 71 items or subitems of the 5,237 old tariff positions in which that OEEC list is stated. We have mentioned under the preceding heading, some of the important U.S. products affected under the list by this discrimination. Automobiles may be added to this list (the present licensing quota for U.S. cars amounting to $1.6 million). It is doubtful, however, how many more American cars could be sold in Italy at the present time, due to high tariffs, taxes, operation and maintenance costs. However, at such time as smaller American cars are produced in number, the present restriction, if maintained, could well be a real barrier of considerable importance.

JAPAN

The Japanese Government has utilized its exchange and import licensing controls to accord priority for the importation of foodstuffs, raw materials and machinery for essential industries and to minimize or completely prohibit the importation of other types of goods. In recent years decided progress has been made in reducing discrimination against dollar area goods and in liberalizing payments.

The most important features of the Japanese restrictive system are licensing requirements for all commercial imports, mandatory surrender of all exchange earnings, and the allocation of foreign exchange for imports under semiannual foreign exchange budgets. Although Japan has moved away from bilateral open-account trade and payments arrangements (only those with the Republic of China, Republic of Korea and Greece are currently in effect) these agreements which in 1955 numbered 25, have been, in varying degrees, discriminatory toward the United States. In addition to these open-account agreements, Japan has concluded approximately 30 bilateral trade and financial arrangements many of which have not been made public. There has been a tendency to favor countries with whom agreements were in effect in granting licenses for imports of certain products in order to fulfill the terms of the agreement even if the same or similar commodities were available at lower prices from the dollar area.

Allocations for imports under the exchange budgets come under two broad systems of licensing—the Automatic Approval (AA) system and the Fund Allocation (FA) system.

Under the AA system licenses for listed commodities from specified areas are issued freely upon application at any time so long as the total amount appropriated for the system in the exchange budget has not been exhausted. While the discrimination by currency area on imports under the AA system has been progressively reduced there were in the most recent exchange budget (April-September 1959) 10 commodities which still could not be imported under this system from the dollar area. Of these the following are of considerable importance to U.S. trade: (1) Cowhides, (2) beef tallow, (3) lard, (4) soybeans, (5) copper scrap, (6) steel scrap, and (7) pig iron. Most of these commodities are licensed for import from the dollar area under the FA system, described in the next paragraph, whereby individual licenses are issued. In most instances the United States is Japan's major supplier.

Under the FA system quantitative limits for specific commodities are set in the semiannual foreign exchange budgets against which individual import licenses are issued. With few exceptions, where consideration is given to trade commitments, imports under the FA system are now on a global basis and are nondiscriminatory. The FA system has been liberalized to the point where almost 95 percent of the total budget under this system is on a global licensing basis.

Although a large portion of Japan's exchange allocations are made on a global basis this is not true with regard to many consumer goods and certain types of machinery and equipment. The issuance of import licenses, especially for the dollar area, and the United States in particular, for items considered "nonessential" or for which there is adequate domestic production are held to a minimum. It appears that such licenses that are issued serve to fulfill commitments under formal bilateral agreements and more recently under special deals worked out with a number of countries. Among the commodities subject to such restrictions which are important to U.S. trade are: Automobiles, industrial and household type sewing machines, band instruments, office equipment, television sets, air conditioners, refrigerators, whisky, fountain pens and mechanical pencils, fresh blue fin and big eye tuna, shrimp and salted salmon eggs.

In spite of these restrictions Japan is in 1959, as in 1957, our second best customer after Canada, taking U.S. exports valued at $438 million in the first half of 1959.

FEDERATION OF MALAYA

The Federation of Malaya has greatly liberalized its import licensing system this year. The most recent step removes restrictions on the direct import of all goods from the dollar area effective August 1. (This move followed initial liberalization action effective January 1.)

In addition to removing restrictions on direct imports, the Federation's latest action also dropped the requirement of special licenses for imports from the dollar area, thus placing imports from the dollar area on the same basis as imports from Western Europe (that is, most goods may now be imported under open general license). Dollar exchange is now freely obtainable by Malayan importers for all goods from the United States.

With the most recent changes the Federation of Malaya has wiped out all but a residue of discrimination. Specific licenses are still required for motor vehicles, radio receiving sets, and watches from nonsterling areas whereas they are admitted under open general license from the sterling area. The presumption, however, is that imports of these three items from nonsterling sources (including the United States) will be freely licensed, since this was the treatment which has been accorded such imports from Western Europe.

NETHERLANDS

1. The Netherlands requires import licenses for only approximately 120 products out of several thousand tariff items. This requirement is applicable to all countries, including the United States. Most of these products are subject to Netherlands or Benelux global quotas. Import licenses, where still required, are usually granted liberally. The European Division has received no complaints from U.S. exporters that either the licensing system or the quotas have limited their trade with the Netherlands. It is possible that quotas may be expanded to permit additional imports from the United States and other countries. Both the import licensing system and the quotas appear sufficient to accommodate U.S. exporters.

2. The commodities subject to the above licensing requirements include certain animals, poultry, meats, eggs, dairy products, rice, margarine, fresh fruits and vegetables, coal and coke, women's stockings, crude petroleum and petroleum products, a few chemicals, nitrogenous fertilizer, penicillin, soap, nuclear products, sheet glass and glassware, bolts, nails, and screws of iron or steel, and automobiles and chassis. Crude petroleum, petroleum products, and women's stockings are among the principal products subject to import licensing requirements but not subject to quotas.

3. These restrictions do not discriminate against U.S. goods.

NEW ZEALAND

Practically all imports into New Zealand require import licenses obtained by importers in advance of shipment. The 1959 Import Licensing Schedule released in October 1958, although providing for a substantial reduction in total imports from 1958 levels, liberalized the licensing of dollar goods mainly through the establishment of global quotas. Only 59 items out of a schedule of 1,050 items do not necessarily receive the same licensing treatment when they come from dollar countries or nondollar sources. These items, however, covered from 25 to 33⅓ percent of U.S. exports to New Zealand in calendar years 1956 through 1958.

Most imports from dollar sources receive nondiscriminatory licensing treatment. Licenses are granted in accordance with established percentage global quotas for specified items or on an individual merit basis with no regard to the country of origin. The principal items from the United States remaining subject to possible discrimination licensing treatment are: motor vehicles and parts; tractors, engines, and parts; sewing machines; artificers' tools; tire cord fabrics; most textile piece goods; timber; plywood; plastic materials; and synthetic rubber.[7]

[7] The complete removal of discriminatory licensing treatment for all dollar imports would most likely increase New Zealand imports of the above-mentioned goods from the United States. Substantial imports of U.S. motor vehicles, tractors, timber, and artificers' tools have continued for years despite discriminatory restrictive licensing treatment because of the need for such essential products and the relative inability to obtain these products in the types and quality desired from other sources. U.S. exports of the newer products i.e., tirecord fabric, plywood, plastic materials, and synthetic rubber for which new sources of supply are being found in the nondollar area are seriously affected by the discriminatory licensing treatment accorded these items. These products are generally subject to low rates of duty with little or no margin of preference. The elimination of discriminatory licensing treatment for these commodities coming from the United States would provide equal opportunities for the sale of such goods in New Zealand and probably increase the U.S. exports of these goods to New Zealand.

NICARAGUA

For all practical purposes, Nicaragua's nontariff barriers to imports are limited to the import licensing system which is an adjunct of the country's exchange control regulations. However, under this system, licenses are granted for any and all products provided importers meet deposit requirements. Quantitative quotas do not exist, and there is no discrimination as to country of origin.

Briefly, Nicaragua classifies imports into three categories or lists: List 1, so-called essentials; list 2, lesser essentials; and list 3, items considered nonessential. There is no deposit requirement for items in list 1. But, for lists 2 and 3, importers in order to obtain necessary exchange authorizations, or import licenses, must deposit in a Nicaragua bank 100 percent of the c.i.f. value of the proposed import. In the case of list 2 goods, licenses are issued within 48 hours of making the deposit; for list 3 item, licenses are issued 30 days after deposit is made.

This particular system, in effect since mid-1955, has undergone several major revisions, all aimed at further checking imports to conserve foreign exchange. Yet, the level of Nicaragua's imports over this period has not been materially affected, though a higher level of imports possibly would have been achieved if such restrictions had not been in force. Doubtless, the requirement of a 100 percent deposit for items in lists 2 and 3, and the 30-day license-wait for the latter, tend to impede imports of affected items. However, lack of time and peculiarities of Nicaraguan statistical practices make impossible a determination of the percent of total imports represented by each of the three lists.

Nicaragua's imports in 1955 amounted to $69.6 million; inched down to $68.8 million in 1956 (a year in which various adverse factors prevailed); rose to $80.9 million in 1957; and slipped to $77.9 million in 1958. The year 1958 was one of slower business activity in Nicaragua due to various factors including declining prices for coffee and cotton, its major exports. Whether the decline in imports was due to tightening of licensing requirements,[8] or to reduced business activity is problematical. Quite likely both had a bearing, but we incline to the opinion that the business decline was mainly responsible.

Nicaraguan imports from the United States have declined from $45.4 million in 1955 (65.2 percent of total) to $42.8 million in 1958 (54.9 percent of total). This fall is due not to the effects of the country's licensing system, since discrimination by country of origin does not exist, but reflects the post World War II return to a more normal trade pattern.

In short, Nicaragua's licensing system undoubtedly impedes the importation of items from the United States (and elsewhere), although import licenses are freely granted so long as importers meet deposit requirements. The extent to which U.S. exports are affected is very difficult to assess. However, this division has received no complaints from U.S. exporters on this point for some years.

NORWAY

On January 1, 1959, Norway established a list of goods subject to import license to replace the OEEC and dollar import free lists in use prior to this time. At the same time the license list was made the same for both OEEC and dollar commodities. This action followed the introduction of limited convertibility on December 29, 1958. On July 1, 1959, the Norwegian Government removed additional commodities from license control. By this action 91.7 percent (based on 1953 private trade) of Norway's imports from the dollar area was liberalized.

Even though a varied list of products are still subject to import license the operation of the import control system has been rather liberal during the recent period. The limiting effects on U.S. commodities has been chiefly in the field of consumer goods. One of the more outstanding U.S. export commodities seriously affected by the import restriction is passenger automobiles. Although import quotas have been established for passenger automobiles of Western European origin no participation has been granted U.S. vehicles. A limited number of passenger automobiles have been permitted entry under a small separate global taxicab quota.

PAKISTAN

All imports into Pakistan are under individual license and are rigidly controlled. In fixing the import policy for each licensing period (January–June and July–December), the foreign exchange available, both earned and from aid sources, is estimated and import licenses are issued on the basis of this estimate. Since the military takeover in October 1958, the Government has followed a policy of restricting the importation of nonessentials and has stressed the importation of raw materials, spare parts, and other commodities considered essential for the development of the country. So-called luxury goods have been largely excluded from the importable list.

Import licenses are normally valid for imports from any country in the world. From time to time, however, portions of the quotas established for some commodities have been reserved for single-country licensing under bilateral trade agreements, agricultural commodity agreements with the United States, or certain third-country transactions financed by U.S. economic aid.

One measure which involves some discrimination against goods from the United States, however, is the standardization of the makes of automobiles which may be imported into Pakistan and a ban on imports of automobiles with a cost and freight value of over 5,500 rupees ($1,155).

PERU

The only nontariff restriction imposed by Peru is a quota limitation on imports of automobiles. This quota is applied on a nondiscriminatory basis and is applied for balance-of-payments reasons. The quota is based on imports of automobiles into Peru in 1953; for the year 1959 the quota amounts to 4,500 vehicles.

Apart from the automobile quota, the only other restrictions are the import duties, sanitary requirements, and the usual documentation and consular fees.

FEDERATION OF RHODESIA AND NYASALAND

Summary

The Federation, a self-governing colony within the British Commonwealth, has maintained a system of import controls designed to restrict the level of imports from the dollar area. Although some dollar trade liberalization has occurred, decontrol measures to date have been much less extensive than those introduced by the United Kingdom and Dependent Overseas Territories, e.g. Nigeria. This in spite of the fact that the Federation has traditionally had a favorable balance of trade with the United States. As a result the United States has operated under a serious handicap in maintaining its position in this market.

Nevertheless the United States ranked third as a source of supply to the Federation in 1957. Of total Federation imports of $497 million the United States supplied $29 million being preceded only by the United Kingdom ($183 million) and the Union of South Africa ($152 million). Of total Federation exports in 1957 of $437 million the United States took $44 million, here also being third preceded only by the United Kingdom ($206 million) and the Union of South Africa ($47 million).

Method of restriction

The Federation, as a member of the sterling area, continues to pursue an import control policy designed to restrict imports from the dollar area to those items considered to be essential to the economy and to those not readily available from soft currency areas. This it has accomplished by requiring that certain goods when imported from the United States have a specific import license. These certain goods are included in a restricted list which contains over 100 tariff items. Special import licenses are not ordinarily issued for these items and thus the restricted list is used in effect as a prohibited list. The Federation has allocated dollar quotas for several items on the restricted list. These are: wheat, piece goods for clothing manufacturers, commercial and passenger motor vehicles, and stoves, washing machines, and refrigerators.

Goods from the United States which are not contained in the restricted list may be imported into the federation without restriction under an open general license. There are not separate provisions for foreign exchange licensing and the issuance of an import license either special or open general assures the U.S. exporter that dollar exchange will be made available to consummate the transaction.

All imports from the sterling countries are freely permitted without licensing restrictions or requirements, as are imports from the OEEC countries. Goods imported from non-OEEC, GATT countries require an individual license, but this is usually issued as a formality.

The United States therefore may compete on an equal footing for the market in the federation for those goods which are not on the restricted list, but is completely excluded from the market for those items which are included thereon.

Exports against which restrictions are effective

It is not possible to characterize so extensive a restricted list briefly. This list contains many food items, such as cheese, jams, and macaroni; products of secondary industry such as bags and sacks, hats, and clothing; and many, many others. These items do all have one trait in common, they are readily available from the sterling and nondollar areas.

Among those goods included in the restricted list which have the greatest potential for U.S. export trade are: outer garments; cotton piece goods; hosiery; other clothing; electrical machinery and appliances, not industrial; office machines; radiogramophones and the like; and bottled and tinned fruit.

SWEDEN

Sweden maintains import license control over certain agricultural, fishery, and a very small number of industrial products. In general, the Swedish Government licenses freely commodities still subject to import licenses so that the system has little or no limiting effect on U.S. exports to Sweden.

There are a limited number of commodities, chiefly in the field of agriculture and fisheries, which are subject to import license from the dollar area only. This technical discrimination has no true limiting effect on tariffs.)

TURKEY

Turkey's import system, established after institution of an economic stabilization program in August 1958, established quarterly global import quotas for essential equipment and supplies. Goods not on the quota lists cannot be imported and are in the category of prohibited goods though more and more products are being included on the quota lists. Prohibited goods include goods available in Turkey; consumer goods and semiluxury products such as refrigerators, and luxury products such as larger automobiles. Also in the prohibited class are products under state monopoly such as alcoholic and tobacco products.

[8] Imposition of 30-day wait for list 3 licenses, November 1957, and raising of deposit for list 2 items from former 50 percent to 100 percent, May 1958.

Distribution of quotas is done without any evident discrimination with the exception that priority treatment is accorded applications for import quotas from clearing agreement countries (mainly Soviet bloc) with which Turkey holds large balances. Amounts of quota are dictated by available exchange.

In the past 4 months a wide variety of parts, raw materials, and equipment have been freed from quota control and can be imported merely by applying for exchange.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Summary

The Union of South Africa maintains a system of import controls which, though nondiscriminatory, restricts the total global level of imports from all countries. For some goods (such as automobiles and nondurable consumer goods) restrictions tend to have a more adverse impact on imports from the United States than from other countries. However on balance, Union import controls have tended to become less serious as a trade impediment in the sense that (a) controls apply equally to all countries, (b) the South African Government's policy has been to liberalize controls and to permit a higher level of global imports as their global balance of payments positions improved. (Nonetheless as a matter of policy, as trade controls have been liberalized, emphasis has been placed increasingly on protective tariffs.)

Import control system

1. Most imports are subject to license from all countries. Exceptions are a small group of commodities or manufactures in short supply (the so-called "Free List") and other goods of minor importance such as gifts under £5 in value and commercial samples.

2. Licenses are granted either on an automatic quota basis or on a basis of "reasonable requirement" as indicated by the importer's application.

(a) The quota system applies mainly to consumer goods which in turn are divided into two groups "A" and "B." The A groups are the more "essential" consumer items and quotas (i.e., exchange allocation to importers calculated on a percentage of their past trade in a base period) are higher than for group B goods. Within the "B" category are certain goods for which no licenses are issued, as a matter of policy. Such goods traditionally have included periodical magazines of the "pulp" variety, i.e., comic books, detective, science fiction, etc.; jukeboxes and pin tables. At the end of 1958, because of "excessive" imports of luxury motor cars, the Union prohibited cars exceeding £800 f.o.b. in cost. This action does not specify countries of origin but in practice hits the United States harder than other countries.

(b) "Reasonable requirements" licenses: Such licenses apply to imports of most capital goods and industrial raw materials. For such goods, individual applications are made by importers and the Government-stated policy has been to approve applications on a basis of meeting "importers reasonable requirements to maintain stocks for current sales and/or consumption." No distinction is made between country of importation in granting applications.

The criteria of "reasonable requirements" seems to have been liberally interpreted by Government authorities and there has been no evidence that U.S. trade has been more adversely affected than that of other countries.

UNITED KINGDOM

I. Balance of payments restrictions

The United Kingdom's recent dollar liberalization move on June 8 represented another substantial step in the implementation of a longstanding United Kingdom policy to remove quantitative restrictions on its dollar trade and to reduce discrimination against dollar goods as the dollar balance-of-payments situation permits. The latest measures fulfill the undertaking of the British Government at the Montreal Commonwealth and Economic Conference last September to make a start in 1959 with the removal of import controls on as wide a range of dollar consumer goods and foodstuffs as possible.

At the time of the Montreal announcement in September 1958, virtually all raw materials, machinery, and basic foodstuffs had been freed of control and the dollar liberalization percentage stood at 73. (Based on the OEEC formula using 1953 as the base year.) The further relaxations in June this year brought this figure to over 90 percent, according to British Government estimates, although it probably is not that high. (The comparable percentage for OEEC countries is 94.)

The most important fact about the step taken by Britain to free its dollar import trade is that it eliminated a substantial area of discrimination in the operation of its controls against goods originating in dollar countries. This was accomplished in several ways. Restrictions on a wide range of dollar consumer goods and foodstuffs which were already free on importation from Western Europe, were removed and controls on a few items which had required licenses both from the dollar and Western Europe areas were lifted. Global quotas which were open only to imports from Western Europe and certain other nondollar countries were extended to dollar area imports (and increased for the purpose), and the dollar quotas on automobiles and most types of fruit were increased.

As a result of the slackening of British import controls, a number of U.S.-made commodities are no longer subject to limited shpiments under the British token import plan.

Token plan arrangements, which have been in effect since 1946, have enabled eligible U.S. firms to export to the United Kingdom token shipments of specified goods whose import from dollar sources was otherwise generally prohibited by the British Government. Many commodities covered by BTIP were among those affected by the British liberalization. Those which were freed from British import controls on June 8 were simultaneously deleted from the token plan list.

U.S. exporters of such items as canned soups and vegetables, sugar confectionery, shoes and other leather products, wood manufactures, domestic glassware, paints, toilet preparations, rubber products, and sporting weapons and ammunition are no longer required to apply to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce for BTIP quota shares before making shipment to the United Kingdom.

The token plan will however continue to apply through the rest of 1959, to commodities which next year become part of the so-called British global quota system. In this category are hosiery, sports equipment, toys and games, stationery and office supplies, cutlery, costume jewerly, and paper products. It will also continue to apply to other products not affected by the liberalization measures. These include certain textiles and apparel, pharmaceuticals, certain photographic apparatus, etc.

Dollar Items Still Subject to Discriminatory Controls

The items remaining on the United Kingdoms dollar negative list are the ones which still require individual licenses if imported from the dollar area (as opposed to WE, for instance). This means that applications for licenses are filed with the Board of Trade and licenses are granted on the merits of the individual case.

A measure of the surviving discriminations against dollar goods is revealed in the dollar negative list which covers a number of goods which have been traditionally important in the United States-United Kingdom trade and which, on the basis of representations from U.S. industry, remain potentially important. These include fresh fish; meats; certain fresh fruits; textiles; photographic and projection equipment, including cameras and films; a number of machinery items (air and gas compressors and exhausters; dredging equipment; gas and chemical plant; lifting, hauling, and transporting machinery; pumps; refrigerators and refrigerating machinery; welding machinery); values and tubes; X-ray apparatus. Some of these items are being imported in fairly substantial quantities in spite of licensing restrictions, however, permission to import being granted usually where the items are not alternatively available from domestic sources. Licensing controls continue to be maintained on some of our principal traditional exports to the United Kingdom market, such as cotton, tobacco, aircraft, petroleum products, etc., but trade in these goods continues at a high level regardless of licensing requirements. A special kind of discrimination affects the U.S. share of the United Kingdom market in tobacco, however, and this is discussed below under part II.

II. Other restrictions discriminating against U.S. Exports

1. Mixing Regulations on Tobacco

Tobacco imports from the dollar area are limited by a Board of Trade directive to manufacturers to limit their use of dollar tobaccos to 61 percent of their combined usings of light and oriental tobaccos. This is in supplement to a purchase agreement between British manufacturers and Rhodesian tobacco growers, under Board of Trade sponsorship, in effect with modifications since 1948, whereby British manufacturers guarantee to purchase a minimum quantity of Rhodesian tobacco annually (90 m. pounds, for 1959).

These measures discriminate against the U.S. tobacco trade since they have had the effect of raising the percentage of leaf tobacco of Commonwealth origin used by British manufacturers to the point where the proportion of the market now held by the Commonwealth and the United States respectively, is about 50–50, whereas in the prewar period the Commonwealth share was about 21 percent contrasted to the U.S. share of 77.5 percent.

2. Seasonal Restrictions on U.S. Grapefruit

Imports of fresh grapefruit under quota from the dollar area are only permitted importation during the period April 1–September 30. This limitation effectively precludes imports of Florida and Texas grapefruit. The United Kingdom's intention in setting up the quota on a seasonal basis was to protect the British West Indies citrus industry by providing it with an assured market in the United Kingdom, but in practice, Israel has been the chief beneficiary of the seasonal restriction, thus defeating the British Government's avowed purpose of assisting the British West Indies industry. (Prepared by: British Commonwealth Division, Office of Economic Affairs, Bureau of Foreign Commerce, Department of Commerce, August 20, 1959.)

URUGUAY

Imports into Uruguay are largely controlled through the process of foreign exchange licensing. However, it should be understood that the greatest obstacle facing U.S. exports to this country is the lack of dollars. The serious shortage of dollars reached such a point in 1957 that the Government was obliged to issue a decree on November 28 of that year greatly intensifying import restrictions. More recently, however, by decree of June 30, 1959, a new policy was initiated which shifted a large number of imports from the controlled financial market into the free exchange market, despite the continued serious shortage of exchange.

Basic import controls are somewhat complex. Imports are classified according to essentiality into first category goods which enter under the controlled-market rate (peso 2.10=$1.00), following approval by the Export-Import Control Board; and second and third category goods, subject to prior permits issued on the basis of exchange quotas established by the Export-Import Control Board. The free-commercial market rate (peso 4.11=$1.00), is applicable to goods in the second and third categories plus a surcharge.

The basic rate of exchange is 1.519 pesos to the dollar, a rate which is allowable for only several items, including imports of newsprint, matrices, and printing inks. The recently accentuated lack of foreign exchange, however, has led to inability of importers to obtain exchange at this rate, with the consequent severe shortage of newsprint.

Under the import regulations of Uruguay, exchange is issued according to its availability and, on this basis, the countries of origin and the currencies involved have been divided into two groups, A and B. For imports from group A countries, exchange may be obtained from the Banco de la Republica only if the country of origin involved is one of a group including Soviet bloc states, Brazil, France, Israel, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, and Yugoslavia and if the currency involved is either agreement dollars, external pounds sterling, or payments agreement Swiss francs.

For imports from group B countries appropriate exchange may be obtained from the Banco de la Republica 180 days after shipment. Group B countries include the United States and others not listed under group A. Switch operations involving these two country groupings are allowed, provided approval is obtained from the exchange authorities of the group A country, the exchange of which is being used.

Among essential items included in the first category which can be imported at the 2.10 rate might be mentioned fuel (except gasoline), some essential foodstuffs, a few raw materials, drugs, antibiotics, pharmaceuticals, seeds, products to combat agricultural and animal disease, materials for the press, tools, machinery and articles required by agriculture and the livestock industry.

As a result of the Government's action of June 30, 1959, noted above, importers are now in a position to increase imports from the United States, although such importers will be obliged to purchase scarce foreign exchange on the free market exchange which currently is costing between 10.50 and 11.00 pesos to the dollar. Consequently, selling prices in Uruguay for imported articles will be substantially increased.

Uruguayan imports from the United States in 1938 totaled $5 million, in 1948–50 averaged $40 million annually and reached a peak of $83 million in 1951. They ranged between $43 million in 1952 and $49 million in 1957, and dropped to $22 million in 1958. During the first half of 1959 U.S. exports to Uruguay amounted to $12 million.

Despite the sharp drop of exports to Uruguay from the United States recently, no specific complaints from American exporters as to discrimination have been received. Likewise no complaints regarding the treatment of any particular commodities included as GATT concessions have been noted.

[From Foreign Commerce Weekly, Aug. 24, 1959]

MANY COUNTRIES FREE IMPORTS, OTHERS TIGHTEN CONTROLS IN 1959

Rapid progress in dollar liberalization during the first 6 months of 1959 was made by most European countries, by British Commonwealth members, and by the United Kingdom dependent territories.

A few countries in Asia, the Near East, and Africa moved to liberalize dollar imports. Most other countries either maintained the status quo or intensified their import restrictions.

Latin American countries on the whole increased their licensing limitations and other measures, although these were usually not directly discriminatory against the United States. But a countertrend was seen in Central America, where Nicaragua and Guatemala enacted more liberal import regulations.

WESTERN EUROPE RELAXES RESTRICTIONS

During the first half of 1959, most OEEC countries continued to liberalize additional imports from the dollar area. Iceland and Portugal, however, took no actions in the dollar liberalization field, and Greece intensified restrictions on many dollar goods.

The United Kingdom abolished import licensing of a wide range of dollar goods on June 8, approaching closely in its treatment of dollar imports the treatment it accords imports from OEEC countries. Germany liberalized additional items and advanced the schedule of planned liberalizations to conform with GATT rulings. The Netherlands announced that it no longer found it necessary to restrict imports for balance-of-payments reasons, and virtually eliminated its few remaining import restrictions on dollar goods.

Italy announced liberalization of a substantial number of additional goods of interest to U.S. exporters, bringing its dollar liberalization percentage up to 85. France took liberalization steps which brought its dollar liberalization percentage up to over-60, expanded annual import quotas for a number of U.S. products, and eliminated the requirement of a license to import liberalized commodities. Denmark increased its dollar liberalization percentage to 88, and eliminated discrimination against dollar goods in the liberalized sector of its trade, while Norway revised its customs procedures to eliminate the formality of applying for a license to import liberalized goods. Turkey freed from import licensing 160 categories of raw materials, machinery, and spare parts. Greece, however, on March 1 and April 7 increased licensing controls and import quota restrictions on a wide array of goods.

UNITED KINGDOM TAKES LEAD IN COMMONWEALTH

In the first half of 1959 the British Commonwealth and oversea territories, as a whole, continued the accelerated rate of import liberalization and removal of discrimination against dollar goods initiated by the United Kingdom after the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference of last September in Montreal, Canada.

The United Kingdom, after bringing the dollar liberalization percentage to 75 and removing controls on dollar machinery and plant imports in September 1958, took another major step on June 8, 1959, in abolishing import licensing of a wide range of goods.

Australia, while not increasing its overall volume of authorized imports, increased from 50 to 70 the percentage of total imports freed from licensing discrimination against the dollar area.

Canada increased its quota for imports of turkeys from the United States.

New Zealand increased its allocation for private imports allowable in 1959 to $588 million, increased quotas of some raw materials and a wide range of consumer goods and removed some items from the list of prohibited imports. An additional $56 million was added to the list of imports allowable for 1959 and global quotas for various consumer and industrial items were increased.

The Union of South Africa announced in May a supplemental exchange allocation for consumer goods. Allocations, however, were still below those of 1958.

Nigeria lifted import controls on a long list of commodities from the dollar area early in the year and further expanded the list on July 1. Uganda and Tanganyika, in the first quarter, relaxed their controls on imports of commodities from the dollar area and later Kenya followed by introducing an open general license for a wide range of goods, permitting unrestricted imports of these items from the dollar area. Malta also liberalized an extensive list of goods to the dollar area and Aden relaxed import controls on dollar goods and freed for importation many goods previously prohibited.

In the Western Hemisphere, Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados, and British Guiana liberalized import controls to a degree similar to that of the United Kingdom during the first part of this year. In June, British Guiana announced a sweeping liberalization of controls on dollar imports, to become effective July 1. In July corresponding steps were taken by Jamaica, British Honduras, St. Lucia, and Barbados, also effective as of July 1.

In the Pacific, North Borneo, Sarawak, Brunei, Western Samoa, and Fiji also followed the lead of the United Kingdom in liberalizing imports and reducing discrimination against dollar goods.

LATIN AMERICA RAISES SOME RESTRICTIONS

The first 6 months of 1959 generally marked an intensification of import restrictions on the part of Latin American countries (except for some in Central America), although most countries continued their policies of not discriminating directly against U.S. exports in their import restrictions.

In addition to import-licensing restrictions, Latin American countries intensified their use of prior deposit requirements, exchange allocations, tie-in quotas, and surcharges.

Argentina abolished discrimination against dollar imports last December 30 and replaced the official dollar exchange rate by a free exchange market. However, Argentina enlarged its list of commodities requiring surcharges ranging up to 300 percent and prior deposits ranging up to 500 percent of c. and f. value of imported items.

Brazil, after most Western European countries had made their currencies externally convertible, merged the foreign exchange auctions of these currencies with the dollar auctions, thus allowing importers to purchase any convertible currency at a single auction, and eliminating the previous preferential rates at which some European currencies were sold (relative to dollars).

In April the Chilean Government authorized the President to establish additional taxes on imports of merchandise of up to 200 percent of c.i.f. value, and at the same time to gradually abolish the import deposit system. The 2-percent tax, however, on the sale of foreign exchange was abolished.

Colombia, in May, removed some items on the list of prohibited imports and imposed a higher rate of duty on them. Surcharges for imports of many agricultural products were retained and cocoa was added to the list.

Cuba established import licensing controls on 197 luxury and semiluxury items on February 9. A few of these items were removed from such licensing on March 11, but in the same month Cuba required rice importers to buy certain quantities of domestic rice with every foreign purchase, and placed profit limitations on the resale of imported rice, and a special tax on it.

The Dominican Republic, in April, increased surtaxes on imports from 10 to 12 percent, and in June established an internal consumption tax ranging from 5 to 15 percent of an item's value.

Mexico placed numerous categories of goods on a list requiring prior import permits. In addition, a decree of January 29 required Government agencies and corporations to acquire all possible purchases from local production.

Paraguay established an exchange surcharge of 5 percent of the c.i.f. value of imports except for goods originating in adjacent countries and Uruguay.

Peru, in April, established additional surcharges of from 10 to 25 percent of c.i.f. value on imports of a wide range of goods. In addition, internal taxes were increased on various categories of luxury goods.

Uruguay extended for the fifth time the period during which imports were limited to the barest essentials. It also increased surcharges on imports of many nonessential items and increased exchange rates for imports of many essential goods by abolishing the previous preferential rate granted for their purchase.

Venezuela announced in January that as of May 13 the Venezuelan Government and Government-owned or controlled establishments were to be prohibited from purchasing foreign goods when local goods priced up to 25 percent higher than the duty-paid costs of similar imported articles are available.

In Central America some moves toward more liberal trade policies were recorded. In April, Nicaragua shifted 21 industrial and miscellaneous items to the essential import list from lower priority lists. These items will no longer require a 100-percent prior deposit.

Guatemala, in January, freed most foreign goods from import prohibitions, licensing, and tie-in quotas.

LITTLE CHANGE MADE IN NEAR EAST CONTROLS

Some Near East countries liberalized their import policies, while others intensified restrictions.

In Iraq a new import program was introduced which for the first time since 1941 does not discriminate between soft and hard currency areas as to sources of imports. Besides categories of prohibited and limited imports, an unlimited import category was set up. Importers may apply for import licenses to purchase goods permitted for importation from any area.

Syria, on the other hand, increased its restrictions. Import licenses were no longer being granted for many commodities, including various textile and iron and steel manufacturers. Other commodities may be imported only from Arab League states, from states maintaining a trade balance with Syria—Communist China and Soviet-bloc countries—and from states with which the Syrian balance of trade was favorable in 1957—Italy, France, Denmark, and Greece. The goods included under this area discrimination policy include some leather and fur products, textile manufactures, paper products, construction materials, and iron and steel products.

Saudi Arabia, on May 14, lifted import prohibitions on automobiles but increased duty rates on higher-priced cars.

FAR EAST COUNTRIES CUT DOLLAR DISCRIMINATION

In the Far East, India liberalized import allocations on industrial raw materials, but cut quotas of less essential items. Overall foreign exchange allocations remained at $378 million for the year.

Following the establishment of external convertibility of sterling, the Government of Burma, a member of the sterling area, removed restrictive references to the dollar area from all import licenses. While currency restrictions stemming from bilateral, multilateral, reparations, barter, and Public Law 480 agreements are still in effect, U.S. exporters are now able to compete fully for the remainder of Burma's imports.

The Indonesian Ministry of Trade has established exclusive import rights for eight Government-controlled companies for the following essential commodities: textiles, cement, tinplate, raw cotton, cotton weaving yarns and rayon yarns, paper, reinforced concrete, steel and wire, jute gunny bags, and wheat flour. Private companies no longer will be permitted to import these commodities, in addition to the previously import-controlled rice, cloves, cambrics, and fertilizers.

Another measure further restricts the amount of credit that foreign exchange banks may supply to private importers. In addition, the advance deposit which must be paid by importers at the time they submit their import applications was raised, effective April 15, from 133⅓ to 230 percent of c. and f. value of the import (at the parity rate of 11.40 rupiah per U.S. dollar).

The Japanese Government announced an import budget of $2,398.7 million for the first half of its fiscal year 1959, $300 million greater than for the first half of fiscal 1958 and the third largest in the postwar period.

Of this amount, $1,940 million was for commodity imports and the remainder for invisible payments.

Japan abolished the distinction between dollars and sterling in the foreign exchange budget so that imports may be paid for in any hard currency irrespective of the origin of the goods. At the same time, Japan increased the number of items automatically approved for import on a global basis.

Pakistan in January set up three foreign exchange accounts for importing: One for essential imports including petroleum products, coal, drugs, and metals; one for Government account; and one for use of those exporters who earn foreign exchange. On the last list were placed some 219 items importable under open general license. This latter list was reduced in April by 30 items, but the Government announced in June that this list would again be increased to 201 items for July-December. Both general and special import licenses generally will be valid for worldwide procurement, without discrimination against dollar goods.

The Thai Government has freed from individual import licensing meat, fresh, frozen, or in other forms; and coconut and other vegetable oils.

Vietnam reduced surcharges on purchases of dollar exchange by its importers. This move reduced discrimination in favor of French goods by bringing landed prices of imports more in line with those from France.

The Governments of Singapore and the Federation of Malaya, on January 1, liberalized dollar imports by adding 23 categories of goods to the list of items for which import licenses would be freely issued for direct import from the United States. Included in the list were items of interest to U.S. exporters, i.e., agricultural machinery, pharmaceuticals, truck/bus tires, canned and powdered milk.

GHANA AND SUDAN ALSO FREE IMPORTS

In Africa, in addition to the dollar liberalization steps taken by the British territories, Ghana decontrolled several dollar import categories, including motor vehicles, and the Sudan, as of July 1, placed most goods on open general license. Goods still not liberalized by the Sudan include certain agricultural and bakery products, textiles and leather products, certain dyes and soaps, timber and timber manufactures, engines, vehicles, hardware, and a wide range of notions.

THE POWERFUL NEW YORK TIMES JOINS THE CHORUS OF THOSE URGING ACTION IN CONGRESS TO EXTEND THE DEADLINE FOR THE NAVY'S "TOMBSTONE" PROMOTION LAW

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], the gentleman from California [Mr. WILSON], and I introduced similar bills to extend the final, cutoff date for the so-called tombstone promotion law in the three sea services, which has been in effect for 34 years but which is now scheduled to expire on November 1. The action of Congress in bringing this longstanding law to such an abrupt end has worked great hardship on hundreds of loyal naval, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard officers who by their courage proved to be the real combat heroes of World War II. Certainly they deserve to be accorded more consideration by this Congress than was extended through the hasty "tombstone" cutoff date.

I was delighted to see that within the past few days the great newspaper, the New York Times, which has a much-deserved reputation for editorial fairness and insight, has now joined the swelling chorus of those who believe that this cutoff date should be extended, in line with the bills which my colleagues and I, both in this body and in the other body, have introduced.

Under leave to extend my remarks I am happy to include this editorial from the New York Times of September 4, 1959, in the hope that Members of the House and Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol will reconsider their decision, and will pass this legislation before the 1st session of the 86th Congress adjourns sine die.

The editorial follows:

DILEMMA FOR NAVAL OFFICERS

One of the byproducts of an act to provide improved opportunity for promotion in the Navy has created a servicewide dilemma which has no recent precedent. The President in signing the act to force the early retirement of a wartime "hump" in the Navy officer corps (chiefly in the rank of captain) noted the inequity of a provision tacked on to the basic law and urged Congress to provide more time.

The debatable provision repeals as of November 1 of this year a law which dates back to 1925 and, as amended, provided upon retirement for the honorary promotion to the next higher rank of all Navy and Marine Corps officers who received combat decorations in World War II. This law, known to the Navy as the tombstone promotion bill—since the advancement was honorary only and carried no increase in pay—may or may not have been a good law. The fact remains that hundreds of officers who have retired since World War II have been advanced a grade on the retired list under its provisions. Some 1,300 officers on active duty in the Navy are similarly eligible for such a promotion upon retirement—but now only to November 1.

The problem caused by the November 1 deadline has already been graphically illustrated. In the first 3 days after the President signed the act 55 officers requested retirement. The irony of the situation is that many of these requests were not from officers at whom the basic act was aimed—those who had failed in the past for selection for promotion—but from young officers whose names had not yet been considered by flag rank selection boards. Obviously, many in the Navy feel that their future in the service is uncertain at best.

In any case a decent lapse of time to allow all officers to give adequate consideration to a decision which will fundamentally affect their lives is only right. Congress should, as the President noted, "promptly accord them such additional time"; if possible, at least a year.

ONLY A NATIONAL LOTTERY CAN EASE FISCAL PAINS

Mr. FINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FINO. Mr. Speaker, as we approach the end of this session of Congress we find, most regretfully, that our national fiscal problems keep getting worse instead of better. We note, with profound disappointment, that this Government ended its 1959 fiscal year in the red to the tune of over $12½ billion. That is the excess of money the Government spent that it did not have.

Needless to say, this kind of deficit spending means a bigger national debt which is now almost $285 billion and another increase in interest payments on this gigantic national obligation.

Mr. Speaker, I feel certain that the average American taxpayer does not know that the payments we make on the interest alone amounts to a staggering $7½ billion a year. This is almost as much money as we appropriate to run the Labor, Interior, Health, Education, and Welfare, and State Departments and for public works and military construction.

What about the future? Does the Government's budget picture look any better? I regret to say that the outlook is very dark. The odds are that another budget deficit is likely despite the President's attempts to produce a balanced budget for this new fiscal year. Again, this can only mean a further increase in our national debt and a jump of possibly $½ billion more in interest payments.

Mr. Speaker, what does this mean to our hard-pressed taxpayers? Simply this—all hopes for tax relief in the foreseeable future are gone unless this Congress is prepared to remove the blinders, wipe out hypocrisy, and face the fiscal facts of life.

As I have said repeatedly, there is only one avenue of relief open—a national lottery. If we are sincere in our interest in solving this growing fiscal problem and in extending a measure of tax relief to our taxpayers, then we must have the courage to tap a new source of revenue which a national lottery can produce, voluntarily and painlessly. This would be the best and only substitute for taxation.

Mr. Speaker, let me assure my colleagues in this House that by supporting my national lottery bill they will not be urging a gambling bill but rather a revenue-raising measure which can and will easily pump into the U.S. Treasury $10 billion a year in new additional money.

Mr. Speaker, a national lottery can produce this tremendous revenue which can be used to reduce our national debt and thereby ease the extreme pressure of interest payments and, at the same time, provide Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer with a sorely needed tax cut.

Can anyone suggest a better cure for easing the severe pains of this growing fiscal headache?

THE LATE ANDREW JACKSON MAY

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the death of Andrew Jackson May, who ably represented Kentucky in this House for 16 years, marks the passing of one of the pioneers in the economic development of eastern Kentucky.

I knew "Jack," as his friends and neighbors called him, from the time I was a schoolboy. Among his neighbors, he was best known as a sober, industrious, and successful attorney and businessman. His activity and vision in the successful development of the Big Sandy Valley coalfields contributed substantially to the wealth of that valley. His climb from a rural schoolteacher to an outstanding attorney who became a successful coal operator was rapid.

In 1930, on the second try, he was elected to Congress, and in 1938 he became chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee. In this position, he was responsible for a substantial portion of the policies which expanded our Army to an effective fighting unit in World War II. The country should be grateful that a man of Jack May's ability and effectiveness was found in that important chairmanship at that time. As chairman of this committee, he was a major contributor to the program now known as the GI bill of rights.

His last years were spent back in his old home at Prestonsburg, Ky., where he resumed the practice of law, which continued well beyond the proverbial age of threescore and ten. In fact, he was on an active basis well into his 85th year.

Jack May was an individual who loved his family. His wife, Julia Mayo May, preceded him in death in the 1940's. He leaves surviving two children, a daughter, Mrs. Olga May Latta, and a son, Robert May, both of Prestonsburg, Ky.

His neighbors and the Nation have suffered a loss with the passing of Andrew Jackson May. My heartfelt sympathy is extended to his family.

Mr. WATTS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WATTS. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to have to call the attention of the House that on last Sunday, September 6, one of its former Members, the Honorable Andrew Jackson May, of Prestonsburg, Ky., passed away at the age of 84 years.

During the latter days of his service here, Mr. May served as chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee.

Born of pioneer stock in the backwoods section of Beaver Creek, Floyd County, Ky., his childhood was spent in an atmosphere of meagerness, destitute of almost the minimum of material wealth required to provide for the absolute necessities. However, from his parents, and the demands of his environments, his was the good fortune to inherit an overabundance of self-reliance, self-dependability, and love for his fellow-man. From these he forged a plan of life emphasizing the need of self-preparation and humanitarian services.

As teacher, lawyer, and Congressman he served his people. Early in his days, he commenced responding to the needs of his people as teacher in the mountain schools. His efforts were not confined to the classrooms, nor to teacher services as is normally understood. His lot was to educate the children in the classrooms by day, and the parents in their homes at night. In addition, he was their counselor and adviser for all their economic and domestic problems. He was their doctor, their pastor, their lawyer, their nurse, and their teacher.

Because of his humanitarian traits, his love for his neighbor, and his services, Jack May became an institution throughout the whole of eastern Kentucky. Throughout his lifetime, for all, regardless of stature, there was time to hear their problems, and, for all, his was the hand ready to lend help, succor, and assistance.

For this unending special service to them, the compensation when measured by material wealth was inconsequential. But, in its stead, there flowed in an endless stream, an intangible wealth of far greater significance—a deep-rooted love and affection on the part of all who knew him. A love grounded in confidence. A confidence that was never disturbed—an allegiance that never faltered. No greater success can be achieved by anyone.

Jack May, a friend to all—all that knew him, loved him.

To his own family, and to all eastern Kentuckians whom he adopted as his own, I extend my deepest sympathy.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, Andrew Jackson May and I were elected to the 72d Congress in 1930. I served with him in the seven succeeding Congresses and for a long part of that time we lived in the same hotel. He was a man of great capacity; he was industrious and he was exceedingly active in discharging his duties as a Member of Congress. He became the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs where he rendered excellent service and was the author of legislation that gave his country strength to enter the great struggle for the freedom of the world.

He was a devoted father and husband, and his family reciprocated that devotion to a remarkable degree. He was a genial and kindly man, and he had many sincere and loyal friends.

To his family I extend my sincere sympathy.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my late friend and former colleague, Jack May, served in this body for many years, and he did so with distinction and with great courage.

He was chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs at a very important period in our Nation's history. Many important bills prior to World War II came out of his committee of vital concern to our country and to the defense of our country.

Hitler was on the scene then just the same as Khrushchev and the Communist menace is on the scene today. In those days there was the Ruhr, there was Austria, there was Sudetenland, Czechoslovakia, and there was the pact at Munich. We all know that was the road of hope on the part of countries in Europe but, as a matter of fact, it was the road of appeasement and the road to war.

We now observe the aggressions in Laos taking place.

Jack May served as chairman of the powerful Committee on Military Affairs in an important period in our Nation's history. He was always dependable. We had emotional legislation in those days just the same as we have now. We had the doubters. Those of us who fought for legislation to prepare our country for war were called warmongers, just as today if you talk against the dangers of communism people will look at you and say you are for war. Our people have been lulled into a state of apathy and of complacency.

Many bills came out of Jack May's committee by a close vote. Mr. May was a great chairman. The country could always depend on him, and the leadership of the House was always aware of the fact that Jack May was fighting for the best interests of our country.

Those are the things we have to remember, that is the part of his life that should be known publicly, acknowledged and dramatized.

On the floor he fought for the passage of many bills against great odds. For example, extension of the Selective Service Act just prior to Pearl Harbor, which passed this House by one vote, 203 to 202.

It was under his leadership as chairman of the committee that that bill passed. Jack May was a great Congressman and a great American. He served his country well in the Halls of Congress. I am deeply sorry at his passing, and I extend to his son and daughter my heartfelt sympathy in their great loss and sorrow.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute and thanks to the gentleman from Kentucky, the late Mr. May, for his tremendous work as chairman of the former Committee on Military Affairs. I had a number of defense measures that I was very much interested in, measures that Mr. May fought for. He was instrumental in the passage of the continuation of the draft and the passage of the WAAC bill, which was not an easy bill to pass, but he stood by it and fought for it. I often talked with him on defense matters. He always cooperated. There were many other measures that Mr. May took an active interest in. The country was in great danger and he fought constantly, day after day and month after month, to see that our defenses were strong. Those who were serving in the Congress at that time will remember the intense anxiety we all felt and our great responsibility. I could see the great strain that Mr. May was under. Those of us in the Congress realize what it meant and what he went through. Feelings ran high and many were hurt. There were Members who were battling against some of the defense measures. I believe many lives were saved because of his and committees' work.

My deepest sympathy goes to his family. They are very fine and I know they are very proud of his contribution to his country.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may have 10 legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

FAILURE TO ENFORCE THE ANTIDUMPING ACT

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have today joined in cosponsoring with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means legislation which was requested by the Treasury Department which is cited as the Customs Administrative Act of 1959.

I would take the occasion of the introduction of this legislation to comment on another urgent customs consideration, namely the manner in which our Antidumping Act is being administered.

It will be recalled that in section 5 of the Customs Simplification Act of 1956—Public Law 927, 84th Congress—the Congress called upon the Secretary of the Treasury to make a review of the operation and effectiveness of the Antidumping Act and pursuant to such review to report back to the Congress with recommendations for legislative improvement of the act. Pursuant to that action the Congress last year gave legislative approval to legislation—Public Law 85-630—which amended "the Antidumping Act so as to provide for greater certainty, speed, and efficiency in its enforcement." During the past 12 months I have seen no evidence of any greater speed or efficiency in the administration of the act or its enforcement. The only certainty that I have noticed with respect to the act is the certainty given to foreign producers who dump their products in our domestic market that they will not be held accountable for their action by having the provisions of the Antidumping Act apply against them.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, not only in the last 12 months but in recent years I have become increasingly alarmed over the fact that the intended purpose of the act—the protection of American industry from dumping—is not being carried out and in fact I seriously doubt that anybody is even trying to carry it out. The Department of the Treasury has failed to withhold with reasonable promptness appraisements in accordance with the act where dumping exists. Furthermore, the Treasury Department has been undertaking to find justification for admitted price differentials for reasons that are neither enumerated nor contemplated by the act.

With the passage of the amendments to the Antidumping Act in the last session of the Congress, it was represented to the Congress that as amended the act would become an effective remedy to deter and prevent dumping of foreign merchandise in the United States and to protect the jobs of our American workers. If my information is correct, the Treasury Department in its administration of the act has thwarted these intended results.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that these are serious charges that I am making, but I would welcome the presentation of any evidence that would disprove that these charges are founded on fact.

This is a matter of serious importance to all Americans, and I believe it is incumbent on the Congress and on the responsible officials of the Treasury to determine whether or not the purposes for which the act and the recent amendments were passed are being nullified by administrative interpretation, if not by administrative indifference. I intend to see that this result is accomplished.

DEMOCRATIC INFLATIONISTS HAMPER DEBT MANAGEMENT

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, on July 16, 1959, the press quoted the Democratic House leadership to the effect that the House would "sit and wait" with respect to the President's request of June 8, 1959, for legislation to remove interest rate ceilings that encumber economical and efficient public debt management. The President's request dealt with an urgent national issue which was subsequently deemed by the President to be the most important legislative matter to come before the Congress during this session of Congress. The President was not seeking to raise interest rates; he was seeking authority to fund the debt at the lowest possible cost to the American people and to avoid inflationary short-term financing.

The promise of "sit and wait inaction" by the Democratic leadership has tragically proved to be the Democratic policy in the House on this matter. With blind indifference to the fact of a $290 billion public debt, to the fact of the inflationary consequence of restricting Government financing to the short-term money market, and to the fact of a need to refinance approximately $80 billion in maturing obligations in the next 12 months, the Democratic leadership has refused to give to the President and to the Secretary of the Treasury the necessary legislative tools to accomplish economical debt operations.

The Democratic "sit and wait" policy delayed any definitive House action on the legislative request of the administration until Friday, September 4, in the midst of the closing days of this session. At that time, 13 weeks after the original legislative request was made, the Democratic leadership consented to the House consideration of a bill, H.R. 9035, which pertained only to the statutory ceiling on series E and H bonds and which ignored the more important, from the standpoint of debt management, 4¼-percent ceiling on marketable bonds. The political decision to act on the savings bond aspect of this problem was made to save the Democratic House majority from criticism by the voters who hold series E and H bonds. Legislative action on these savings bonds could not politically abide the earlier sit and wait decision of the Democratic leadership, but that leadership reaffirmed its same sit and wait policy on marketable bonds.

As the Republican Members pointed out on page 31 in the supplemental views of the committee report that accompanied H.R. 9035:

> Under the majority proposal the Congress runs the risk of misleading the public. We offer them, on the one hand, the assurance by the Congress of a more adequate yield on their patriotic investment in series E and H bonds. But by restricting Treasury refinancing to the short-term money market, we could well be fanning the fires of inflation with the consequence that at maturity these savings bonds would be redeemed at a higher yield but with an inflation eroded dollar.

The Republican Members of the House in the motion to recommit gave the entire House membership opportunity to repudiate the Democratic leadership decision to sit and wait. Our motion to recommit with instructions would have had the effect of including in the bill authority for the Executive to exceed the 4¼-percent ceiling on marketable bonds. This motion was rejected by virtually a straight party-line vote. Accordingly, there can be no question of the party responsible for refusing to act as well as the party responsible for the inflationary consequences.

The able economic and financial writer, Mr. Harold B. Dorsey, has written an excellent, analytical article on the refusal of the Democratic majority to approve legislation giving to the Treasury the latitude and flexibility in debt management necessary to minimize cost of the debt and to reduce the impact of Government financing on our private enterprise economy. I will include Mr. Dorsey's article as a part of my remarks at this point:

ECONOMIC VIEW—LEGISLATORS HURT THOSE THEY PROFESS TO PROTECT

(By Harold B. Dorsey)

The penalty of financial stringency imposed upon millions of small businesses and individual borrowers was symbolized last week by the increase from 4½ to 5 percent in the interest rates which commercial banks charge their "prime" customers. The interest rate charged for money loaned by the banks to other borrowers will now scale upward from 5 instead of from 4½ percent.

There can be little doubt that the failure of Congress to pass legislation that would permit more flexibility to the Treasury Department in its financial operations is closely associated with the rising interest rates. As prospects for this legislation diminished there seemed to be a corollary increase in interest rates. Then when it was announced that the House Ways and Means Committee had pigeonholed this legislation for the balance of the session, interest rates rose sharply.

On Monday of last week the Treasury Department had to pay the highest interest rate for its 91-day borrowings since the bank holiday in March 1933. And Government bond prices declined again to the lowest levels since the early 1930's. The interest yield for most outstanding Government bonds is now well in excess of the 4¼-percent ceiling which Congress has refused to lift.

Only a few months ago it was considered to be only a fantastic possibility that Congress might force the Treasury Department to borrow all of its money in the short-term and intermediate-term market. Now that the fantasy seems to have become a fact, it is clear that this competition of the Government for short-term credit, in competition with all of the other kinds of borrowers, is causing an extremely tight credit situation.

One might logically ask: Why has there been so much weakness in market prices for longer term Government bonds? The answer is that the congressional attitude on this subject strongly suggests encouragement for inflation. Few lenders want to lend their money for a long period of time if there is such a clear threat that they are going to be paid back in depreciated dollars.

At any rate, we stand today with some of these financial factors in an unusually critical condition. Furthermore, the arithmetic suggests that this condition is going to get worse between now and the end of the year. The Treasury Department has $8.9 billion of debt maturing in November to refinance and it has to raise several billions of dollars of new cash in the next few months. This substantial demand for credit has been forced into the short-term credit market.

In addition, many businesses have to increase their borrowing between now and the end of the year to carry harvests and to carry their Christmas inventories. More bank credit will be needed after the steel strike has been settled to finance the anticipated snapback in business activity.

When we pile these additional demands for credit on top of the present unusually tight situation, we do not end up with a very pretty picture. Somebody is going to get hurt. In the first place, the implied inability of small business people to borrow money for their seasonal needs is a painful matter. In addition, millions of people who borrow for their personal needs are being forced to pay higher interest rates—if they can find the credit at any interest rate.

And as if that were not enough damage, all of the rest of us are being penalized by the needlessly higher interest rates which our Government is having to pay for its borrowed money.

It is very difficult to understand why Congress has not been able to recognize these painful effects that are resulting from their amateurish efforts to tamper with the Nation's delicate credit mechanism. Is it possible that those Congressmen who are blocking the legislation to give the Treasury Department more flexibility fail to comprehend the painful effects of their inaction? If they had not been able to anticipate that their inaction would cause the Treasury Department to pay the highest interest rate on its borrowings since the bank holiday 26 years ago, then all they have to do now is look in the newspapers and find that that is the fact. If they had been advised that this kind of thing could not happen, then they should, at least belatedly, recognize the ignorance of their advisers. The facts that have already been developed prove that ignorance.

The weird part of this whole thing is that the suffering is most serious for the millions of people whom these Congressmen profess to be protecting, while it is helping the profits of the comparatively few for whom numerous Congressmen have frequently expressed criticism—the bankers. Even the latter realize that they will ultimately suffer by the distress that is being imposed on all of the others.

There is only one respect in which I would possibly disagree with Mr. Dorsey's knowledgeable conclusions. He implies that we may be helping the bankers by adding to their profits. I am inclined to disagree with Mr. Dorsey's conclusion on this point because of my belief that higher banker charges for interest on loans will have to be offset by higher banker costs paid as interest on savings. Competition among banks and other financial institutions will tend to prevent the occurrence of even a temporary windfall to the banker.

Another excellent article on the subject of debt management and interest rates appeared in the September 1959 monthly letter of the First National City Bank of New York. I will include that article as a part of my remarks at this point:

THE CONTROVERSY OVER INTEREST RATES

Through the sultry summer, debate continued over the President's urgent request, made June 8, for removal of old statutory limits on interest rates payable on U.S. Treasury bonds. The President wanted to raise the rate payable on savings bonds (now limited to 3.26 percent) to 3¾ percent and to pay more than 4¼ percent if necessary to sell marketable Treasury bonds. The Treasury is blocked off from placing bonds due after 5 years because they could not be sold in today's market within the 4¼ percent legal limit, which was set back in 1918. Meanwhile, savers' dissatisfaction with the current 3¼-percent rate on savings bonds is reflected in the growing excess of redemptions over new sales, involving a steady drain on Treasury cash.

The President's proposal encountered bitter resistance from liberals who pressed for an amendment stating it to be the sense of Congress that the Federal Reserve should buy more U.S. securities, of varying maturities, to assist in the economical and efficient management of the public debt. The House Ways and Means Committee, which had the responsibility of clearing a bill, worked patiently to amend the proposed sense-of-Congress amendment into a reasoned statement of economic and debt management policies that could satisfy everyone.

The committee August 12 tentatively approved a bill which suspended rate limits on Treasury bonds for a 3-year period and which rewrote the sense-of-Congress amendment in language acceptable to Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson and Federal Reserve Board Chairman William McC. Martin. But opposition in other quarters led the committee to shelve the measure for the present session of Congress. As a result of this stalemate, the Treasury will have to concentrate its borrowings within a 5-year maturity limit, paying whatever rates may be required. In this area no rate limits apply.

Selling only obligations due within 5 years—as the Treasury perforce must do—gives an extra upward impulse to shorter term rates and moreover builds the volume of near-term Treasury obligations. As the situation stands at the beginning of September, no less than 73 percent of the marketable public debt is due within 5 years. This means that the Treasury, to meet maturities, must be constantly coming to the market to refinance itself, interfering with the freedom and flexibility of Federal Reserve credit policy, and involving problems of digestion of successive new offerings. It would be better for everyone concerned if more of the debt were in the hands of long-term investors, put away in the box for years.

The book, of course, is not closed on the rate problem. Sooner or later the Treasury must have authority to manage the debt in an orderly way.

Meanwhile, it could turn out that the liberals are being penny wise and pound foolish. If the effect is to give fresh impulse to inflationary psychology, savers and investors may demand higher rates. Every irresponsible fiscal action has a cost in interest charges.

WHY HIGHER RATES?

The upward push in interest rates over the past year has been a result of increased borrowing demands from all sides: from the Federal Government financing a peacetime record deficit; from State and local governments raising money for roads, schools, and other local improvements; from homebuilders putting up new houses; from individuals buying new cars; from industry financing record-high production and payrolls. The interest rate rise that began in June 1958 was unexpectedly rapid—though so also was the return of booming business conditions and inflationary psychology.

It is a pity in retrospect that the Congress did not act promptly upon the President's recommendation inasmuch as market conditions favorable to bond offerings developed during the summer. In part this reflected the reassurance investors felt in the President's masterful statement of debt management fundamentals and veto of another big housing bill, as well as feelings that stocks were high and bonds relatively cheap. The supply of new corporate and municipal issues temporarily declined, and an opening was created for bond financing. The Treasury must have discretionary authority to take advantage of such situations in a timely way.

The President's proposal, documented by the Treasury Department, spelled out what seemed quite obvious: something had to be done to stem the rising tide of savings bond redemptions and permit the Federal Government to continue flotations from time to time of bonds in the long-term investment market.

Stalwart opposition, however, was voiced in speeches on the floors of Congress and in hearings conducted by the congressional Joint Economic Committee on the subject of "Employment, Growth, and Price Levels." Trenchant in their criticisms were three members of the committee, Senator PAUL DOUGLAS, of Illinois, chairman, Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, and Congressman HENRY REUSS, of Wisconsin.

Their proposals for Federal Reserve support of the Government bond market were vigorously opposed by Treasury Secretary Anderson and Chairman Martin. Mr. Martin stated that:

"Under present conditions, I am convinced that this amendment, when stripped of all technicalities, and regardless of whether the language is permissive or mandatory, will cause many thoughtful people both at home and abroad to question the will of our Government to manage its financial affairs without recourse to the printing press. To me this is a grave matter.

"We are here dealing with trust and confidence which is the keystone of sound currency. Therefore, I must oppose this proposal as vigorously as possible."

TRICK SOLUTIONS

Liberal opinion is reopening the Pandora's box of tricks studied and rejected before the bond market was unpegged in 1951.

As early as June 4 Congressman REUSS proposed a resolution citing the rise in interest costs on the national debt, urging greater reliance on purchase or retention of Government obligations by the Federal Reserve banks, and also asking the Federal Reserve System to explore methods of raising bank reserve requirements as an anti-inflationary tool.

The use of the Federal Reserve to create cheap money while placing special restraints on private lenders and borrowers apparently has a considerable following in neoliberal circles. It is part of the prescription for progress advocated in a new pamphlet put out by the Conference on Economic Progress (CEP), an organization led by Leon H. Keyserling and supported by a number of trade union leaders. In a speech on July 16, Congressman PATMAN called the attention of the House to the following passage in the CEP pamphlet which bears the title "Inflation—Cause and Cure":

"The so-called tight-money policy is both repressive and inflationary. The Federal Reserve System should resume sufficient support of the Government bond market to stabilize interest rates at lower levels, and to facilitate the management of the national debt.

"The inflation attributed to such policies during wartime was due to other causes. If necessary, the Federal Reserve System can counteract any inflationary effect of bond support by lifting bank reserve requirements.

"A more selective system of credit controls should be instituted. The overall tight credit approach restrains those activities which are in need of expansion, long before it touches those which need restraint. It is also hurtful to economic growth."

Congressman PATMAN commended the CEP study which he said cuts through all the mystical fog and gobbledygook which have been built up around the tight-money and high-interest policies. The fog and gobbledygook in the CEP pamphlet translates into an effort to deal with inflation by insuring an unlimited supply of cheap money for Government to spend while empowering Government to dictate to the people how much or little they may be permitted to borrow and spend.

Of critical importance in the unpegging of the U.S. bond market in March 1951 was a special study undertaken by a subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee in the winter of 1949–50. This subcommittee, presided over by Senator DOUGLAS, stated that:

"As a long-run matter, we favor interest rates as low as they can be without inducing inflation, for low interest rates stimulate capital investment." But Senator DOUGLAS' report went on to say:

"We believe that the advantages of avoiding inflation are so great and that a restrictive monetary policy can contribute so much to this end that the freedom of the Federal Reserve to restrict credit and raise interest rates for general stabilization purposes should be restored even if the cost should prove to be a significant increase in service charges on the Federal debt and a greater inconvenience to the Treasury in its sale of securities for new financing and refunding purposes."

SENATOR DOUGLAS' VIEWS

In the recent controversy Senator DOUGLAS has not repudiated these findings, nor has he specifically endorsed the Patman-Keyserling idea of raising cash reserve requirements of the commercial banks to offset the inflationary influence of Federal Reserve bond purchases. Senator DOUGLAS supported legislation enacted in July to make the existing system of member bank reserve requirements more logical and equitable.

The passage of this legislation by heavy majorities in both Houses of Congress, following careful study by their Banking and Currency Committees, indicated how little following there is for proposals to tie commercial banking lending power up in knots to cheapen credit supply for Government.

Senator DOUGLAS, however, joined in opposing removal of the bond rate limit, in pressing for a larger money supply, in urging Federal Reserve bond purchases, and in proposing that the Federal Reserve Board in the future should provide increased credit for a growing economy by Federal Reserve purchases of Government securities rather than by easements of cash reserve requirements applicable to the 6,279 member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

Senator DOUGLAS' view on the bond rate limit, as expressed in a major Senate speech on June 8, was that the pressure on money rates was temporary and that the Treasury should finance itself with obligations due within 5 years where no rate limits are applicable. The trouble with simply suspending bond offerings is that passage of time is constantly shortening public debt maturities. Too little of the debt is funded at long-term. The Treasury needs to keep in contact with the long-term investment market by periodic new issues.

Congressmen, including Mr. REUSS, had been critical of the Treasury for not having put more of the debt into long-term form. The trouble is that there always have been reasons to be mustered why long-term offerings should not be made. In times of boom it is held to be too expensive. In times of business recession the fear is that Federal bond offerings will cut into the supply of funds for stimulation of homebuilding. The incredible result is that, over 13 years, the U.S. Treasury has put out only five issues of bonds due after 20 years Even though the Federal Government has the largest debt, and the largest needs for funding debt, other borrowers have been allowed something like a monopoly claim on long-term investment funds. In 1953 the Treasury was scolded for paying 3¼ percent on 30-year bonds; the Treasury would be saving money today if more had been sold.

QUANTITY OF MONEY

In commending a larger money supply, Senator DOUGLAS took the point of view that inflationary hazards are being exaggerated. It is difficult to say exactly how much money is just right since—as Senator DOUGLAS recognizes—the rate of turnover changes. But it is broadly true that whenever business is booming, and people generally are anxious to borrow and spend more, there are risks of inflation as well as complaints of money scarcity. There is a speed-up in the rate of turnover, or velocity, which permits an unchanged money supply to handle increased expenditures. The general approach followed at the Federal Reserve has been to feed the money supply in periods of business recession and to hold back in periods of boom.

The last week of May the Joint Economic Committee under Senator DOUGLAS' chairmanship held hearings with a group of economists to explore the influence on prices of changes in the effective supply of money.

There was no general agreement on the proper rate of increase in the money supply or, for that matter, as to what money is and what should be included in measuring the money supply. Dr. John G. Gurley of the Brookings Institution pointed out that interest-bearing liquid assets, analogous to money, have been rising more rapidly than money supply, measured in the conventional way as paper currency, coin, and checking account deposits owned by the "public."

The previous chart illustrates the faster growth of interest-bearing liquid assets which holders may consider as "money in the bank" or the equivalent thereof.

As pointed out by Secretary Anderson and Chairman Martin, the build-up to new peaks in the outstanding volume of Treasury bills and other short-dated obligations represents an enlargement of the inflationary potential. Hence the importance not only of rebalancing the Federal budget but also of putting out long-dated bonds at every reasonable opportunity.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOND PURCHASES

Senator DOUGLAS, in urging Federal Reserve bond purchases, endorsed the view of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York that the Federal Reserve should drop its so-called bills only policy and intervene less infrequently in the U.S. bond market in periods of weakness. Wrapped up in this issue are thorny questions of the circumstances in which the Federal Reserve is warranted in intervening to maintain an orderly market, to help take up new Treasury security issues, and to influence or regulate conditions in the bond market in the interests of general economic stability. Whatever can be said for less infrequent bond transactions on the part of the Federal Reserve Banks, there is one vital benefit out of leaving the market free: the Treasury has a base from which to gage the receptivity of the market to new issues.

What disturbed many people was the emphasis given to Federal Reserve purchases of bonds. It seemed to be forgotten that the problem is to enlarge the investment market for U.S. bonds, not to reduce that market by drawing them off into the vaults of the Federal Reserve banks. A great deal of time was devoted by the Joint Economic Committee to the presentation of a thesis pressed by Congressman REUSS, that the Government could save itself some interest expense in this way, since the greater part of the Federal Reserve banks' net earnings are paid back to the Treasury. There is hardly any folly greater than operating a central bank of issue to see how much profit it can amass. The sky is the limit as long as people are amenable to depreciation in the value of their currency.

RESERVE REQUIREMENTS AGAIN

In hearings of the Joint Economic Committee July 27, Senator DOUGLAS pressed Chairman Martin to agree that Federal Reserve purchases of Government securities are no more inflationary than equivalent reductions in cash reserve requirements of member banks. Actually, the Federal Reserve has used both methods to allow greater liberality in extension of credit during periods of business recession. Federal Reserve holdings of U.S. Government securities right now are at a record peak. Bank reserve requirements, while eased in 1953–54 and 1958, remain considerably above the standard levels stated in the Federal Reserve Act.

The Federal Reserve Board has not raised cash reserve requirements since the bond market was unpegged in 1951. It is safe to increase the requirements, only when, as during the gold inflow of 1934–41, there is an uncontrollable excess of idle funds in the market. When, as now, the banks are under strain, a demand that they raise more cash to hold idle would quite simply panic the bond market. The problems the Treasury already has in financing itself would be compounded by forced bank selling on a falling market. These would hardly seem to be legitimate objectives for public policy.

Looking to the future, Congressman REUSS argued that the Federal Reserve, if not actually raising reserve requirements, should refrain from reductions. Thus, he would supply all additional needs for credit over the years through the purchases of Government securities by the Federal Reserve banks, helping the Federal Treasury through its share in Federal Reserve bank profits.

Congressman THOMAS B. CURTIS of Missouri, in an exchange with Congressman REUSS on the House floor, offered a "better way to try to keep interest rates down." Pointing out that "really what has driven interest rates up and has created this situation of debt management is the great size of the Federal debt and the budget deficits," Mr. CURTIS went to the heart of the matter:

"You can help by keeping these appropriation bills down. They are getting larger all the time. That is what you can do if you are really interested in keeping interest rates down. Otherwise, I can tell you, you are just talking a lot of nonsense and about a lot of useless monetary shifting, because it is the size of the Federal debt that has caused the trouble in managing it. This causes high interest rates. This creates the pressures that result in inflation."

BANK PROFITS AND INTEREST RATES

There is a common misconception, as noted by Treasury Secretary Anderson in an interview with U.S. News & World Report, that banks gain a great deal from rising interest rates. For one thing, banking is a highly competitive business, with competition not only among the thousands of banks subject to Federal law but also thousands of other financial institutions of diverse sorts, foreign as well as domestic.

Like other people, bankers have had increased expenses to face, more offices to open, and rapid growth in items handled. Increased interest rates themselves are not an unmixed blessing. When interest rates rise it is because banks are short of money to lend, because deposits are harder to get and hold, because higher rates must be paid on interest-bearing deposits, and because losses must be incurred when investments are sold to make room for more loans.

"Easy-money" advocates, looking back to 1947 when 91-day Treasury bills were pegged at ⅜ percent, can speak of bill yields (recent 3 to 3¾ percent) as having risen ten times. But dividends on bank stocks have shown no such rise. As a matter of fact the dividend return on bank capital funds has been among the most sluggish "interest rates" of all, moving up only from 3.3 percent in 1947 to 4.1 percent in 1958.

Bank profits, measured as a return on capital funds, have quite consistently hung around 8 or 8½ percent ever since 1947. The average for the past ten years, 1949–58, has been 8.3 percent, on the low side as business enterprise goes. For example, the average for manufacturing corporations over this period was 13.4 percent.

It is interesting to note that the peak profit rate for banks in modern history, nearly 11 percent, was attained in 1945 when profits on security transactions were virtually guaranteed by the pegging practice Congressman PATMAN wants to put back in force. His scheme to have the Federal Reserve purchase 2½-percent Treasurys to drive them back to par would give capital recoveries or gains to banks, though the biggest profits no doubt would accrue to speculators.

Bank profits in the aggregate, and also bank capital accounts, have risen since the war parallel with the rise in gross national product. Bank supervisory authorities keep urging banks to build capital funds faster. It takes more profits to support more capital funds.

Meanwhile, in terms of total assets, the commercial banks have lost ground relative to other classes of financial institutions. Dr. Gurley, in his testimony before the Joint Economic Committee, referred to this as a result of "controls"—something the "liberals" would increase. Banks need to share in economic growth, build profits and capital funds, if they are to strengthen their ability to serve the people. It is impossible to conceive of a vigorous free enterprise system where banks have their lending power sterilized to support cheap government borrowing.

PRESIDENT'S PLEA

President Eisenhower, in a strongly worded message August 25, expressed "grave disappointment" at the failure of Congress to remove "artificial limitations" on interest rates. He urged reconsideration, stressing that "no issue of greater importance has come before this session of Congress":

"We have worked tirelessly for a balanced budget. We need this balance so that we can avoid the deficits that lead to higher prices, to a rising cost of living, and to an eating away of the value of the billions of dollars that thrifty and farsighted Americans have saved. But congressional inaction on our debt management proposal could do much to offset the progress we have made toward fiscal responsibility.

* * * * *

"The vital interest of all Americans is at stake because excessive reliance on short-term financing can have grave consequences for the purchasing power of the dollar. The issuance of a large amount of short-term Treasury debt would have an effect not greatly different from the issuance of new money. Because these securities are soon to be paid off, their holders can treat them much like ready cash."

The President went on to emphasize that the Treasury must have the capacity to finance the Government's requirements in free credit markets without artificial restrictions:

"Let me state plainly as I can that this is not legislation to increase interest rates. This administration is not in favor of high interest rates. We always seek to borrow as cheaply as we can without resorting to unsound practices. * * *

"* * * To prohibit the Treasury from paying the market price for long-term money is just as impracticable as telling the Defense Department that it cannot pay the fair market price of equipment. The result would be the same in either case; the Government could not get what it needs.

"The issue * * * is whether we are going to demonstrate responsibility in the management of our Federal debt. Ours is the richest economy in the world. We have a large public debt, but we can certainly handle it soundly and efficiently if we remove the artificial obstacles to borrowing competitively in the free market.

"By adopting the administration's proposals the Congress would be demonstrating to people at home and abroad that we have the determination to preserve our financial integrity and to protect our currency."

Mr. Speaker, when the able and distinguished Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means on June 10, 1959, in behalf of the administration's legislative request on this subject, Secretary Anderson stated that he was appearing in behalf of legislation that was in the best interests of 177 million Americans. It is to be regretted that the Democratic Party has seen fit to disregard those best interests in favor of an irresponsible political decision to sit and wait.

NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COAD] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. COAD. Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of two widely separated but closely related facts:

First. That Mr. Nikita Khrushchev is due to arrive in the United States on September 15 for the announced purpose of a peace visit, coming here at the request and invitation of President Eisenhower.

Second. That the little country of Laos is undergoing the siege of international Communist attack. The tempo and the activities of the Communist attack against Laos and southeastern Asia in general are increasing, and the general condition and status of peace is rapidly deteriorating. The entire situation is becoming one of grave concern in this general area.

Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Premier, Nikita Khrushchev, is the head of international communism. As such, he has it within his power to continue or to stop the Laos conflict. The attempt may be to argue that this is not his direct concern, but I am sure that none of us is so naive as to think other than that he has a direct line of authority in this matter.

With this general condition, it is obvious that if President Eisenhower continues in his invitation to Nikita Khrushchev to make his announced visit as a proposed peace mission while the Laosian situation continues to deteriorate because of Communist infiltration and attack, then even before the visit has taken place, he has been taken in by Communist strategy. Therefore, I have today written the President, suggesting that he should immediately make it plain to the Soviet Premier that he should either renounce, denounce, and stop the Laosian disturbance, or the invitation on the part of the President be withdrawn forthwith.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that the American people can readily see the hoax of the Soviet scheme if their Premier is here spouting words of peace while his henchmen are killing the innocent victims of the small, independent, and underdeveloped countries of southeast Asia.

RUSSIAN DICTATOR KHRUSHCHEV

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DULSKI] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, the official invitation extended by President Eisenhower to the Russian dictator Khrushchev to visit our country this month has created grave and widespread concern among our people. The general confusion which has followed this invitation, caused by the uncertainty as to what this visit is expected to accomplish for the cause of free men has added to this concern. The ambiguous public speeches made by the Vice President since his return from Moscow has added immeasurably to this confusion.

Each year the citizens of Buffalo celebrate Polish Day. This is natural because of the very large numbers of Americans of Polish extraction who reside in Buffalo and the Niagara frontier. This year Polish Day was celebrated in Buffalo on Sunday, August 30. A very significant and forthright address was delivered on this occasion by the principal speaker, Mr. Henry J. Osinski, a prominent Buffalo banker and civic figure.

Mr. Osinski is eminently qualified by background and experience to address himself to the questions involved in the official visit to the United States by Khrushchev. He has held and now holds many positions of public trust. He has been a leader in charitable, civic, cultural, educational, and community activities in Buffalo. His experiences in the field of foreign affairs are extensive. From 1945 to 1949 he served as chief of mission to Poland for American relief to Poland. While directing this great American relief and rehabilitation program in Poland, he served as Chairman of the Council of Foreign Voluntary Agencies in Poland, representing 23 nations of the free world. The New York Times, in an editorial dated February 22, 1947, paid tribute to his skill and representative American leadership during his years of charitable work in Poland. I point out these accomplishments of Mr. Osinski to emphasize that we have people in our country who know the methods of Russian Communists from firsthand experience and who, at this time of grave concern for the future of mankind, do not hesitate to face up to reality.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent I include with my remarks the penetrating analysis given by Mr. Osinski in his address, "Poland Will Be Free but Not Through Khrushchev":

POLAND WILL BE FREE BUT NOT THROUGH KHRUSHCHEV

(Address by Henry J. Osinski, Aug. 30, 1959, Buffalo, N.Y.)

Polish Day in Buffalo has long been one in which Polish Americans and their many friends on the Niagara frontier have gathered in the spirit of the American picnic festival. It is a day set aside for renewing old friendships and making new friends while having a good time in the process. That is the spirit of our gathering today.

It is appropriate on this occasion however that we pause for a few minutes to observe the sad fact that in a few days we will have reached the 20th anniversary of the outbreak of World War II. I say this because Poland was the first victim, the first free and independent nation to be overrun by the dual tyrannies of nazism and Russian communism. At this very moment we are told that the overriding question of our times is "War or Peace?" The civilized world is again faced with the demands of the dictator who has delivered an ultimatum—an ultimatum to the leader of the free world to either submit to his demands or face a hot war. All this comes within the short span of 20 years since the outbreak of World War II and but 14 years since the defeat of the Axis alliance.

There is an ominous parallel between the events of today and the events which preceded the outbreak of World War II. A review of these events, forgotten by most people and unknown to many others, can help us to understand better the crisis of our times and to judge the wisdom or lack thereof exercised by our national leaders in meeting this crisis.

In the early thirties of this century a prophet of tyranny arose in Germany, trumpeting loudly what he called a superior way of life, the wave of the future. He predicted that his distorted concepts of life would conquer the world and build an empire which would last a thousand years. A new elite class was nurtured by this dictator as he seized absolute control of the German nation and turned her industries into full scale production of the instruments of war. That dictator was Adolph Hitler and his theory of life and government was nazism.

Soon after he seized power in Germany, Hitler began a cold war against all his European neighbors. First there was the Ruhrland; he took that territory without opposition. Then came his threats against Czechoslovakia which led to the Munich Conference on September 29, 1938. Here it was that Neville Chamberlain, the British leader, conceded the right of Nazi Germany to tear away pieces of territory from Czechoslovakia. He returned to London after this appeasement of the tyrant to proclaim the empty promise of "peace in our times." This event followed the Austrian Anschluss wherein Hitler seized and occupied by force that free and independent nation. Then following this Hitler turned his attention to Poland, opening up a barrage of propaganda, provocations against the Poles and manufactured incidents to justify his intentions to conquer that brave and democratic stronghold of Western civilization. But here he found a people who could not be scared by the tyrant's threat, a people who would fight for their right to exist as a free nation.

Thus thwarted in his plan of world conquest, he turned to diplomacy as a tool of aggression. He found a ready and willing partner in Stalin, then the leader of the Russian Communists. The Russians had had designs on Poland for centuries; they were ever fearful that the highly cultivated Poles and their dedication to freedom and individual liberty would inoculate the masses of the Russian Empire with this same spirit. It was clear to Hitler that the Russians would share with him the common objective of destroying the Polish nation. Without such an agreement it would have been impossible for either of these tyrants to advance their imperial plans.

Consequently, on August 23, 1939, the Nazis and the Russians entered into a secret agreement, now generally called the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact. Through this pact the Nazis and the Russians divided up Europe into spheres of control and military occupation. A secret protocol to this pact called for the partition of Poland and the ceding of the Baltic States to the Soviet Union. Thus the Russians were a full party to upsetting the balance of power in Europe which up until then had prevented the outbreak of World War II. By this pact the Russians assumed equal responsibility and guilt with the Nazis for the outbreak of the war. Without such a pact there would likely have been no war because without the Russians as his partners in evil Hitler could not have conquered Poland.

When the Nazis launched their war of aggression against Poland on September 1, 1939, they had as their full partners the Russian Communists. History records the manner in which the Nazis invaded from the west and the Russians from the east to place heroic Poland and her people on the anvil of tyranny. Fighting on two fronts against overwhelming odds, it is little wonder that brave Poland fell victim to the Nazi-Russian plot.

It is significant to note that preceding the signing of the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact, the Russians and the Nazis were carrying on secret trade negotiations. These negotiations were started on July 22, 1939, and through them the groundwork was laid for the political discussions which led to the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact. Thus we learn a lesson on how the Russians use the tempting prospects of trade as a tool to their political objectives. In this there should be a special lesson for those American industrialists who are tempted by the siren songs of Mikoyan and Kozlov, made when they visited our country a few months ago.

It is the same Russian Communists who share the guilt with Hitler and his Nazi followers for starting World War II who today are issuing ultimatums to the leaders of the free world. Stalin is dead but his current successor, Khrushchev, as a leader of the Communist conspiracy, then, as now, is equally guilty. No amount of propaganda, no efforts to purify this international criminal can erase from him and the Communist movement the guilt which attaches to him and his followers for launching World War II. The hundreds of thousands of Gold Star Mothers who lost their sons in that war will not forget this undeniable fact of history. Nor will the many thousands of veterans of that war who were maimed or crippled fighting for freedom and justice forget this truism. Every American should remember that it was the Russian Communists, with Khrushchev as one of their leaders, who robbed us of peace with justice and freedom for all nations following the cessation of hostilities. No American of Polish origin will ever forget that it was the Russian despots who were guilty of the Katyn Forest massacre, the Moscow-provoked uprising of the Polish Home Army at Warsaw which exposed these Polish patriots to slaughter by the Nazis while the Red Army rested and watched with cynical amusement from the other side of the Vistula River. These are the thoughts which occupy our minds as we contemplate the strange request of Vice President NIXON that we treat this international criminal Khrushchev with consideration and respect during his unwelcome visit to our country this month. How far have we drifted from our great American ideals and moral values that we should be asked publicly to pay tribute to this individual whose hands drip with the blood of the martyrs in freedom's cause? Such a request reflects moral and political bankruptcy and exposes the desperation of weak-willed men who know not the free spirit and moral strength of their fellow Americans.

It is fair to ask what lies behind the official invitation to Khrushchev to visit our country. We have been told by the Vice President that such a visit would allow Khrushchev to gain an accurate estimate of our strength and remove from his mind misconceptions about our country. No one but the most naive accepts this as an answer to the sudden, strange, and secret moves which led up to the invitation. To suggest that Khrushchev is not fully informed about the United States is to flirt with disaster. With his vast network of spies and informers and the many Russians visiting our country, he has the facts. They were able to steal the atom bomb secret, an example of how much they know about us. In fact recent events indicate Khrushchev knows more about our country than NIXON.

There can be no doubt that the secret talks the Vice President had with Khrushchev while he was campaigning in Moscow played a major part in the decision to submit to Khrushchev's demands that he be accorded special tribute by our country. This may explain why the Vice President has refused to disclose what took place, what was decided during these secret talks. Many Members of Congress have called for a full public disclosure by the Vice President of his secret talks with Khrushchev. To date all the American people have been allowed to hear and see are skillfully arranged propaganda films on the Vice President's conducted tour. Our television networks have been flooded with these films since the arrival of the Vice President in Moscow. Until the Vice President makes a full, public disclosure of his talks and agreements with Khrushchev, the shadow of another Yalta will hang heavy over his future.

In the visit to the United States by the Russian leader Khrushchev, who I repeat is the same individual who has been issuing Hitler-like ultimatums to the free world, we can also see the prospects of another Munich. During the past 2 years Khrushchev has been engaged in a desperate effort to force the free world alliance to accept a status quo. That is, to recognize as permanent the Russian occupation of all the once free nations of central and eastern Europe, including Poland. He has hinted that this is the price he is asking for a settlement of the Russian-provoked Berlin crisis

How similar this is to the events which led up to the Munich Conference, the results of which encouraged Hitler to believe the democracies were weak and decadent, that they would not stand up for their rights. Recall that Hitler was wooing England and France at the same time he was making all-out preparations for war. When he made threatening speeches and demands about territories contiguous to Germany, the Munich Conference was arranged to find some means of coexistence with him. At that time some people were saying that it is better to talk than to fight. When Chamberlain led the forces of appeasement to and in that Conference he provided Hitler with the public proof he needed that his plans were unstoppable, that he represented the wave of the future. Hitler got what he wanted from that Conference. While Chamberlain was assuring the British people of "peace in our times," Hitler was winning more followers to his cause and breaking down the will of others to resist his terror and despotism. It was not long thereafter that he felt strong enough to launch World War II with his Russian allies.

In this connection allow me to point out that Khrushchev can gain recognition for his demands on a status quo by several methods. He can reach an agreement with the Washington administration which, while making no specific mention of status quo, will have the same overall effect. He can also win his point through default by President Eisenhower. That is, if the issue is not brought out publicly in the context of a sharp and full rejection by President Eisenhower during the time Khrushchev is here in our country. Failure by President Eisenhower to take overt and public action on this question will hand to Khrushchev the political victory he seeks through his visit to our country. This is a certainty in mid-20th century diplomacy, controlled as it is by mass media propaganda and manipulation.

For the President or a White House spokesman to claim that Khrushchev's visit is of a social character, or that no discussions will be held on the basic issue of freedom or slavery will do nothing more than increase the black clouds of suspicion which now hang heavy over this entire affair. The American people will not be deceived by such ivy league chatter. Our friends and allies in the world will be shaken in their confidence in our history policy of "open covenants openly arrived at." Our proven allies behind the Bolshoi and Bamboo curtains will, after our disgraceful behavior during the Hungarian freedom revolution, be plunged into another era of despair.

The Captive Nations Week resolution passed by Congress during July raised the morale of freedom's cause in every quarter of the world. On both sides of the Bolshoi and Bamboo curtains American prestige was raised to that respectable level which it enjoyed following the courageous action taken in Korea, during the Berlin blockade and the Greek-Turkey crisis. The leaders of the Russian Communist conspiracy, particularly Khrushchev, believed and screamed over this rededication by Congress of freedom's cause. Then, unwittingly, the President, Vice President NIXON, and Secretary of State Herter turned their backs on this victory for human freedom by inviting Khrushchev to visit our country. I know this was an unwitting action because I am sure President Eisenhower feels as strong about freedom and justice as we do. However, this action does point up the dangerous confusion which exists in the conduct of our foreign affairs and national security programs. It appears the policymakers in Washington have not yet identified the enemy or if they have they refuse to believe he is serious in his boasts that he will "bury us."

In this atmosphere of confusion which grips official Washington the grave danger exists that Khrushchev will make many serious miscalculations about the aspirations and intentions of the American people. With the hammer and sickle being flown alongside of the flag of freedom in Washington, with our President riding in a parade of welcome with the symbol of tyranny, with our police protecting this sly despot, with certain elements of Washington social life fawning over this leader of slavery—what prospects are there that he will leave our beloved country with other than the state of mind which Hitler gained at Munich? With the army of Russian propagandists who will accompany him; photographers, motion picture specialists, and closed-minded reporters—one can only imagine the manner in which Khrushchev's triumphant march in the land of the free will be communicated to the people of the world. His will be the journey of purification the cleansing of sins without repentence, the granting of respectability without a crumb of merit and—badly needed prestige to offset his most recent crimes in Tibet and Laos.

The picture of Neville Chamberlain, with umbrella in hand, calling our "Peace in our times" is one that free men will not soon forget. The terrible price mankind paid for that allusion, that escape from reality, rests heavy upon the hearts and minds of the common man throughout the world. Peace in our times can never be the peace, the dreadful and enforced peace, of human slavery. That is the challenge which confronts us as free people. This has been and remains the real issue involved in all our struggles with the Russian Communists. No visit of Khrushchev, no amount of wishful thinking and no amount of national television shell game can erase it from the anvil of decision.

We see the plight of Poland today with heavy hearts. The first victim of combined Nazi-Russian aggression, she remains the victim of Russian occupation. Her people know the peace of slavery just as her people prepare for the day when Poland will regain her rightful place in the family of civilized nations. They remain true to freedom's cause, courageous in the face of tyranny and despotism, certain in the knowledge that justice shall govern the peace sought by all mankind.

Poland will be free—not by an act of Khrushchev and company, but despite them and those who are willing to kowtow to the tyrant.

UNION LABEL WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SANTANGELO). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALPERN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HALPERN. Mr. Speaker, regardless of the type of employment in which an individual is engaged—lawyer, engineer, office employee, factory worker—his standard of living depends upon the purchasing power of all working people. And this applies even if a person is in business for himself.

This week, September 7–13, the AFL–CIO is observing Union Label Week, as a dramatic reminder to all Americans that one of the most effective ways to help protect our living standards is to be certain that products purchased are union-made and that establishments we patronize offer union services.

This can easily be done by looking for the union label on all products the consumer buys, by patronizing business establishments which display the shop card or service button—the distinctive symbols of free trade unionism.

Union Label Week is a tribute to labor-management relations and an attestation of the benefits which all Americans, employers, employees, and the general public derive from dedication to high standards.

That is why this week is so significant. The lifeblood of America's economy is its production force—the working men and women of the Nation. Yesterday was their day. This is their week. It should be all America's. And, what more fitting a day to launch Union Label Week than Labor Day.

The event, I should point out, is a voluntary one. Governors and mayors of States and cities across the Nation have proclaimed September 7 through 13 as Union Label Week.

This year's observance has particular significance inasmuch as it falls on the 50th anniversary of the union label and service trades departmnet of the AFL–CIO.

In a letter to Joseph Lewis, secretary-treasurer of the department, George Meany, AFL–CIO president stated:

> It is with great pride that I salute the union label and service trades department on the observance of its 50th anniversary of service in the promotion of the union label, shop card, and service button and hereby preclaim Union Label Week to be observed from September 7 through 13.
> The union label and service trades department is performing a notable trade union function by calling to the attention of the general public the high quality of union label merchandise and the excellence of union service.
> The union label on a product means that it was made under decent working conditions by workers paid a good living wage. The union label is the hallmark of decency and democracy in the marketplace.
> Every trade unionist, by insisting on union label goods when buying from their merchants and informing their friends and neighbors of the value of buying union-made goods, are helping not only themselves but every union and every union member.

And the significance of the week was summed up extremely well and perceptively by William Schnitzler, secretary-treasurer of the AFL–CIO, when he stated:

> As a trade unionist I know that the union label, the shop card, and the service button are marks of pride that union workers have in the job they do in turning out the Nation's finest products.
> As a citizen—

Schnitzler continued—

> I recognize the economic and practical value of buying union-made goods and services because the union label tells me, as a consumer, that the products or service bears the stamp of approval of the people who know it best—the workers themselves. The union label tells all consumers at a glance that the product is made under decent working conditions by workers paid a good wage.

The occasion of Union Label Week is a golden opportunity for union members everywhere to publicize the tremendous purchasing power that is represented by the union-earned dollars of organized workers.

I am pleased to pay tribute to the concept of Union Label Week and the great body of men and women who have given it such significance. It is a week, the celebration of which can not only make union members proud, but all Americans who have worked together in the great effort to achieve a richer, fuller life in our beloved country.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SANTANGELO). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LINDSAY] is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for a little while on the subject of civil rights. There has been a great deal of speculation about the civil rights bill on which the Judiciary Committee, of which I am honored to be a member, has been working and which it has reported out. There is a great deal of asking as to why there is not a civil rights bill on the floor right now with adjournment only a matter of days away. There have been charges and countercharges made. I am not going to engage in speculation. I am going to make it unmistakably clear, however, that I for one want a civil rights bill. I want the bill that we in the Judiciary Committee sweated over this session for a long period of time and reported out. I not only want that bill, but I want some improvements to it, specifically, the addition of three matters which are not included in the bill but which should have been. I will have more to say about that in just a moment.

Even so, the bill as it stands, or rather sits in the Rules Committee, is a good bill and it is badly needed. The only thing I can categorically say on the subject of "Where Is Our Civil Rights Bill?" is that it reposes deep down in the Rules Committee which is controlled 2 to 1 by the majority side of this House. Say what you will, speculate all you want to, but the fact remains that there are eight Democratic votes on the Rules Committee as opposed to four Republican votes and today we have not got a bill.

Mr. Speaker, I for one am delighted that the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee has seen fit to initiate discharge proceedings to get the bill out of the Rules Committee. The discharge petition is on the Speaker's desk and I hope and trust that it will be signed as soon as possible by every Member of Congress familiar with and interested in this subject.

This is not a subject that we can play politics with. It is one that requires determination and action. So let us take whatever step is necessary to give us a bill. Is this too much to ask?

Let us talk about the bill just a little bit. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a moderate, balanced approach to several of the most urgent civil rights problems. Title I makes it a misdemeanor, not a felony, to obstruct court orders. Title II will permit Federal authorities to assist in the apprehension of those who have wilfully bombed or destroyed by fire any building or other real or personal property or who flees to avoid testifying in criminal proceedings relating to such acts.

Introduced into the hearings was a chart of bombings and attempted bombings of recent years, which chart shows close to 100 such incidents in every area of the United States.

Title III is a necessary supplement to part 4 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 which prohibits threats or intimidation designed to prevent persons from exercising their right to vote. The new proposal would implement Federal enforcement of this protection by requiring State election officials to retain for 2 years voting and registration records for all Federal elections and to make them available for examination by the Attorney General of the United States.

Title IV of the bill would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission scheduled presently to expire this month until September 1961. The need for a full-time study and investigation of alleged denials of equal protection of the laws in every corner of the country has been demonstrated.

I approve of the strict impartial and reasonable approach of the Commission, which has conducted significant investigations in both North and South. Its services are still needed. On this date, Mr. Speaker, just today, the Commission issued its report, a copy of which I have here in the Chamber. I have not had an opportunity as yet to study the report except for a cursory examination of the findings and recommendations of the Commission in the field of voting, housing, and education. At this time I am compelled to comment on some of the intemperate statements presently being made as to the work of the Commission. Realizing that men will certainly differ, as certainly they have a right to in their commentary on this report, it strikes me that we should allow ourselves full opportunity to study with more care the Commission's report before commenting so hastily.

I, for one, have awaited the completion of this document, and I intend to devote careful study to it. My preliminary examination leads me to the conclusion that it is fair and comprehensive, and I extend to the members of the Commission my congratulations for their diligence in discharging this difficult duty, which has been placed upon them by the Congress.

The Commission has been objective in getting all of the facts. The hearings, one of which was held in my own city of New York, did not function as a protagonist forum and their aim has been a dispassionate evaluation and appraisal of the facts, so that reason can be brought to bear.

In this framework I am pleased to note from my brief examination of the report that many of the views and findings of the Committee on the Judiciary of this House coincide with those of the Commissioners who have gone into these matters a good deal more thoroughly. This further motivates my desire to see the enactment of the civil rights bill.

One of the significant provisions of that bill is that extending the life of the Commission and it is, of course, immediately necessary. The Commission's examination of these problems must not be allowed to terminate with the job only half done. Furthermore, let every Member realize that the Commission has shown in this report that none of us from any section of the country is without sin on the subject of civil rights. And more importantly the requirement for the complete picture in this objective framework is necessary so that the Congress may provide all Americans with the equality of opportunity that our Constitution requires.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most important thing I could say in the brief time I have tonight is not so much what the civil rights bill that the Committee on the Judiciary reported out does, but rather what it does not do. I stated that the bill was good, as it stands, and that it is desirable and necessary and should be enacted. This is so. But there are three things that the bill does not do that I should like to bring to the attention of the House. The original bill reported out by the subcommittee contains three titles which did not survive the full committee's deliberation. In my opinion, the most important of these was title VIII, the so-called technical assistance program. This title represents a sensible, fair, and effective approach to the problems that may accompany the initial stages of school desegregation. It is a recognition of Government responsibility to share in the solution of such problems. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Flemming, testified before the subcommittee and gave a very good description of what the program would do. It is somewhat technical, but suffice to say it is designed to help those States which have inaugurated desegregation programs to get by the difficult period of transition. Carrying out their duty to comply, of course, with the rulings of the Supreme Court and other Federal courts, these States and communities are required to make adjustments which may impose temporary, but yet serious, financial and education burdens on their existing school system. Under this technical assistance provision, which is not in the committee bill at the present time—and I may say parenthetically here that under the discharge petition, the committee bill would be subject to amendment—Federal grants would be available to pay half the costs borne by local educational agencies for providing additional nonteaching professional services, which may be required by them in handling their desegregation programs. This would include various things such as supervisory workers, administrative personnel, pupil placement officers, social workers, visiting teachers, and so forth.

One very important comment that I should like to make at this point, Mr. Speaker, is that these funds are on a matching basis, thereby embodying the fundamental principle that Federal grants should be on a matching basis wherever possible.

Secondly, grants would not be made available except at the request of the local community. In other words, if a local community, which is subject to a State plan of desegregation or a local plan would like Federal assistance, it may come forward and ask for it. I was not a Member of Congress during the debate on and passage of the 1957 Civil Rights Act. But I followed the discussions closely and I had been with the Department of Justice when the act was drafted in the Department of Justice. It was argued then, incorrectly, that the legislation was severe, that it was interference with a local matter, that it was punitive. Those same discussions have been repeated in connection with the present legislation. It is argued that this is the long arm of the Federal Government telling one-third of the country how they should comport themselves. But here is the answer to that: This is a moderate bill. Criminal provisions are deemphasized; civil provisions are emphasized; and here in title 8 we have proposed a helpful, constructive step. The Federal Government says "We share in this burden, and the entire country shares in this burden because the entire country naturally shares the unhappiness that is caused any time there is a denial of equal protection of the laws."

In the closing moments, I should just like to comment briefly on two other matters which are not contained in the committee bill: One is the so-called title 3 provision. This provision, Mr. Speaker, is one which will give the Attorney General of the United States the power to initiate civil injunctive proceedings against individuals depriving a person of the equal protection of the laws by reason of race, color, religion, or national origin, upon the Attorney General's receiving a complaint from such person so alleging and upon the Attorney General's certification that the person could not obtain legal protection by his own efforts.

In addition title 3 would authorize the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief against any person hindering Federal or State officials from according equal protection of the laws, or from carrying out court decrees, and upon complaint received, to seek injunction against individuals who, under color of State authority seek to deprive persons of rights guaranteed by the 14th amendment. This provision, Mr. Speaker, broadens out the safeguards which the Congress gave to every man and woman in the act of 1957 with respect to the right to vote. What the Congress felt called upon to say at that time was that no person shall be denied the right to vote because of race, color, or creed. What this proposal seeks to do is to broaden the civil injunctive remedy that was provided for that particular constitutional guarantee. It is illogical to say that you may have statutory powers in respect of one right but not in respect of others.

No particular constitutional guarantee stands in any higher status than any other. If it is important to guarantee the right to vote it is certainly important to guarantee every other constitutionally protected right.

Lastly, the committee bill did not include a very important provision which the Secretary of Labor felt very strongly about, and that is the so-called title VI. This also was included in this subcommittee bill as it was reported out by the subcommittee, and it would give legislative sanction to the President's Committee on Government Contracts. This Committee under executive sanction policies Government contracting practices to promote the elimination of discrimination in employment based on race, creed, color, or national origin in the performance of Government contracts.

Secretary Mitchell, the Secretary of Labor, said in the hearings:

> If a Commission of this type is to do its job fully and effectively, its basis in law should be clear and unequivocal. If the task of Government to advance equal job opportunities is worth doing, it is worth doing right, and it is worth doing with the full weight of Congress behind it. An agency of this kind should be strengthened with congressional approval (hearings, p. 322, Mar. 12, 1959).

I concur in that statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I should like to say that, if we do not have a civil rights bill in this 1st session of the 86th Congress, I, for one, will be deeply disappointed. I am fully prepared to stay here as long as necessary in order to complete our work on civil rights. I understand that under the rules of the House, assuming we are on the eve of adjournment, that even should we get the necessary number of signatures on the discharge petition it will be too late for the bill to come to the floor of the House by that procedure. I do not know. Should we not take action on this matter now, it is important that it become the first order of business in January.

Again, I do not wish to speculate as to why we do not have a bill, what has happened to it, why it is buried in the Rules Committee, but I do say the majority of the House must face up to the fact that the Rules Committee is controlled on a 2-to-1 basis by the majority; and, if a civil rights bill of the kind I have been talking about is not brought to the floor of this House, then I think we will have to assess the responsibility accordingly.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOLL. I want to compliment the gentleman from New York for his fine analysis of the civil rights bill and on the fact he is urging the Members of the House to sign the discharge petition that is on the Speaker's desk.

I want to say that I am as unhappy as he is about the deletion of titles III, VI, and VIII. I had a bill myself on title VI. I hope that the gentleman's argument and presentation today in connection with the civil rights bill is persuasive to the point that members of his party will join others and sign the petition on the Speaker's desk.

I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Declaration of Independence, which was signed in 1776 starts out with a preamble that all men are created equal, that they are endowed, by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In a similar way, amendment 14 of the Constitution provides:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

I would say that the civil rights bill reaffirms the provisions of the Declaration of Independence and the provisions of amendment 4 to the Constitution. I hope that all Members of the House on both sides of the aisle will reaffirm their belief in these provisions of the Declaration of Independence and march up to the rostrum tomorrow and sign the petition to discharge the Rules Committee from further consideration of the rule.

Mr. LINDSAY. I thank the gentleman for his comment. His point is very much in order.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to associate myself with the remarks of my friend and distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. LINDSAY]. To my mind there is no more important challenge remaining for the Congress this year than the enactment of an effective civil rights bill. It would be nothing less than tragic if we allowed parliamentary tactics to thwart legislative action on this vital issue.

I have always been deeply convinced that we have a solemn obligation to those we represent, and, indeed, to the Nation as a whole, to protect and preserve our form of government and to ensure to every American that the dignity of the individual under a framework of law will be forever preserved and guaranteed.

Our Constitution is the lasting evidence of this conviction and we in Congress are entrusted to uphold and defend that Constitution—particularly the rights of all Americans, irrespective of color, race, religion, or national origin.

Continuous vigilance is essential if we are to uphold these principles, particularly in this day when we are faced with the supreme challenge from those forces in the world which are dedicated to the destruction of the human values in which we believe so deeply.

My own parents, who emigrated to these shores at the turn of the century in search of these very liberties, have instilled in me since my childhood a deep appreciation of such great human values. Therefore I cannot remain indifferent when qualified segments of our citizenry are denied the right to vote, or when under color of law citizens are deprived of equal opportunity to be educated to the full extent of their abilities, or to seek employment within their talents, or when American citizens are deprived of adequate and decent housing befitting simple human dignity.

Mr. Speaker, I want to draw particular attention to the additional views of my distinguished colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. LINDSAY] and of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CAHILL] in the report of the Judiciary Committee on H.R. 8601. They show that the problem is truly national in scope and that if the denial of equal protection of the laws occurs in one local community, the fiber of our national community is weakened. I join with Mr. LINDSAY and Mr. CAHILL in subscribing to the majority report on H.R. 8601, but with them I feel that title VIII, the so-called technical assistance provisions, which were excluded from the clean bill, should be approved by the Congress. We must show a proper spirit of understanding and cooperation with those communities in America which face serious problems of readjustment as a result of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

It is because of my deep feeling in these matters that I signed the discharge petition to bring H.R. 8601 to the floor for debate and vote. Despite the fact that this is an extraordinary parliamentary method, one which should be used only in rare instances, I was convinced that legislation designed to protect the very foundations of this Nation should receive full and timely discussion here in open forum.

I believe that if we take full cognizance of our oaths to uphold the Constitution, the theme of which is "liberty with justice for all," then we cannot adjourn this session of Congress without approving adequate and fair legislation to meet the great proven need.

Mr. LINDSAY. I thank my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts for his comments.

HYPROCRISY AND CIVIL RIGHTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SANTANGELO). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, first I should like to commend my very good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. LINDSAY] for his able support of the civil rights bill and the discharge petition.

I also wish to commend by colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOLL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for their support of this legislation.

All of these gentlemen have by their actions in this session of Congress given great support to this type of legislation.

Contrary to my very good friend and colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. LINDSAY] I would like to speculate a little bit on why we may not have civil rights legislation on the floor of the House during this session.

Mr. Speaker, a glaring hypocrisy marks the closing days of this session of Congress.

The hypocrisy is this: Those who clamored loudest for a so-called bill of rights for labor are trying to see to it that Congress adjourns without enacting legislation protecting the genuine Constitution-rooted civil rights of millions of Americans.

Responsible commentators charge there is an unholy alliance at work; that support for the administration's tough labor bill was purchased only in return for an agreement to block civil rights.

A document now on the Speaker's desk will prove whether or not this unholy alliance exists. The document I refer to is the Celler civil rights discharge petition. The signatures on this petition will give us a truer picture about this coalition or unholy alliance than any charges I might make.

Practical politics tells us that most Members from the South in either party will not sign this petition. Years of tradition and deeply imbedded patterns of social thought preclude this.

The American people, however, can and do realistically expect Members from the North and West of both parties to sign the petition. I predict a great majority of Democratic Members from these areas will sign it, but will this be true of Republican Members from the North and West?

It should be, for the petition proposes to bring before the House substantially the civil rights program supported by the administration. On many other occasions this year we have seen the solidarity which the Republican leadership can muster in this House and one wonders whether this same leadership and solidarity will be exerted on behalf of civil rights.

If a majority of Republicans from the North and West do not sign the petition the American people will be entitled to draw one of two conclusions—either, first, the Republican Party, despite protestations to the contrary, is really opposed to civil rights legislation, or second, the Republican Party, in a shabby deal, has bargained away any effective support it might otherwise have given civil rights this year as part of the price of obtaining support for the administration's tough labor bill.

If the latter is true, the coalition will have been effective, but at a dreadful price.

Who will pay this price?

Primarily it will be the millions of Negroes in America, the very people we are supposed to be trying to help.

The Negro will pay it as he continues to be denied the opportunity for an adequate education. He will pay it again as he continues to be denied his right to vote and, along with millions of Americans in other minority groups, he will pay it through continued discrimination in employment based upon race, creed, and national origin.

Another group who will pay the price for the coalition's handiwork will be those Americans who have seen the synagogues and temples of their faith bombed in senseless acts of violence which Federal authorities cannot now prosecute or prevent as efficiently as would be the case were a strong antibombing law now on the statute books.

No new purpose would be accomplished here by listing these bombings or recalling the dishonor roll of the places where mob violence has closed schools. These events are already inscribed indelibly upon the conscience of America and in the minds of other people whom we must face daily in the conduct of world affairs.

These things have created a false impression of America for, in reality, our national history, despite occasional regressions, has been one of progress toward wider enjoyment by more and more of our citizens of those civil rights without which there can be no real life of freedom.

The 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools was an important step in this direction, as was the enactment of the act of 1957 which created the Civil Rights Commission.

Both the decision and the creation of the Commission bespoke a principle. They put us as a nation on record as fostering real civil rights for many millions of Americans who do not now enjoy them as fully as they must.

Now we must take another step. We must enact a broad law giving substance to civil rights.

We have such a bill if we will pass it. I refer to H.R. 3147 as amended by a judiciary subcommittee after extensive hearings. The bill's nine titles combine to give us a balanced, moderate approach to our most urgent problem in the civil rights field.

Briefly, these titles covered obstruction of court orders in school desegregation cases; flight to avoid prosecution for destruction of educational or religious structures; authorization to the Attorney General to institute civil proceedings to protect the right to equal protection of the law; preservation of Federal election records; extension of the Civil Rights Commission for 2 years; creation of a commission on equal job opportunity on projects under Government contracts; provision for the education of children of members of the Armed Forces; provision for grants to assist States and local educational agencies to effect desegregation; and a general separability clause.

The full committee, in approving a clean bill, H.R. 8601, deleted three of these titles: the one authorizing the Attorney General to institute civil proceedings to protect civil rights; the one creating a commission on equal job opportunity on Government contracts, and the one providing grants to assist State and local educational agencies to effect integration.

This is the bill bottled up in the Rules Committee and the one a majority of the Members of this House should insist be brought upon the floor.

Once on the floor, the bill should be amended to restore authority for the Attorney General to institute civil proceedings on behalf of individuals being denied their civil rights and the provision creating a commission on equal job opportunity.

Enact a law containing these seven substantive points and Congress will have made a major contribution in the civil rights field.

Title I of H.R. 8601 would make it a Federal offense to willfully use force or threat of force to obstruct or impede court orders for school desegregation purposes.

In the opinion of the Justice Department there is doubt as to whether existing authority of Federal courts is sufficient to impose effective sanctions against members of a mob. The objective of this proposal is to remove that doubt.

Title II makes it a felony to move in interstate or foreign commerce to avoid prosecution for the destruction of educational and religious structures. Upon conviction for such destructive acts, this provision would make it a crime to cross State lines in a flight to avoid confinement. Flight to avoid testifying in such cases would also be punishable under this provision.

A bombing is one of the most difficult crimes to investigate. Most often the instrument of the crime, the bomb, destroys many of the clues. Here is an area of crime requiring highly skilled scientific detection.

The antibombing provision proposed in this section would make it easier for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to step quickly into such cases, thus bringing to bear the most skilled crime detection personnel at our command.

Title III of H.R. 8601 will require the preservation for 2 years of records in elections for Federal offices. Such preservation is vital if we are to provide more effective protection of the right of all qualified citizens to vote.

Title IV would extend the Civil Rights Commission for 2 more years. Unless this is done, the Commission's statutory life will expire.

Title V, providing for education of children of members of the Armed Forces, recognized the serious responsibility of the Federal Government for the education of children of military personnel.

These men and their families have no real choice of schools for their children. They must move their families from base to base, depending upon military requirements.

For example, the closing of the public schools in Norfolk, Va., involved 2,500 school-age children whose parents were on active military duty in the area. Of this 2,500, only 250 lived on military bases. These were the only ones for whom the Federal Government could have provided schooling had the schools remained closed.

The committee-approved bill would deal with this problem by empowering the U.S. Commissioner of Education to make arrangements for the education of children of members of the Armed Forces on active duty, whether or not residing on military bases, when the schools which usually provide public education are made unavailable to these children through closing by the State or local government.

I referred a few moments ago to H.R. 3147, the bill approved by this Civil Rights Subcommittee. Among the provisions deleted from this measure was its widely publicized title III which would have authorized the Attorney General to institute injunctive proceeding on behalf of individuals who have been denied civil rights.

This provision is, perhaps, the most important step we can take now in the civil rights field and should be restored to H.R. 8601 if we are successful in bringing the latter to the floor with a discharge petition.

This is important because the people most frequently victimized by denial of civil rights are the people least able to pursue their own legal remedies.

These are the people who live in fear and coercion. They most often lack the resources to go to court themselves and have nowhere to turn if not to the protection of the Federal Government.

Another section deleted from the bill and which should be restored is the one creating a commission for equal job opportunities in work covered by Government contracts.

More than civil rights are involved here because discrimination in employment on the basis of race, creed, and national origin hurts not only the individual jobseeker. Such discrimination prevents full and effective use of our national work force and, in so doing, injures the entire economy.

These seven substantive points will give us a balanced civil rights program.

I urge my colleagues to sign the discharge petition so H.R. 8061 can be brought to the floor and there, after inclusion of the two provisions I have just mentioned, passed to give us a meaningful civil rights bill.

What Congress does on civil rights at this time will tell the world whether civil rights are to fall victim to cynical government-by-coalition, or whether we can act on civil rights with statesmanship.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LINDSAY. I have listened with a great deal of interest to my very good friend from Pennsylvania, for whom I have the utmost respect as well as friendship. It is a fact, is it not, that there are two Democrats for every Republican in the House of Representatives? It is a matter of simple mathematics. If the Democrats want a civil rights bill, all they have to do is to snap their fingers and get it out; is that not true?

Mr. MOORHEAD. No, that is not true. I beg to differ with the gentleman. We all recognize that in the South of this country there is prejudice against civil rights. I believe that to get a bill out we must have a majority of the Members from outside of the South. I do not believe that any Republican Member from the South or any Democratic Member from the South would sign this petition. We must rely on Members from other parts of the country from both sides of the aisle. I hope that a majority of the Members on your side of the aisle will sign the petition.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is very interesting, because I am always puzzled by the double standard that seems to be used on the Democratic side of the aisle. We are Republicans over here, and we own up to our deficiencies as well as take credit for the things we do well. But on the Democratic side of the aisle it seems that all of a sudden the Democrats are disowning a chunk of their own party. I do not see how it is possible for a marriage, such as you obviously have over on your side of the aisle, to be a faithful marriage if occasionally one party to the marriage is going to be unfaithful to the other. What I am saying is that you may not have the best of everything at all times and you cannot be one happy family under the label Democratic Party for all things and then all of a sudden take a powder when it comes to responsibility for this subject.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and a member of the subcommittee that considered the civil rights bill. My learned and distinguished friend from New York was present at the committee meeting when the civil rights bill was voted upon. I am quite sure that he saw who voted for it and who voted against it. I would like to inquire whether it is not true that members of his party not only from the South but from the North ignored the request of the President of the United States who stood here on the rostrum and submitted his recommendations for the bill which was introduced by Mr. McCULLOCH from the minority side, containing specifically the recommendations of the President. They, in their own judgment, ignored his recommendations, their party leader. I want to know whether that constitutes solidarity and unanimity and such consolidation of effort that it can be distinguished from that to which he has pointed on the Democratic side.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York to answer that question.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should be glad to. In the Judiciary Committee there were members from the North, Democratic and Republican, who voted against some measures, and for other measures. My distinguished colleague knows perfectly well who they are. All I am saying is that there are two Democrats for every Republican on that committee and if the Democrats wanted to get a bill out that included all of the administration's recommendations, all they needed to do was to vote "aye."

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield so I may ask just one more question?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TOLL. Can the gentleman from New York, who represents the minority side, indicate the great support of the minority side for the President whose bill was reported out of the committee by marching up to the aisle tomorrow and getting signatures on the petition to discharge of at least half of his Members?

Mr. LINDSAY. We shall see what signatures are on the discharge petition. I firmly expect that there will be an overwhelming number of Members from both sides of the aisle. I, of course, will assume that there will be two Democrats for every Republican who will sign that discharge petition. There have to be. There are two gentlemen on that side for every one on this side.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from New York that in making my predictions I am also predicting that those Members from his side of the aisle who come from the South will not sign this petition. This is a regional problem. My remarks were partly political, I will concede, and were designed to help you possibly in goading a few more Members on your side, and I hope some more Members on my side, to sign the petition. I think the objective of all three of us who have carried on this colloquy is primarily to do everything we can to get this discharge petition signed so that as soon as possible, this session we hope, and if not, as early as possible in the next session, we will have civil rights legislation to work on.

Mr. LINDSAY. Hear! Hear!

MUTUAL COOPERATION AMONG NATIONS OF THE WORLD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALPERN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HALPERN. Mr. Speaker, the total challenge of the present demands of the United States and of the free world a complete and total response. If mankind is to shed the enervating scourges of poverty, ignorance and disease which have exacted their toll socially, economically and politically for so many ages, every resource at its command must be employed unreservedly and unstintingly. In a world drawn inexorably together by technology at an ever-increasing pace, common effort and cooperation are the only sensible responses to universal problems.

Pooled knowledge, skill, and resources offer incalculable benefits. Not only can a vastly enlarged program of assault against the ancient enemies of mankind be framed, but in the process lies the best chance for the growth of increased understanding, mutual respect, and a sharing of values among the peoples of the world the irrefragable rudiments of a just and lasting peace.

Mr. Speaker, since May, a bill designed to stimulate and advance mutual cooperation among the nations of the world has been languishing before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Senate Joint Resolution 41, the world health bill, has yet to be considered by the full committee. In these closing days of the 1st session of the 86th Congress there is still time for reporting this bill to the floor of the House so that the Members may have an opportunity to act on it and send it to the President for signature. If, unfortunately, the committee does not act, I sincerely trust and fervently hope that the issue will to keep alive during the recess period of the House, and that the full committee will make this bill the first order of business when Congress reconvenes in January.

Surely the world of medicine has never recognized national boundaries nor petty rivalries. It is a force which throughout history has bound men together—where a victory by one nation constitutes a triumph for mankind. Are we, through inaction, to suffer another missed opportunity to forge a fundamental component of peace? Must this crucial era witness another "lost chance" because of our insufficient vision and concern?

Senate Joint Resolution 41 has the full support of many of our leading citizens—General Bradley; Dr. Detlev Bronk, president of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and president of the National Academy of Sciences; and Dr. Howard Rusk, chairman, department of physical medicine and rehabilitation, New York University Bellvue Medical Center.

It is designed to bring together the skills and resources of the health experts of this country and the knowledge and capabilities of experts of other nations in a world attack on the unsolved problems of disease and disability which know no national boundaries.

It would create a National Institute for International Health and Medical Research to be organized within the existing National Institutes of Health. It authorizes the Surgeon General of the U.S. Public Health Service, under the general supervision and direction of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, to encourage, support, and cooperate in the planning and conduct of research, experiments, and studies relating to the causes, diagnoses, treatment, control, and prevention of physical and mental diseases and impairments of man. Such research, studies, and experiments may be carried on in the United States or in foreign nations. It also authorizes the encouragement and support by the Surgeon General of the international exchange of knowledge in these vital fields.

The bill, in essence, offers a positive program for the furthering of man's knowledge in the cause of health and the betterment of all mankind.

For such a purpose, its authorization of $50 million annually is exceedingly modest indeed.

With its provisions for exchange of knowledge and techniques, for aid to hospitals, universities, and laboratories which further its objectives, and, provisions for loaning equipment, improving facilities and cooperating with world health groups, it offers a medium for cooperation among all nations, including the U.S.S.R. and other Communist countries.

Should these nations refuse to share in the effort, it would only demonstrate their callous disregard for human welfare. But, the way would be open to them, and the means available for joining in a program for the benefit of all peoples.

The cause of peace demands total employment of every possible resource. This bill can provide us with an opportunity to construct a fabric of mutual cooperation leading to greater understanding among nations.

As one of the sponsors of the resolution in the House, I strongly urge that the bill be reported out. If it is deemed wise to amend it, such can be done. The vital thing is to secure its enactment. On this theme, under unanimous consent, I insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an editorial from the New York Times of August 23, advocating action on the bill this session:

THE HEALTH FOR PEACE BILL

Some of the arguments now advanced against bringing out of the House committee, where it has stayed since May, the health-for-peace bill do not ring entirely true. It is now urged in some quarters that there may be administration opposition unless the basis for the control of funds to set up an international medical research institute is modified. And if there is administration opposition, it is argued, there will be a formidable body of adverse votes if and when the measure ever comes to the floor of the House.

Presumably the form in which the measure passed the Senate by an overwhelming vote is acceptable to the House. But those in control of the measure now, although they say they favor it, are fearful of a presumptive administration attitude that would hurt its chances. Therefore, it may be deemed more expedient to do nothing.

There is one way to find out. Report out the measure, now, favorably. Put it to a vote. Adopt it, and then see what the administration attitude is. No one has had the temerity to suggest that a veto is even a remote possibility, since the measure stemmed from President Eisenhower's own recommendations. If the administration wishes to suggest some amendments at a later date they can be debated in due course, and if they are found desirable they can be adopted.

The important thing now is to avoid killing a vital measure by the simple technique of inaction. That need not be done, and the risk of it is far greater than that of any administration disapproval of details.

The world health bill, Mr. Speaker, can be a potent instrument of peace and good will.

WE MUST PRESERVE OUR HISTORICAL SITES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the desirability and the need for the extending of our highway system to serve better the requirements of a rapidly growing nation. Especially is this a compelling consideration in this era of continually increasing travel by motor. Creation of new transportation routes and expansion of existing roadways is essential to the defense, the commerce, the convenience and the productive strength of America.

Unfortunately, however, there have been a number of regrettable incidents where Federal highway building has tended to fail to take into proper account the importance of protecting intrinsic historical values. Several such instances have occurred in the Eighth Pennsylvania District which I have the honor and privilege to represent.

Bucks County and Lehigh County, which together comprise this district, have a common heritage. Both are rich in history. I shall not take the time of my colleagues to point out that the Nation was born on Pennsylvania soil and preserved there, and that the Bucks-Lehigh area includes some of America's best known, best loved landmarks. It was Rudyard Kipling, in his tribute to the Keystone State, who wrote, "The things that truly last when men and times have passed, they're all in Pennsylvania this morning."

Let us be agreed that the preservation of these historic spots which are a treasured part of our American scene is in keeping with a rising awareness of the essential urgency of holding intact for future generations these enduring reminders of events that shaped the course of our Nation's growth.

We are dealing not with a stodgy preoccupation with history, nor an obscure exercise in a pointless remembrance of things past. Rather, we are acknowledging the vibrant truth that to this soil were brought ideals of universal suffrage and religious toleration that took root in the American Colonies and which today distinguish the United States in the eyes of the world.

Certain it is that history and progress are in no way incompatible. Actually, the two have a proper affinity. Thomas Jefferson said, "History, by apprising men of the past, will enable them to judge of the future." James A. Garfield pointed out that "History is but the unscrolled scroll of prophecy." An ancient Greek penned that "History is philosophy learned by example."

Mr. Speaker, millions of Americans share a common feeling of reverence for history that transcends boundaries or geographical areas. I have cited my own District in Pennsylvania merely as an example. There are many other such areas in every part of our Nation which have their own unique and distinctive claim to history acquired over the years. I believe that the people of America have a mutual philosophy that history is indeed the witness of the times, the light of truth. Its use is to give practical value to the present hour—especially in these days when our American way of life is contesting with Communistic dogmas all over the world.

For these reasons, I have introduced a bill—H.R. 3459—which would amend the act of August 21, 1935, to provide for a determination of whether certain sites, buildings, or other objects are of national historical significance, and to prohibit the use of Federal funds for highway purposes which damage or destroy national historical sites, buildings or other objects.

The measure which I have proposed would require the Secretary of the Interior, on receipt of a petition, or petitions, from what he determines to be a sufficient number of interested persons of the affected area, to determine whether a proposed highway project will seriously damage a historical site, building or object of national significance. The Secretary's investigative scope would be confined, it should be emphasized, to projects proposed by a State or political subdivision of a State which is to be financed in whole or in part with Federal funds. The Secretary of the Interior would be permitted to conduct an investigation that would include, but not be limited to, holding public hearings at convenient locations, or affording the opportunity for such hearings. All this would be done in cooperation with local interests.

This phrase, "in cooperation with local interests," is an integral, meaningful part of the bill. It is intended to give recognition to the rights of local citizens. It is designed to prevent the overriding of the prerogatives of local people. One of the ever-present dangers of any massive program, be it highway building or anything else, is the possibility that authority to condemn property in the so-called public interest may be misused or subverted by thoughtless enforcement of power.

H.R. 3459 specifies that whenever the Secretary of the Interior determines that a site, building, or object is of national historical significance, he shall "forthwith" determine whether or not the proposed highway project will seriously damage or destroy such a site. If he comes to the conclusion that such damage would result, he notifies the Secretary of Commerce of his determination. The Secretary of Commerce, once notified to this effect, would not approve the expenditure of Federal funds for such a project. If the project prior to such notification had been so approved, no further expenditure of Federal funds would be made after the notification date. This latter stipulation is provided for in section 2 of my bill by amending chapter 3 of title 23 of the United States Code.

Mr. Speaker, there can hardly be any taking issue with the significance of protecting America's historical shrines. While the record shows a minimum of incidents where highway construction financed in whole or part with Federal funds has threatened damage or destruction of historical spots, there have been enough such incidents to underscore the wisdom of and the need for this Congress to enact legislation to prevent such occurrences in the future. The real remedy that this bill aims to achieve will be found in its provision for spelling out specific procedures by which local citizens alarmed and disturbed by a threat to history's honored shrines would be allowed to petition for a hearing and an investigation of their reasons for taking such a view. With this, there can be no quarrel, surely. This is not to say that such protests will always be determined to be valid and just. Interpretations of history's values and meanings are assuredly varied. But this bill would guarantee the right of local people to be heard in defense of what they sincerely believe to be a peril to a site, building or other object of national significance. And that is what we are here primarily concerned with.

Mr. Speaker, the approval of this legislation would, I am sure, be welcomed by every local, regional, State and national historical group in the country, and by all people who have a profound respect for the earnest dignity of history.

LAOS, A TIME FOR REEVALUATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WOLF] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend to the attention of the Congress the remarks of Senator MANSFIELD which appear on page 18306 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. His remarks are a factual, dispassionate analysis of the current problem facing the world in Laos. Senator MANSFIELD points out, and I certainly agree that military involvement in the Lao area should be as a last resort, not as an immediate reaction.

The current Lao problem raises certain questions in the minds of those who are familiar with our southeast Asia policy. For example, Senator MANSFIELD asks what "effect the vast increase in American officials in Laos from a total of two State Department people in 1953 when I first visited the country to the hundreds at the present time, representing numerous executive agencies—what effect this sprawling growth has had on the development of our policies, our relations and our deepening involvement with that country." Indeed, it would be very sad if the United States, because of bad administration and communication between the various branches of our Government, the Central Intelligence Agency, ICA, the State Department have acted as a catalyst for crisis in this area. It is about time that the administration reaffirmed the long standing historical fact that the Department of State should make foreign policy for the United States, not the various subsidiary or auxiliary agencies which have a much too important hand in the way our foreign policy is conducted.

Senator MANSFIELD raised two other questions which are food for thought regarding the Lao crisis. It should be remembered that in 1955, under the Geneva accords on Indochina a truce was arranged between the rebels who held the northern provinces of Sam Neua and Phong Saly and the Royal Lao Government. The truce was kept for 3 years by the presence of a peace team which included Poland, India, and Canada. At the insistence of the Royal Lao Government the peace team was withdrawn after an accord was reached between the Lao Government and the rebel leaders. Mr. MANSFIELD raises the question as to whether the peace team should have been withdrawn before there was an actual stable, peaceful, and politically sound situation in Laos.

The final question raised by Senator MANSFIELD concerns foreign aid to this area. A short while ago we heard statements by the administration that the hundreds of millions of dollars that we are spending in Laos has had the effect of keeping stability in and communism out. This, we find today, is not the case.

I firmly believe that now is the time to reevaluate two basic situations which bear on each other. We must change our foreign policy administration so that there is no more overlapping, undercutting, and contradictory decisions made by a host of different departments of our executive operating at cross purposes.

We must reconstruct our Far Eastern policy so that our efforts, the billions we have spent and the freedom of millions of Asians will not be sacrificed by haphazard policies and bumbling administration.

We must ask ourselves whether the policies we are pursuing in this area are for the good of the area or for what a certain few conceive of as being our interest in that area.

The present difficulty in Laos offers the United States an important chance to make our position quite clear; we will not tolerate aggression, but we will see that international agreements such as the Geneva accord are assiduously carried out. I am hopeful that the U.S. delegation to the United Nations will be instructed to take this position.

THE KHRUSHCHEV VISIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLAGHER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, the decision by the President of the United States to invite the Premier of the Soviet Union, Mr. Khrushchev, to visit this country was reached, I am certain, after long and careful deliberation.

Evidence of increasing hostility to Mr. Khrushchev's being received in this country, as a distinguished guest, and accorded all the honors of a visiting head of state, and the possibility that there may be outward demonstrations of this hostility, is a matter of grave concern to the Government. Violent demonstrations could undo all that the President hopes to achieve for peace by his face-to-face talks with the Soviet Premier.

Many of us have grave reservations as to the wisdom of inviting Mr. Khrushchev to the United States, but the President has made his decision, in an honest endeavor to do everything possible to bring about a just peace and to lessen the possibility of war. The decision having been made, we must support him in his action.

There is need to recognize that Mr. Khrushchev represents many things which we, as Americans, hate and despise. He is the leader of evil forces that are ruthless and unmerciful in stamping out freedom. Forces that have enslaved nations and sent millions to tortured deaths. Despite a tendency to improved relations with the Soviet, we should be mindful that there is no change in the Communist philosophy nor has the Communist objective of world domination been in the least altered.

For those who have felt the whiplash of Communist tyranny, we will grieve as we watch Mr. Khrushchev's welcome. Our memory shall be tortured by the thoughts of the freedom-loving people living under the Communist yoke in captive nations.

The invitation to the Soviet Premier to come to America involves grave diplomatic risks of which, I am sure, the President is well aware.

The Communist dictator riding with President Eisenhower down Pennsylvania Avenue in an open car, waving to the thousands who will line the streets, and with the Soviet and American flags flying side by side in the background will make the greatest single propaganda picture in history. There is no estimating, in terms of Madison Avenue, the dollar value of this one picture as it will be used by the Communist propagandists throughout the world. It is disconcerting to realize the effect of such a picture as it will be displayed in the captive countries and in those countries where the fight against communism is very real and very hot.

We must realize that the story of Mr. Khrushchev's visit and the manner of his reception will be reported in his country and in the captive nations in a controlled press, and, without doubt, the polite reception by the American public will be reported in the papers of those countries as "America's howling and enthusiastic welcome for the Soviet Premier."

Mr. Khrushchev is interested not in peace, unless it be peace on his terms; he is interested in propaganda and this he shall reap in abundance, and we shall unfortunately and regrettably help him accomplish this.

The President is fully aware of all these implications; he has weighed the risks involved and has elected to receive Mr. Khrushchev. Our duty is to support him in this decision, no matter what our personal feelings. The conduct and responsibility in the field of foreign affairs rests with him. This is not the time for political dissension for the decision once made becomes the policy of the United States. In the contest with international communism, we must support our Government. This alone is the issue—regardless how inviting the prospects for demogogic dissent.

Our conduct during the visit of the Soviet Premier might be guided by these facts:

That personally the President himself may find his duty in this instance distasteful and, indeed, he risks humiliation during unpredictable Mr. Khrushchev's stay here or when Mr. Eisenhower visits Russia.

That Mr. Khrushchev is being welcomed here not as a friend or wartime comrade, but merely as the formal representative of a foreign state.

That being host to a representative of a foreign government, with which we maintain diplomatic relations, requires that certain protocol be observed, this should not be interpreted as anything more than standing on ceremony.

The suggestion that I would like to make is that Mr. Khrushchev be received with polite restraint and that any display of hostility be discouraged. In this regard we might take a lesson from the citizens of Poland, a captive land, who received Mr. Khrushchev on a recent visit in just this manner. Theirs was an example we might best follow—to welcome the Communist leader with a polite lack of enthusiasm.

H.R. 8627, A BILL TO AMEND THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE RETIREMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANK STOCK AND THE SUBSTITUTION OF INTEREST-BEARING DEPOSITS IN LIEU THEREOF

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, my bill, H.R. 8627, a bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act to provide for the retirement of Federal Reserve bank stock and the substitution of interest-bearing deposits in lieu thereof, is intended to clarify the status of Federal Reserve System member banks.

Every national bank must be a member of the Federal Reserve System. State banks may or may not be members, as they choose. Even after they join, they are always free to withdraw. The stock ownership feature of the Federal Reserve System has been the subject of much discussion, speculation, and misinterpretation over a period of years.

Upon becoming members of the System, banks subscribe for the capital stock of the Federal Reserve bank in their district in an amount equal to 6 percent of their capital and surplus. One-half of this subscribed amount must be paid in and the remainder is subject to call. This investment in stock varies with the amount of capital and surplus of each member bank. Only one-half of the 6-percent subscription has ever been paid into the Federal Reserve banks.

The balance of 3 percent of the funds subscribed are not needed by the System, because up to now, these capital stock funds have not been used by the System in its operations. At the end of 1956, about one-third of $1 billion representing such stock, were on deposit with all Federal Reserve banks, while the total resources of the System ran into the tens of billions of dollars.

The relationship of Federal Reserve bank stockholders to the Federal Reserve System is quite different from that of any stock company or bank. It is indeed not stock, even though so-called and even though it yields to the member banks a 6-percent annual "dividend."

The owners of the stock have no claim on the earnings of the bank beyond that annual payment.

The money paid in by member banks to the Federal Reserve is not used in any operation of the System—that is, it is not invested in Government bonds or securities. The creation of credit by the Federal Reserve banks is limited by gold reserve requirements and is entirely independent of the capital of the banks. The paid-in stock funds are completely idle. They were not intended to and do not serve the purpose of capital. So eminent an authority as the late Dr. Emanuel Goldenweiser, Director of Research and Statistics for the Federal Reserve Board 1919–46, stated in 1952 that he regarded the stock of the Federal Reserve banks as an appendix, useless and unnecessary, which might very well be removed in any revision of the banking system. Further, he called the technical fact that the Federal Reserve banks are owned by the member banks "a piece of atavistic remnant of the philosophy of the Federal Reserve Act when it was enacted."

The members of the Federal Reserve Board have repeatedly reasserted the fact before congressional committees and elsewhere that the U.S. Government owns the Federal Reserve banks, that the commercial bank members of the Federal Reserve System do not own them, have no proprietary interest therein, and that the use of the word "stock" is a misnomer. H.R. 8627, which I introduced on August 11, would amend the Federal Reserve Act to provide for the retirement of Federal Reserve bank stock and the substitution of interest-bearing deposits in lieu thereof.

It is my conviction that this bill recognizes the basic relationship which in actual fact exists between the member banks and the Federal Reserve System.

Stockholding implies proprietary interest in an organization, and in no practical or technical sense may it be asserted that the commercial banks of this country which are members of the Federal Reserve System possess a proprietary interest in that System. They do not control the policies of the Federal Reserve banks.

The stock held by member banks has none of the attributes, rights or privileges of capital stock.

The banks holding the stock cannot sell it, vote it or hypothecate it. Upon joining the System they must make the required deposit and upon leaving the System that sum must be returned and their stock certificate is canceled.

Banks desiring in the future to become members of the Federal Reserve System would, in accordance with the provisions of this bill, obtain a certificate of membership in the System, rather than subscribing and paying for stock. When a member bank voluntarily liquidates or leaves the System, following passage of this legislation, it would have its membership in the System extinguished and the certificate of membership canceled.

Under the provisions of this bill, every member bank will maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district a sum equal to 3 percent of its paid-up capital stock and surplus, and may, when such action is deemed necessary by the Board of Governors, be required to deposit an additional sum not exceeding 3 percent of its paid-up capital and surplus. Any bank which is issued a certificate of membership will maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district an amount equal to six-tenths of 1 percent of its total deposit liabilities, subject to semiannual adjustment on the same percentage basis, and in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Governors of the System.

The changeover from member bank stockholding to deposits would be achieved under this bill by canceling and retiring currently held stock and paying or crediting the former owner the par value of such stock, plus interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month from the date of the last dividend. Each former holder of stock would be issued a certificate of membership in a Federal Reserve bank and in the Federal Reserve System. Member banks would thereby become depositors, which in point of fact they have been and are, rather than stockholders, which they have been in terminology only. As depositors they will receive interest on their deposits rather than an annual dividend as stockholders.

The interest-saving aspect of the bill should be noted. The new interest rate paid member bank depositors would be the lowest current discount rate charged by the Federal Reserve Bank at which the deposit is made, plus one-half of 1 percent. The present dividend rate is 6 percent. As of June 30, 1959, the countrywide prevailing rate in all Federal Reserve districts was 3½ percent, thus making the current interest rate which would apply to these deposits, 4 percent under this bill's provisions.

Attacks have been made against the stock ownership arrangement by the assertion that a privately owned banking system is issuing money in defiance of the clear declaration of the Constitution that only the Congress is endowed with such a privilege. This attack is made in connection with the issue of Federal Reserve notes.

All Federal Reserve notes issued in connection with monetary operations are obligations of the U.S. Government, and are not drawn on any funds derived from member bank sources. This accusation can be based on nothing in fact except the titular stockholding in the System by member banks.

No member banks' capital stock paid into the System are used in any financial operations of the System. Nor do the Reserve banks act as agencies for the investment of member bank funds.

Many political implications have been drawn in the past from the tenuous connection between member bank "stockholding" and "ownership" of the Federal Reserve banks. This bill would correct the belief that because member banks receive a stock certificate from a Federal Reserve bank, they are, therefore, owners of the System.

Among others, Chairman Martin of the Federal Reserve Board has stated that perhaps the most significant purpose of the stockholding provision is to make member banks feel that they are active participants in the affairs of their Reserve banks—for example, they help to elect two-thirds of the directors for their regional bank. This right to vote for directors, however, is not governed, limited or fixed by the banks' stockholdings. Those voting rights and privileges as set forth in the Federal Reserve Act, are dependent on membership in the system and not on the stock held. This bill would in no way detract from the privilege of member banks to elect six of the nine directors of a Federal Reserve bank.

Perhaps the most persuasive feature of H.R. 8627 is that terminology and relationships within the Federal Reserve System will be clearly and aptly redefined. As a consequence, the Federal Reserve System will be reinstated to the position which it was intended to fulfill—that of a banking system carrying out its operations as an agency of the U.S. Government and under the surveillance and support of the U.S. Congress.

The stocks of the member banks of the system will become deposits bearing interest. The misunderstandings and misinterpretations arising from such doubtful terms as "stockholders" and "ownership of the Federal Reserve System by commercial banks" will be eliminated. This bill represents a facing up to the facts in the matter of the proprietorship of the Federal Reserve System.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. HALPERN (at the request of Mr. DOOLEY), for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. MULTER (at the request of Mr. LIBONATI), for 10 minutes, today, and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. WOLF (at the request of Mr. LIBONATI), for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. GALLAGHER (at the request of Mr. LIBONATI), for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. DULSKI (at the request of Mr. LIBONATI), for 1 hour, on September 10.

Mr. MULTER (at the request of Mr. LIBONATI), for 1 hour, on September 10.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, for 10 minutes, tomorrow.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to extend remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or to revise and extend remarks, was granted to:

Mr. TABER, to revise and extend remarks made in Committee of the Whole and include a table.

Mr. WHITTEN, to revise and extend remarks made in Committee of the Whole and to include extraneous matter.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 9, 1959, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1362. A letter from the Administrator, General Services Administration, transmitting the report of the Archivist of the United States on records proposed for disposal under the law; to the Committee on House Administration.

1363. A letter from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, so as to authorize the use of surplus personal property by State distribution agencies, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Government Operations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. KEOGH: Committee on Ways and Means. H.R. 8318. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to exempt bicycle tires and tubes from the manufacturers excise tax on tires and tubes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1171). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ASHMORE: Committee on House Administration. House Resolution 380. Resolution relative to the investigation of the November 4, 1958, election in the Fifth Congressional District of Arkansas, and declaring that DALE ALFORD was duly elected to the 86th Congress; without amendment (Rept. No. 1172). Ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey: Joint Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers. House Report No. 1173. Report on the disposition of certain papers of sundry executive departments. Ordered to be printed.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

West Virginia Is Getting Shortchanged

OF

HON. KEN HECHLER

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. HECHLER. Mr. Speaker, over the past weeks I have stood repeatedly before this House and cited statistic after depressing statistic to bear out my contention that my State of West Virginia has been woefully neglected in the distribution of Defense Department sites, employment, and contracts.

My State, despite its many advantages, ranks a dead last among the 50 States in Defense Department spending and payroll, civilian and military. This, I submit, is an unfair situation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have compiled other figures which indicate that the Defense Department is not alone in its discrimination against my State—where unemployment remains shockingly high and where jobs are desperately needed.

Apparently the Commerce Department has a similar disregard for the needs and rights of West Virginia. I have here a list of Commerce Department employment in each of the 50 States, and the proportion of the total population which this employment represents.

Can you imagine where West Virginia stands? Again, at the very bottom of the heap.

West Virginia, with only 37 Commerce Department employees, has only .00184 of 1 percent of its total population on the Department's payroll.

I do not think one single Member of this House can fail to agree that this shocking story of abuse and discrimination deserves to be given fullest distribution.

When I was pointing out how the Defense Department has discriminated against West Virginia, I admitted that certain States were better suited than others for defense purposes. But I felt that, despite this fact, the evidence was clear that West Virginia had, indeed, been shortchanged.

By the same token, I am not suggesting that the Commerce Department install the headquarters of its Maritime Administration or its Coast and Geodetic Survey in a landlocked State such as West Virginia.

However, I am at a loss to explain how equally landlocked Idaho, with barely a fourth West Virginia's population, rates exactly five times as many Commerce employees, or how an inland State like Colorado, with less than two-thirds as many people, merits exactly 10 times as many.

I can say that some regional offices would seem ideally suited for the Mountain State. But apparently the Commerce Department has not even considered locating these facilities in West Virginia.

For example, my State is highly air-conscious, since the mountainous terrain makes other forms of transportation difficult. Yet there is not one single Civil Aeronautics Administration employee in the entire State.

In the field of business and defense services, which could be a godsend to assist industries and communities in overcoming the effects of a lingering recession, there is not one Commerce Department employee in the entire State. This division, which offers facilities and assistance so sorely needed, is not represented in the State where it possibly could do the most good.

Mr. Speaker, I do not ask needless favors for West Virginia. I do ask for equal treatment and fairplay.

I believe that it is becoming more and more evident that many departments of our Government, which ought to be concerned with helping stricken areas, have instead callously turned their backs on West Virginia, and until something is done to rectify this situation, I intend to keep bringing these disturbing statistics into the open.

Participation of Hodgenville, Ky., in the Abraham Lincoln Sesquicentennial

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK CHELF
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, I want to comment upon the participation of Hodgenville, Ky., in the Abraham Lincoln Sesquicentennial this year.

The birthplace of Lincoln is located near this enterprising town whose fine officials and citizens have taken a great part in the celebration of this outstanding event. The progressive, cooperative spirit which pervades this community and with which its splendid citizens are imbued has prompted them to be significant participants in this event of national importance and magnitude. Their unselfish dedication to this cause elicits the admiration of all who love our country and its great leaders.

The Abraham Lincoln Birthplace Land Corp. devised a brilliant and imaginative plan by which the section of the Lincoln birthplace farm not owned by the Abraham Lincoln National Historical Park is being released to schools, historical societies, prominent citizens, and individuals for their private ownership as historical heirlooms. In the words of the corporation:

> This property has been divided into square foot sections to allow as many as possible to share in this wealth of American heritage * * * a treasure with national significance which can be passed from generation to generation with a pride of ownership second to none.

The truth of this is borne out by the fact that the deed which was issued to me, giving me actual ownership in 1 square foot, section No. A–202, parcel A, of the original Lincoln birthplace land, is framed and hanging in a prominent place in my office here in Washington.

These planners are to be congratulated upon their wisdom and foresight in finding such a unique and interesting way to perpetuate the knowledge, understanding, and love of Abraham Lincoln.

As their Congressman representing the Fourth Congressional Kentucky District, I take pride in giving recognition to all of those wonderful citizens of Larue County, Ky., who have had a part, large or small, during this Lincoln Sesquicentennial Year, in paying homage and tribute to the Great Emancipator. Truly it is an honor to be able to serve such "salt of the earth" people here in the House of Representatives.

Veteran Kicked Out as Temporary Rural Mail Carrier

OF
HON. PETER F. MACK, JR.
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a few months ago the people living on Rural Route 2, Brighton, Ill., in my home county of Macoupin, were saddened by the death of Mr. Rolland Ingham, who had served as their rural mail carrier for 32 years.

Before his death Mr. Ingham had appointed Mr. Eugene Arban as substitute carrier. Judging from numerous letters that I have received in the last week, Mr. Arban was a popular choice. For example, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Krueger wrote, "We feel that Mr. Arban will be just as good in the next 32 years as Mr. Ingham was in the 32 years past."

It appears, however, that Mr. Arban will not get the opportunity to continue his good service to the people of Rural Route 2, not even as temporary carrier. Although Mr. Arban was named temporary carrier after Mr. Ingham's death, he suddenly was shifted back to the substitute position, effective September 5, and a man with no previous postal experience was appointed temporary carrier.

Mr. Speaker, while this procedure may have been legal, I believe most of my colleagues will agree that it is very unusual for political pressure to be brought to bear in the appointment of a temporary carrier. Normally, the substitute carrier continues as temporary carrier until the permanent carrier is appointed.

Mr. Speaker, I do not question the Republican administration's power to direct the appointment of a temporary carrier. I do wonder, however, that political intrigue should penetrate so far down into our postal system as to take away a few months' work from a man who has faithfully performed the task to the satisfaction of everyone on his route. It is especially remarkable when it is considered that the man so unceremoniously deprived of this temporary position is a combat veteran of World War II. Eugene Arban was a member of a bomber crew in the Pacific and suffered during 5 months' imprisonment by the Japanese. He returned to become a useful citizen of the Brighton community. He has served as commander of his American Legion post and as a member of his church's governing board. He also is active in chamber of commerce and masonic activities.

This Senseless Highway Killing

OF
HON. PAUL B. DAGUE
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. DAGUE. Mr. Speaker, with the delivery of our paper this morning we were confronted with the fact that over 400 of our citizens were killed on our highways over the Labor Day weekend. This senseless slaughter was due in great part to selfish disregard of the rights of others and points up the fact that the human element is the prime factor in highway accidents.

On the other hand, many people who died on the highways in the last few days would be alive if the manufacturers of automobiles had undertaken to build into their product a few simple safety devices that would protect front seat occupants from the inevitable impact with dash and windshield which causes so many fatal injuries.

Over the weekend I had the privilege of a demonstration of a patented device which operates on the front seat in the event of a collision with another car. The seat is so constructed that upon impact it tilts the passenger backward at an angle of some 30 degrees and thereby protects him from those head and chest injuries which in almost every collision are the lot of the unprotected front seat passenger.

The demonstration was arranged by an old friend of mine and at its conclusion I asked him to write me a letter briefly summarizing the advantages of such an appliance which he did as follows:

COATESVILLE, PA., September 5, 1959.
The Honorable PAUL DAGUE,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing this letter to inform you, and Members of Congress, of the greatest invention to prevent automobile injury since the four-wheel brake.

This is the first major breakthrough in the field of packaging the passenger.

This device operates on impact in a head-on collision. At thirty-one one-thousandths of a second the leading edge of the front seat rises 20 degrees. When inertia takes place the seat rises another 10 degrees and moves forward approximately 6 inches. By this motion the seat absorbs all the whiplash and inertia that is trying to throw the passenger through the windshield or against the dashboard and the steering column.

There are three great advantages to this device. The first is that it eliminates all personalities. The passenger does not have to hook up or turn on anything. The device is completely automatic. The second is it eliminates whiplash, which is the common cause of death in automobile accidents. The third is, it also protects the passengers in the front seat in a rear-end collision. The device snaps the locks and lets the seat scoop the passengers forward, so the shoulders are not rigid and there is no snap permeated to the spinal column.

I would like very much to see this device receive its rightful recognition in saving lives.

Sincerely yours,
HERMAN M. BREUNINGER.

In this connection I think it important to emphasize that I have no interest whatsoever in this device or its promotion other than that which stems from an abiding concern in the development of any mechanism that will reduce the number of deaths resulting from collision on our highways.

Incidentally, it occurs to me that our House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce might properly investigate the appliance in question and I am sure that a demonstration could be arranged which should prove convincing and might lead to its utilization, in the first instance, on public vehicles at all levels of government. The ultimate goal will not be reached, however, until this device, or a similar accessory, is installed on all automobiles at the factory.

One Hundredth Anniversary of Our Oil Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANTE B. FASCELL
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, certainly the oil industry's growth in this country has been a close parallel to and indicative of the great progress which we as a nation have made during the last century.

The tremendous importance of this industry to our security and economy has been demonstrated time and again over the past years since the discovery of oil in our country in 1859. This year the oil industry is celebrating its 100th anniversary; and in my own State of Florida, the last week in August was proclaimed as Oil Centennial Week in Florida. At the end of last year, there were 11 oil-producing wells in our State. Many celebrations and special events were planned to demonstrate the importance of the industry to local communities and the State and to express the feelings of good will which exists in Florida toward representatives of the industry.

Excerpts From Address of Senator Symington, Delivered at French Lick, Ind.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LYNDON B. JOHNSON OF TEXAS FOR
HON. VANCE HARTKE
OF INDIANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (for Mr. HARTKE). Mr. President, on Saturday, August 29, most of the leaders of the Democratic Party in my home State, and members of the Indiana Democratic Editorial Association gathered at French Lick, Ind., to hear an inspiring address by our distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON]. I would like to share his outstanding remarks with my colleagues and therefore ask unanimous consent to have a report of his address printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRENCH LICK, IND., August 29.—"The American people should demand from this administration a fair return on their tax dollar through the more efficient organization and management of the three Federal agencies which use most of the taxpayers' money," Senator STUART SYMINGTON, Democrat, of Missouri, said here tonight.

The Missouri Senator stated, "The record of many hearings before the Congress this year shows that billions of dollars annually could be saved in the Defense Department alone if that Department were organized in recognition of the nuclear-space age, instead of drifting along on the basis of tradition.

"Introduction of businesslike administration in the Department of Agriculture, plus sound fiscal management throughout the executive branch, would also cut out a great deal of misused tax money."

To support his conclusions about waste in Government, Senator SYMINGTON cited facts and figures. "Including estimates for this fiscal year," he said, "the total spending for the Department of Agriculture amounts to $34.9 billion just since 1952. This is more money than was spent by all the previous Secretaries of Agriculture put together, in the history of that Department."

The Senator added that "in 1958 the administrative costs alone of the price support program were 10 times as much as they were in 1952."

Senator SYMINGTON referred to the unsoundness of continuing to accumulate such large inventories. "Government investment in farm commodities," he said, "has increased from $2.5 billion in 1952, to $9 billion this year, and at the present rate of increase will amount to over $12 billion by this time next year."

Turning to the question of financial management, SYMINGTON said he was "seriously concerned with the mounting national debt, particularly with the increasing cost to the taxpayer of servicing that debt.

"The Treasury Department has failed to follow the well-established principle of debt management, namely, borrow at the lowest possible interest rates, and spread the maturity dates as evenly as possible over the following years."

The Senator cited a number of examples drawn from the official records of the Treasury Department during the past 3 years. He said, "Last March the Treasury Department offered a 4-percent 12-year bond, of which the public offered to buy $1.5 billion worth. Strange as it may seem, the Treasury accepted only $619 million of this subscription.

"Just a year prior to that, investors offered to buy at least $6 billion worth of a 3-percent 8½-year bond, and the Treasury decided to sell only $1½ billion.

"Based on these and similar illustrations," the Senator said, "I have come to the conclusion that the taxpayer would be paying at least a billion dollars a year less for interest alone, if the Treasury Department had acted as a good banker for the people's money."

Senator SYMINGTON said, "By far the largest source of saving of the taxpayers' money could come from a reorganization of the Defense Department. Service rivalries, duplication of weapons systems, and the multiplicity of separate forces without centralized commands result in the waste of billions of dollars every year."

A Sectional Analysis of the Civil Rights Bill, H.R. 8601

OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a sectional analysis of my civil rights bill, H.R. 8601, which has been reported to the House. The analysis follows:

A SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL, H.R. 8601

TITLE I (OBSTRUCTION OF COURT ORDERS)

Section 101 of the bill proposes to amend chapter 73 of title 18 of the United States Code with respect to obstruction of court orders in school desegregation cases. Accordingly, it amends that title by adding at the end of the chapter a new section. The measure would make it a Federal offense to willfully use force or threats of force to obstruct or impede court orders for school desegregation purposes; upon conviction, the offender could be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 60 days or both.

It further provides that other injunctive or civil relief against the type of conduct made criminal by this proposal is not to be denied on the grounds that such conduct is a crime. In this regard, provision is made that any fine or imprisonment imposed for the violation of such an injunction shall not be in addition to that imposed for a violation of this section.

It further provides for the exemption of the acts of the student, officer, or employee of a school when the act is done at the direction of or is subject to discipline by an officer of the school.

TITLE II (FLIGHT TO AVOID PROSECUTION FOR DAMAGING OR DESTROYING ANY BUILDING OR OTHER REAL OR PERSONAL PROPERTY)

The proposal would make it a felony, punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than 5 years or both, to move in interstate or foreign commerce, to avoid local prosecution, custody, or confinement after conviction for willfully damaging or destroying or attempting to damage or destroy by fire or explosive any building, structure, facility, vehicle, dwelling house, synagogue, church, religious center, or educational institution, public or private. Flight to avoid testifying in criminal proceedings relating to such offenses would likewise be punishable.

TITLE III (FEDERAL ELECTION RECORDS)

Section 301 would require the retention and preservation for a period of 2 years of any general, special, or primary election records involving candidates for Federal office. The Federal offices are the Office of the President, Vice President, presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Resident Commissioner of Puetro Rico. It would include all records and papers in the possession of election officers relating to application, registration, payment of poll tax, or any other act requisite to voting in such elections. Provision is made, however, that where such records are required by State law to be deposited with a custodian, such election records may be so deposited and the duty of retention and preservation then devolves upon that custodian. A willful failure to retain and preserve the records is made an offense punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year or both.

Section 302 provides that any person, whether or not an officer of election or custodian, willfully steals, destroys, conceals, mutilates, or alters any of the records required to be retained and preserved shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year or both.

Section 303 provides that such records as required to be preserved by this title shall, upon the written demand of the Attorney General or his representative to the party having custody, possession, or control of them shall be made available for inspection, reproduction and copying by the Attorney General or his representative. Demand, however, must contain a statement of the basis and the purpose therefor.

Section 304 provides that when a demand is made by the Attorney General, the record shall be produced either at the principal office of the person upon whom the demand is made or at the office of the U.S. attorney in the district in which the records and papers are located.

Section 305 provides that unless ordered by a court of the United States, neither the Attorney General nor his representative nor any employee of the Department of Justice should disclose any record or paper produced pursuant to this title except to the Congress and any of its committees, governmental agencies, or in the presentation of a case or proceeding before a court or grand jury.

Section 306 provides that in the event of nonproduction, jurisdiction would be conferred upon the Federal district courts to resolve any dispute which might arise in connection with the exercise of the authority conferred upon the Attorney General by this title including appropriate process to compel the production of the record or paper.

Section 307 defines the term "officer of election" to include any person who under color of the law performs or is authorized to perform any function, duty, or task with any application, registration, payment of poll tax or other act requisite to voting at any one of the enumerated elections at which votes are cast for candidates for the specified Federal offices.

TITLE IV (CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION EXTENDED FOR 2 YEARS)

Section 401 would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission for an additional 2 years. Under the Civil Rights Act of 1957, the Commission is required to submit its final report not later than September 9, 1959. Provision is made in this section also for an interim report to be submitted to the President and the Congress not later than September 1, 1959.

Section 402 of title IV would remove any doubt as to the authority of the members of the Commission to administer oaths.

Section 403 would amend the Civil Rights Act of 1957, section 105(a), by deleting the words "in accordance with Civil Service and Classification Laws" and inserting "without regard to the provisions of the Civil Service Laws and the Classification Act of 1945, as amended."

TITLE V (EDUCATION OF CHILDREN OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES)

Title V would amend Public Laws 815 and 874, 81st Congress, as amended, which authorize Federal payments to school districts which provide free public education to children whose parent resides or works on Federal property which is not subject to State or local taxation.

Section 6(a), Public Law 874, now requires the Commissioner of Education to make arrangements to provide free public education for children residing on Federal property if the State and its subdivisions may not spend tax revenues for their education or if no local public educational agency is able to provide suitable free public education for them.

Section 501 of the bill would amend section 6(a) to permit the Commissioner to make arrangements also for children of members of the Armed Forces on active duty, whether or not residing on Federal property, where the schools usually provide free public education for them are made unavailable to them by official action of State or local governmental authority and no local public educational agency is able to provide them with suitable free public education.

Subsection (b) of 501 provides complementary amendments to section 6(d) of Public Law 874. The existing provision permits the Commissioner, when he makes the arrangements for provision of education for the federally connected children, to make such arrangements only with a local educational agency or with the Federal agency having jurisdiction over the property on which they reside. Where this new category of children of Armed Forces personnel are involved, arrangements could also be made with the head of the Federal department or agency having jurisdiction over the parents of some or all of the children.

Section 6(d) of Public Law 874 limits the arrangements to those which provide for the use of either facilities situated on Federal property or facilities belonging to a local educational agency. The amendment provided in subsection (b) of section 501 would make this limitation inapplicable where the Commissioner is required to make these arrangements for the new category of children.

Section 502 of title V of the bill amends Public Law 815, 81st Congress, as amended. The proposal of the bill would authorize the Commissioner of Education to acquire possession of any school building constructed with the aid of Federal funds after the enactment of the proposed amendments contained in this section, when the local educational agency which owns the building is no longer using it for free public education and the Commissioner needs the building to provide education for children of military personnel or for other children who reside on Federal property. While the school remains in Federal possession, the Commissioner would pay the local district a rental fee proportionate to its share of the cost of constructing the building.

Section 6(b), Public Law 815, 81st Congress, as amended, now requires applications of local educational agencies for the approval of construction projects, which must be filed before the agencies may receive payments to help finance such projects, to contain or be supported by various assurances relating to the authority of the local agency, and other relevant matters. The amendment proposed in section 502 of the bill would add to this provision the requirement of an assurance that any facilities constructed with aid under this law, the application for which is approved after the enactment of the bill, will be made available to the Commissioner in case they are not being used to provide free public education and that the Commissioner needs them to provide facilities for the education of children who reside on Federal property or whose parent is on active duty with the Armed Forces. Subsection (b) of section 502 would amend section 10 of Public Law 874.

Subsection (b) of section 502 would amend section 10 of Public Law 815. Existing law now requires the Commissioner to make arrangements for the constructing or otherwise providing the minimum facilities necessary for the education of children who will be residing on Federal property at the end of the next fiscal year if the State and its subdivisions may not spend tax revenues for their education or if no local educational agency is able to provide suitable free public education for them.

Section 502(b) of the bill would amend this section to permit the Commissioner to make such arrangements to provide, on a temporary basis, such facilities for children of the members of the Armed Forces on active duty, whether or not residing on Federal property, where the schools usually providing free public education for them are made unavailable to them by official action of State or local governmental authority and no local educational agency is able to provide them with suitable free public education.

Section 502(c) of the bill further amends section 10 of Public Law 815 by adding a new subsection which authorizes the Commissioner of Education to take possession of facilities constructed with the aid of funds provided for by Public Law 815, under an application approved after the enactment of the bill, if they are not being used for free public education and are needed by the Commissioner, as minimum facilities necessary for the children residing on Federal property or children of the Armed Forces personnel on active duty. Possession would be taken under the terms and conditions prescribed in regulations of the Commissioner of Education. Payment by the Commissioner of a reasonable rental on the portion of the facilities financed with non-Federal funds would be required. Provision is also made for the return of those facilities to the school district when the district reopens those schools and makes them available to the federally connected children or when the Commissioner no longer needs the facilities for direct Federal operation purposes. However, the best interests of the federally connected children, the objectives of this proposal, and the commitments to the personnel employed in the direct Federal operation would be factors to be considered in determining the appropriate time for the return of the facilities.

TITLE VI (SEPARABILITY)

Section 601 merely provides that if any provision of this act is held invalid, the remainder of the act shall not be affected thereby.

A New Pension Bill for Veterans of World War I

OF

HON. STEVEN V. CARTER

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to make a statement in support of a new pension bill for the benefit of veterans of World War I that I introduced today in the House.

As you know, these veterans are arriving at an advanced age in life and are being forced into retirement because of age, disability, and various other reasons. If it is not already the case, they are upon the threshold, as a group, of facing their waning years of retirement and old age without earning capacity to offset the steadily increasing costs of living. As is the case with all our veterans, we owe this group of men our national gratitude. It appears possible, through such proposals as I have included in my bill, to assist our World War I veterans in their old age on the mutual basis of need and reward.

It would be difficult to determine just how many veterans of World War I are already receiving some form of public assistance through State and local agencies. There are also undoubtedly certain sums of tax money being deducted on a personal exemption basis by the persons on whom many of these veterans have become dependent. These are considerations which should be, and I am confident will be, taken into account in any hearings held on a bill such as I am proposing.

My bill does away with requirements which presently exist to the effect that a veteran must be totally and permanently disabled in order to receive a nonservice-connected pension, even the liberal construction of such requirements. A World War I veteran would automatically qualify for a pension under my bill upon reaching the age of 62 years, regardless of the degree of any disability he might have or the status of his employability, provided his income fell within the maximum limitations prescribed in the bill. This would correct one of the greatest and most glaring deficiencies in our present veteran's pension regulations. To demonstrate, let me quote from Report No. 537 of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, of which I have the privilege to be a member. This was the committee report accompanying H.R. 7650, which has since become Public Law 86-211.

In addition, the committee has been studying the adjudication of non-service-connected disability pension cases and has reached the conclusion that VA regulations and their current applications are inadequate as they apply to the cases of certain veterans who have high disability and advanced age. In some of the cases examined by the committee, the VA has denied pensions to veterans on the basis that the veteran is employable, notwithstanding the fact that these veterans were above age 60, had high disability, in some instances, from 40 to 80 percent, and were earning far less than the amounts specified by the income limits.

It was noted that VA commonly denies employability in the case of certain farmers, despite the fact that the farmers are old and severely disabled. The denial is on the basis that the farmer is employable even though the farmer's income is very low and the farm which he controls is very small and occupies only a small part of his time.

It is recommended and expected that the Veterans' Administration will review its regulations as they relate to employability of veterans with advanced age and high disability to assure that these elderly veterans with high disability, who are meeting the income limits, will not be denied pensions on the basis of employability when they are not working a substantial part of the time at a gainful occupation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my bill will serve to eliminate that area of administrative discretion which the Committee on Veterans' Affairs feels has resulted in many unfair and inequitable decisions made by the VA in pension matters.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. 9134

A bill to provide a new pension program for veterans of World War I

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress finds that a substantial number of veterans of World War I are in need of assistance today. It is therefore the purpose of this Act, as an indication of the appreciation of the United States for the service rendered by such veterans, to provide benefits, based upon the need therefor, to this meritorious group, as a reward for such service.

SEC. 2. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 15 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 513. World War I veterans

"(a) The Administrator shall pay to each veteran of World War I who meets the service requirements of section 521 of this title, and who has attained the age of 62 years, a pension at a rate prescribed by this section.

"(b) If the veteran is unmarried (or married but not living with and not reasonably contributing to the support of his spouse) and has no child, pension shall be paid at the monthly rate set forth in column II of the following table opposite the veteran's annual income as shown in column I:

Column I		Column II
Annual income
More than—	but Equal to or less than—
$600	$600	$140
1,200	1,200	100
	1,800	50

"(c) If the veteran is married and living with or reasonably contributing to the support of his spouse, or has a child or children, pension shall be paid at the monthly rate set forth in column II, III, or IV of the following table opposite the veteran's annual income as shown in column I:

Column I		Column II	III	IV
Annual income
More than—	but Equal to or less than—
$1,000	$1,000	$140	$145	$150
2,000	2,000	110	110	110
	3,000	75	75	75

"(d) If the veteran is in need of regular aid and attendance, the monthly rate payable to him under subsection (b) or (c) shall be increased by $70.

"(e) The Administrator shall deny or discontinue payment of pension under this section when the corpus of the veteran's estate is such that under all the circumstances, including consideration of the veteran's income, it is reasonable that some part of the corpus be consumed for the veteran's maintenance."

(b) The analysis of such chapter 15 is amended by inserting immediately below the following:

"512. Spanish-American War veterans."

"513. World War I veterans."

SEC. 3. Section 521 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(c) Where a World War I veteran has been granted pension under section 513 of this title, pension may not thereafter be paid to him under this section."

Labor-Management Reform Legislation

OF

HON. TORBERT H. MACDONALD

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, during the closing days of this session of Congress action was taken on a labor-management reform bill. It is my hope that the President will sign this labor reform bill into law at the earliest possible moment.

When the subject of labor-management reform legislation came before the House last month for consideration I supported the bill that was favorably reported out of the House Education and Labor Committee, the so-called Elliott bill. This bill was designed to do away with abuses of union power that were exposed by the McClellan committee. These abuses included unwarranted secondary boycotting, blackmail, extortion, and picketing. It was also designed to protect the union members from being victimized by unscrupulous leaders and the general public from labor racketeers.

During the last few days of this controversy. I was pressured by both extremes to vote against the committee bill. Some pressure came from those antilabor elements who wanted a punitive law against all unions, other pressure came from those who wanted no bill at all. I felt that it was my responsibility as a Representative of all the people in my district, to resist pressure from both extremes and to support an effective and fair bill which would drive the hoodlums out of power without hurting honest, law-abiding unions.

I stated at that time that if the Landrum-Griffin bill were to pass in its entirety, Massachusetts and the whole New England area would suffer economically. It was my judgment that many of the measures included in the Landrum-Griffin bill were designed solely to prevent the unionization of plants in the South. While this bill paid lipservice to driving racketeers out of the labor movement, it seemed to me that their real intent was to prevent any organizational drives by legitimate unions in the presently nonunionized South.

As you probably know, many of the Southern States now run ads in our papers asking industry to come south, where there is cheaper electric power furnished by public utilities, such as TVA, local tax rebates, and subunion pay scales. The committee bill, which I favored, was stringent, and would have driven out the hoodlums and racketeers while still giving opportunity for legitimate unions to operate all over the country as they do in New England.

I could not understand why plant operators in New England should pay high union wages and have to compete with low wage scales in nonunion Southern States.

I, therefore, voted on three separate rollcalls against the Landrum-Griffin bill. However, I also stated at the time that if the House and Senate conferees would agree on a fair and effective labor reform bill, I would be happy to vote for it. It seemed to me that was the only way we could have labor reform legislation that would serve the best interests of our entire country, labor and management alike.

I was, therefore, pleased that the conference report substantially adopted the Kennedy-Elliott bill and supported the position of such a bill against both extremes. In other words, the conference report as passed by the House and Senate was closer to the Kennedy-Elliott bill than any other bill, and, of course, that bill was patterned after the original Kennedy-Ives bill.

Without going into all the major changes made in the Landrum-Griffin bill by the conference committee, I would like to point out that the following changes safeguarding the rights of the trade union movement and the workingmen which comprise these unions were made upon the insistence of the Kennedy-led Senate conferees:

First. Subcontracting: The legality of restricting subcontracting in the garment industry in order to keep out sweatshops was established.

Second. Consumer appeals: The right to publicize nonunion goods to consumers, without causing a secondary work stoppage, is recognized in the conference agreement. Employees will also be entitled to publicize, without picketing, the fact that a wholesaler or retailer sells goods of a company involved in a labor dispute. All appeals for a consumer boycott would have been barred by the House bill.

Third. Organizational picketing: The conference report preserves the right to engage in organizational picketing provided that a petition for an election is filed within a reasonable time not to exceed 30 days. Unless the union won the election, the picketing would have to cease. The House bill would have virtually banned organizational picketing.

Fourth. Organizational picketing: The right to engage in purely informational picketing without filing a petition for an election is secured provided that the picketing does not halt the pickup or delivery of goods or the rendition of services by the employees of other employers.

Fifth. Primary strikes: The conference report recognizes the right to engage in primary strikes and primary picketing, thereby eliminating the danger that the House bill would sometimes invalidate such picketing.

Sixth. Defense to picketing: Although the conference agreement contains a prohibition upon picketing an employer who has a contract with another union, language was added to the House bill which would make it a defense to show that the General Counsel had issued a complaint charging the employer with unlawfully dominating, maintaining, or assisting the other union.

Seventh. Union liability for damage suits: The section imposing liability on labor unions for damages in the case of unlawful organizational picketing was eliminated.

Eighth. Federal-States jurisdiction—No man's land: The conference report permits the States to take jurisdiction over labor cases over which the Board currently refuses to assume jurisdiction. Under the House bill the NLRB could have refused jurisdiction over additional cases. The Board's present jurisdictional standards are broader than they have ever been, thus insuring more unions and employers protection of the act.

Ninth. Economic strikers: The House bill contained no provision permitting economic strikers to vote in representation elections. The conference provision permits strikers to vote in representation elections within 1 year after the commencement of a strike.

Tenth. Struck work: The conference report preserves existing law on the question of the right of labor to refuse to work on struck goods. The House bill would have limited this right.

Eleventh. Bonding: The conference report places a $500,000 limitation on amount of bond required to be taken by a union officer; the House bill had no such limitation.

Twelfth. Elections: The conference report makes the Secretary of Labor responsible for bringing suits in a Federal court to remedy improper elections. The House bill would have provided that individual members could bring suits in U.S. district courts to overturn improper elections.

Thirteenth. Membership lists: The House bill gave candidates for union office the right to inspect and copy from membership lists in union shops. Conference report restricts this to one inspection 30 days prior to an election without right to copy.

Fourteenth. Employer reporting: Conference strengthened immeasurably employer reporting section 203 which was meaningless in the House bill.

With these 14 measures incorporated in the conference report that were not contained in the original Landrum-Griffin bill, I voted for passage of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that this conference report on the labor-management reform bill that has passed the Congress will protect union members and legitimate union activity in the overwhelming percentage of cases. At the same time it will eliminate the overpublicized so-called racketeering which has come from a very small percentage of the labor movement which led to a public demand for this action. I am, therefore, pleased that I could support this sound and effective labor reform measure.

Address by Senator Long at Graduation Exercises, Loyola University

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RUSSELL B. LONG
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, one of the finest honors which has ever been conferred upon me was the action by Loyola University of the South recently when the faculty of that institution presented me with an honorary doctor of laws degree.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my address on that occasion may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—will the Senator from Louisiana permit me to extend him my hearty congratulations for this deserved honor?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I thank the Senator very much. I doubt whether I deserve the honor, but I am flattered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I, too, wish to extend my congratulations to the Senator.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I thank the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR RUSSELL B. LONG BEFORE GRADUATION EXERCISES OF LOYOLA UNIVERSITY, MAY 27, 1959

It is indeed an honor to share the platform with your Congressman HALE BOGGS, and speak to you tonight.

Inasmuch as Congressman BOGGS will not have the opportunity to speak tonight, permit me to say that he is undoubtedly one of the great leaders of the National Congress. If we are ever successful in making order out of the chaos that exists in the field of foreign trade, for example, it will be in large measure due to his enlightened leadership. The contribution of HALE BOGGS to the improvement of our National Government has been great indeed, but with each additional year he becomes more effective, more competent, more productive. All Louisiana is proud of your Congressman.

And now speaking for myself, it seems but a short time ago that I was receiving a bachelor of arts degree from my old alma mater. Time flies and things happen in a hurry after you graduate from college. May I be excused for failing to remember what the principal speaker said on the night that I graduated. I cannot recall a word of it.

The night was hot, I had plans for the evening. I wanted to get it over with. Let us hope that my experience was not in that respect a forerunner of yours tonight.

Yet on that June night of 1940, almost every man and woman in the class could have told you then and could tell you now some of the things that our President Franklin D. Roosevelt was saying over radio that year.

He told us that our generation had a rendezvous with destiny. It was true.

We were not of the maturity or experience to become the heads of government and immediately provide the top leadership, but we had the good judgment to help the Nation choose good leaders and we played a part in deciding which direction American policy would take.

Few of us were privileged to make command decisions, but we supported those decisions. We provided the workers, soldiers, officers to make those command decisions successful.

Our generation saw America emerge as the greatest Nation on the face of the earth, and the leader for all free peoples.

We learned how to attain full employment for our millions of workers who had suffered a cruel depression. We discovered many of the secrets of the Diety and made them available for the service of mankind.

We struggled successfully against totalitarian dictators, we were able to preserve the freedom of mankind in many parts of this planet.

Yet in spite of the best we could do, the dangers and the challenges will be even greater for you. Unless your generation measures up to those challenges, then the next 20 years will see world leadership pass from this Nation just as the last 20 years saw it come to us.

Such a result could spell disaster for this planet.

You will be in all respects equal to the task, and your achievements will be greater than those of my day if you can do two things, simple to say, difficult to achieve.

First by working in the right direction.

Second, by trying very hard to get there.

It has been my impression that most of our difficulties in this world and in this Nation exist because there are a lot of people working in the wrong direction.

You will be surprised to discover how many of them there are, and how powerful some of those people are.

Most of them do not think of themselves as doing anything wrong. Most of them are the victims of misunderstanding, on the one hand, or shortsightedness on the other.

Yet such people make it twice as hard for us to get good results. Some of them actually succeed in doing things that hurt their Nation notwithstanding their honorable intentions.

A few years ago, one of our best known Washington cartoonists, Herbert Block, better known as Herblock, published a volume of cartoons demonstrating his philosophy of life. He illustrated vividly one point that some of us never forgot.

Most U.S. Senators work hard, but many of them are working in the wrong direction. Herblock gives this illustration:

"Suppose I am a working man who is in need of a home for his family, and suppose my Senator is fighting against legislation which would help me to get a better deal. Then I am no better off because he is working hard. I would be better off if he had stayed in bed."

More than 30 years ago, a boy by the name of Roy Riegels played center for California's Golden Bears. He made what was perhaps the most famous run in the history of the Rose Bowl. It was a long run—just 6 inches short of 70 yards—but that was not what made it famous. The world remembers that run and remembers Roy Riegels because he ran in the wrong direction.

There is no reason to discuss here how Roy Riegels happened to make this mistake. The fact is that he did do it and that it typifies in this one memorable act out of a lifetime of acts, the many public officials, businessmen, and leaders in all walks of life, who all too frequently head out in the wrong direction—and who often refuse, as Riegels did, to listen to the shouts of their teammates who know they have gone wrong.

Roy Riegels may have lost his direction temporarily, but he did not lose his courage. He played a lot more good football the next year. He was elected captain of the team.

When statesmen are going in the wrong direction it is even harder to persuade them to turn around and reverse their field. It is hard for a man to be certain that he is wrong; frequently it might actually be popular. It might actually appear to offer personal profits although the results may be bad for the Nation or for the world. A man might stick to his direction even when he realizes that what he is doing is resulting in more harm than good.

It is for these reasons that we should be fulsome in our praise of a man with the humility to admit his mistake and change his direction. The moral being: If you can't be right, at least be humble.

This misdirection applies to people on all sides. It applies to the businessman who selfishly demands things which are bad law from a legislator. It applies equally to the legislator who is more interested in serving again than he is in serving well.

So let me say this to the men of Loyola who officially take their place in the great arena of the world tonight.

When the great Scorekeeper marks your record down, be certain that all of your yardage was in the right direction. Or, at least, be certain that you tried to reverse your field before you scored for the wrong side.

Now a word about this thing of trying hard enough—time and again statesmanship is failing this Nation and this world because men who know what is right are not doing enough about it.

A great number of us feel that we are not maintaining sufficient armed strength to save this Nation in the event that we are forced to fight. Some of us were successful recently in offering an amendment to a bill appropriating money for the various departments of Government, stating specifically that no further reduction should be made in the strength of the Army or in the strength of the Marine Corps.

Those who represented the U.S. Senate, in conferring with the House of Representatives, threw in the towel on this issue in short order. When Members of the House of Representatives refused to discuss the matter, the Senators on the conference committee were quick to take "no" for an answer.

Some of us tried to force those who represented the Senate on the conference committee to go back and fight again for the position taken by the U.S. Senate. We lost, but we tried and we tried hard. If Senators who offered excuses for failure had voted with us rather than offer those excuses, we would have won. We will try again this year, and again next year. If we try long enough and hard enough we will prevail.

In dealing with other branches of our Government, we have frequently found that a Federal administrator can make a law work out the way it should work if he determines to reach that result. If he does not want it to work out he can find a thousand reasons why the law cannot succeed. The same thing is equally true of your Representatives in Congress, your Governor, your State legislature, your mayor, and your city council.

As a Member of the Senate of the United States, I have at times kidded other Senators about the excuses that some of them offer for their failure to vote for a matter which they admit to be in the national interest. It is either "too hot" or "too cold"; or perhaps a line from the recently popular song could better describe it: "It's the right time, it's the right place, but it's the wrong face."

At the moment, our Nation is failing to make itself understood among the 1 billion people of the world living in countries which are opposed to communistic slavery. The prevailing view of the ordinary people of the United States and the prevailing view of the people throughout the world toward our foreign aid program is that the program is of benefit to the unscrupulous politicians. Many persons in Government as well as the vast majority of the little people around the world feel that the program should be reformed. The trouble is that there are too many people who take a defeatist attitude about the matter. They are not trying hard enough.

Then, let us consider for a moment the actual problem of mankind's hope for survival due to the threat of all-out thermonuclear war over Berlin, Germany, Korea, or other trouble spots.

How much has actually been achieved in working out some sort of an arrangement to assure that literally billions of innocent people are not exterminated in an atomic war?

How much is being achieved in making sure that the possible causes of war are reduced?

What has been done to assure that there will be some limitation of the battle area and that the combat forces will be confined to those limits should war occur?

What has been done to limit the size of nuclear weapons and to control the testing which is polluting the atmosphere of this earth?

Very little. Yet the Russians have as much interest in survival as we do.

We cannot forever excuse our failures by blaming it all on the other fellow. Sometime we should approach these international conferences with the understanding mutually that both sides will be condemned for failure to come back with some sort of agreement.

Certainly one of two things must be wrong: Either the approach has not been right or the effort has not been sufficiently determined.

We must try again, reconsider our approach, and try harder.

When statesmanship fails the people perish. Statesmanship cannot succeed without steadfastness to a worthy purpose. It cannot succeed without tireless effort.

The flags of this Nation have been at half mast for the past 3 days out of respect to the late John Foster Dulles, former Secretary of State. In a number of ways, I differed with Mr. Dulles. I never disagreed with his purpose.

One thing everyone will forever admire about John Foster Dulles. He gave us everything he had. He drove himself to his grave fighting for a foreign policy which he had helped to shape. Any failure of his policy could not exist because the man failed to fight for it.

This may sound like simple words of advice, but I believe you will find that this advice will bring you a successful and satisfying future if you follow it.

First, be sure you are heading in the right direction and then give it all you've got.

Weapons of Free Men

OF

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it was with the deepest regret that I was forced to inform the commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Mr. John W. Mahan, that I could not be with him in Los Angeles to speak before the Veterans of Foreign Wars' annual convention on September 2 because of pressing business in the Senate.

I had hoped to pay tribute to the splendid work of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and its ladies auxiliary and to pay particular tribute to the leadership of Commander in Chief Mahan, Senior Vice Commander Louis G. Feldmann—who has now been unanimously elected as the new commander in chief—Ted Connell, the new senior vice commander, and Robert E. Hansen of South St. Paul, Minn., newly elected junior vice commander in chief.

The leadership of these men has been extraordinary, and they deserve the congratulations of every American for their work in behalf of American veterans and their families, a strong national defense, and a vigorous community welfare program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the address entitled "The Weapons of Freemen," which I had prepared for delivery on September 2, 1959, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WEAPONS OF FREEMEN

Commander Mahan, officers of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, delegates and distinguished guests, it is an honor to be asked to address this splendid group of men who have given so much for the country we all love, who have served our country overseas, and who continue to serve at the community, the State, and the national level.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and their auxiliary are a great power for good in this Nation of ours. I have had the privilege of seeing your effective efforts in my own State of Minnesota. I have seen the good work you have done for young people, for better, cleaner, more healthful communities. I have watched the enthusiasm and vigor with which you roll up your sleeves and go to work on a project. In fact, in just a few days, one such project will be completed, with the dedication of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Cancer Research Institute at the University of Minnesota, to stand as a symbol of all that is unselfish, public spirited, and generous among the men and women who make up your great and vital organization.

I have always admired the way in which the Veterans of Foreign Wars has been able to work tirelessly and effectively in behalf of veterans and their dependents, and at the same time give leadership and impetus to constructive proposal to help all our people.

So during this session, we saw your leadership working ceaselessly to secure a new Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs—which we should have—and at the same time working for a desperately needed balance in our Armed Forces, for urgently needed modernization of our conventional forces, for more airlift and close air support.

I have seen your splended commander in chief and my admired and respected friend John Mahan, giving personal leadership not only to the cause of improved veterans and widows pensions, but also to the cause of preventing that tragic and senseless waste of young lives which we know as juvenile delinquency.

I count it my great good fortune to have as my friend and valued consultants not only Jack Mahan, but also your dedicated and respected director of legislative affairs, Omar Ketchum, the officers of the Minnesota department such as Department Commander Don Otte and Minnesota's brilliant national councilman, Bob Hansen. The advice of men like these is not only welcome, but sought after.

And it is because of the great respect and admiration I hold for you men and your great organization that I wish to speak to you of a very serious matter this morning.

There is an old British saying: "Beware the hug of the bear." I hope that every American will remember those words when the Chairman of the Supreme Council of the Soviet Union begins what could become a spectacular Soviet success in his visit to the United States this month.

For Premier Nikita Khrushchev is a new kind of bear, so far as the history of Russian leadership is concerned. He is clever, able, forceful and vigorous—and dangerous. He kisses babies, he shakes hands, he is disarming in his manner.

But his mighty Soviet war machine is not disarming.

The Russian Premier is above all else a political man. He seems to prefer to outsmart his opponents, to trick them, to undercut them, to outmaneuver them. He can and has used force—as in Hungary—to work his will. He is shrewd, tenacious, and tough. He has survived forty years of purges, secret police, and all the other terrifying trappings of the Communist police state. He has either buried all his principal opponents, or set them to watching the machinery in obscure corners of the Soviet Union.

He would rather talk us into something than go to war about it. He would rather outsmart us, out maneuver us, out produce us, and out last us than to take the awful risks of a nuclear exchange.

The President of the United States has invited the Soviet Premier to visit this country. I support that invitation. And I support the President's visit to the Soviet Union.

The President has said that he hopes this exchange of visits with Mr. Khrushchev will "help create better understanding between the United States and (Russia) * * * and will promote the cause of peace."

I hope so. I truly hope so.

Khrushchev's visit to the United States may help to free him from some of the misconceptions about this Nation that he now has. It may help to convince him that the United States is stronger, wealthier and more unified than his own propaganda artists have painted us. Most of all I hope that he is able to see a Nation and a people who have worked hard, and who are working hard, to overcome great and serious problems, who are capable of enormous bursts of energy and of sustaining a high pitch of effort for years on end.

I hope he will have time to discover that ours is not a Nation of lotus eaters, not a people of soft touches. I think it is imperative that he understand that here in America there is an ever sharper and stronger competitive spirit than that which drives the men in the Kremlin.

And when he comes, let us meet him with the courtesy that is bred of strength and confidence in ourselves. We are his hosts. Let us listen to him, let us hear what he has to say.

But being courteous, we can also be candid.

Being pleasant, we can also be persuasive.

Mr. Khrushchev should feel the spirit of this people as well as see the face of our land. It will be both instructive and enlightening, I think, that the Soviet leader should hear and see precisely what the American people think and believe.

He should hear—without any shouting, discourtesy or demonstration—that Americans are ready to cooperate with the Soviet Union in every constructive way—but that we are opposed to the brutality, the oppression, the cruelty of Soviet imperialism. He should discover that the American people—not just what his propagandists call U.S. ruling circles—are passionately united in their belief that man must be free to choose his own way of government, that no nation has a right to rule another, and that freedom of speech, of movement, of assembly, of religion are not just words in a book but rather are articles of a living faith and component parts of our social order. He must see that our people actually believe these are the God-given rights of men and women everywhere. He must know that free men are prepared to struggle harder, more stubbornly, more tenaciously, and more effectively than the forces of communism. He must learn that we are prepared to live and die for these rights. We have before and are prepared to do it again.

It will be a tragic mistake if our people are led to expect too much from the forthcoming exchange of visits, if they are permitted to believe that with perhaps a new era of diplomatic courtesy, the underlying struggle with the forces of world communism has come to an end.

Yes, let us be prepared to talk, to negotiate, to confer. And let us have unfailing patience. Under the shadow of a nuclear holocaust, let us earnestly and sincerely search for a way to reduce tensions, to minimize the chances of a terrible explosion into outright war, to persuade our opponents that it is in their own best interests to resist the temptation to turn to force.

But even as our President and the Soviet Premier are talking in the White House or the Kremlin, the two worlds they represent will be colliding at a thousand points. Today the forces lock together in the great city of West Berlin and in the wild back-country of Laos. Yesterday they were joined in Tibet, Budapest, and Korea. Tomorrow?? Who knows about tomorrow?

We are engaged in a total struggle—far and away more than a question of mere military force. In this kind of struggle—economic, political, diplomatic, intellectual, scientific, cultural—everything counts. Tanks are important. So are teachers. Missiles are vital—so is money. Atom bombs are weapons—so are airways, oil pipelines, and sea lanes. Trained divisions are required—but no less do we require doctors, dentists, and diplomats—the best we have, the best we can train, are needed to strengthen our own society, and to go out to represent us in Asia and Africa and Latin America.

Underlying it all is the yawning gulf between two societies—one which gives no importance to freedom and the dignity of the human person and the other whose very roots strike down to the bedrock of the Judaeo-Christian heritage. With all its internal contradictions, the free world yet stands for the worth of the individual and a moral law.

I, for one, shall not be content to write off half the world as irretrievably lost to the dark forces that deny men and women the light of truth and the warmth of dignity and freedom.

If, then, we are soberly determined to carry on the struggle, then we should beware of falling into two grievous errors:

First, there is the danger that we may see only one narrow area of the struggle and overlook others equally important. If we become preoccupied with the military threat, we may forget the Soviet diplomatic, political, and economic onslaught. Equally dangerous is the tendency to see the struggle solely in terms of economics and politics, and to ignore the powerful military forces that confront us.

A second danger is the temptation to adopt the tactics and values of the adversary. It is said that we must fight fire with fire. In a sense this is true. We need missiles, jetplanes, and ships to defend ourselves against missiles, bombers, and submarines. We need men to fight men. We must develop an international economic strategy to counter the Communist economic offensive. We need the Voice of America to correct the distortions of Radios Moscow and Peking. In this sense we must fight fire with fire.

But we can never permit ourselves to forget that we are free men and that we can use these weapons only as free men use them. Communists have no such inhibitions. They can use their weapons with no holds barred, no qualms of conscience. If Radio Moscow lies about us and our objectives, it is not the part of free men to retaliate by lying about the Soviet Union. Russia can exploit her allies and send her tanks to crush a popular uprising in Hungary. But free men must respect the integrity of their allies and accept their criticism of our policies.

Yes, free men and tyrants may possess the same weapons, but they use them in a different way and for different purposes. Herein lies the fundamental moral distinction between the free world and the Communist world.

To meet the many-sided Communist challenge the arsenal of free men must furnish many weapons, not the least of which is the weapon of an effective diplomacy. Diplomacy is the art of bargaining, of fighting for what you believe by peaceful means at the conference table.

To be effective, a diplomat must speak from a position of strength. As Carl Sandburg once said, "The cockroach is always wrong when it argues with the chicken."

To go to the negotiating table weak or divided is to invite disaster.

The United States will not be able to negotiate an honorable settlement of the Berlin issue unless we are strong and determined, and unless our strength is reinforced by the strength of our NATO allies.

Negotiation is not a substitute for a strong defense. But negotiation is the indispensable handmaiden of military strength. Our willingness to negotiate is not a sign of weakness, but an indication that we want to explore every honorable path to prevent war on the one hand or capitulation to tyranny on the other.

I support the forthcoming two-power talks. I have supported all our efforts to negotiate with the Russians since the end of World War II. To be sure, we have not yet been successful in settling the German problem or in achieving an effective arms control agreement, but on the other hand have avoided a nuclear war, and not one square inch of Western Europe has been taken by the Soviet Union.

Just as diplomacy is no substitute for military strength, the instruments of modern war are no substitute for negotiation.

I am deeply concerned about our present military posture—as is the Veterans of Foreign Wars. We are a powerful nation. We have many strong and reliable allies. We have the capacity for massive retaliation, although this capacity would be severely limited by a massive surprise attack.

Unfortunately, however, our capacity for retaliation, which serves as a deterrent to any hostile power, is not yet matched by our capacity to deal with limited aggression. We do not have near the balanced forces capable of dealing with all likely military contingencies. We are weak on mobility. We are weak on the tactical weapons and manpower required to rebuff a local assault. Our weakness in these areas tends to invite adventurous nibbling from the rim of the Communist world.

In the passion and determination to balance the budget, our military posture has been thrown off balance. In a desire to get a "bigger bang for a buck," the budget-cutters have tempted Russia to run a bigger risk with their ruble.

Civil defense, for example, has been almost criminally neglected. Yet a realistic survival program is critical in a balanced defensive posture. A solid civilian defense effort would add substantially to our deterrent strength.

Let me illustrate what I mean. According to competent experts a medium-sized nuclear attack on the United States today would kill at least 50 million persons, most of them as radiation casualties.

A comprehensive shelter program to protect against radioactive fallout could save as many as half of these victims. In other words, such a civilian survival program could strengthen our country by 25 million survivors in the event of a surprise nuclear attack. This is no small factor in the military calculations of a potential aggressor, to say nothing of the humanitarian values involved.

If a fallout shelter program could save 25 million American lives, and if it would serve as an additional deterrent to nuclear attack, why has our Government not embarked upon it?

The answer we are given is: "It costs too much." Well, how much would it cost? According to Rand Corp. studies and the Gaither committee report, a shelter program of this magnitude could be accomplished in 5 years with an annual expenditure of less than 10 percent of our present defense budget.

At present the administration is content with a voluntary, do-it-yourself, shelter-building program. How can we expect State governments, local authorities, and individual citizens to take civilian defense seriously when their own national government does not even require that shelters be included in new Federal buildings or in federally assisted construction?

Our military and diplomatic weapons would be as weak reeds without a strong economic underpinning. And here, though we are strong, we can be caught napping. Soviet production today is about 40 percent as great as U.S. production. But she is gaining—and fast. Her economy is growing at a rate of 7 to 9 percent. That is approximately three times as fast as our rate of growth.

In the realm of economics, world war III has already started. Premier Khrushchev has repeatedly boasted that the Soviet Union would overtake the United States and eventually win the world to communism by economic, rather than military, means.

"We declare war upon you in the peaceful field of trade," said Khrushchev on November 22, 1957. This boast cannot be lightly dismissed. Soviet sputniks and lunik should have shattered any remaining illusions we once entertained about Russia's technological backwardness.

Furthermore, the Soviet Union has launched a worldwide economic offensive. The two main weapons in her ruble war are trade and aid, which she frankly regards as instruments of her large political purposes. She has succeeded in penetrating strategic countries in the Middle East and in southeast Asia. By her "no holds barred" economic tactics, she was able to precipitate a serious Cabinet crisis in Finland. I was in Helsinki when it happened, and I know what I'm talking about.

We must meet this competition by increasing our aid and investment program abroad substantially, and by moving hard to make better use of our tremendous reserves of real wealth in the form of American-produced food and fiber.

You can't talk democracy and freedom effectively to a family lacking food, health, shelter, and economic opportunity. The battle for men's minds cannot even begin until at least partial victory is won over poverty, disease, and illiteracy.

In the efforts to help the newly emerging nations of Asia and Africa and Latin America to help themselves, American capital is vital—an important weapon of free men. Through the World Bank, our Development Loan Fund, and the promising International Development Association, our capital can merge with West Europe's increasing capital reserves to support economic growth in the uncommitted areas of the world.

One of the greatest of all our weapons in this vast struggle is that agricultural abundance which some consider a burden and a curse. Yet, if Mr. Khrushchev had our surplus of farm production, what would he not be able to achieve in the world.

Food and fiber in the hands of free men can accomplish enormous good. I have seen the way American food speaks for us. It is eloquent in pleading the American way of life—from Barcelona to Athens, to Calcutta and Seoul, Korea.

The food for peace program which I have urged for years, and which is now before the Senate, would permit us to use in greater measure our supplies of grain, milk, and cotton in constructive works of peace overseas. With food and fiber we could build hospitals, schools, and laboratories. We would take our food and fiber surplus production out of the storage bins and put it to work in the great world struggle.

The idea for a White Fleet first suggested to me almost 2 years ago by Cmdr. Frank Manson of the Navy—and on which we have worked together ever since—struck me as a most useful and dramatic way of carrying out one part of an expanded American foreign policy based on the works of peace. Yes, we could very well afford to provide a fleet of ships to help carry out technical assistance programs, particularly in the field of public health, along the coasts of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. And we could in so doing provide for disaster relief on a much greater scale, and much more quickly and effectively than we have provided in the past.

The deeds of a White Fleet would also speak eloquently of the American mind and the American heart.

It is significant that 34 of my fellow Senators joined me in introducing the White Fleet resolution, and that Congressman ED EDMONDSON, of the House side, was joined by many of his colleagues.

The White Fleet could take its place among the peaceful weapons of free men. To heal the sick, to feed the hungry, to cloth the naked, to rescue the distressed, to teach the illiterate * * * here are noble goals firmly rooted in the long American tradition. Pain, hunger, want, and illiteracy—these are worthy enemies—against which we should pit ourselves even if no Communist leader threatened to dominate the world. How much more vital it is, then, that we should throw our resources into the work of overcoming these evils.

Can we afford these great efforts?

How can we afford not to make them?

This magnificently endowed country of ours, this vast productive capacity, this free society which permits the energies of so many men and women to flow into the national effort can and will produce what is necessary to win the world struggle.

It will require planning, it will require decision making, but I am convinced that by voluntary planning, and if necessary sacrifice, our people and our free world allies can outproduce, outwork, and outmatch, and outfight anything that the Communists can put up against us.

And America can do this without becoming a garrison state—a modern Sparta. Indeed, we have the resources to become a modern Athens—rich in the arts of peace, strong in our arms and in our purpose.

A free people cannot expect to survive automatically. It is not written in the stars that because a society is free it will continue forever. Just because we are friendly and openhearted, the leader of the Soviet bloc cannot be expected to let us alone.

Th truth is that we cannot live without leadership, without purpose, without courage.

Edmund Burke, the great 18th century English statesman, warned us long ago when he said, "Evil triumphs when good men fail to act." We must act—but action requires purpose and leadership.

It is clear that we have nothing to fear if we go boldly into the future, if we produce leadership wise enough to understand our dangers, bold enough to face them and plan their defeat, imaginative enough to rally our people to the task and the battle.

Tenth Anniversary of Chancellor Adenauer

OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, September 15, 1959, marks the 10th anniversary of the leadership of Chancellor Adenauer. President Eisenhower has recently visited with him and paid him a tribute of respect and honor.

Out of rubble and ruins, the Chancellor and his Cabinet have built a strong republic, which is orientated westward and has done all and sundry to buckle itself as a stanch ally to the United States and Western democracies.

There is no doubt that West Germany, under the guidance of her leaders like Chancellor Adenauer and President Heuss, Foreign Minister Brentano, Economic Minister Erhard, and others, has realized that the mark of Cain was upon the Germans because of the terrors of Hitler and nazism. They worked feverishly to wipe out that strain and have succeeded in reestablishing West Germany as a liberal nation in the liberal world, dedicated to the principles of individual freedom and democracy.

A look at the map will reveal in realistic fashion that Germany in the heart of Europe must always be a buffer state on the flank of a free and democratic Europe. We do well to strengthen Germany by our insistence that East and West Germany be made one Germany. We do well to assure the world that we will never let Berlin down; that Berlin, now an island in a Communist sea, must be integrated into a unified Germany.

It is worthy of comment also, that Chancellor Adenauer, President Heuss and his successor, Dr. Heinrich Luebke, and the other praiseworthy officials of Germany have made, and are making restitution to the Jews in Israel and other Jews, whose property and valuables were filched from them by Hitler and his cutthroat bandits. That restitution, of course, cannot bring back the 6 million dead, but it can go a great way in the court of public opinion to show that Germany wishes to be rehabilitated, that Germany is repentant and that Germany is expiating her wrongs.

We all, therefore, hail Chancellor Adenauer on his 10th anniversary and present our compliments to President Heuss and his able successor in the Presidency, Heinrich Luebke. We present our compliments also to Foreign Minister Brentano, and Economic Minister Erhard for work well done.

Labor, the Strong, Vital Force of Our Nation, Is the Thrust Born in the Hearts, the Minds, and the Hands of the Worker

OF
HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Tuesday, September 8, 1959

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, Labor Day in West Virginia, as is true throughout most of the United States, is a holiday truly dedicated in numerous appropriately located communities to the honoring of the men and women who toil that America be strong and remain free.

It was my privilege to have participated in one Labor Day eve observance at Morgantown, September 6, when I was dinner host to the executive committee for Labor Day celebration events in Morgantown, Monongalia County, and a public reception which followed.

My brief remarks on that occasion were a prelude to and extracts from two addresses I had the honor of delivering in areas of southern West Virginia on Labor Day. The first was the annual celebration at Harris Memorial Park, Smithers, Fayette County at noon, under the auspices of the upper Kanawha Valley local unions. The other event was the United Mine Workers' annual Labor Day celebration at Comfort, Boone County.

Several thousand persons were in attendance for each of these traditional programs in the largest bituminous coal producing State. The workers, whether members of organized unions or toilers in unorganized activities, were all accorded honors of the day.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the speech which I delivered at these celebrations be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN ADDRESS BY SENATOR JENNINGS RANDOLPH, LABOR DAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1959, AT UPPER KANAWHA VALLEY LOCAL UNIONS' ANNUAL LABOR DAY CELEBRATION, HARRIS MEMORIAL PARK, SMITHERS, FAYETTE COUNTY, W. VA., AND UNITED MINE WORKERS' ANNUAL LABOR DAY CELEBRATION, COMFORT, BOONE COUNTY, W. VA.

Ladies and gentlemen, members of the United Mine Workers, and friends, I am grateful for this opportunity to join with you in celebration of the one day of the year set aside for commemoration of the men and women of American labor.

"Labor Day differs," said Samuel Gompers, "in every essential from the other holidays of any country." Fifty years ago, the father of the American trade union movement stated that "all other holidays are in a more or less degree connected with conflicts and battles of man's prowess over man, of strife and discord for greed and power, of glories achieved by one nation over another. Labor Day * * * is devoted to no man, living or dead; to no sect, race, or nation."

This is the occasion on which we pause in the course of our own labors to acknowledge the sweat and toil of the men and women who created much that we see about us. It is fitting, too, that Labor Day should have come to be acknowledged in the manner that it has. The product of no Executive fiat, no act of Congress—except for the District of Columbia—the acceptance of Labor Day itself is an expression of the free and voluntary character of the American trade union movement.

First propounded in 1882 by Peter J. McGuire, a carpenter in New York, every State has independently adopted the day which, in the words of Mr. McGuire, "shall be labor's—an occasion devoted to the industrial spirit, the great vital force of every nation."

This vital force is the thrust born in the hearts, the minds, and the hands of the worker. It is this force which has built railroads to span the continent and raised buildings to scrape the sky; it has built and manned our factories and gone into the bowels of the earth for fuel to fire them. All of these are the product of the efforts and dreams of the American worker.

In thus pausing to survey the achievements and reckon the gains of American labor, it is therefore appropriate for us to recall some of the milestones in the union movement. Some of you here have your own milestones—the struggles to achieve recognition, the victories and defeats of organization. You also recall the grim days of the depression. And for many of you, I am sure, the road has seemed long and arduous, a road along which you have been guided by hope, but on which you have met also with the face of despair.

But in the history of man and in the history of labor, 75 or 100 years is not a very long time in which to create a new institution. And let us not ignore the fact that the trade union movement is indeed just that—a new and compelling social institution in mankind's history. Only 50 years ago Prof. William Graham Sumner was still preaching to the bright young men at Yale University the doctrine that "every experiment only makes it more clear that for men to band together * * * instead of being a remedy for disappointment * * * is only a way of courting new calamity."

This was the typical and mistaken response of the conventional wisdom of the period when Samuel Gompers and a handful of other union leaders met in Pittsburgh in 1881 to form the Federation of Organized Trade and Labor Unions. Five years later this organization was succeeded by the American Federation of Labor—the same year as the Haymarket riot in Chicago. Since that time the history of American labor has been a chronicle of the march toward an ever broadening realization of the dictum of Mr. Justice Holmes that "liberty of contract begins where equality of bargaining power begins."

It is a record marked in its early stages by bitter and last-ditch struggles of management to resist the recognition of unions. The uses of injunctions, "yellow dog" contracts, and private labor spies live still in the memories of many union leaders and rank and file workers.

It was only 89 years ago that the first written contract was signed between coal operators and coal miners. Less than 70 years ago—in 1890, to be precise—and within the lifetime of the dynamic and dedicated leader, John L. Lewis—the United Mine Workers of America organized formally. While it was not until some 30 years later, in 1922, that the UMWA won its famous case against the Coronado Coal Co., in which the Supreme Court declared that a strike was not a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Though organized labor made slow but steady gains from the 1880's to the 1930's, its security was not assured until the arrival of the New Deal under the leadership of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. And I am happy to have had a part in those exciting times as one of the original members of the F.D.R. team in the Congress. For, it was our passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act, and the National Labor Relations Act, which, for the first time, established national policy protecting the right of workers to organize and to elect their representatives for collective bargaining.

These are only some of the high points of labor's progress. The record has not been unmarked by violence on the part of both labor and management—we have had the Haymarket riots, the Pullman strikes, and Little Steel strikes. But in spite of the occasional eruptions of violence—in spite of the sometimes ruthless actions of reprisal—the chief mark of the American labor movement has been its use of legal and democratic methods to forge social and economic advancement.

The free American labor movement has confounded the Marxist dogma of class antagonism and has refuted the Marxist prophecies of blood and iron. Here, working within the framework of a cooperative capitalism, American labor most clearly distinguishes itself from many of its counterpart movements in Europe.

The goal of the trade union movement in the United States has not been to inflame the jealous passions of the dispossessed and the "have nots" against the "haves," but to seek a more abundant life for all. Karl Marx—blinded by his own sense of being an outcast—failed to see this; and present-day Marxist leaders—blinded by their own dogma of Marx and Lenin also fail to see this.

The wisdom of American labor's use of peaceful, legal, and democratic methods is apparent to us today. For organized labor has finally—in many areas—achieved full partnership with capital in the American productive system. With this increase in power, working men and women have won new rights. But these rights carry new responsibilities as well.

And the first responsibility is that which goes with all power—the obligation to use one's strength wisely for the benefit of the general good. This position—you know and I know—has not been universally and consistently upheld by all of our present-day labor leaders. This can be said also for the use and the abuse of power by some management leaders.

Our Founding Fathers wisely recognized that power is inherently dangerous. Therefore, they sought to disperse political authority as widely as possible within the Federal structure of government and between the Federal and State Governments. As our civilization has become more complex and our society more centralized the same problems of the distribution of political and economic power have developed within nongovernmental institutions. Parallel to this development there has grown the need to erect and maintain democratic safeguards against the misuse and abuse of power throughout the range of American life—in the great communications media, in industry, and to a lesser extent, in labor.

I speak quite candidly on the subject of the labor-management reform bill recently reported by the Senate-House conference committee, accepted by the Senate, and awaiting House action, probably today or tomorrow. I was a member of this committee and participated for 12 days in the exacting business of its deliberations. At the outset I had determined that I would vote for those reform measures which had been revealed to be necessary by the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee, but that I would not associate myself with any punitive or repressive provisions which would restrict the legitimate rights of organized labor. I held as firmly as possible to that position, as did my Senate Democratic colleagues.

The bill as reported admittedly will not please every one. It does not fully satisfy me. But it is doubtful that any law passed by the representative legislative process will ever be acceptable to all because, in such issues as these, there are as many points of view as there are parties to the discussion. But democracy is the art of the possible—and in this instance we have done all that could be accomplished within the latitude afforded by the differing versions passed by the two Houses of the Congress.

There has been much exaggerated talk at both extremes regarding Senate and House actions on labor-management legislation. And though it may take time to assess its impact, this I can state from knowledge based upon intimate study and contact with its preparation: It is a measure aimed at eliminating the racketeer element from honest labor and restoring democratic safeguards to those unions where they have been lost. These accomplishments can be brought about under the terms of the legislation without destroying the hard-won and legitimate rights of organization and collective bargaining.

In discussing the conference report in the Senate on Wednesday of last week, I said: I toiled to prepare a report which would be restrictive where necessary but would not be repressive to the legions of loyal labor so vital to the strength of our country.

At this point I state emphatically that, in my opinion, the conference chairman, Senator JOHN F. KENNEDY, of Massachusetts, spoke with complete accuracy when he informed the Senate, also on Wednesday, when he said:

"There were serious shortcomings in the reform bill which passed the House, and the conferees on the Democratic side, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] shared my view that we could not under any circumstances have voted for the Landrum-Griffin bill. While many Members of the Senate hold an opposite view, if the Landrum-Griffin bill had come to the floor of the Senate in the form in which it passed the House * * * all the Senators would have regretted it finally. * * * And when we view the significant provisions of the Landrum-Griffin bill, one after another, we must admit they go far beyond reform. They go into an area which would limit what we all would consider legitimate activities of men and women who bargain collectively."

But I do not choose to inflate out of its proper proportions the importance of the issue of so-called labor reform. Whatever the merits of the issue, the problem has not been one in the great body of the institution of trade unionism. This has always been, and remains so today, a movement necessary to the welfare and strength of a democratic system.

My concern for the welfare of organized labor in America goes deeper than the issue of reform. In these closing minutes I would like to address what seems to me a more fundamental issue—more fundamental for the labor unions and for the welfare of American democracy. I refer now to the loss of what might be called a "sense of mission." And I do not use the term lightly.

For the trade unions have always acted their best—as has the United States itself—when imbued with a sense of mission—a mission to perform not for themselves alone but for all Americans. This was the lesson of the life of Samuel Gompers. It was from this sense of mission that the unions fought for gains for all Americans—for free public schools, child labor laws, minimum wages, workmen's compensation, social security, and a host of other advances which have been to the benefit of all American citizens.

Thus have the trade unions always best served themselves when they have served the American heritage, when their actions have been charged by the belief that they could create a future of greater worth and human dignity. This belief—this belief in the possibilities of man and the dignity of labor—has shaped the destiny of America.

American labor, led by the trade unions, is today a full participant in that destiny. But if we are to live up to the fulfillment of America we must live beyond the preoccupations of our particular job or craft. This is a responsibility which one cannot defer to his political or union leaders. It is an obligation which rests upon the individual heart and will of each of us.

"The American journey has not ended," stated Archibald MacLeish. "America is never accomplished, America is always still to build; for men, as long as they are truly men, will dream of man's fulfillment." This is the mission to which we must again rededicate ourselves; this is the mission which Samuel Gompers saw with such clarity.

Thus, as citizens and as workers, it is up to each of us to rekindle the faith in the American future, and to live with a renewed vision of the possibilities of man. We Americans have reason thus to live; whether we have the will depends upon the individual heart. And if we do so live, our work, whatever its nature, will be ennobled in its service to the greater benefit of man.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1959

(Legislative day of Saturday, September 5, 1959)

The Senate met at 9:30 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, in whom alone is the strength of our hearts and the hope of our world, in this our morning prayer we would open our faltering lives in penitence to Thy waiting might and to Thy cleansing grace. For the living of these days grant us wisdom for the problems we face, insight for these troubled times, and vision which sets its gaze on far horizons.

In the midst of events so staggering and colossal that as individuals on the confused world stage we appear so puny and inadequate, O God, who sittest above the flood of man's insanity, lift us into the only greatness we will ever know by using us, earthen vessels though we be, as the channels of thy purpose and intent. So may we serve the present age as we fulfill our high calling in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE SUBMITTED DURING RECESS

Under authority of the order of the Senate of May 21, 1959,

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, on September 8, 1959, reported favorably, with amendments, the bill (H.R. 8385), making appropriations for mutual security and related agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, and submitted a report (No. 981) thereon, which report was printed.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, we made a great deal of progress yesterday in the Senate, and I am hoping for progress today. I see no prospects for adjournment by this weekend. We have more than 100 bills for the Senate to consider. Dozens of them will have to be called up by motion and are of a general nature.

I should like to call to the attention of the Senate some very important facts. When Congress is moving rapidly, no measure becomes law until it has passed both Houses and either been signed by the President or passed over his veto. There are several loose ends which must be tied together.

We in the Senate are interested in passing laws, not just going through the motions. There are many steps which must be taken before we can be satisfied that the public business has been concluded and fully transacted.

However, I do wish to inform the Senate that I believe we are heading for a very constructive record, and I hope the closing days of Congress will be productive.

If necessary, we will have another meeting of the policy committee later in the week to consider any other bills that may have been reported from the committees, if the committees meet today.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. We had an order yesterday that we will have the usual morning hour, with a limitation of 3 minutes on statements. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand the housing bill is the pending business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, and withdrawing the nomination of Earl J. Thompson to be postmaster at O'Fallon, Ill., which nomination messages were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

AGREEMENTS FORMULATED AT UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from certain agreements formulated at the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, transmitted to the Senate today by the President of the United States, and that the message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message from the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of each of the following agreements: (1) convention on the territorial sea and the contiguous zone; (2) convention on the high seas; (3) convention on fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas; (4) convention on the Continental Shelf; and (5) optional protocol of signature concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes; which agreements were formulated at the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, held at Geneva from February 24, 1958, to April 27, 1958, and were dated at Geneva on April 29, 1958. The conventions, which were open for signature from April 29, 1958, until October 31, 1958, and the optional protocol, which was open for signature from the same date and continues open indefinitely, were signed on behalf of the United States of America on September 15, 1958, and have been signed on behalf of a number of other states.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report which the Acting Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to this matter, together with the enclosures thereto.

In the event that the Senate advises and consents to ratification of the convention on fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas, it is requested that it enter an understanding in its resolution of advice and consent as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein) That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive —, 86th Congress, 1st session, an agreement entitled "Convention on Fishing and Conservation of the Living Resources of the High Seas" adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea at Geneva on April 29, 1958.

It is the understanding of the Senate, which understanding inheres in its advice and consent to the ratification of this agreement, that such ratification shall not be construed to impair the applicability of the principle of "Abstention," as defined in paragraph A.1. of the documents of record in the proceedings of the conference above referred to, identified as A/CONF.13/C.3/L69, 8 April 1958.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

(Enclosures: (1) Report of the Acting Secretary of State; (2) commentaries; (3) certified copies of agreements of April 29, 1958; (4) certified copy of final act of the conference, together with annexed resolutions.)

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 9, 1959.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. MAGNUSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

James H. Blumer, for permanent appointment as ensign in the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and Alvin T. Durgin, Jr., and sundry other persons, for appointment in the U.S. Coast Guard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no reports of committees, the nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Leonard P. Walsh to be U.S. district judge for the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of David A. Lindsay to be General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Norman A. Kreckman to be Collector of Customs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of J. Vincent Burke, Jr., to be General Counsel of the Department of Defense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations in the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Henry J. Friendly to be U.S. circuit judge for the second circuit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to commend the committee for its thorough and prompt action in connection with the nominations which we are about to consider.

I have had numerous representations concerning Judge Friendly. I understand he is one of the most capable lawyers in the country, and I am very happy to see that the committee has seen fit to report his nomination. I hope he will be unanimously confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. YARBOROUGH subsequently said: Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader will yield for a minute, I wish to comment briefly about the services of a veteran judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit; Harold R. Medina, now retired, whose place on that court is to be taken by Judge Friendly, whose nomination is being confirmed today. I am proud of the service which Judge Medina rendered for our Government and the American people. He presided in one of the most difficult trials in the history of Anglo-American jurisprudence, where almost intolerable pressures were put upon him. He presided with dignity, fairness, and with great credit to himself and to the bench and to the governmental forces which placed him upon the bench. He is a great credit to the American people, to our concepts of freedom and liberty under the law, and to the fairness of our system of jurisprudence.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] with respect to Judge Medina. I think he is one of the great jurists of all time. He is a man who recognized that law is a living force and not a dead hand. I think the contribution he has made to American jurisprudence will be his great monument in the legal history of the United States.

Mr. DODD subsequently said: Mr. President, as one of the Senators who approved in committee the confirmation of Mr. Friendly as a judge of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, I wish to say that everything I know about Mr. Friendly indicates that he is an excellent lawyer and a man of good character. I feel he has the basic qualifications to make an able judge of the second circuit.

However, Mr. President, I think it is also necessary and proper to point out that the administration has again violated the sound career policy that should govern judicial appointments by appointing a man with no judicial experience to the second highest court in the Nation.

Many lawyers in the second circuit are disappointed because of the failure to promote Judge Irving R. Kaufman, recognized as one of the most brilliant and able members of our Federal judiciary, to the post which has been given to Mr. Friendly. Judge Kaufman is a man of such preeminent competence, character, and judicial experience that his promotion to the court of appeals is long overdue.

The latest bypassing of Judge Kaufman is a serious blow to the development of a Federal judiciary system based on merit and experience on the bench. I hope the fact that Judge Kaufman tried the Rosenberg atomic spy case has had nothing to do with the unexplainable delay in giving him a well-deserved promotion to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals.

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harold K. Wood to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished Senators from Pennsylvania both have talked to me about Judge Wood. They represent him as a judge of the very highest caliber. The Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK and Mr. SCOTT] have been very anxious to see this nomination considered.

The Judiciary Committee has one of the heaviest dockets of any committee in the Senate, but I hope that before we conclude this session it will clear its calendar completely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William A. M. Burden to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Belgium.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Henry E. Stebbins to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Kingdom of Nepal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Bailey Aldrich to be U.S. circuit judge for the first circuit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, both Massachusetts Senators [Mr. SALTONSTALL and Mr. KENNEDY] are very much interested in having this vacancy filled. They represent that Judge Aldrich is a man of the highest qualifications. He has been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee after following the procedures of that committee. I hope that his nomination will be acted upon favorably.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Phillip Forman to be U.S. circuit judge for the third circuit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The very able Senators from New Jersey [Mr. CASE and Mr. WILLIAMS] have talked to me about Judge Forman. They have had a number of letters in connection with his appointment. I hope the Senate will act favorably on his nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Paul C. Weick to be U.S. circuit judge for the sixth circuit.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Paul C. Weick will be taking the bench which has been occupied with great distinction and great honor to the law by a great judge, Florence E. Allen, who is retiring.

We all recall, I am sure, when this great woman was appointed to the bench. It attracted national attention, and rightly so. The predictions at that time were that she would make a great judicial record. Such a record has been made. I thought that this word noting her record should be placed in the RECORD at the time that her successor to the bench is confirmed in the Senate today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGES

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Fred Kunzel to be U.S. district judge for the southern district of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George L. Hart, Jr., to be U.S. district judge for the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Anthony Julian to be U.S. district judge for the district of Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Lloyd F. MacMahon to be U.S. district judge for the southern district of New York.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Charles M. Metzner, to be U.S. district judge for the southern district of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Joe J. Fisher, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, Judge Fisher is an elected district judge in Texas. He is a person of the finest character. He is a man of considerable experience in the law. He is a dedicated public servant. I believe him to be extremely well qualified.

Yesterday my colleague and I had an opportunity to present Judge Fisher to the Judiciary Committee, where he was examined and subsequently recommended for confirmation unanimously. He is a native of Texas. He has been county attorney, district attorney, district judge, and he is presently serving as district judge. All of the counties of his district will be in the eastern district of Texas, which he will now serve as Federal judge.

I yield to my colleague, who has known him practically all of his life.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for yielding to me for a moment of comment on the nomination of Joe J. Fisher as district judge for the eastern district of Texas. The eastern district of Texas is the oldest of the four districts in my State. It is the district in which I was born and reared. Traditionally it has had a line of very distinguished and able judges, among them Gordon Russell, a relative of the distinguished Senator RICHARD RUSSELL.

Mr. Fisher served in that district as county attorney by election of the people and as district attorney for 8 years by election of the people. He is now serving a 4-year term as State district judge by election of the people, having served 3 years in that office.

Having worked for a long time with people in that district, Judge Fisher knows their problems and I am confident he will bring to the Federal bench a knowledge of the legal problems in the district which few people possess. He has had 15 years of public service in that district.

I have known him for more than 20 years. He has been a diligent and faithful public official, and I am confident he will fulfill the duties of the office of U.S. district judge with credit to himself and family, with honor to his State, and with fidelity to the great Government he serves.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Has the nomination of Judge Fisher been confirmed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT OF GUAM

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Eugene R. Gilmartin, to be a judge for the district court of Guam.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MUNICIPAL COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations of judges of the municipal court for the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of these judges be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to take a moment to comment on these nominations. They were considered yesterday in the District of Columbia Committee, and I was privileged to recommend each one of the nominees. As a member of the District of Columbia Committee of the Senate I am somewhat familiar with the problems of our municipal court. We must keep in mind the fact that the municipal courts probably have the closest contact with the American people so far as the administration of justice is concerned, and these men who have been appointed and recommended by the District of Columbia Committee for the municipal court of the District of Columbia deserve our high commendation.

I am familiar with the work of Judge Smith and Judge Kronheim. Both of those men have already brought distinction to the bench. I am sure our former colleague in the Congress, DeWitt S. Hyde, will demonstrate our confidence in his judicial temperament and his legal ability, and will grace the bench of the District of Columbia municipal court with great distinction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

U.S. PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for appointment in the U.S. Public Health Service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

NOMINATIONS REPORTED FAVORABLY AND PLACED ON THE VICE PRESIDENT'S DESK

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations reported favorably and placed on the Vice President's desk.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations will be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the votes by which all nominations were confirmed today.

Mr. KUCHEL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

COMMENDATIONS OF JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement about the judges of the U.S. courts in New York whose nominations have just been confirmed. It will be noted there are three on the calendar.

The nomination of Judge Friendly has been confirmed as a judge for the circuit court of appeals. The nominations of Judge Charles M. Metzner and Judge Lloyd F. MacMahon have both been confirmed for the district court.

Mr. President, New York is very proud of these nominations.

We have one additional nomination pending, that of John O. Henderson, to be district judge in the western district of New York. His nomination has received a hearing in committee, and we hope very much that his nomination may be confirmed before the end of the session.

The reason for our expression of pride in the confirmation of the nomination of these judges is that we consider these men to be truly representative of New York and to be men of outstanding distinction.

I wish to say a word first about Henry Friendly. It took a very long time to get a judge to replace the very great Judge Harold Medina, who has been properly lauded on the floor this morning.

It might interest the Senate to know I studied for the bar under Harold Medina when I first took the bar examination in New York in 1926. He was then one of the brightest legal minds it has ever been my privilege to encounter. He showed to the whole world in the Communist trials how great a judge can be in terms of serving the public interest and doing justice even in an unpopular cause, and yet seeing that the public interest prevailed.

Mr. President, in Mr. Friendly's case, he started with the greatest promise. He was, as I understand, the brightest student who ever graduated from the Harvard Law School. Throughout his professional career he has been a leader at the bar. He has made the law his life in a real sense.

Mr. President, I think the congratulations in respect to the nomination of Mr. Friendly go perhaps to those who influenced him and convinced him that he ought to be a judge, and to the President of the United States who named him, because this is, I believe, an appointment sheerly based upon the merit and the quality of the man.

I know of my own knowledge it is uniquely true in the case of Henry Friendly that the office sought the man. The President himself was tremendously impressed with his qualifications, and we have promise of a career judge of the highest order. We waited quite a long time for Mr. Friendly to be confirmed. Whatever may have been the reasons for the delay, they are now washed out by the happy event of his confirmation, and I am very happy on the part of the State of New York to congratulate him and I think really congratulate the United States on getting such a distinguished servant.

Mr. President, in the case of Charles Metzner and Lloyd MacMahon, they are younger men with whom I have had the opportunity to work in political fields as well as in communal and civic fields. Both are men of extremely high quality. Charles Metzner is one of our young, active members of the bar who is deeply concerned with the problems of New York. He has shown in his whole life, and particularly in political life, morality, dignity, skill, and integrity. I have seen Charles Metzner at first hand in these respects. We have here a young man, which is good for a bench which is as busy as that of the Southern District of New York. He will make a great judge.

In the case of Lloyd MacMahon I had a similar experience. I was closely associated with him. I worked with Lloyd MacMahon in the "Citizens for Eisenhower and NIXON," in which he was a very distinguished leader and there, too, his qualities of heart, mind, skill, and ability were borne out in his distinguished legal practice in New York. I think we will be proud of him as a judge.

He is replacing Lawrence E. Walsh, who is Deputy Attorney General of the United States and a young New Yorker of whom we are extremely proud and who is covering himself with honors in his very exacting job of assisting Attorney General Rogers in Washington. Indeed, I am happy to say a word about the talents of Lawrence Walsh today, because we sort of begin to take things for granted when a man does so many fine things in the place of his chief, as does Ed Walsh, as we call him in New York.

I think Attorney General Rogers is to be congratulated for the wisdom with which he has picked his chief assistant.

Mr. President, I wish to speak a word about William A. M. Burden, whose nomination to be Ambassador to Belgium was confirmed by the Senate today. Again, Mr. Burden is a New Yorker with whom I have a personal friendship of very long standing. He is a man who has devoted a great part of his life, as an extremely successful businessman, to the public interest. He is a man of rare tact and discretion, and who has tremendous contacts throughout the world.

Like Ambassador Zellerbach, Ambassador Whitney, Ambassador Houghton, and other distinguished leaders in industry, of whom we are so properly proud, and who have been appointed to the diplomatic corps, I believe Mr. Burden will prove to be a real boon and benefit to the United States.

I conclude by expressing again the pride of New York in this galaxy—and it is that this morning—of distinguished New Yorkers who have attained, with the gracious consent of the Senate, such very high office.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I wish to join in complimenting Mr. William A. M. Burden, of New York. I, too, have known him for a long time, and I agree with the statement of the Senator from New York that Mr. Burden will make a distinguished Ambassador from the United States to Belgium.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, some days ago I placed in the RECORD a box score or a record showing the delay in acting on the nominations to judgeships. With this whole group of confirmations this morning, I think justice must be done where it is due. Tremendous strides are being made in coming abreast of the problems. I ask unanimous consent that revised box score, which shows a very much better record, may be printed as a part of my remarks in respect to the nominations of judges confirmed this morning.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Box score on judgeships

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, in the confirmation of the nomination of the Honorable Fred Kunzel, of California, to be U.S. district judge for the southern district of California, there has been added to the Federal judiciary a distinguished lawyer whose entire lifetime has prepared him for honorable judicial service. Fred Kunzel is an able member of the California bar and of the American bar. He is a family man, respected as a lawyer and as a fellow citizen in the city which he lives.

Fred Kunzel served his country as a member of the Armed Forces in World War I and again in World War II. I am very glad to see the action which the Senate has taken in the confirmation of his nomination which was sent to us by the President of the United States.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I think I would be remiss if I allowed the occasion of the confirmation of the nomination of Joe J. Fisher, of Texas, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Texas to pass without commenting briefly upon the able judge whom he succeeded, Lamar Cecil.

Lamar Cecil was a classmate of mine at the University of Texas. We were not on the same side of the political fence, so I can judge him with unprejudiced eyes. He was one of the finest, most impartial, most dispassionate judges the eastern district of Texas has ever seen, and the district has traditionally had able judges.

The district judges who preceded him included Gordon Russell, a close relative of the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RICHARD RUSSELL].

We have had serve that district, due to the early date at which it was settled, a long line of people of great distinction in our State. Lamar Cecil was second to none in the ability which he brought to the bench and in the fine judicial impartiality he displayed there.

If the newly confirmed judge, Joe Fisher, can hold up the standards set by Lamar Cecil, the people and the Government will be well served in that area.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications and letters, which were referred as indicated:

PROPOSED APPROPRIATION, FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL COMMISSION (S. Doc. No. 55)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a proposed appropriation for the fiscal year 1960, in the amount of $150,000, for the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Commission (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED PROVISIONS PERTAINING TO FISCAL YEAR 1960, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE (S. Doc. No. 54)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, for the consideration of the Congress, proposed provisions pertaining to the fiscal year 1960, for the Department of Commerce (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT OF 1949, RELATING TO USE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY BY STATE DISTRIBUTION AGENCIES

A letter from the Secretary, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, so as to authorize the use of surplus personal property by State distribution agencies, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Government Operations.

TEMPORARY ADMISSION INTO THE UNITED STATES OF CERTAIN ALIENS

A letter from the Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of orders entered, granting temporary admission into the United States of certain aliens (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATUS OF PERMANENT RESIDENCE FOR CERTAIN ALIENS

A letter from the Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of orders granting the applications for permanent residence filed by certain aliens, together with a statement of the facts and pertinent provisions of law as to each alien, and the reasons for granting such applications (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Administrator, General Services Administration, Washington, D.C., transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Archivist of the United States on a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. CARLSON members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of the Legislature of the territory of Guam; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

CERTIFICATION OF ADOPTION OF A RESOLUTION

This is to certify that Resolution 123, "relative to expressing the heartfelt and sincere appreciation of the people of Guam to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, for his excellent grasp of the problems of the territory of Guam, and for his willingness to assist the people of Guam," was on the 22d day of June 1959, duly and regularly adopted.

A. B. WON PAT,
Speaker.

Attested:

V. B. BAMBA,
Legislative Secretary.

RESOLUTION 123

Resolution relative to expressing the heartfelt and sincere appreciation of the people of Guam to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, for his excellent grasp of the problems of the territory of Guam, and for his willingness to assist the people of Guam

Whereas the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, chairman of Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the United States Senate, has always been willing, courteous, and sympathetic to the problems of the territory of Guam; and

Whereas the honorable Senator has always been courteously receiving and otherwise lending a sympathic ear to the problems of Guam, by arranging conferences and appointments for the Honorable A. B. Won Pat, speaker of the Fifth Guam Legislature; and

Whereas during the recent trip of the Speaker, A. B. Won Pat, to Washington, the honorable Senator was especially kind, and courteous, and as well sponsored or authored legislation beneficial to the territory of Guam, including; particularly, the introduction of a bill to provide the territory of Guam with a resident commissioner to the United States Congress, and did also look into the matter of the dual wage system as practiced by the United States Navy here on Guam and other matters of concern to the territory; and

Whereas the people of Guam are cognizant to the various matters aforesaid, all of which are beneficial to the territory of Guam: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Fifth Guam Legislature does hereby on behalf of the people of Guam express its heartfelt and sincere appreciation and gratitude to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY for his many and varied assistance in introducing legislation and other matters beneficial to the territory of Guam; and be it further Resolved, That the speaker certify to and the legislative secretary attest the adoption hereof and that copies of the same be thereafter transmitted to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, Senator from Montana, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Governor of Guam.

A. B. WON PAT,
Speaker.
V. B. BAMBA,
Legislative Secretary.

INCREASED PENSION FOR HOLDERS OF CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR—LETTER

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on July 22 of this year I introduced the bill, (S. 2422) to increase from $10 a month to $100 a month the pension payable to holders of the Congressional Medal of Honor. My bill would also have permitted payment of such pension to any recipient of this distinguished award, regardless of his age.

As my colleagues know, under the present law no one may receive the $10 per month special pension unless they are 65 years of age or over.

I recently received a letter in support of my bill. It was a most unusual letter in that it was signed by seven recipients of the Congressional Medal of Honor.

These courageous patriots in their letter to me pointed out that they are frequently invited to speak at various patriotic functions throughout the country, and that such requests are indeed a heavy financial burden for them to bear. Frequently these gentlemen have found it necessary to decline the invitations, despite the fact that they would be more than happy to attend if it were possible for them to do so financially.

Needless to say, if these Congressional Medal of Honor winners were to receive a special monthly pension of $100 a month, it would be of great help for them to appear at various functions of veterans groups and other organizations.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this letter be printed in the RECORD, and be referred to the Committee on Finance which has my bill before it for consideration.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 11, 1959.

Hon. HUBERT E. HUMPHREY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: The undersigned, all of whom are recipients of the Congressional Medal of Honor, offer you their sincere thanks, for introducing S. 2422: "Increased rate of special pension for holders of the Medal of Honor award."

Your address concerning the merits of the bill, will, we know, be very deeply appreciated by all who will benefit by the legislation.

As you so ably pointed out, "there can be no price tag on valor." As we understand your presentation of the case, your bill recognizes extraordinary services in action but is not to be construed as compensation for courage. That is the way it should be.

May we respectfully call to your attention, that it is our honest belief that no recipient of the medal considers himself a hero. Rather, we believe that God was especially good to us in that he endowed us with a little extra something, when we needed it most. It is our sincere belief that those who made the supreme sacrifice, in action, against an enemy of the United States of America, are the only servicemen entitled to the citation, "Above and beyond the call of duty."

Therefore, we believe we have these obligations to our sacred dead: To be of service to our beloved country, without qualification, at all times; to be constantly on the alert for any acts of subversiveness and to support all those who fight it; to promote and teach Americanism whenever we have the opportunity of doing so.

To this end, your bill if enacted, would be invaluable to us, in that it would supply the means for us to carry out our beliefs as set forth in the preceding paragraph.

As it is now, Congressional Medal of Honor recipients are constantly invited to attend and speak at patriotic functions in all parts of the country. It follows, that because of distances and lack of finances, we are forced to decline. As a result, two things happen: One, we are deprived of the opportunity of helping to bolster an important patriotic rally. Two, the impression is immediately created that we are indifferent, or worse, that we are playing hard to get. Whereas the truth is we are always anxious to cooperate in any such endeavor. Strangely enough, the vast majority of our citizens are under the impression that our Government has awarded us anywhere between $150 and $250 per month. They naturally think that under the circumstance, we should accept any invitation extended to us.

A bill, similar to yours, has been introduced in the Senate several times in the past few years, after having passed the House unanimously. Unfortunately, they died in the Finance Committee, without the full membership of the Senate body being given the opportunity to vote on the proposed legislation. We have full confidence Senator, that you will see to it that your bill does not meet the same fate.

Again thanking you for your kind and sincere efforts in our behalf, we are Respectfully yours,

Stephen R. Gregg, Bayonne, N.J.; Thomas J. Kelly, New York, N.Y.; John W. Meagher, Jersey City, N.J.; Richard W. O'Neill, Bronxville, N.Y.; Nicholas Oresko, Tenafly, N.J.; Charles W. Shea, Plainview, Long Island, N.Y.; Charles A. MacGillivary, Braintree, Mass.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am hopeful, Mr. President, that the Committee on Finance will give very careful consideration to this measure. The cost involved is nominal. There are 314 persons living today who have been awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. It is estimated that the first year's cost under my bill would be approximately $376,000.

I was disappointed, although not greatly surprised, that the Bureau of the Budget has objected to this bill. I have come to expect such action from the Bureau of the Budget. I am confident, however, that the eloquent letter to which I have referred will be more than ample rebuttal to the opposition of the administration.

RESOLUTION OF VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS COMMENDING SENATORS CANNON AND KEATING

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, at the 60th national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States a number of resolutions were adopted. Among the resolutions adopted was Resolution No. 243, commending my able and distinguished junior colleague from Nevada [Mr. CANNON] and the able and distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] for their fine work in serving as a special subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration to consider the need for a standing Senate committee on veterans' affairs. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION 243

Resolution Commending Senator HOWARD CANNON, of Nevada, and Senator KENNETH KEATING, of New York

Whereas Senator HOWARD CANNON, of Nevada, and Senator KENNETH KEATING, of New York, were appointed as a special subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration to consider the question and need for a standing Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs; and

Whereas this special Senate subcommittee, after exhaustive hearings and investigation, favorably recommended to the full Senate Committee on Rules and Administration the creation of a nine-member standing Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs; and

Whereas the creation of a Senate Veterans Affairs Committee has been a major objective in the legislative program of the Veterans of Foreign Wars for many years: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the 60th National Convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, That we commend and thank Senator HOWARD CANNON, of Nevada, and Senator KENNETH KEATING, of New York, for devotion to their assignment as a special Senate subcommittee, and their favorable recommendation which was made on the true findings of the hearings, without prejudice or favor.

S. 2670. A bill for the relief of Jamil and Anwer Abdullah; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER:

S. 2671. A bill to exempt from taxation certain property of the American War Mothers, Inc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2672. A bill to amend the definition of the term "child" as defined in title 38 of the United States Code so as to include in such definition a child who, after attaining age 18 and while a member of the veterans' household, became permanently incapable of self-support; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1946, RELATIVE TO MEETINGS AND ADJOURNMENTS OF CONGRESS

Mrs. SMITH submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 77); which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That section 132 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 132. (a) Effective with the second session of the Eighty-sixth Congress, in each even-numbered year in which the two Houses have not adjourned sine die by August 15, they shall stand adjourned on that date, or on the next preceding day of session, until 12 o'clock meridian on November 15 in that year, or the following Monday if November 15 falls on Saturday or Sunday; and in each odd-numbered year in which the two Houses have not adjourned sine die by August 1, they shall stand adjourned on that date, or on the next preceding day of session, until 12 o'clock meridian on November 1 in that year, or the following Monday if November 1 falls on Saturday or Sunday.

(b) The consent of the respective Houses is hereby given to an adjournment of the other for the period specified in the first section of this resolution."

GREAT BASIN NATIONAL PARK, NEV.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the distinguished junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. CANNON] and myself, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill providing for the establishment of the Great Basin National Park in White Pine County in eastern Nevada.

Last year I introduced proposed legislation providing for a survey to be made to determine the region's feasibility as a national park. As a result of the survey, the Advisory Board on National Parks recommended to the Secretary of Interior that this area, known locally as the Wheeler Peak-Lehman Caves region, be included in the national parks system.

Mr. President, the interest and enthusiasm generated by the prospect of having this region designated as a national park, are by no means confined to my native State. Nature lovers and outdoor enthusiasts from many sections of the country have evinced more than passing interest in this proposal. On the home front, prominent Nevadans, including two former Governors, have joined in forming the Nevada Foundation for a National Park, and are vitally concerned with the passage of this legislation.

This scenic wonderland covers approximately 147,000 acres of the Snake Range and extends from the sagebrush desert up through the various life zones, and includes a small but active glacier on Wheeler Peak, 13,063 feet above sea level.

The favorable recommendation from the Advisory Board on National Parks followed an extensive study made by Dr. Adolph Murie, an internationally known naturalist. Dr. Murie established the following three reasons why this Nevada area is suitable for a national park:

First. The spectacular view of mountain ranges and valleys across the central Great Basin, combined with natural park areas of forests, streams and lakes appropriate for camping, picnicking, hiking and exploration of nature, are in themselves of national park caliber.

Second. The area includes half a dozen splendid stands of bristlecone pines, believed to be the oldest living things on earth.

Third. The Wheeler area is the superb example of Great Basin country, illustrating well the geological process of basin-and-range formation, having good examples of various types of rock and geologic structure and illustrating the representative Great Basin vegetation and wildlife.

After concluding his ecological study, Dr. Murie commented that it would be a crying shame if this area were not set aside with full national park status for the enjoyment and inspiration of the people of the United States.

As any of my illustrious colleagues who have national parks within their States well know, the scenic and scientific attractions are a steady magnet for visitors from other States. To the uninitiated, Nevada is sometimes pictured as a barren and desolate wasteland, a slander that this beautiful national park would effectively destroy.

Mr. President, I have high hopes that the Secretary of Interior will add his recommendation to that of the Advisory Board on National Parks. I am equally confident that Congress will look with favor upon this great region and properly elevate it to the status of a National Park, to take its rightful place alongside similar beauty spots in this wonderful land of America.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to have printed in the RECORD, following my remarks, an article by Darwin Lambert, editor of the Ely (Nev.) Daily Times. Mr. Lambert, who has been the moving spirit in the creation of this park, is an acknowledged authority on the region. His article, which appeared in the Nevada State Journal, in Reno, on May 10, 1959, follows.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2664) to establish the Great Basin National Park, in Nevada, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BIBLE (for himself and Mr. CANNON), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The article presented by Mr. BIBLE is as follows:

WHEELER PEAK PARK ENDORSED

(By Darwin Lambert)

Establishment of Great Basin National Park in the Wheeler Peak-Lehman Caves area of eastern Nevada is now within reach as a result of endorsement by the Advisory Board on National Parks in session at Shenandoah National Park, Va., on April 28.

The Board considered the geological and ecological aspects of a 150,000-acre "sky island" in the heart of the Great Basin Desert of "national significance," making it suitable for preservation under the National Park Service. This superb scenic land, extending from shadscale and sagebrush desert up through the various life zones to a high alpine zone typical of the far north, was recommended to the Secretary of the Interior as representative of the many Great Basin mountain ranges, hence needed to represent this strange geographic province in the park system.

The report on which the decision was based, compiled by the regional office of the National Park Service in San Francisco through field studies and research during the last 6 months, speaks eloquently of majestic and extraordinary scenery and numerous special features. The area includes a small but active desert-bound glacier in the deep cirque of Wheeler Peak (13,063 feet above sea level), of timberline forests of immense bristlecone pines (the species recently found to include the oldest living things on earth, older even than the giant sequoias), of a limestone arch big enough to cover a six-story building.

The idea of a real national park in this remote territory, least populous of any place in the United States outside of Alaska, made up of features not known to any but a few rugged adventurers until 3 years ago, was considered when first put forward an impossible dream.

Just how does this "sky island" in the desert aspire to full national park status? Fred Packard, former executive secretary of the National Park Association, after exploring the area for 2 days, put it this way: "The Wheeler area has a greater variety of outstanding scenery than any existing national park."

Naturalists and other park authorities who have had more time for observations and research go into more detail. The Wheeler sky-country and adjacent desert, they say, add up to the superb example of the high Great Basin land, illustrating majestically the geologic process of basin-and-range formation and showing remarkable combinations of Great Basin vegetation and wildlife. In a distance of only 5 miles on some parts of the steep slope, it is possible to go from shadscale desert, through the pinon-juniper belt, the aspen-yellow pine belt, the spruce-fir country, and the ancient bristlecones of timberline to vast alpine expanses on the rocky peaks and ridges.

From Wheeler Park itself, good binoculars or a telescope reach to the Sierra Nevada mountains in one direction and the Wasatch range of Utah in the other, across the innumerable alternating ranges and valley basins from which no rivers reach the sea.

The half dozen weird and ancient forests of bristlecone pines are given by some authorities as reason enough in themselves for national park status. Not yet adequately explored, these high forests have already disclosed gnarled monsters up to 35 feet in trunk circumference, along with young and healthy trees which demonstrate that the species, in danger of dying out in parts of the bristlecone habitat elsewhere, will survive here.

Finally, those who know the area well, describe it as outstandingly scenic—in places, out of this world. Along with the scientific reasons for national park status, there are the spectacular views of pinnacles and crags, extensive evergreen forests accented by aspens, vistas of vast arid valleys, and ideal hiking and horseback riding country of meadows, lakes, streams, deep canyons surrounded by cliffs—all arranged in such a way as to make interpretation by the naturalist division of the Park Service both easy and impressive to large numbers of park visitors.

Great Basin National Park Association, with headquarters in Ely, Nev., has members now in more than a dozen States. Relatively little opposition has appeared to the park proposal, but since a national park can only be created by act of Congress, there is need for all possible support from individuals and groups in order to make the once impossible dream come true.

A Forest Service plan involving the letting out of sites for summer homes and commercial developments around the fringes of a central scenic area, well within the proposed national park, has been suspended temporarily pending outcome of the park proposal. But there is a real upsurge of interest in taking up land for private ownership in the vicinity, and action to save this remarkable wild country for the enjoyment and inspiration of the people for all time should now be taken promptly, while the situation is favorable.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I yield to my colleague the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I wish to join my good friend and colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE] in his introductory remarks on a bill to establish a national park in Nevada's White Pine County.

As he has stated, the Advisory Board on National Parks has recommended that the Wheeler Peak-Lehman Caves area be designated as the Nation's 31st national park. They concluded that:

> The proposed area contains on assemblage of resources which in total, warrant addition as a unit to the national park system.

Although perhaps little known, the proposed site is outstanding in scenery, vegetation, and geology. Wheeler Peak, with an elevation of 13,063 feet, is the second highest mountain in the State, and is the culminating point of the Giant Snake range.

At the east base of Wheeler Peak, is the Lehman Caves National Monument, a 1-square-mile area preserving exceptional limestone caverns. High on the north side of Wheeler Peak is the Matthes Glacier, the only known body of moving ice in the entire great basin region.

The area also includes towering rock formations, natural arches, and groves of huge twisted bristlecone pine, oldest trees in the world. There are also several jewel-like lakes in the area, including the scenic Stella Lake.

All these outstanding features combine to make the area suitable for designation as a national park. As such, it could serve our citizens as a site for nature study and appreciation, hiking, horseback riding, boating, picnicking, overnight camping, and for general sightseeing.

I would like to assure those who hold bona fide interests in the area that those interests will be given full consideration.

I have joined with my colleague in introducing this proposed legislation in order that Congress may make possible the preservation for future generations of these impressive attractions. Thank you, Mr. President.

PEOPLE'S PROGRAM FOR PEACE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am today introducing for appropriate reference a bill which will allow taxpayers to claim tax credits amounting to no more than 2 percent of their Federal income tax for contributions made to a special fund for United Nations Investments in Peace, which would support programs of technical assistance and economic development. This bill is identical to S. 4181, which I introduced in the 85th Congress.

I have long been advocating an increase in economic and technical assistance to those nations needing it, under the auspices and directions of the United Nations. I have also urged incentives to encourage channeling of more of our private capital into such investments for peace. Clearly, it is to the advantage of our private industries to do so. With the current economic interdependence of the nations of the world, it is obvious that a strong world economy is of tremendous importance in strengthening and bolstering our own.

Under the terms of the bill, contributions to this fund shall be made not by the various governments, but rather by the people themselves. It is my hope that if such a fund is established, freedom-loving people throughout the world will make contributions and in so doing aid in promoting a person-to-person participation in international economic development.

As spelled out in section 3(a) this fund for United Nations investments in peace would be used solely "for the support, by way of loans, grants, or direct expenditures, either directly through the United Nations or through any of its specialized agencies of projects which would increase the food supply, health, educational, and technical skills, and the general social and economic welfare of those nations which need such assistance including the cultural exchange of persons, supplementing and supporting to the maximum extent possible the United Nations expanded programs of technical assistance and the activities carried out under the Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development."

To encourage maximum contributions to the fund on the part of our own citizens, this bill provides an income tax credit. It is estimated that, if everyone contributed, $700 million would be collected in the United States alone.

Mr. President, I strongly urge passage of this bill as an important, positive step in the direction of world peace and prosperity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 2665) to establish a people's program for peace, to provide for investments in peace through the United Nations, to permit deductions from personal income taxes for payments made thereto, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT OF ACT OF JULY 17, 1952—AMENDMENTS

Mr. COTTON submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 2282) to amend the act of July 17, 1952, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SECRETARY OF THE ARMY TO LEASE A PORTION OF TWIN CITIES ARSENAL, MINN.—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MORSE submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 2449) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to lease a portion of Twin Cities Arsenal, Minn., to Independent School District No. 16, Minnesota, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SECRETARY OF THE ARMY TO LEASE A PORTION OF FORT CROWDER, MO.—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MORSE submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 8315) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to lease a portion of Fort Crowder, Mo., to Stella Reorganized Schools R–I, Missouri, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DESIRABILITY OF HOLDING AN INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION IN THE UNITED STATES—AMENDMENT

Mr. JAVITS (for himself and Mr. KEATING) submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the resolution (S. Res. 169) concerning the desirability of holding an international exposition in the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 8(B)(4) OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT — ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Under authority of the order of September 3, 1959, the names of Senators YOUNG of Ohio, CARROLL, DOUGLAS, ENGLE, MCCARTHY, and PROUTY were added as additional cosponsors of the bill (S. 2643) to amend section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, introduced by Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. KUCHEL, and Mr. MCNAMARA) on September 3, 1959.

PRINTING OF SUPPLEMENTARY OR MINORITY VIEWS ON REPORTS OF SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE SUBSEQUENT TO SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the Senate Small Business Committee has received permission from the Senate to file four reports during the sine die adjournment of the first session of this Congress. Two other such requests will be made in the next day or so. I ask unanimous consent that any supplementary or minority views attached to any of these six reports may also be received and printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas:

Letters by him addressed to Senator MURRAY, chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and Hon. Fred A. Seaton, Secretary of the Interior, with respect to Padre Island, Tex.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR TO MEMBERS OF STAFF OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that additional members of the staff of the Committee on Banking and Currency be permitted to have the privilege of the floor today during the debate on S. 2654, the housing bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF FOREIGN SERVICE ACT OF 1946

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, after consultation with the majority and minority leaderships, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], and due to the fact that the bill would not be considered on the call of the calendar, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 907, S. 2633.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2633) to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the Senator from Montana will take a minute to tell us the purpose of the bill. Then I will be in a position to make my decision.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Senator primarily responsible for this much-needed legislation for that purpose. The bill was reported by that committee unanimously.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, S. 2633 would make numerous changes in the administration of the Foreign Service of the United States and the Department of State. With a few exceptions, the bill consists of amendments to the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended. Although many of the amendments are largely of a technical nature, there are also some substantive amendments; but a great many of them are technical.

A new class structure for Foreign Service staff officers and employees is provided. The Foreign Service retirement and disability system is liberalized in conformity with certain principles already in effect with respect to the civil service retirement system. Improvements are made in the legislation pertaining to the recruitment and training of Foreign Service officers. Functional and geographic area specialization by such officers is encouraged. An increase of $100 million, $50 million of which is in foreign currencies, in the authorization of appropriations for the Foreign Service buildings fund, largely for office space for U.S. missions overseas, is approved.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. The comments of the Senator from Arkansas refresh my memory of the bill. I have no objection to its being considered, but I hope the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Montana will make a full statement in regard to its purport, because I think it is important that a legislative history be made on the floor of the Senate with respect to the bill. It is my opinion that the bill is of a nature which will involve a considerable amount of administrative interpretation, and I think the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Montana are best qualified to make the legislative history. I hope they will take a few minutes to explain the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The bill provides for the first substantial changes in the Foreign Service Act of 1946 since the amendments of 1956 were enacted. It will be recalled that the amendments of 1956 added two classes to the Foreign Service officer schedule, raised a numerical ceiling on lateral entry into the Foreign Service officer category, increased from 30 to 35 the number of years of service credit for computing retirement benefits for Foreign Service officers, broadened the authority to operate commissaries and mess services, increased medical benefits, and authorized the establishment of recreational facilities overseas.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that various aspects relating to committee action be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE ACTION

With a few exceptions, all of the provisions of S. 2633 are taken from the following bills:

1. S. 443, Mr. GREEN (by request), January 17, 1959, to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, and for other purposes.

2. S. 1243, Mr. SALTONSTALL (for himself and Mr. MANSFIELD), March 2, 1959, to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, to establish standards of foreign language proficiency for the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes. S. 1243 is the same as S. 3552 of the 85th Congress (SALTONSTALL) on which the Committee on Foreign Relations held an executive hearing on May 27, 1958.

3. S. 2232, Mr. FULBRIGHT (by request), February 16, 1959, to repeal section 12 of the act of June 26, 1884, prohibiting a charge or collection of fees by consular officers for official services to American vessels and seamen, and to repeal the provision in the act of June 4, 1920, authorizing the free issuance of passports to seamen.

4. S. 2233, Mr. FULBRIGHT (by request), June 23, 1959, to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended.

5. S. 1044, Mr. FULBRIGHT (by request), February 16, 1959, to amend the Foreign Service Buildings Act of 1926, as amended.

A public hearing on S. 1243 was held on April 16, 1959, and public hearings on the remaining bills were held on July 6 and 15, 1959. The committee marked up the bills on August 27 and 28 and on the latter day ordered favorably reported an original bill combining the five bills.

MAIN PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

A good many provisions of the bill are of a minor technical, clarifying, or perfecting nature. The other provisions make important changes or innovations in the law pertaining to the Foreign Service and the Department of State. These provisions are summarized, explained, and justified below. References to the "act" in the discussion below mean the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended.

1. Section 2—New class structure for Foreign Service staff personnel: Section 2 of the bill would revise section 415 of the act so as to reduce the number of classes of Foreign Service staff personnel from 22 classes to 10 classes. This change in class structure complements the change in the structure of the Foreign Service officer category which was made in 1956. Classes 15 through 22 under the old staff structure have not been used for some time. A smaller number of classes has proved to be adequate in differentiating the duties and responsibilities of typical jobs carried out by staff personnel overseas. These jobs are primarily in the secretarial, technical, and custodial categories.

The salaries of the top three classes in the new staff schedule are the same as the salaries of classes 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of the Foreign Service officer salary schedule. Information as to the cost and numbers of Foreign Service staff personnel involved in this change is shown below in connection with the discussion of the temporary provisions providing for the conversion of staff employees from the old class structure to the new structure (sec. 51).

2. Section 2—Employment of staff personnel overseas at less than the rates prescribed for Foreign Service staff officers and employees: Section 2 of the bill would also add a new subsection (b) to section 415 of the act which would authorize the Secretary of State administratively to prescribe salaries less than those given in the statutory schedule for Foreign Service staff employees in those cases abroad where it is desirable to employ U.S. citizens locally in a foreign country who are not available or are not qualified for transfer to other posts.

Two examples may illustrate the occasion for the use of this proposed new authority. There are cases where a person living in a foreign country may possess U.S. citizenship, for instance by reason of having been born in the United States during a visit of his parents here, and yet he may in all other respects be a typical native of the foreign country. The U.S. mission may wish to employ such a person in a minor capacity and would not wish to pay him higher than the prevailing local rates for the kind of work involved merely because he happened technically to be an American citizen and entitled as such to the statutory Foreign Service staff salary. A second example concerns the frequent instance when a U.S. mission wishes to hire the wife, for instance, of a resident U.S. businessman to do clerical work in the mission. Such persons may be very useful to the mission yet would not be available for entrance into the regular Foreign Service staff category and subject to transfer from post to post. In using the proposed new authority in this latter category of cases the committee cautions against abuse of the authority by paying Americans, who would merit a salary at or near the statutory schedule of a regular Foreign Service staff officer, at unreasonable rates below the statutory schedule.

3. Section 6—Classification of Foreign Service officer positions in the Department of State: Section 6 of the bill amends section 441 of the act relating to the classification of positions. The existing position classification distinction between the categories of Foreign Service officer and Foreign Service staff officer is removed. Secondly, the Secretary is authorized to classify positions in the Department in accordance with Foreign Service standards without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. Up to the present time the Secretary has been designating certain positions in the Department as Foreign Service positions and classifying them under the Classification Act without clear legislative authority. He has been doing so under an arrangement embodied in an exchange of letters between the House Committee on Government Operations and the Civil Service Commission (see H. Rept. No. 1673, 83d Cong.). Some 1,500 positions in the Department now have a dual designation of "Foreign Service officer position" together with a grade level established under the Classification Act. Under the new language of section 441 of the act the Secretary may designate positions, including new positions, without such a grade level under the Classification Act. Under the new arrangement no grade allocation will be necessary unless the position is to be filled by a non-Foreign Service person.

The committee wishes to take this occasion to comment on the evidence which has been accumulating for some time that the Department of State has gone too far in carrying out the recommendations of the Wriston report calling for additional positions in the Department of State to be designated as Foreign Service officer positions. Evidence has been brought to the attention of the committee regarding the International Educational Exchange Service (IES), the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), and the Policy Planning Staff (S/P) constituting three examples of the committee's concern.

The work of the International Educational Exchange Service is painstaking and specialized. The work of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research is scholarly, specialized, and requires long familiarity with narrowly defined masses of material. The work of the Policy Planning Staff requires senior specialists, for instance officers skilled in military planning who must work closely with their opposite numbers in the Department of Defense. The characteristic of much of the work of these three bureaus in the Department of State is that long continuity of service is highly desirable. Typical assignments of Foreign Service officers to these bureaus are for 2-year periods. These periods are long enough perhaps for the Foreign Service officer to become familiar with the work but not long enough for him to make an effective contribution. Moreover, the nature of the work is frequently so different from that which a Foreign Service officer is accustomed to doing overseas that many officers dislike such assignments and fail to put forth their best effort.

The committee is by no means of the opinion that no Foreign Service officer should be assigned to the aforementioned bureaus in the Department of State—these bureaus have been given merely as examples of the problem. The committee is of the opinion, however, that too many positions in these bureaus and others like them in the Department have been designated as Foreign Service officer positions. The committee has requested by December 1, 1959, a detailed report reviewing the original designation of Foreign Service officer positions throughout the Department pursuant to the Wriston program and discussing any changes in such designations which may have occurred since. The comment of the Department is requested on the views of the committee just set forth.

4. Section 7—Compensation for alien employees: Section 7 of the bill would revise section 444 of the act, pertaining to compensation for alien employees hired overseas, in two principal respects. First, the principle in existing law of compensating alien employees according to the rule "equal pay for equal responsibility" is being replaced by the policy of paying local employees in accordance with "prevailing wage rates and compensation practices for corresponding types of positions in the locality to the extent consistent to the public interest." The existing language has proved difficult to implement in certain countries where, for instance, women are not paid the same wages as men for the same work. Although the U.S. missions would prefer to follow nondiscriminatory wage policies in these instances, it is sometimes offensive to foreign governments and upsetting to local conditions to do so.

The second change in section 444 is the deletion of the requirement that the Board of the Foreign Service advise the Secretary on the salary schedules for oversea local (alien) employees. It has proved unnecessary and impractical to obtain the advice of the Board on such matters.

5. Section 7—Permission for other Government agencies to use authority available to the Department of State in their employment of aliens overseas: Section 7 of the bill would add new language to section 444 of the act which would authorize U.S. Government agencies performing functions abroad to administer local employee programs in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Foreign Service Act. The purpose of the provision is to facilitate uniform employment practices abroad by all U.S. Government agencies. The committee considered designating the Secretary of State as the single official of the Government empowered to prescribe wage scales for local employees but upon being presented with evidence that voluntary cooperation among the agencies is now working satisfactorily, the committee recommends leaving the existing practice the way it is.

6. Section 8—Extra pay for courier duty: Section 8 of the bill would introduce a new section 447 into the act which would permit the Secretary to establish rates of extra pay not to exceed 15 percent of basic salary for persons assigned to duty as couriers. It appears clear to the committee that courier duty is a duty analogous to the various kinds of hazardous duty in the armed services and certain civilian agencies which is compensated for by extra pay. Department of State couriers spend long hours flying as part of their duties and many have sustained injury and some have been killed in this service. The proposed maximum of 15 percent extra pay does not seem to the committee to be excessive due to the fact that hazardous duty pay in the armed services ranges from a minimum of 17 percent to a maximum of 64 percent depending upon the rank of the person and the duty involved.

7. Section 9—Policy on language and other qualifications for the assignment of chiefs of mission and Foreign Service officers in foreign countries: Section 9 of the bill would add a new section 500 to the act stating the policy that chiefs of mission and Foreign Service officers shall have to the maximum practical extent a knowledge of the language, culture, history, and institutions of the countries in which they are to serve.

Probably the only reason this policy is not now a part of the Foreign Service Act is that it was thought to be self-evident. The policy is, however, either not self-evident or else implementation of the policy has failed in a disturbing number of cases. Such failure is inexcusable on the part of the U.S. Government. The richest country in the world can afford to employ, train, and send well-qualified Foreign Service officers wherever they are needed. The importance of their work demands no less.

The committee continues to be disappointed from time to time about nominations for ambassadorial posts. There are too many nominees, career and noncareer, who are merely so-so, not bad enough to reject but not really first rate.

Whether or not the policy statement in the proposed section 500 becomes a part of the law, the Committee on Foreign Relations intends to continue its practice of measuring nominees for chiefs of mission against the standard expressed in the new section 500 and will apply the standard with increasing particularity.

7. Section 10(b)—Appointments of new Foreign Service officers directly to class 7: Section (b) of the bill will add a new subsection (b) to section 516 of the act which would permit the appointment of Foreign Service officers directly to class 7 when, in the opinion of the Secretary, their age, experience or other qualifications make such an appointment appropriate. This provision will take care of the infrequent instances where graduate students having more than the usual amount of training or experience could expect higher starting salaries than afforded by class 8 appointments if they accepted jobs in private industry or other Government agencies. Under the new section 516(b) they could be given the higher salaries of class 7. The Department of State intends to limit these appointments to candidates who (1) are at least 28 years old; (2) have a record of graduate training or employment which clearly demonstrates extra ability; (3) have a modern foreign language competency. The committee endorses these standards in the proposed regulations of the Department.

8. Section 11(b)—Previous Government service as a prerequisite to lateral entry: Section 11(b) of the bill would revise section 517 of the act by removing the existing ceiling on lateral appointments of persons to the Foreign Service officer category. Lateral entry refers to the appointment of persons at an intermediate class in the Foreign Service officer category, depending on the age and experience of the appointee. Now that the so-called Wriston personnel integration program has been completed, the number of lateral entrants should depend simply upon the needs of the Service as determined by the Secretary.

The number of persons entering the Foreign Service officer category laterally will not change from current rates in all probability because the committee bill retains the requirement of 3 or 4 years, depending on age, of previous service in a Government agency as a prerequisite to lateral entry. The committee wishes to make sure that additional personnel or specialists needed urgently in the Service can be employed as the needs of the Service require, but it is convinced that the best way to bring such persons into the Service is by giving Foreign Service Reserve officer appointments to those coming directly from private life or by permitting the lateral entry directly to the Foreign Service officer category of those having previous Government experience. Thus, under either of these routes the Foreign Service will be able to maintain its career nonpartisan features and the Secretary of State will not be troubled by outside pressure to insert inexperienced persons into the Foreign Service officer group.

9. Section 12(b)—Reappointment of an officer who has left the Foreign Service: Section 12(b) of the bill would amend section 520(a) of the act by removing the present requirement that Foreign Service officers who resign and later ask reinstatement must have served continuously in the Government between the time of leaving the Foreign Service and the time of reappointment to the Service. It sometimes happens that an officer is obliged to resign from the Service through no fault of his own. If for instance his wife should become ill and unable to accompany him on foreign assignments, the committee believes that the President should have authority to reappoint such officers to the Service when they again become able to serve. The rationale behind the requirement of previous Government service, discussed immediately above in connection with lateral entry, would seem to be inapplicable to cases arising under section 520(a) of the act because in those cases the persons involved have already been Foreign Service officers and have fulfilled all of the requirements for such appointment.

10. Section 14—Limited and probationary appointments for staff officers: Section 14 of the bill would revise section 531 of the act so as to clarify the authority of the Secretary of State to make temporary, limited, and other types of appointments of staff officers and employees as the needs of the Service require. The new section also makes it clear that the Secretary may terminate at any time and without regard to the provisions of any other law staff officers appointed for temporary or limited service or who occupy probationary status.

The customary probationary period for staff officers is 2 years, and the Department will not specify longer periods. The usual reason for termination of temporary, limited, or probationary employees is that there is not sufficient work for such employees to do or that the specific work for which they were employed has ended. The Secretary's discretion is, however, not limited to such reasons. In the case of persons on probationary status, he may terminate their employment if their work is not satisfactory or if for various reasons they appear not to be suitable for foreign assignments. If, however, the Department's reason for terminating a staff officer on temporary, limited, or probationary appointment is the person's supposed misconduct, that is, conduct reflecting adversely on the integrity or character of the person, then the new version of section 531 requires that such person be given a hearing in accordance with the provisions of section 637 of the act.

11. Section 16(a)—Elimination of salary differential for a Foreign Service officer who is assigned to a position in Washington designated as a "Foreign Service officer position": Section 16(a) of the bill adds a new sentence to section 571 of the act which would eliminate any salary differential being paid to a Foreign Service officer who occupies a position in the Department which is also designated as a "Foreign Service officer position" and which carries a higher salary than the officer's Foreign Service salary. The former policy, allowing the Foreign Service officer to collect the difference, is inconsistent with the Foreign Service theory of appointment to a class and not to a particular job. Authority will continue to pay such a differential if an officer or employee of the Service is assigned to a position in the Department that is not so designated. Thus the salary differential—the difference between the officers's salary and the salary of the position which he occupies—would continue to be paid in those cases in which the position is in a Government agency other than the Department of State or a position not also designated as a "Foreign Service officer position" within the Department of State.

12. Section 16(c)—Housing allowance for officers on assignment in Washington: Section 16(c) of the bill would add a new section 571(e) to the act granting a differential applied to basic salaries of 8 to 13 percent, according to the number of dependents, in the case of Foreign Service officers assigned to duty in the United States between assignments abroad and Foreign Service officers of class 7 or 8 assigned to duty here prior to duty abroad.

This new provision is designed to give the same kind of financial assistance to Foreign Service officers assigned to Washington as has long been afforded to military personnel in the same circumstances. Foreign Service personnel coming to Washington for a relatively short time have many additional expenses, largely relating to housing, than employees who live here all the time. Foreign Service officers are now receiving a transfer allowance and hotel expenses while locating more permanent housing, but these allowances meet only a small part of their extra expenses. The proposed additional allowance is fixed at an amount which may be expected to meet about one-half of typical housing costs while on duty in the United States.

13. Section 18—Foreign-language knowledge a prerequisite to assignment: Section 18 of the bill would introduce a new section 578 in the act which would require the Secretary to designate every Foreign Service officer position in a foreign country whose incumbent should have a useful knowledge of a language of the country. After a 5-year period to allow for increased training in foreign languages, each position so designated would be filled only by a qualified person. The Secretary would be able to make exceptions to this requirement for individuals or when special or emergency conditions existed.

One of the most common and justified criticisms of the Foreign Service today is the low level of language competency throughout the Service. The facts are familiar that 70 percent of new Foreign Service officers come into the Service without a knowledge of any foreign language. Fifty percent of officers already in the Service lack a knowledge of any foreign language. The figure on deficiencies in the more difficult languages are not available, but the committee has no reason to think the figures are any better with respect to them.

Language competence in the Foreign Service is primarily a function of money and people. With adequate appropriations and adequate numbers of intelligent officers, any desired level of language competence can be obtained. The committee intends that foreign-language competence be raised substantially, not for its own sake, but based on actual needs in U.S. missions overseas. The committee expects that the designation of Foreign Service officer positions abroad requiring language competence shall be based largely on the recommendations of the mission chief without regard to current budgetary targets. The Department of State estimates that the implementation of the proposed new section 578 will cost about $250,000 per year over a 5-year period. This would seem to be a small price when measured against the urgent need.

14. Section 19—In-class promotions of Foreign Service officers: Section 19 of the bill would amend section 625 of the act so as to eliminate a possible conflict between the policy of that section relating to in-class promotions of Foreign Service officers and the policy of the Government Employees' Incentive Awards Act (title III, Public Law 763, 83d Cong.) authorizing cash awards for superior service. The committee believes that while the cash-awards program is excellent, the special needs of the Foreign Service make it appropriate to award within-class increases for certain kinds of excellence, such as the learning of unusual foreign languages on an officer's own initiative.

15. Section 20—Relationship between promotions and functional and geographic area specialization: Section 20 of the bill would add a new section 626 to the act expressing the policy that more functional and geographic area specialization is needed in the Foreign Service and prohibiting such specialization from prejudicing promotions of officers up through class 1 in the Service.

The traditional assignment policy in the Foreign Service has been based on the premise that an officer is not fully qualified to be a mission chief unless he has had service in each of four or five main geographic areas in the world. It may be as a result of such a policy that the Government is short of topnotch specialists in some of these great geographic areas.

Existing assignment policy with regard to functional specialization appears to result in an officer having 2 or 3 years' experience in six or eight different types of work. The committee is concerned lest this policy result in developing an officer who is a jack of all trades and master of none.

With respect to geographic specialization the committee would like to see a situation in which incoming officers would be assured that most of their careers would be devoted to one of the larger geographic areas. They could then concentrate on the languages, culture, and problems of the area and develop outstanding excellence. For example, after an appropriate period of brief orientation assignments, an officer might specialize in Arabic and in the problems of the great area lying between Morocco and Pakistan and spend the greater part of his career in assignments which would take him alternately to that area, to Washington, to some third area country having important ties with that area.

With regard to functional specialization the committee believes that it would be better for a Foreign Service officer to concentrate on one field of work—say economic matters or administration—for a substantial part of his career until he reaches the level of, say deputy chief of mission, at which point he would have the choice of finishing his career as a senior specialist or taking on broader executive responsibilities and look forward to promotion to the levels of career minister or career ambassador.

The committee expects that the precepts given to promotion panels and the instructions given to assignment panels will be revised in accordance with the policy laid down in the new section 626.

16. Section 24—Accelerated selection-out benefits: Section 24 of the bill amends section 634(b)(1) of the act to authorize the Secretary in special instances to combine the installments of severance payment to which an officer is entitled when he is retired early from the Foreign Service in accordance with section 633 of the act. The usual thing would be for the selection-out benefits to be paid in three annual installments but the change in section 634(b)(1) will permit the Secretary in his discretion to accelerate the payments where the officer has an unusual financial need. These payments will be made from the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund.

17. Section 27—Consolidated separation for cause provision: Section 27 of the bill combines in a revision of section 637(a) of the act several provisions of the act relating to separation for unsatisfactory performance of duty, misconduct and malfeasance. The Secretary is given complete discretion to separate Foreign Service officers, Foreign Service Reserve officers, and Foreign Service staff personnel for such "cause as will promote the efficiency of the Service." This phrase, which is applicable to the Civil Service, is taken from the Lloyd-La Follette Act of 1912. Although the Secretary has complete discretion in defining causes for dismissal which will promote the efficiency of the Service, the revised section requires that officers separated under it shall be given a hearing by the Board of the Foreign Service and requires the establishment of such cause at such hearing. An officer may waive his right to a hearing. Foreign Service officers of class 8 or other officers in a probationary status or serving under limited or temporary appointments have a right to a hearing only in cases where the reason for their proposed separation from the Service is misconduct. Section 637(a) as it is amended deals with separations on a case-by-case basis. The language of the section could not be the basis for a general reduction in force.

18. Section 27—Extension of deferred annuity rights to persons separated from the Service for cause: Section 27 of the bill would amend section 637(b) of the act to provide that an officer separated from the Service for cause may receive a refund of his contributions to the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund, with interest, or he may elect to receive a deferred annuity payable when he reaches the age of 60. The committee approved this change but inserted a clause providing that a deferred annuity would not be available in cases where the Secretary determines that separation was based in whole or in part on the ground of disloyalty to the United States.

Under the present law certain officers separated for unsatisfactory performance of duty may receive an immediate limited annuity. Officers separated for misconduct are entitled merely to a refund of their contributions to the fund. The committee agrees (except as to disloyalty cases) with the view of the Department of State that, even though an officer may be separated for cause, after he has served at least 5 years he should not be denied the annuity benefit which he has earned by reason of his contributions and his period of satisfactory service.

19. Section 28—Termination of service of Reserve officers and staff officers with limited appointments: Section 28 of the bill would insert a new section 638 in the act which would permit the Secretary notwithstanding any other law to terminate at any time the service of any Reserve officer or staff officer serving under a limited appointment. This is the same principle as is contained in revised section 531 of the act discussed above under section 14 of the bill. The committee inserted a provision regarding separations for misconduct in the proposed new section 638 similar to that contained in revised section 531.

A special problem under the proposed new section 638 arises by reason of the concern of a certain group of 45 officers under limited Reserve appointments that the new authority may be used to terminate their employment. They accepted Foreign Service Reserve officer status at the encouragement of the Department of State. The committee inserted, with the concurrence of the Department, a provision which will insure that these officers will be retired when their limited appointments run out but not before.

20. Section 30—Longevity increases for Foreign Service staff employees: Section 30 of the bill would add a new subsection 642(b) to the act which would authorize the Secretary to establish a system of longevity increases for staff personnel. The Classification Act included the principle of longevity increases some years ago.

Work performed by staff personnel is highly essential but its nature is such as to contain inherent limitations on opportunities for promotion in some categories of work. In addition the staff group now includes a substantial number of older employees who were unable to qualify for various reasons under the Wriston program for lateral entry into the Foreign Service officer category. There is therefore something of a morale problem within this segment of the Foreign Service staff group which can be alleviated by the enactment of the proposed new subsection 642(b).

Longevity increases will not be automatically awarded; they will be given in recognition of both longevity and performance. The longevity periods will be established by the Secretary by regulation.

21. Section 31—Orientation and language training for wives of U.S. Government employees in anticipation of assignment overseas: Section 31 of the bill would add a new sentence to section 701 of the act giving the Secretary authority to provide orientation and language training to wives of Government employees in anticipation of assignment of such employees abroad. The Department of State has been giving such training on a space-available basis for some time but the practice ought to be specifically authorized by law. The Department asked for authority to train "dependents" of employees but the committee limited the authority to "spouses," and inserted the phrase "to the extent that space is available" in order to keep such training to reasonable numbers.

22. Section 32(b)—Alien language teachers for the Foreign Service Institute: Section 32(b) of the bill would add a new subsection 704(e) to the act permitting the Secretary to employ aliens for the Foreign Service Institute either by appointment to the staff on a full- or part-time basis or by contract for services. This proposed authority would apply both in the United States and abroad because the Foreign Service Institute operates several language training schools overseas. The new authority is essential because, of course, it is sometimes difficult to find American citizens sufficiently well qualified to provide instruction in esoterc languages and other specialized subjects taught at the Foreign Service Institute. The authority to employ by contract is essential since some language teachers are available in the United States for only short periods of time and because some Institute courses are given periodically.

23. Section 32(b)—Monetary incentives for proficiency in esoteric languages: Section 32(b) of the bill also would add a new subsection 704(f) to the act which would authorize the Secretary to provide special monetary incentives to encourage the acquisition or retention of proficiency in esoteric foreign languages or other special abilities needed in the Service. The committee believes this new authority is necessary but desires that it be employed very cautiously. The term "esoteric foreign languages" certainly does not include such languages as French, German, Spanish, and Italian, which many Americans have an opportunity to learn. In the administration of a language incentives program language proficiency must be tested frequently and standards of competency must be kept high.

The "special abilities" which are to be encouraged are not the traditional skills expected of Foreign Service officers nor the ordinary academic disciplines which reasonably well educated officers bring with them into the Service.

24. Section 33(b)—Transfer of Foreign Service staff officers to the Foreign Service retirement system: Section 33(b) of the bill adds a new subsection 803(c) to the act providing for mandatory participation in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system of certain staff officers and employees. The proposed subsection 803(c)(1) would provide for the automatic transfer of Foreign Service staff officers with at least 10 years' service from the civil service retirement system to the Foreign Service retirement system. Their contributions to the civil service retirement fund would be automatically transferred and they would be required to make no additional contribution and they would get no refund as a result of the shift from one retirement system to the other.

The new subsection 803(c)(1) recognizes the fact that Foreign Service staff personnel serve overseas under the same conditions as Foreign Service officers who, under the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, are required to retire at age 60 (rather than age 70 as under the civil service system) because of the rigors of some foreign climates and the burdens of moving periodically to new working and living situations.

The new subsection 803(c)(2) provides for retirement on a gradual scheduled basis over a 5-year period of staff personnel who are above the mandatory retirement age at the time they become participants in the system. This new early retirement provision will not go into effect until 1 year after the other provisions of the bill go into effect. Subsection 803(c)(2) would involuntarily retire a group of some 400 older staff officers who would not have been required to retire for periods up to 10 years longer if they were permitted to stay under the civil service retirement system. The committee understands that most of the persons in this group welcome the new provisions but there are some who may have failed to make adequate financial provisions for such involuntary early retirement and who are therefore adversely affected.

These 400 older staff officers constitute, in the view of the Department, a "hump problem" analogous in many ways to that dealt with recently by the Congress in legislation pertaining to the Navy. The Department of State believes that it would be in the interest of the Service to accelerate the retirement of these 400 staff officers, most of whom have been unable to qualify for lateral appointment as Foreign Service officers because they were too old.

Because it is in the interest of the Government that retirement of these persons be accelerated the committee decided that their financial problems should be eased by the Government. The committee inserted a provision in the bill which would give to such involuntary retirees the same kind of financial aid as is given to Foreign Service officers who are selected out. Involuntary retirees would receive, in addition to their retirement benefits, one-twelfth of a year's salary for each year's service not exceeding a total of 1 year's salary. This amount would be payable in a lump sum at the time of retirement. The Department of State estimates that this temporary provisions, over the 5 years that it will operate, will cost approximately $676,000, which will be paid out of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund, no appropriation being required.

It appears possible that some members of this group of involuntary retirees may not have knowledge of this possibility. The committee urges the Department to disseminate information about this matter widely so that persons affected can take appropriate steps to minimize any adverse financial consequences which can be foreseen.

25. Section 35—Increase from 5 to 6½ percent in Foreign Service personnel contributions to the retirement fund and matching contributions by the Government to the fund: Section 35 of the bill would amend section 811 of the act to place the financing of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund on the same basis as the civil service retirement system. It would increase the rate of contribution to the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund from 5 to 6½ percent of basic salary. It would also provide a matching contribution to the fund from the appropriation for Foreign Service salaries.

The cost of the proposed matching contribution to the fund will be $2.5 million per year. The Department of State has been getting annual appropriations for the fund averaging $1.5 million for the last 4 years. There were no payments to the fund out of appropriations for several years prior to that. The fund's potential liabilities therefore exceed its assets and the proposed $2.5 million annual matching contribution will enable the fund to restore financial balance.

26. Section 36(a)—Benefits for survivors of Foreign Service officers: Section 36(a) of the bill would revise sections 821(b) and 821(c) of the act to provide benefits for surviving spouses and children of participants in the Foreign Service retirement system like the benefits provided for survivors of participants in the civil service retirement system.

The proposed changes in section 821 will increase survivor benefits at a reduced cost to the participant. The proposed formula for computing a joint and survivorship annuity under which the retiring officer elects to receive a reduced annuity and, upon death, an annuity for a wife or a husband, and the proposed formula for computing annuities for surviving dependent children are similar to those now in the civil service retirement system. The following example from pages 234–235 of the hearings will illustrate the advantages to the participant of the proposed formula over the existing formula.

Average salary for highest 5 years of service	$10,000
Annuity (2 percent times 30 years of service)	6,000
EXISTING
Maximum survivor annuity	2,500
Cost to officer	1,250
Officer's reduced annuity	4,750
Maximum surviving annuity payable to a dependent child	0
PROPOSED
Maximum survivor annuity	3,000
Cost to officer (2½ percent of $2,400 equals $60; 10 percent of $3,600 equals $360)	420
Officer's reduced annuity	5,580
Maximum surviving annuity payable to a dependent child:
With surviving parent	600
With no surviving parent	720

The change in section 821(b) also eliminates a so-called gambling provision from existing law which now permits the participants to accept a further reduction of 5 percent of the spouse's annuity in order to provide for restoration of the full annuity if the spouse predeceases the participant. This gambling provision is not based on sound actuarial principles.

Benefits for surviving children of participants in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system are being provided for the first time in this bill. They have long been available under the civil service retirement system.

27. Section 37(a)—Return to duty of person recovered from disability: Section 37(a) of the bill would amend section 831(b) of the act relating to disability annuitants. Three principle changes are made: First, the provisions on annual examinations of disability annuitants are made more strict; second, new authority is given to permit the return to active duty in the Service of a disability annuitant who recovers sufficiently; third, the Secretary is given authority to establish by regulation a board of physicians who will advise him with regard to disability annuitants.

28. Section 39—The right to a deferred annuity of person who voluntarily leaves the Foreign Service after 5 years: Section 39 of the bill would add a new section 834 to the act which will permit a participant in the Foreign Service retirement system, upon voluntary separation from the Service after 5 years, to choose either to have his contributions to the fund returned to him with interest or to leave his contribution in the fund and receive a deferred annuity, based on his years of service and salary at the time of his separation, commencing at age 60. Similar deferred annuities are provided under the civil service retirement system.

29. Section 46—Amount of permissible earnings by Foreign Service annuitants who are reemployed by the Federal Government: Section 46 of the bill would add a new section 872 to the act dealing with the question of the limit on earnings of an annuitant if he returns to a Government job. Under present law a Foreign Service retiree who is reemployed in the Federal Government must forfeit his annuity during such reemployment. Under the civil service retirement system, a retired employee may be reemployed by the Government and continue to receive his full annuity, plus the difference, if any, between the annuity and the salary of the position to which he is appointed.

Unfortunately, in view of the committee, the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act place the Federal Government in an unfavorable position to compete with private industry in obtaining the services of retired Federal personnel whose reemployment would benefit the Government. This is because such persons when hired in private industry may keep their annuities and receive the full amount of the salary in private industry.

The committee recommends the adoption of the new section 872 which would entitle a retired Foreign Service employee to receive the salary of a position to which he may be appointed plus so much of his annuity which, when combined with such salary, does not exceed the highest salary which such employee was entitled to receive when he retired from the Foreign Service. The committee believes that this provision will be more fair to retired personnel and will be in the public interest.

30. Section 48—Clarification of authority to lend Foreign Service employees oversea household furniture: Section 48 of the bill would amend section 812 of the act so as to make it clear that the Secretary of State may lend furniture, such as chairs and tables as distinguished from equipment such as refrigerators, to Foreign Service employees overseas for use in personally owned or leased residences. The purpose of this provision, thus amended, is to save shipping costs. Certain oversea missions have established pools of furniture which can be loaned to employees, thus saving the cost of shipping such furniture from the United States or from some other distant Foreign Service post.

31. Section 49—Clarification of authority to ship Foreign Service employees' vehicles: Section 49 of the bill would amend section 913 of the act so as to substitute "motor vehicles or replacement thereof" for the word "automobiles." The Comptroller General has ruled that "automobiles" does not mean motorcycles or motor scooters. Since it would be cheaper for the Government to transport motorcycles and motor scooters than automobiles, the committee believes that it would be advantageous to broaden the scope of section 913. The committee expects the Department in administering section 913 to establish by regulation some reasonable limit on the number of motor vehicles which may be transported for Foreign Service personnel within appropriate periods of time.

The committee urges the Department of State to give further study to the matter of transportation of vehicles overseas for the official use of U.S. missions. It suggests, for example, that greater use be made of motor vehicles built in the country of the mission since road or other conditions are frequently such as to make locally built cars more appropriate and, certainly, less expensive than American cars, counting the transportation costs from the United States. In circumstances warranting transportation of American cars overseas for official use, the committee believes that small American cars are just as useful and less offensive to foreign sensibilities than the larger American cars.

32. Section 51—Conversion table from the present Foreign Service staff class and salary schedule to the schedule established by section 2 of the bill: Section 51 of the bill contains temporary provisions providing for an orderly and equitable transfer of Foreign Service staff officers and employees from their present classes and salaries to the new classes and salaries prescribed by the revised section 415 of the act. Under the conversion scheme no Foreign Service staff person will have a reduced salary. The numbers of persons involved in this transfer in each class and the average salary adjustment in the various classes are shown in the following table taken from page 209 of the hearings:

Present FSS class	Number on rolls Dec. 31, 1958	Conversion to new schedule: Class	Conversion to new schedule: Number	Average per annum salary adjustment [1]	Total cost
FSS-1	30	FSS-1	30	$155	$4,666
FSS-2	24	FSS-1	15	204	3,060
		FSS-2	9	67	605
FSS-3	33	FSS-2	33	120	3,970
FSS-4	35	FSS-2	17	222	3,770

[1] The average salary adjustment has been rounded off to the nearest dollar. Consequently multiplying the average per annum adjustment by the number of individuals does not exactly equal the total cost which has been computed on the basis of actual salary adjustments.

33. Section 52—Authority to use taxicabs in lieu of Government vehicles in certain cases: Section 52 of the bill would amend section 11 of Public Law 885, 84th Congress (70 Stat. 890) by making it possible for the chief of a diplomatic mission to approve the use of taxicabs, in addition to Government-owned vehicles, for the transportation of Government employees from their residence to the office and return when public transportation facilities other than taxicabs are unsafe or not available. The committee understands that the use of taxicabs will be authorized typically in those cases where the use of Government-owned vehicles necessitates the use of chauffeurs and makes this form of transportation more costly than the use of taxicabs.

34. Section 53—Exclusion from gross income for tax purposes of disability annuity payments: Section 53 of the bill would amend section 104(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to exempt disability annuities from Federal income tax. This change is consistent with provisions of the Internal Revenue Code relating to disabilities annuities payable to other Government employees by the Bureau of Employees Compensation. The change is favored by the Treasury.

35. Section 54—Elimination of free official services and passports for American vessels and seamen respectively: Section 54 of the bill would amend section 12 of the act of June 26, 1884 (22 U.S.C. 1186) which now prohibits the charging of fees by consular officers for official services to American vessels and seamen. The Department will establish a reasonable schedule of fees for such services, and give reasonable notice to the parties affected, but it will not make a charge for services required by law or services which are primarily in the public interest.

Section 54 also amends section 1 of chapter 223 of the act of June 4, 1920 (22 U.S.C. 214) by eliminating free passports to American seamen. No objection was registered with the committee to this change and the original reason for the provision has long since passed.

36. Section 55—Increase in the authorization of appropriations for the foreign buildings program of the Department of State: Section 55 of the bill would add a new subsection (c) to section 4 of the Foreign Service Buildings Act, 1926, as amended (22 U.S.C. 295) which would increase by $100 million (of which $50 million represents foreign currencies) appropriations authorized for the purpose of erecting office buildings and other buildings needed by U.S. missions overseas.

The Department of State presented to the committee a detailed plan for a 5-year building program which was set forth beginning on page 125 of the hearings on S. 1044. Some members of the committee have seen the architectural plans and models for many of the structures which are to be built pursuant to this 5-year plan. The committee commends the Department for the excellence of these plans.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the bill is a very long and involved bill. I find it very difficult to pick out of it any particular item. I call attention to one particular feature the committee added which was not in the bill as it came from the administration. It was a statement, really, of policy upon functional and geographic area specialization.

I may say that since the committee reported the bill, the Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration, Mr. Henderson, telephoned to me, personally, and stated that he thought this provision would result in a very great improvement in the policy of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that, as can be seen, the report on the bill is very full. But if there are any questions which he would like to ask, I shall certainly try to answer them.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I do not need to ask the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from Montana any questions.

As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee I was an ardent supporter of the bill. But one of the points which I thought should be made today in establishing the legislative history of the bill calls for a statement in regard to some of the purposes and intents of the committee in bringing the bill to the floor of the Senate.

It is true, as will be seen by examining the bill, that its first part has to do with technical matters in regard to salary equalizations and classifications.

But I should like to have Senators turn for a moment to page 8 of the committee report, where we start coming to grips, by means of the bill, with what in my judgment is one of the great needs for improvement in our Foreign Service in connection with which our distinguished chairman [Mr. FULBRIGHT], as well as the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] have had much to say in the past—and quite correctly so—about the need to improve the language capabilities and facilities of our Foreign Service officers.

On page 8 of the committee report will be found a discussion of section 18 of the bill, "Foreign Language Knowledge a Prerequisite to Assignment." This is an excellent provision of the bill; and I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD, as part of my comments on the bill, the part of page 8 of the committee report which deals with section 18.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the report (No. 880) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

13. Section 18—Foreign language knowledge a prerequisite to assignment: Section 18 of the bill would introduce a new section 578 in the act which would require the Secretary to designate every Foreign Service officer position in a foreign country whose incumbent should have a useful knowledge of a language of the country. After a 5-year period to allow for increased training in foreign languages, each position so designated would be filled only by a qualified person. The Secretary would be able to make exceptions to this requirement for individuals or when special or emergency conditions existed.

One of the most common and justified criticisms of the Foreign Service today is the low level of language competency throughout the Service. The facts are familiar that 70 percent of new Foreign Service officers come into the Service without a knowledge of any foreign language. Fifty percent of officers already in the Service lack a knowledge of any foreign language. The figure on deficiencies in the more difficult languages are not available but the committee has no reason to think the figures are any better with respect to them.

Language competence in the Foreign Service is primarily a function of money and people. With adequate appropriations and adequate numbers of intelligent officers, any desired level of language competence can be obtained. The committee intends that foreign language competence be raised substantially—not for its own sake—but based on actual needs in U.S. missions overseas. The committee expects that the designation of Foreign Service officer positions abroad requiring language competence shall be based largely on the recommendations of the mission chief without regard to current budgetary targets. The Department of State estimates that the implementation of the proposed new section 578 will cost about $250,000 per year over a 5-year period. This would seem to be a small price when measured against the urgent need.

Mr. MORSE. Then, Mr. President, I suggest that Senators turn to page 11 of the report which deals with section 31, "Orientation and language training for wives of U.S. Government employees in anticipation of assignment overseas."

I believe it is often overlooked that when we send a Foreign Service officer abroad, we frequently do not send him alone; usually his family accompanies him. The members of his family are also, in effect, ambassadorial agents of the people of the United States to that foreign government.

I believe we have been too much inclined to take the families as a matter of course, and not to be of the assistance to them which I believe we very often could be, in order to make them more capable of serving the Foreign Service needs of our people abroad.

Section 31 of the bill, is, in my opinion, a very important one; and I wish to commend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] and the Senator from Montana who conducted some of these hearings—in regard to this particular section of the bill. I believe that any money our Government spends in regard to anything it does to be of assistance to the spouses and dependents of our employees abroad will be money well spent.

Section 32(b) deals with "Alien language teachers for the Foreign Service Institute." In my judgment, that is exceedingly important. If we are to train these people in foreign languages, I believe we should be willing to build up the sort of teacher training that the bill calls for.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks in the RECORD the portion of page 11 of the committee report which deals with topics 21 and 22, to which I have just now referred.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

21. Section 31, Orientation and language training for wives of U.S. Government employees in anticipation of assignment overseas: Section 31 of the bill would add a new sentence to section 701 of the act giving the Secretary authority to provide orientation and language training to wives of Government employees in anticipation of assignment of such employees abroad. The Department of State has been giving such training on a space-available basis for some time but the practice ought to be specifically authorized by law. The Department asked for authority to train "dependents" of employees but the committee limited the authority to "spouses," and inserted the phrase "to the extent that space is available" in order to keep such training to reasonable numbers.

22. Section 32(b), Alien language teachers for the Foreign Service Institute: Section 32(b) of the bill would add a new subsection 704(e) to the act permitting the Secretary to employ aliens for the Foreign Service Institute either by appointment to the staff on a full- or part-time basis or by contract for services. This proposed authority would apply both in the United States and abroad because the Foreign Service Institute operates several language training schools overseas. The new authority is essential because, of course, it is sometimes difficult to find American citizens sufficiently well qualified to provide instruction in esoteric languages and other specialized subjects taught at the Foreign Service Institute. The authority to employ by contract is essential since some language teachers are available in the United States for only short periods of time and because some Institute courses are given periodically.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has said, other parts of the bill deal with equalization in regard to some of the salary schedule problems and classifications, highly technical in nature. They speak for themselves, and do not require any comment.

Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] for the fine work they have done in connection with the bill.

I believe the bill is of sufficient importance to be passed—as I am sure it will be—following a quorum call.

However, Mr. President, I now understand that the acting majority leader would like to have a quorum call following the passage of this bill. I believe I would have to agree that probably no Member of the Senate who would come to the floor of the Senate would in any way be opposed to a bill of the merit of this one. So at this time I withhold my suggestion of the absence of a quorum; but I wish to have a quorum call immediately following the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I do not know of any Member who is in opposition to the bill, which was reported unanimously from the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. MORSE. Yes. I merely wish to say that, regardless of whether any Member agrees or disagrees in regard to the bill, I believe it very important in these closing days of the session that transactions in regard to important pieces of proposed legislation not be conducted without giving notice, by means of quorum calls.

However, I agree that this measure is very obviously desirable of enactment, and does have the unanimous support of the Foreign Relations Committee; and, therefore, I withhold the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2633) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Foreign Service Act Amendments of 1959".

SEC. 2. Section 415 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 415. (a) There shall be ten classes of Foreign Service staff officers and employees, referred to hereafter as staff officers and employees. The per annum salaries of staff officers and employees within each class shall be as follows:

"Class 1	$11,660	$11,990	$12,320	$12,650	$12,980	$13,310	$13,640
"Class 2	9,900	10,175	10,450	10,725	11,000	11,275	11,550
"Class 3	8,140	8,415	8,690	8,965	9,240	9,515	9,790
"Class 4	7,006	7,225	7,450	7,675	7,900	8,125	8,350
"Class 5	6,150	6,350	6,550	6,750	6,950	7,150	7,350
"Class 6	5,300	5,500	5,700	5,900	6,100	6,300	6,500
"Class 7	4,650	4,800	4,950	5,100	5,250	5,400	5,550
"Class 8	4,200	4,350	4,500	4,650	4,800	4,950	5,100
"Class 9	3,750	3,900	4,050	4,200	4,350	4,500	4,650
"Class 10	3,500	3,600	3,700	3,800	3,900	4,000	4,100

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, the Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, fix the salary at lesser rates than those prescribed by this section for the applicable class of staff officers or employees who are recruited abroad and who are not available or are not qualified for transfer to another post."

SEC. 3. Section 416 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 416. (a) A person appointed as a staff officer or employee shall receive basic salary at one of the rates of the class to which he is appointed which the Secretary shall, taking into account his qualifications and experience and the needs of the Service, determine to be appropriate for him to receive.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary determines that the needs of the Service warrant the appointment of staff officers or employees in a particular occupational group uniformly at a rate above the minimum rate of the applicable class, he may adjust the basic salary of any staff officer or employee in the same class and occupational group who is receiving less than such established rate."

SEC. 4. Section 417 of such Act is amended by striking out "(b)" in the first sentence.

SEC. 5. Section 431 of such Act is amended by striking out in the first sentence of paragraph (a) the phrase "the termination of time spent on authorized leave, whichever shall be later," and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "upon termination of his service in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section,"; and by amending paragraph (b) of this section to read as follows:

"(b) The official services of a chief of mission shall not be deemed terminated by the appointment of a successor but shall continue until he has relinquished charge of the mission and for such additional period as may be determined by the Secretary, but in no case shall such additional period exceed fifty days, including time spent in transit. During such period the Secretary may require him to render such services as he may deem necessary in the interests of the Government."

SEC. 6. Section 441 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"CLASSIFICATION OF POSITIONS IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE AND IN THE DEPARTMENT

"SEC. 441. (a) Under such regulations as he may prescribe, and in order to facilitate effective management, the Secretary shall classify all positions in the Service at posts abroad, excluding positions to be occupied by chiefs of mission, and in the case of those occupied by Foreign Service officers, Reserve officers, and staff officers and employees, he shall establish such positions in relation to the classes established by sections 412, 414, and 415, respectively. Positions occupied by alien employees and consular agents, respectively, shall be allocated to such classes as the Secretary may establish by regulation.

"(b) Under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Secretary may, notwithstanding the provisions of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C. 1071 and the following), classify positions in or under the Department which he designates as Foreign Service Officer positions to be occupied by officers and employees of the Service, and establish such positions in relation to the classes established by sections 412, 414, and 415."

SEC. 7. Section 444 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"COMPENSATION PLANS FOR ALIEN EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 444. (a) The Secretary shall, in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, establish compensation plans for alien employees of the Service: Provided, That such compensation plans shall be based upon prevailing wage rates and compensation practices for corresponding types of positions in the locality, to the extent consistent with the public interest.

"(b) For the purpose of performing functions abroad, other Government agencies are authorized to administer alien employee programs in accordance with the applicable provisions of this Act."

SEC. 8. Section 446 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"ADMINISTRATIVE ESTABLISHMENT OF HAZARDOUS DUTY PAY FOR CERTAIN CATEGORIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 446. The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, establish rates of salary differential, not exceeding 15 per centum of basic salary, for officers or employees of the Service while they are assigned for duty as couriers."

SEC. 9. Title V of such Act is amended by adding at the beginning thereof the following new section:

"POLICY

"SEC. 500. It is the policy of the Congress that chiefs of mission and Foreign Service officers appointed or assigned to serve the United States in foreign countries shall have, to the maximum practicable extent, among their qualifications, a useful knowledge of the principal language or dialect of the country in which they are to serve, and knowledge and understanding of the history, the culture, the economic, and political institutions, and the interests of such country and its people."

SEC. 10. (a) The heading to section 516 of such Act is amended to read as follows: "ADMISSION TO CLASS 7 OR 8".

(b) Section 516 of such Act is amended by striking out "SEC. 516" and inserting in lieu thereof "SEC. 516. (a)" and by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (b) which shall read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary may furnish the President with the names of those persons who have passed such examinations and are eligible for appointment as Foreign Service officers of class 8, whom he recommends for appointment directly to class 7 when in his opinion, their age, experience, or other qualifications make such an appointment appropriate."

SEC. 11. (a) Section 517 of such Act is amended by striking out the words "A person who has not served in class 8" which appear at the beginning of the first sentence, and inserting in place thereof the following: "A person who has not been appointed as a Foreign Service officer in accordance with section 516 of this Act".

(b) Section 517 of such Act is further amended by striking out the second and third sentences of such section.

SEC. 12. (a) The heading to section 520 of such Act is amended by striking out the phrase "REINSTATEMENT AND RECALL" and substituting in lieu thereof the phrase "REAPPOINTMENT, RECALL, OR REEMPLOYMENT".

(b) The first sentence of paragraph (a) of section 520 of such Act is amended by inserting a period after the word "Service" where it appears for the third time, and by striking out the remainder of that sentence.

(c) Paragraph (b) of section 520 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary may recall any retired Foreign Service officer temporarily to duty in the Service whenever he shall determine such recall is in the public interest."

(d) Section 520 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (c) which shall read as follows:

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of title 5, United States Code, section 62, and title 5, United States Code, section 715a, a Foreign Service officer heretofore or hereafter retired under the provisions of section 631 or 632 or a Foreign Service staff officer or employee hereafter retired under the provisions of section 803 shall not, by reason of his retired status, be barred from employment in Federal Government service in any appointive position for which he is qualified. An annuitant so reemployed shall serve at the will of the appointing officer."

SEC. 13. Section 528 of such Act is amended by striking out in the second sentence of such section the phrase "subsection (d), section 7, of the Classification Act of 1923" and substituting in lieu thereof the phrase "the Classification Act of 1949".

SEC. 14. Section 531 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 531. The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, appoint staff officers and employees on the basis of qualifications and experience. The Secretary may make provisions for temporary, limited, and such other types of appointment as he may deem necessary. He is authorized to establish appropriate probationary periods during which newly appointed staff officers or employees, other than those appointed for temporary or limited services shall be required to serve. The Secretary may terminate at any time, without regard to the provisions of section 637, or the provisions of any other law, staff officers or employees appointed for temporary or limited service and staff officers or employees who have not completed probationary periods, except that if such separation is by reason of misconduct the provisions of section 637 shall be applicable."

SEC. 15. Section 532 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 532. Under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Secretary may assign a staff officer or employee to any post or he may assign him to serve in any position in which he is eligible to serve under the terms of this or any other Act. A staff officer or employee may be transferred from one post to another by order of the Secretary as the interests of the Service may require."

SEC. 16. (a) Section 571 of such Act is amended by striking out paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d), and the heading to such section, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"ASSIGNMENTS TO ANY GOVERNMENT AGENCY OR INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION

"SEC. 571. (a) Any officer or employee of the Service may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be assigned or detailed for duty in any Government agency, or in any international organization, international commission, or international body, such an assignment or combination of assignments to be for a period of not more than four years, except that under special circumstances the Secretary may extend this four-year period for not more than four additional years.

"(b) If a Foreign Service officer shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the President alone to a position in any Government agency, any United States delegation or mission to any international organization, in any international commission, or in any international body, the period of his service in such capacity shall be construed as constituting an assignment within the meaning of paragraph (a) of this section and such person shall not, by virtue of the acceptance of such an assignment, lose his status as a Foreign Service officer. Service in such a position shall not however, be subject to the limitations concerning the duration of an assignment contained in that paragraph.

"(c) If the basic minimum salary of the position to which an officer or employee of the Service is assigned pursuant to the terms of this section is higher than the salary such officer or employee is entitled to receive as an officer or employee of the Service, such officer or employee shall, during the period such difference in salary exists, receive the salary and allowances of the position in which he is serving in lieu of his salary and allowances as an officer or employee of the Service. Any salary paid under the provisions of this section shall be the salary on the basis of which computations and payments shall be made in accordance with the provisions of title VIII. No officer or employee of the Service who, subsequent to the effective date of the Foreign Service Act Amendments of 1959, is assigned to, or who, after June 30, 1960, occupies a position in the Department that is designated as a Foreign Service Officer position, shall be entitled to receive a salary differential under the provisions of this paragraph."

(b) Paragraph (e) of section 571 of such Act is amended by striking the phrase "with heads of Government agencies" where it appears in the second sentence and by redesignating the paragraph as "(d)".

(c) Section 571 of such Act is amended by adding at the end of such section a new paragraph (e) which shall read as follows:

"(e) Any Foreign Service officer or employee assigned to duty in the continental United States between assignments abroad, and any Foreign Service officer of class 7 or 8 assigned to duty in the continental United States prior to assignment abroad shall receive, during the course of such period of assignment, a differential applied to basic salary of 8 per centum if without dependents, 11 per centum if with one to three dependents, and 13 per centum if with more than three dependents to assist in defraying the cost of quarters."

SEC. 17. Section 575 of such Act is amended by striking out all after the word "accordance" and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "with the appropriate provisions of titles III and IX of Public Law 402, Eightieth Congress (62 Stat. 7 and 13; 22 U.S.C. 1451–1453, 1478 and 1479)."

SEC. 18. Title V of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"FOREIGN LANGUAGE KNOWLEDGE PREREQUISITE TO ASSIGNMENT

"SEC. 578. The Secretary shall designate every Foreign Service officer position in a foreign country whose incumbent should have a useful knowledge of a language or dialect common to such country. After December 31, 1963, each position so designated shall be filled only by an incumbent having such knowledge: Provided, That the Secretary or Deputy Under Secretary for Administration may make exceptions to this requirement for individuals or when special or emergency conditions exist. The Secretary shall establish foreign language standards for assignment abroad of officers and employees of the Service, and shall arrange for appropriate language training of such officers and employees at the Foreign Service Institute or elsewhere."

SEC. 19. Section 625 of such Act and the heading of such section are amended to read as follows:

"WITHIN-CLASS SALARY INCREASES OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS AND RESERVE OFFICERS

"SEC. 625. Any Foreign Service officer or any Reserve officer, whose services meet the standards required for the efficient conduct of the work of the Service and who shall have been in a given class for a continuous period of nine months or more, shall, on the first day of each fiscal year, receive an increase in salary to the next higher rate for the class in which he is serving. Without regard to any other law, the Secretary is authorized to grant to any such officer additional increases in salary, within the salary range established for the class in which he is serving, based upon especially meritorious service."

SEC. 20. Title VI of such Act is amended by inserting after section 625 the following new section and the heading thereto:

"RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PROMOTIONS AND FUNCTIONAL AND GEOGRAPHIC AREA SPECIALIZATION

"SEC. 626. The achievement of the objectives of this Act requires increasing numbers of Foreign Service officers to acquire functional and geographic area specializations and to pursue such specializations for a substantial part of their careers. Such specialization shall not in any way inhibit or prejudice the orderly advancement through Class 1 of any such officer in the Foreign Service."

SEC. 21. The heading "PART D—SEPARATION OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS FROM THE SERVICE" under title VI of such Act is amended to read as follows: "PART D—SEPARATION OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES FROM THE SERVICE".

SEC. 22. Section 631 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS WHO ARE CAREER AMBASSADORS OR CAREER MINISTERS

"SEC. 631. Any Foreign Service officer who is a career Ambassador or a career Minister, other than one occupying a position as chief of mission or any other position to which he has been appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall upon reaching the age of sixty-five, be retired from the Service and receive retirement benefits in accordance with the provisions of section 821, but whenever the Secretary shall determine it to be in the public interest, he may extend such an officer's service for a period not to exceed five years."

SEC. 23. Section 632 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS WHO ARE NOT CAREER AMBASSADORS OR CAREER MINISTERS

"SEC. 632. Any Foreign Service officer, other than one occupying a position as chief of mission or any other position to which he has been appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who is not a career Ambassador or a career Minister shall, upon reaching the age of sixty, be retired from the Service and receive retirement benefits in accordance with the provisions of section 821, but whenever the Secretary shall determine it to be in the public interest, he may extend such an officer's service for a period not to exceed five years."

SEC. 24. Subparagraphs (1) and (2) of paragraph (b) of section 634 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"(1) one-twelfth of a year's salary at his then current salary rate for each year of service and proportionately for a fraction of a year, but not exceeding a total of one year's salary at his then current salary rate, payable without interest, from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, in three equal installments on the 1st day of January following the officer's retirement and on the two anniversaries of this date immediately following: Provided, That in special cases, the Secretary may in his discretion accelerate or combine the installments; and

"(2) a refund of the contributions made to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, with interest as provided in section 841(a), except that in lieu of such refund such officer, if he has at least five years of service credit toward retirement under the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a), may elect to receive retirement benefits on reaching the age of sixty in accordance with the provisions of section 821. In the event that an officer who was separated from class 4 or 5 and who has elected to receive retirement benefits dies before reaching the age of sixty, his death shall be considered a death in service within the meaning of section 832. In the event that an officer who was separated from class 6 or 7 and who has elected to receive retirement benefits dies before reaching the age of sixty, the total amount of his contributions made to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, with interest as provided in section 841(a), shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of section 841(b)."

SEC. 25. Section 635 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS RETIRED FROM CLASS 7 OR 8

"SEC. 635. Any Foreign Service officer in class 7 who is appointed under the provisions of section 516(b) and any Foreign Service officer in class 8 shall occupy probationary status. The Secretary may terminate his service at any time."

SEC. 26. Section 636 of such Act is amended by striking out the phrase "Any Foreign Service officer" and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "Any participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System".

SEC. 27. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 637 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"SEPARATION FOR CAUSE

"SEC. 637. (a) The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, separate from the Service any Foreign Service officer, Reserve officer, or staff officer or employee, on account of the unsatisfactory performance of his duties, or for such other cause as will promote the efficiency of the Service, with reasons given in writing, but no such officer or employee shall be so separated until he shall have been granted a hearing by the Board of the Foreign Service and the unsatisfactory performance of his duties, or other cause for separation, shall have been established at such hearing, unless he shall have waived in writing his right to a hearing. The provisions of this section shall not apply to Foreign Service officers of class 8 or any other officer or employee of the Service who is in a probationary status or whose appointment is limited or temporary, except when separation is by reason of misconduct.

"(b) Any participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System separated under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section shall receive a refund of the contributions made to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, with interest, as provided in section 841(a) except that in lieu of such refund such officer may (except in cases where the Secretary determines that separation was based in whole or in part on the ground of disloyalty to the United States) if he has at least five years of service credit toward retirement under this System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a), elect to leave his contributions in the Fund and receive an annuity, computed as prescribed in section 821 commencing at the age of sixty years. In the event that an officer who has elected under the provisions of this section to receive a deferred annuity dies before reaching the age of sixty, his contributions to the Fund, with interest, shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of sections 841 and 881.

"(c) Any officer or employee of the Service separated under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section who is not a participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System shall be entitled only to such benefits as shall accrue to him under the retirement system in which he is a participant.

"(d) Any payments made in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section shall be made out of the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund."

SEC. 28. Section 638 of such Act and the heading to such section are amended to read as follows:

"TERMINATION OF LIMITED APPOINTMENTS OF FOREIGN SERVICE RESERVE OFFICERS AND STAFF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 638. Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other law, the Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, terminate at any time the services of any Reserve officer or staff officer or employee serving under limited appointment, except that, if the termination is because of misconduct, the provisions of section 637 shall be applicable. This section shall not modify the conditions of employment of, and shall not be applicable to, staff officers who accepted Reserve officer appointments during the period from September 1, 1958, through December 31, 1958."

SEC. 29. Section 641 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 641. All promotions of staff officers and employees to a higher class shall be made at a higher salary on the basis of performance and merit in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe."

SEC. 30. Section 642 of such Act and the heading thereto are amended to read as follows:

"WITHIN CLASS AND LONGEVITY SALARY INCREASES

"SEC. 642. (a) Under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, any staff officer or employee whose services meet the standards required for the efficient conduct of the work of the Service shall receive an increase in salary at periodic intervals to the next higher salary rate for the class in which he is serving. Without regard to any other law the Secretary is authorized to grant any such officer or employee additional increases in salary within the salary range established for the class in which he is serving, based upon specially meritorious service.

"(b) Under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, any staff officer or employee who has attained the maximum salary rate prescribed by section 415 for the class in which he is serving may be granted from time to time an additional salary increase beyond the maximum salary rate for his class in recognition of longevity and proficiency in the Service. Each such salary increase shall be equal to the maximum salary rate increase of the applicable class and no person shall receive more than four such salary increases while serving in the same class."

SEC. 31. Section 701 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Secretary may also provide to the extent that space is available therefor appropriate orientation and language training to spouses of officers and employees of the Government in anticipation of the assignment abroad of such officers and employees. Other agencies of the Government shall wherever practicable avoid duplicating the facilities of the Institute and the training provided by the Secretary at the Institute or elsewhere."

SEC. 32. (a) Paragraph (a) of section 704 of such Act is amended by striking out "1923" in the two places where it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1949".

(b) Section 704 of such Act is amended by adding at the end of such section new paragraphs (e) and (f) which shall read as follows:

"(e) The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the absence of suitably qualified United States citizens, employ persons who are not citizens of the United States by appointment to the staff of the Institute either on a full- or part-time basis or by contract for services in the United States or abroad at rates not in excess of those provided by the Classification Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C. 1071).

"(f) The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, provide special monetary or other incentives not inconsistent with this Act to encourage Foreign Service personnel to acquire or retain proficiency in esoteric foreign languages or special abilities needed in the Service."

SEC. 33. (a) Section 803(b)(2) of such Act is amended to read as follows—

"(2) have paid into the Fund a special contribution for each year of such service in accordance with the provisions of section 852(b)."

(b) Section 803 is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (c) which shall read as follows:

"(c)(1) In accordance with such regulations as the President may prescribe, any Foreign Service staff officer or employee appointed by the Secretary of State who has completed at least ten years of continuous service in the Department's Foreign Service, exclusive of military service, shall become a participant in the System and shall make a special contribution to the Fund in accordance with the provisions of section 852.

"(2) Any such officer or employee who, under the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, becomes a participant in the System, shall be mandatorily retired for age during the first year after the effective date of this section if he attains age sixty-four or if he is over age sixty-four; during the second year at age sixty-three; during the third year at age sixty-two; during the fourth year at age sixty-one, and thereafter at age sixty.

"(3) Any officer or employee who becomes a participant under the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, who is age sixty-one or over on the effective date of this section, and who is retired mandatorily under the provisions of paragraph (c)(2) of this section, shall receive, in addition to retirement benefits under section 821, one-twelfth of a year's salary at his then current rate for each year of service and proportionately for a fraction of a year, but not exceeding a total of one year's salary at his then current salary rate, payable without interest, from the Fund, at the time of his retirement."

SEC. 34. Section 804 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 804. (a) Annuitants shall be persons who are receiving annuities from the Fund on the effective date of this Act and all persons, including surviving wives and husbands, widows, dependent widowers, children, and beneficiaries of participants or annuitants who shall become entitled to receive annuities in accordance with the provisions of this Act, as amended, or in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the Act of May 1, 1956 (70 Stat. 125).

"(b) When used in this title the term—

"(1) 'Widow' means the surviving wife of a participant who was married to such participant for at least two years immediately preceding his death or is the mother of issue by such marriage.

"(2) 'Dependent widower' means the surviving husband of a participant who was married to such participant for at least two years immediately preceding her death or is the father of issue by such marriage, and who is incapable of self-support by reason of mental or physical disability, and who received more than one-half of his support from such participant.

"(3) 'Child' means an unmarried child, under the age of eighteen years, or such unmarried child regardless of age who because of physical or mental disability incurred before age eighteen is incapable of self-support. In addition to the offspring of the participant and his or her spouse the term includes (a) an adopted child, and (b) a stepchild or recognized natural child who received more than one-half of his support from the participant."

SEC. 35. Section 811 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 811. (a) Six and one-half per centum of the basic salary received by each participant shall be contributed to the Fund for the payment of annuities, cash benefits, refunds, and allowances. An equal sum shall also be contributed from the respective appropriations or fund which is used for payment of his salary. The amounts deducted and withheld from basic salary together with the amounts so contributed from the appropriation or fund, shall be deposited by the Department of State in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Fund.

"(b) Each participant shall be deemed to consent and agree to such deductions from basic salary, and payment less such deductions shall be a full and complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands whatsoever for all regular services during the period covered by such payment, except the right to the benefits to which he shall be entitled under this Act, notwithstanding any law, rule, or regulation affecting the individual's salary."

SEC. 36 (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 821 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 821. (a) The annuity of a participant shall be equal to 2 per centum of his average basic salary for the highest five consecutive years of service, for which full contributions have been made to the Fund, multiplied by the number of years, not exceeding thirty-five, of service credit obtained in accordance with the provisions of sections 851, 852, and 853. However, the highest five years of service for which full contributions have been made to the Fund shall be used in computing the annuity of any participant who serves as chief of mission and whose continuity of service as such is interrupted prior to retirement by appointment or assignment to any other position determined by the Secretary to be of comparable importance. In determining the aggregate period of service upon which the annuity is to be based, the fractional part of a month, if any, shall not be counted.

"(b) At the time of retirement, any married participant may elect to receive a reduced annuity and to provide for an annuity payable to his wife or her husband, commencing on the date following such participant's death and terminating upon the death of such surviving wife or husband. The annuity payable to the surviving wife or husband after such participant's death shall be 50 per centum of the amount of the participant's annuity computed as prescribed in paragraph (a) of this section, up to the full amount of such annuity specified by him as the base for the survivor benefits. The annuity of the participant making such election shall be reduced by 2½ per centum of any amount up to $2,400 he specifies as the base for the survivor benefit plus 10 per centum of any amount over $2,400 so specified.

"(c)(1) If an annuitant dies and is survived by a wife or husband and by a child or children, in addition to the annuity payable to the surviving wife or husband, there shall be paid to or on behalf of each child an annuity equal to smallest of: (i) 40 per centum of the annuitant's average salary divided by the number of children; (ii) $600; or (iii) $1,800 divided by the number of children.

"(2) If an annuitant dies and is not survived by a wife or husband but by a child or children, each surviving child shall be paid an annuity equal to the smallest of: (i) 50 per centum of the annuitant's average salary divided by the number of children; (ii) $720; or (iii) $2,160 divided by the number of children."

(b) Section 821 of such Act is further amended by adding new paragraphs (d), (e), and (f) which shall read as follows:

"(d) If a surviving wife or husband dies or the annuity of a child is terminated, the annuities of any remaining children shall be recomputed and paid as though such wife, husband, or child had not survived the participant.

"(e) The annuity payable to a child under paragraph (c) or (d) of this section shall begin on the first day of the next month after the participant dies and such annuity or any right thereto shall be terminated upon death, marriage, or attainment of the age of eighteen years, except that, if a child is incapable of self-support by reasons of mental or physical disability, the annuity shall be terminated only when such child dies, marries, or recovers from such disability.

"(f) At the time of retirement an unmarried participant may elect to receive a reduced annuity and to provide for an annuity equal to 50 percentum of the reduced annuity payable after his or her death to a beneficiary whose name shall be designated in writing to the Secretary. The annuity payable to a participant making such election shall be reduced by 10 per centum of an annuity computed as provided in paragraph (a) of this section and by 5 per centum of an annuity so computed for each full five years the person designated is younger than the retiring participant, but such total reduction shall not exceed 40 per centum. No such election of a reduced annuity payable to a beneficiary shall be valid until the participant shall have satisfactorily passed a physical examination as prescribed by the Secretary. The annuity payable to a beneficiary under the provisions of this paragraph shall begin on the first day of the next month after the participant dies. Upon the death of the surviving beneficiary all payments shall cease and no further annuity payments authorized under this paragraph shall be due or payable."

SEC. 37. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 831 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any participant who has five years of service credit toward retirement under the System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with provisions of section 851 or 852(a)(2), and who becomes totally disabled or incapacitated for useful and efficient service by reason of disease, illness, or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on his part, shall, upon his own application or upon order of the Secretary, be retired on an annuity computed as prescribed in section 821. If the disabled or incapacitated participant has less than twenty years of service credit toward his retirement under the System at the time he is retired, his annuity shall be computed on the assumption that he has had twenty years of service, but the additional service credit that may accrue to a participant under this provision shall in no case exceed the difference between his age at the time of retirement and the mandatory retirement age applicable to his class in the Service.

"(b) In each case, the participant shall be given a physical examination by one or more duly qualified physicians or surgeons designated by the Secretary to conduct examinations, and disability shall be determined by the Secretary on the basis of the advice of such physicians or surgeons. Unless the disability is permanent, like examinations shall be made annually until the annuitant has reached the statutory mandatory retirement age for his class in the Service. If the Secretary determines, on the basis of the advice of one or more duly qualified physicians or surgeons conducting such examinations, that an annuitant has recovered to the extent that he can return to duty, the annuitant may apply for reinstatement or reappointment in the Service within one year from the date his recovery is determined. Upon application the Secretary shall reinstate any such recovered disability annuitant in the class in which he was serving at time of retirement, or the Secretary may, taking into consideration the age, qualifications, and experience of such annuitant, and the present class of his contemporaries in the Service, appoint him or, in the case of an annuitant who is a former Foreign Service Officer, recommend that the President appoint him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to a class higher than the one in which he was serving prior to retirement. Payment of the annuity shall continue until a date six months after the date of the examination showing recovery or until the date of reinstatement or reappointment in the Service, whichever is earlier. Fees for examinations under this provision, together with reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in order to submit to examination, shall be paid out of the Fund. If the annuitant fails to submit to examination as required under this section, payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability is satisfactorily established.

"(c) If a recovered disability annuitant whose annuity is discontinued is for any reason not reinstated or reappointed in the Service, he shall be considered to have been separated within the meaning of section 834 as of the date he was retired for disability and he shall, after the discontinuance of the disability annuity, be entitled to the benefits of that section or of section 841(a) except that he may elect voluntary retirement in accordance with the provisions of section 636 if he can qualify under its provisions."

(b) Section 831 of such Act is further amended by adding new paragraphs (d) and (e) which shall read as follows:

"(d) No participant shall be entitled to receive an annuity under this Act and compensation for injury or disability to himself under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, covering the same period of time. This provision shall not bar the right of any claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either Act for any part of the same period of time. Neither this provision nor any provision of the Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, shall be so construed as to deny the right of any person to receive an annuity under this Act by reason of his own services and to receive concurrently any payment under such Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, by reason of the death of any other person.

"(e) Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the right of any person entitled to an annuity under this Act shall not be affected because such person has received an award of compensation in a lump sum under section 14 of the Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, except that where such annuity is payable on account of the same disability for which compensation under such section has been paid, so much of such compensation as has been paid for any period extended beyond the date such annuity becomes effective, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, shall be refunded to the Department of Labor, to be paid into the Federal Employees' Compensation Fund. Before such person shall receive such annuity he shall (1) refund to the Department of Labor the amount representing such computed payments for such extended period, or (2) authorize the deduction of such amount from the annuity payable to him under this Act, which amount shall be transmitted to such Department for reimbursement to such Fund. Deductions from such annuity may be made from accrued and accruing payments, or may be prorated against and paid from accruing payments in such manner as the Secretary of Labor shall determine, whenever he finds that the financial circumstances of the annuitant are such as to warrant such deferred refunding."

SEC. 38. Section 832 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 832. (a) In case a participant dies and no claim for annuity is payable under the provisions of this Act, his contributions to the Fund, with interest at the rates prescribed in sections 841(a) and 881(a), shall be paid in the order of precedence shown in section 841(b).

"(b) If a participant who has at least five years of service credit toward retirement under the System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a)(2), dies before separation or retirement from the Service and is survived by a widow or a dependent widower, as defined in section 804, such widow or dependent widower shall be entitled to an annuity equal to 50 per centum of the annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (e) of this section and of section 821(a). The annuity of such widow or dependent widower shall commence on the date following death of the participant and shall terminate upon death of the widow or dependent widower, or upon the dependent widower's becoming capable of self-support.

"(c) If a participant who has at least five years of service credit toward retirement under the System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a)(2), dies before separation or retirement from the Service and is survived by a wife or a husband and a child or children, each surviving child shall be entitled to an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of section 821(c)(1). The child's annuity shall begin and be terminated in accordance with the provisions of section 821(e). Upon the death of the surviving wife or husband or termination of the annuity of a child, the annuities of any remaining children shall be recomputed and paid as though such wife or husband or child had not survived the participant.

"(d) If a participant who has at least five years of service credit toward retirement under the System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a)(2), dies before separation or retirement from the Service and is not survived by a wife or husband, but by a child or children, each surviving child shall be entitled to an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of section 821(c)(2). The child's annuity shall begin and terminate in accordance with the provisions of section 821(e). Upon termination of the annuity of a child, the annuities of any remaining children shall be recomputed and paid as though that child had never been entitled to the benefit.

"(e) If, at the time of his or her death, the participant had less than twenty years of service credit toward retirement under the System, the annuities payable in accordance with paragraph (b) of this section shall be computed in accordance with the provisions of section 821 on the assumption he or she has had twenty years of service, but the additional service credit that may accrue to a deceased participant under this provision shall in no case exceed the difference between his or her age on the date of death and the mandatory retirement age applicable to his or her class in the Service. In all cases arising under paragraphs (b), (c), (d), or (e) of this section, it shall be assumed that the deceased participant was qualified for retirement on the date of his death."

SEC. 39. A new section 834 is hereby added to such Act as follows:

"DISCONTINUED SERVICE RETIREMENT

"SEC. 834. (a) Any participant who voluntarily separates from the Service after obtaining at least five years of service credit toward retirement under the System, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a)(2), may, upon separation from the Service or at any time prior to becoming eligible for an annuity, elect to have his contributions to the Fund returned to him in accordance with the provisions of section 841, or to leave his contributions in the Fund and receive an annuity, computed as prescribed in section 821, commencing at the age of sixty years.

"(b) If a participant who has qualified in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section to receive a deferred annuity commencing at the age of sixty dies before reaching the age of sixty his contributions to the Fund, with interest, shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of sections 841 and 881."

SEC. 40. Section 841 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 841. (a) Whenever a participant becomes separated from the Service without becoming eligible for an annuity or a deferred annuity in accordance with the provisions of this Act, the total amount of contributions from his salary with interest thereon at 4 per centum per annum, compounded annually at the end of each fiscal year through June 30, 1959; semiannually as of December 31, 1959; annually thereafter as of December 31, and proportionately for the period served during the year of separation including all contributions made during or for such period, except as provided in section 881, shall be returned to him.

"(b) In the event that the total contributions of a retired participant, other than voluntary contributions made in accordance with the provisions of section 881, with interest at 4 per centum per annum compounded annually as is provided in paragraph (a) of this section added thereto, exceed the total amount returned to such participant or to an annuitant claiming through him, in the form of annuities, accumulated at the same rate of interest up to the date the annuity payments cease under the terms of the annuity, the excess of the accumulated contributions over the accumulated annuity payments shall be paid in the following order of precedence, upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor, and such payment shall be a ban to recovery by any other person:

"(1) To the beneficiary or beneficiaries designated by the retired participant in writing to the Secretary;

"(2) If there be no such beneficiary, to the surviving wife or husband of such participant;

"(3) If none of the above, to the child or children of such participant and descendants of deceased children by representation;

"(4) If none of the above, to the parents of such participant or the survivor of them;

"(5) If none of the above, to the duly appointed executor or administrator of the estate of such participant;

"(6) If none of the above, to other next of kin of such participant as may be determined by the Secretary in his judgment to be legally entitled thereto.

"(c) No payment shall be made pursuant to paragraph (b)(6) of this section until after the expiration of thirty days from the death of the retired participant or his surviving annuitant."

SEC. 41. Section 851 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 851. For the purposes of this title, the period of service of a participant shall be computed from the effective date of appointment as a Foreign Service officer, or, if appointed prior to July 1, 1924, as an officer or employee of the Diplomatic or Consular Service of the United States, or from the date he becomes a participant under the provisions of this Act, as amended, but all periods of separation from the Service and so much of any leaves of absence without pay as may exceed six months in the aggregate in any calendar year shall be excluded, except leaves of absence while receiving benefits under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, and leaves of absence granted participants while performing active and honorable military or naval service in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States."

SEC. 42. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 852 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"(a) A participant may, subject to the provisions of this section, include in his period of service—

"(1) civilian service in the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of the Federal Government and in the District of Columbia government, prior to becoming a participant; and

"(2) active and honorable military or naval service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard of the United States.

"(b) A person may obtain prior civilian service credit in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a)(1) of this section by making a special contribution to the Fund equal to 5 per centum of his basic annual salary for each year of service for which credit is sought subsequent to July 1, 1924, and prior to the effective date of the Foreign Service Act Amendments of of 1959, and at 6½ per centum thereafter with interest compounded annually at 4 per centum per annum to the date of payment. Any such person may, under such conditions as may be determined in each instance by the Secretary, pay such special contributions in installments.

"(c)(1) If an officer or employee under some other Government retirement system, becomes a participant in the System by direct transfer, such officer or employee's total contributions and deposits, including interest accrued thereon, except voluntary contributions, shall be transferred to the Fund effective as of the date such officer or employee becomes a participant in the System. Each such officer or employee shall be deemed to consent to the transfer of such funds and such transfer shall be a complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands against the other Government retirement fund on account of service rendered prior to becoming a participant in the System.

"(2) No officer or employee, whose contributions are transferred to the Fund in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, shall be required to make contributions in addition to those transferred, for periods of service for which full contributions were made to the other Government retirement fund, nor shall any refund be made to any such officer or employee on account of contributions made during any period to the other Government retirement fund, at a higher rate than that fixed by section 811 of this Act for contributions to the Fund.

"(3) No officer or employee, whose contributions are transferred to the Fund in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, shall receive credit for periods of service subsequent to July 1, 1924, for which a refund of contributions has been made, or for which no contributions were made to the other Government retirement fund. A participant may, however, obtain credit for such prior service by making a special contribution to the Fund in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section."

(b) Section 852 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof new paragraphs (d) and (e) which shall read as follows:

"(d) No participant may obtain prior civilian service credit toward retirement under the System for any period of civilian service on the basis of which he is receiving or will in the future be entitled to receive any annuity under another retirement system covering personnel of the Government.

"(e) A participant may obtain prior military or naval service credit in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a)(2) of this section by applying for it to the Secretary prior to retirement or spearation from the Service. However, in the case of a participant who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of military or naval service, the period of service upon which such retired pay is based shall not be included, except that in the case of a participant who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of a service-connected disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States or caused by an instrumentality of war and incurred in line of duty during an enlistment or employment as provided in Veterans Regulation Numbered 1(a), part I, paragraph I, or is awarded under chapter 67 of title 10 of the United States Code, the period of such military or naval service shall be included. No contributions to the Fund shall be required in connection with military or naval service credited to a participant in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a)(2) of this section."

SEC. 43. Such Act is amended by adding after section 854 a new section as follows:

"RECOMPUTATION OF ANNUITIES OF CERTAIN FORMER PARTICIPANTS

"SEC. 885. The annuity of each former participant under the System, who retired prior to July 28, 1956, and who at the time of his retirement had creditable service in excess of thirty years, shall be recomputed on the basis of actual years of creditable service not in excess of thirty-five years. Service which was not creditable under the System on the date a former participant retired, shall not be included as creditable service for the purpose of this recomputation. The annuities payable to such persons shall, when recomputed, be paid at the rates so determined, but no such recomputation or any other action taken pursuant to this section shall operate to reduce the rate of the annuity any such person is entitled to receive under the System."

SEC. 44. The heading "PART H—OFFICERS REINSTATED IN THE SERVICE" under title VIII of such Act is amended to read as follows: "PART H—ANNUITANTS RECALLED, REINSTATED OR REAPPOINTED IN THE SERVICE OR REEMPLOYED IN THE GOVERNMENT".

SEC. 45. Section 871 of such Act is amended and a heading is added thereto as follows:

"RECALL

"SEC. 871. Any annuitant recalled to duty in the Service in accordance with the provisions of section 520(b) or reinstated or reappointed in accordance with the provisions of section 831(b) shall, while so serving, be entitled in lieu of his annuity to the full salary of the class in which he is serving. During such service, he shall make contributions to the Fund in accordance with the provisions of section 811. The amount of his annuity when he reverts to his retired status shall be recomputed in accordance with the provisions of section 821."

SEC. 46. A new section 872 is hereby added to such Act as follows:

"REEMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 872. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any officer or employee of the Service, who has retired under this Act, as amended, and is receiving an annuity pursuant thereto, and who is reemployed in the Federal Government service in any appointive position either on a part-time or full-time basis, shall be entitled to receive the salary of the position in which he is serving plus so much of his annuity payable under this Act, as amended, which when combined with such salary does not exceed during any calendar year the highest basic salary such officer or employee was entitled to receive under sections 412 or 415 of the Act, as amended, on the date of his retirement from the Service. Any such reemployed officer or employee who receives salary during any calendar year in excess of the maximum amount which he may be entitled to receive under this paragraph shall be entitled to such salary in lieu of benefits hereunder.

"(b) When any such retired officer or employee of the Service is reemployed, the employer shall send a notice to the Department of State of such reemployment together with all pertinent information relating thereto and shall cause to be paid, by transfer or otherwise, to the Department of State funds necessary to cover gross salary, employer contributions, and gross lump sum leave payment relating to the employment of the reemployed officer or employee. The Department of State shall make to and on behalf of the reemployed officer or employee payments to which he is entitled under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, and shall make those withholding and deductions authorized and required by law.

"(c) In the event of any overpayment under this section the Secretary of State is authorized to withhold the amount of such overpayment from the salary payable to such reemployed officer or employee or from his annuity."

SEC. 47. (a) So much of paragraph (a) of section 881 of such Act as precedes subparagraph (1) thereof is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any participant may, at his option and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President, deposit additional sums in multiples of 1 per centum of his basic salary, but not in excess of 10 per centum of such salary, which amounts together with interest at 3 per centum per annum, compounded annually at the end of each fiscal year through June 30, 1959; semiannually as of December 31, 1959; annually thereafter as of December 31, and proportionately for the period served during the year of his retirement, including all contributions made during or for such period, shall, at the date of his retirement and at his election, be—"

(b) Paragraph (c) of section 881 of such Act is amended by deleting the word "annually" and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "as is provided in paragraph (a) of this section", and by changing the words "withdrawal from active service" at the end of such paragraph to "separation from the Service".

SEC. 48. Section 912 of such Act is amended by changing the heading thereto to read "LOAN OF HOUSEHOLD FURNISHINGS AND EQUIPMENT" and by inserting between the words "with household" the word "basic" and by inserting between the words "household equipment" the phrase "furnishings and".

SEC. 49. Section 913 of such Act and the heading thereto is amended to read as follows:

"TRANSPORTATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES

"SEC. 913. The Secretary may, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, transport for or on behalf of an officer or employee of the Service, a privately owned motor vehicle or replacement thereof in any case where he shall determine that water, rail, or air transportation of the motor vehicle or replacement thereof is necessary or expedient for any part or of all the distance between points of origin and destination."

SEC. 50. (a) Section 1021 of such Act is amended by inserting the phrase "the Department including" immediately prior to the phrase "the Service" wherever it appears in this secton.

(b) Section 1021(a) is further amended by striking out the phrase "if recommended by the Director General" and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "at the discretion of the Secretary".

SEC. 51. Foreign Service staff officers and employees receiving basic salary immediately prior to the effective date of this Act at one of the rates provided by section 415 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, shall be transferred to the new classes established by section 415 of such Act, as amended, and shall receive basic salary on and after the effective date of this Act, as follows:

Present class and salary rate of sec. 415 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended (1958)			Corresponding new class and salary rate of sec. 415 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended by this act			Amount of adjustments

SEC. 52. Section 11 of Public Law 885, Eighty-fourth Congress (70 Stat. 890), is hereby amended by inserting after the phrase "Government-owned vehicles" the phrase "or taxicabs" and by inserting after the phrase "public transportation facilities" the phrase "other than taxicabs".

SEC. 53. (a) Paragraph (4) of section 104(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 104(a)(4)) (relating to the exclusion from gross income of compensation for injuries and sickness) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(4) amounts received as a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country or in the Coast and Geodetic Survey or the Public Health Service, or as a disability annuity payable under the provisions of section 831 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended (22 U.S.C. 1081; 60 Stat. 1021)."

(b)(1) Section 402(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the taxability of a beneficiary of an employee's trust) is hereby amended as follows:

(a) By striking out in the first sentence of paragraph (1) thereof "paragraph (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2) and (3)", and

(b) By redesignating paragraph (3) thereof as paragraph (4) and by inserting after paragraph (2) thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) The amount includible under this subsection as the gross income of a nonresident alien individual with respect to a distribution made by the United States in respect of services performed by an employee of the United States shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount includible in gross income without regard to this paragraph as the aggregate compensation paid by the United States to such employee for such services and includible in gross income under this subtitle or prior income tax laws bears to the aggregate compensation paid by the United States to such individual whether or not includible in gross income."

(2) Subsection (d) of section 871 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the tax imposed on nonresident alien individuals) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"(1) For doubling of tax on citizens of certain foreign countries, see section 891.

"(2) For taxability of amounts paid by the United States to certain nonresident alien employees or their beneficiaries, see section 402(a)(3)."

SEC. 54. (a) Section 12 of the Act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat. 56; 22 U.S.C. 1186), is hereby repealed.

(b) The second proviso of section 1 of chapter 223 of the Act of June 4, 1920, as amended (41 Stat. 750; 22 U.S.C. 214), is further amended by striking out the phrase "or to seamen,".

SEC. 55. Section 4 of the Foreign Service Buildings Act, 1926, as amended (22 U.S.C. 295), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, in addition to amounts previously authorized, an amount not to exceed $100,000,000, of which $50,000,000 shall be available exclusively for payments representing the value in whole or in part, of property or credits in accordance with the provisions of the Act of July 25, 1946 (60 Stat. 663). Sums appropriated pursuant to this authorization shall remain available until expended."

SEC. 56. The following headings and sections in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 442 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(2) Section 525 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(3) Section 576 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(4) Section 577 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(5) Sections 651 and 652 of such Act and the headings thereto, including Part F—Separation of Staff Officers and Employees.

SEC. 57. Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, existing rules and regulations of or applicable to the Foreign Service of the United States shall remain in effect until revoked or rescinded or until modified or superseded by regulations made in accordance with the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended by this Act, unless clearly inconsistent with the provisions of this Act or the provisions so amended.

SEC. 58. (a) The provisions of this Act shall become effective as of the first day of the first pay period which begins one month after the enactment of this Act, except as provided in paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of this section.

(b) The provisions of paragraphs (c)(1) and (c)(2) of section 803 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended by section 33(b) of this Act, shall become effective on the first day of the first month which begins one year after the date of enactment of this Act, except that any Foreign Service staff officer or employee, who at the time this Act becomes effective meets the requirements for participation in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System, may elect to become a participant in the System before the mandatory provisions become effective. Such Foreign Service staff officers and employees shall become participants effective on the first day of the second month following the date of their application for earlier participation.

(c) The amendments made by section 53 of this Act shall be effective with respect to taxable years ending after the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) The amendment made by section 43 of this Act shall take effect on the first day of the first month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, has the morning hour been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the morning hour is only beginning.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, have I been recognized, and do I now have the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, just 2 years ago, upon the recommendation of President Eisenhower, and over the strong objections of a great number of Senators—among whom I am proud to be numbered—the so-called Civil Rights Act was passed.

This bill was conceived in antisouthern emotion; and, despite all its self-serving declarations of high principle and purpose, we who opposed it warned that its inevitable results would involve a threat to the very foundation of our Republic—the Constitution of the United States—and the principle upon which even the Constitution was framed—the sovereign rights of the several States. But our warnings went unheeded, Mr. President. However, subsequent events have vindicated our judgment.

We have seen the Federal Government endeavor to expand even the great powers granted it under the act, so as to have a sovereign State knuckle under to the preconceived notions of the Department of Justice in respect to the State's administration of its own laws.

We have seen the Executive add his fuel to a blazing fire of racial discord kindled by the iniquitous decision by the U.S. Supreme Court in May 1954.

We have seen a continued deterioration of race relations. Where there was cooperation, there is now conflict. Where there was progress, there is now destruction.

If this tragic circumstance does not convince the skeptic, then let him read the recommendations which the Civil Rights Commission created by the so-called Civil Rights Act released yesterday.

The Commission has advocated the enactment of a law whereby when nine people in a political subdivision of a State feel that they have not been registered to vote soon enough—without specifying when, or under what circumstances, the application shall be made—the President of the United States shall have authority to appoint a so-called temporary registrar to register persons to vote in Federal elections, and to continue in that office so long as the President shall desire.

Such a proposal is in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States. It should be well known to the members of the Commission, and it certainly is well known to the Senate, that the States have long been held to have broad power to determine the conditions under which the right of suffrage may be exercised. Lassiter v. North Hampton County Board of Education, 360 U.S. 45; Pope v. Williams, 193 U.S. 621, 633; Mason v. Missouri, 179 U.S. 328, 335.

Article I, section 2, of the Federal Constitution, in its provision for the election of the House of Representatives; and the 17th amendment, in its provision for the election of Senators, provide that officials shall be chosen by the people. Each provision goes on to state that "the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

Moreover, the right to vote "refers to the right to vote as established by the laws and constitution of the State."—McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 39.

The members of this Commission would be well-advised to read the case of Pope v. Williams, 193 U.S. 621, 632:

> The privilege to vote in any State is not given by the Federal Constitution, or by any of its amendments. It is not a privilege springing from citizenship of the United States. * * * It may not be refused on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but it does not follow from mere citizenship of the United States. In other words, the privilege to vote in a State is within the jurisdiction of the State itself, to be exercised as the State may direct, and upon such terms as to it may seem proper, provided, of course, no discrimination is made between individuals in violation of the Federal Constitution.

Notwithstanding the clear wording and intent of the Federal Constitution as uniformly interpreted by the courts, this Commission seeks to have the Congress turn over to the Federal Government the process of registering voters in the various States for Federal elections. It seeks to undermine the entire fabric of our systems of government and asks this Congress to violate deliberately the Constitution.

It is no mere happenstance that the conduct of elections has been left to the States. The concept is basic, the one to serve as a check upon the other. The importance of this doctrine has been stressed by the Supreme Court in innumerable cases. It is well expressed in Guinn v. United States, 238 U.S., 347. There, the Supreme Court characterized the power of the State governments over suffrage as one "which has belonged to those governments from the beginning and without the possession of which power the whole fabric upon the division of State and national authority under the Constitution and the organization of both governments would rest would be without support and both the authority of the Nation and the State would fall to the ground."

These are strong words. Unquestionably, they were not lightly spoken. The power of the States over suffrage, which must include the power to register voters, is undoubtedly, as the Supreme Court said it was, basic to the foundations of our Government.

These Commissioners ask us to destroy our system of government and to turn the matter of voter registration over to the President of the United States. No one could have imagined that even this Commission would have made such a proposal. To call it devastating is to use an understatement. For this proposal would allow nine temporarily frustrated applicants for registration to undermine the plenary power which the Constitution has accorded the States over all elections, State and Federal.

It is inconceivable that this Congress will continue in existence a Commission which operates in this fashion.

These Commissioners tell us that the Founding Fathers were wrong; that the Supreme Court has been wrong throughout our history in holding that the plenary powers of State governments over the suffrage was essential to the continued existence of both State and national authority under the Constitution; and that this Congress should overturn it all and allow complete Presidential control over the election machinery of the various States in Federal elections at the behest of nine frustrated applicants. As for me, I propose to abide by the Constitution and to leave suffrage, and the regulation of it, where it has always belonged. Nor can I in good conscience support the continued existence of a Commission which advocates that the Federal system be torpedoed.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, would the Senator withhold that request to let me introduce a bill and make a short statement on it?

Mr. MORSE. I had an understanding with the acting majority leader that immediately following the passage of the foreign service bill, we would have a call for a quorum. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] was not aware of that, and he obtained the floor. I am sorry, but I am going to have a quorum call, as my understanding calls for.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Cannon	Johnson, Tex.
Bartlett	Engle	Keating
Bible	Fulbright	Kuchel
Byrd, W. Va.	Javits	Mansfield
Morse	Sparkman	Williams, Del.
Pastore	Talmadge	Yarborough
Proxmire	Thurmond
Russell	Wiley

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Aaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is not present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. ALLOTT, Mr. BEALL, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BUSH, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BYRD of Virginia, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. CARLSON, Mr. CARROLL, Mr. CASE of New Jersey, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. CLARK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. COTTON, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. DWORSHAK, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. ERVIN, Mr. FONG, Mr. FREAR, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. GORE, Mr. GREEN, Mr. HART, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. HICKENLOOPER, Mr. HILL, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. HRUSKA, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. JORDAN, Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERR, Mr. LANGER, Mr. LAUSCHE, Mr. LONG of Hawaii, Mr. LONG of Louisiana, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. MCGEE, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. MORTON, Mr. MOSS, Mr. MUNDT, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NEUBERGER, Mr. PROUTY, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. SCHOEPPEL, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. SMATHERS, Mr. SMITH, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, Mr. YOUNG of Ohio entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT in the chair). A quorum is present.

CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES FOR GORGAS MEMORIAL LABORATORY

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a message has come from the House on Senate bill 2219, for the construction of facilities for the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory.

This bill is an administration bill, supported by the administration. I consulted with the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Texas, about the bill at the time it was passed. He was very much interested in its passage.

This morning I consulted with the assistant minority leader, the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], about the amendment which the House placed on the bill.

All those in favor of the bill are interested in having the amendment agreed to and that the bill may be passed and sent to the President for signature.

I ask that the Chair lay the message before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2219) to authorize appropriations for construction of facilities for the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, to increase the authorization of appropriations for the support thereof, and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out "from time to time such sums as the Congress may find necessary" and insert "not to exceed $250,000".

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama give a brief explanation of the amendment?

Mr. HILL. The bill as drafted and passed by the Senate provided that appropriations could be made by Congress for construction in connection with the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory. The House amendment placed a ceiling of $250,000 on the cost of construction.

I have consulted with the officials of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, more particularly former Representative Thatcher of Kentucky, the author of the bill in the House of Representatives, establishing the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory. The amendment is agreeable to him and to the representatives of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory and to all those who are interested in passing the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question.?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I understand that the officials and the interested parties with whom the Senator from Alabama has talked, have stated that an appropriation of $250,000 at this time would meet their immediate construction needs, and that in the future, as they might need more money, they would be in a position to ask Congress for additional money.

Mr. HILL. That would be so.

Mr. MORSE. I remember the bill. We discussed it in our committee. Will the Senator make a brief statement for the record as to what the bill proposes over and above providing funds for building additional facilities for this great Laboratory, which has already done such fine work?

Mr. HILL. It also raises the authorization for an appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Laboratory from $150,000 a year to $250,000 a year. The House did not in any way change that provision of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. That is the point I wish to bring out. We are not in any way interfering with the authorization called for by the bill or for an increase in the operating funds of this Laboratory, because, as the work of our committee shows, that is also of immediate concern to the Laboratory, as is the need for additional facilities.

Mr. HILL. That was indeed of immediate concern. The House amendment does not in any way affect the authorization for the funds for operation and maintenance. It deals only with this matter of construction, and it was thought that the $250,000 would meet the present and immediate needs, and then, as the Senator from Oregon has so well suggested, if there are additional needs, there can be further legislation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make this additional comment: I hope the Senate will concur in the House amendment. I think it should be said, in tribute to the Senator from Alabama, that this is another one of the bills dealing with the great health problems which confront this country. It is another monument to the record of the distinguished Senator from Alabama in the field of public health.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator from Oregon for his very kind remarks. No one has worked more closely or cooperated more fully with the Senator from Alabama than has the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I appreciate that remark.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CALL OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, we do not have all the reports dealing with bills on the calendar. Today there will be a calendar call through Order No. 938. There will be other bills reported today and tomorrow, and I assume for the next several days.

I should like to inform the Senate that it is planned to have another calendar call tomorrow, and other calendar calls later this week and next week, if that is necessary.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a call of the calendar following the morning hour tomorrow, for the consideration of measures on the calendar to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be the usual morning hour tomorrow, for the introduction of bills and the transaction of other routine business, with the usual limitation of 3 minutes on statements in connection therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate takes a recess today it stand in recess until 9:30 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMERICA'S ECONOMIC ACHIEVEMENT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, according to many of the newspapers, and some of the mail, it appears that after the so-called labor reform bill was passed a considerable amount of abuse was heaped upon Members of Congress who voted for that bill. Previous to the vote I received probably two-thirds as many communications from labor as I received from management, and I am sure that I did not read more than 1 percent of them. This bill, as all legislation is, was a compromise. When you get Senators like KENNEDY and GOLDWATER to agree, the bill cannot be so bad. In fact, I feel it is a good bill, one that will be beneficial to both labor and management, but especially beneficial to the public. The national welfare needed this bill.

It is interesting to note that Senators who have been among the leading friends of labor have not replied to the abuse. I am sure the rank and file of labor remember how we were abused for the Taft-Hartley bill. Who gave us such abuse? I shall not spend much time on that question.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding abroad on many matters. I hold in my hand the monthly letter of the First National City Bank of New York. Beginning on page 104 there appears an article headed "The Hundred Largest Salesmen." The article refers to America's economic achievement as resting "on the initiative of entrepreneurs working under free institutions and seeking to discover and satisfy human wants."

I ask unanimous consent to have the article to which I have referred printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE HUNDRED LARGEST SALESMEN

America's economic achievement rests on the initiative of entrepreneurs working under free institutions and seeking to discover and satisfy human wants. Our method of progress has been to realize efficiencies of large-scale production and distribution. Ironically, the companies that succeed best and grow from small beginnings to great size frequently come under political attack. Yet it is the choice of the consumer that makes a company big and it is the ballot box in the marketplace that decides which firm is entitled to grow on the merits of its products.

Competition for the consumer's dollar covers the entire range of goods and services, and the American consumer has close to a billion dollars a day to spend. Market potentials become quite fabulous for well-designed new products, effectively promoted to attract the consumer's favor.

There are, on the basis of figures for 1958, 45 corporations with sales levels beyond the billion-dollar mark. The 100 largest nonfinancial corporations, as shown in the accompanying list, had sales or revenues of $142 billion.

Manufacturing companies make up 74 of the 100 largest and had combined sales of $107 billion. Among the 74 manufacturers are 14 petroleum producing and refining companies with sales of $27 billion and three automobile manufacturers with $16 billion.

Completing the group are 17 retail and wholesale trade companies with sales or revenues of $23 billion, 5 railroad systems with $4 billion, and 4 public utilities with $9 billion.

There are no life memberships in the "100 largest clubs." The members face the constant threat of being displaced by other organizations which are more aggressive or whose industries are growing faster. In a growing economy a company must go ahead to hold its place.

Numerous changes in the list over the years illustrate the dynamic character of American business. For example, even during the short space of 3 years since the previous similar tabulation in this letter (September 1956: "Where the Money Goes") there have been eight changes. Displaced from the list were producers of steel, glass, two aircraft, and four nonferrous metals. Their places were taken by producers of chemicals, soap, and petroleum, three food chains, and two public utilities.

TWENTY-ONE THOUSAND DOLLAR INVESTMENT PER EMPLOYEE

To develop $142 billion of sales, the 100 largest nonfinancial companies used men, machines, and money on a big scale. They employed some 6.5 million workers and used total assets of $136 billion. Net property account covering land, buildings, and equipment was carried at $77 billion (after deducting depreciation and depletion of $51 billion) while the remainder consisted mostly of current assets—receivables, inventories, cash, and marketable securities.

These assets made a capital investment of approximately $21,000 per employee as an overall average, but the industry figures vary widely. For manufacturing companies the average was $20,000, but ranged from as low as $7,000 for aircraft up to $60,000 for petroleum. For the largest trade companies the investment averaged $8,000, for the telephone systems $32,000, for railroads $38,000, and for electric and gas utilities $98,000.

Such heavy capital investment can be supplied only by pooling of resources by large numbers of investors, individual and institutional. The 100 largest companies report 10.2 million registered shareholders. There were more than 50,000 shareholders each reported by 57 companies, with the Bell Telephone System alone having 1,625,000. Crowded annual meetings attest the widening distribution of corporate ownership, as well as more active interest being shown by investors. More shareholders than employees are reported by 62 of these big companies, many of the employees are shareholders also.

These figures on registered shareholders for the group include duplication to the extent that the same person often holds stock in more than one company in the list. At the same time, however, many names are nominees or trustees acting for large numbers of individuals and for banks and brokers. A vast number of people have a beneficial interest in the stock of these enterprises through mutual fund investments and insurance and pension reserves.

These companies had 2.2 billion shares of common stock outstanding at the year end, while the book net assets or shareholders' equity, including preferred stock, aggregated $87 billion. Long-term debt amounted to $25 billion, while current liabilities stood at $23 billion.

SPENDING THE SALES DOLLAR

While the sales departments of the 100 largest companies last year were chalking up $142 billion of sales, other departments in the same companies were busy disposing of the receipts.

Disposition of receipts by the 100 largest U.S. nonfinancial corporations in the year 1958

	Total (millions)	Percent of receipts
Total receipts from sales, revenues, etc	$141,610	100.0

Preferred and common dividends paid	5,130	3.6
Retained in the business	2,802	2.0

[1] Partly estimated, on basis of payrolls reported by companies representing 82 percent of the total employment of the group.

[2] Tax figures charged as costs are exclusive of various sales and excise taxes collected from customers, such as gasoline and oil $3,527,000,000, automobiles $1,202,000,000, tires $220,000,000, and telephone messages $581,000,000.

Costs of goods and services purchased from others, the largest category of expense, amounted to $77 billion or 54 cents of the sales dollar.

Wages, salaries, and other employee benefits came to $38 billion. This was 27 cents of the sales dollar, and represented an average of $5,800 per employee.

Provision for depreciation and depletion of properties came to 4.6 cents per dollar of receipts, while interest on borrowed money took seven-tenths of 1 cent.

Federal and other income taxes totaled $5.9 billion, while other Federal, State, local, and foreign taxes came to $5.5 billion. Total direct taxes of $11.4 billion took, on the average, 8 cents out of every sales dollar. This illustrates what a major item taxes have become in the cost of doing business and therefore in everyone's cost of living.

In addition to tax figures charged as costs, there were, as indicated in the footnote to the table, various sales and excise taxes collected from customers amounting to over $5 billion.

Total expenses and taxes paid or accrued absorbed 94.4 cents of the sales dollar, leaving net profit of 5.6 cents.

PERCENTAGES OF TOTAL RECEIPTS OF 100 LARGEST NONFINANCIAL CORPORATIONS IN 1958 REMAINING AFTER DEDUCTIONS OF MAJOR EXPENSES AND DIVIDENDS

	Percent
After purchases	45.6
After payrolls	19.0
After interest and depreciation	13.7
After taxes	5.6
After dividends	2.0
Total receipts	100.0

Dividend payments to preferred and common shareholders amounted to 3.6 cents of the sales dollar.

This left a balance retained in the business for financing growth of only $2.8 billion or 2 cents per sales dollar. This was far short of covering the requirements of new capital absorbed by these companies last year. Outlays for new or expanded plant and equipment came to $10.7 billion, against which depreciation and depletion charges were $6.6 billion, making an increase in net property account of $4.1 billion. Other assets absorbed $2.6 billion, net.

To meet these capital demands required not only retained earnings and sale of some additional stock, but also increases in long-term debt to the tune of $1.9 billion.

Mr. WILEY. The article shows, among other things, that there is $21,000 invested for each employee. It shows also the percentage of the proceeds of sales which goes to the stockholder. This is all along the line of throwing light upon the situation, in order to avoid more misunderstanding.

I now turn to the consideration of another subject for the next 3 minutes, "The question of food spread." From time to time, public attention is directed to the fact that although the prices of farm products have come down a little, none of the decline has filtered through to the consumers. This particular statement shows that no one in particular is benefiting. The only problem is that the farmer is not getting his fair share. So I place this statement in the RECORD, because in the last days of our Senate session it is well that we consider some facts, so that when we get out on the hustings, and begin to talk, the people will be able to have the record and refer to what the actual facts are in this connection.

I may say that the particular facts which are cited are very illuminating.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that part starting at page 105 and continuing to page 107, where the subject "Depreciating Money" begins, also be printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the other subject, entitled "Depreciating Money," is also one which might very well be placed in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

FOOD PRICE SPREADS

From time to time public attention is directed to the fact that although prices of farm-produced foods have come down, little or none of this decline has filtered through to the consumer. A common complaint takes the form of a question: "Why can't the housewife benefit from the farmer's increased productivity and efficiency?" There is often the implication that somebody—usually the much-maligned middleman—is making too much money.

The old subject of "food price spreads"—the difference between what the farmer gets for his raw product and what the consumer pays at the grocery store—was revived early in June following release of a House Agriculture Committee report entitled "Food Cost Trends."

This report points out that retail food prices advanced 20 percent between 1947–49 and 1958 while farm prices declined 8 percent. It goes on to note that consumers purchased about 20 percent more farm-produced foods at retail last year than they did in 1947–49. But farmers received only 15 percent more income from the larger volume. During this same period, the amount consumers paid for food middlemen's marketing and processing charges rose 44 percent.

Citing the $15.9 billion increase in the retail store cost of farm produced food from 1947–49 to 1958, the report states that $13.5 billion, or 84 percent, was absorbed by marketing agencies and processors—the middlemen. Only $2.4 billion, or 16 percent, went to farmers.

Other evidence of widening food price spreads is provided by U.S. Department of Agriculture monthly estimates of the farm value and retail cost of a typical "market basket" of farm-food products purchased by an urban clerical worker's family.

In 1958 this family paid $1,065 for the same kinds and quantities of food purchased in the 1947–49 period for $940—an increase of 13 percent. Meanwhile, the farmer last year received only $427 of these expenditures, an 8-percent drop from the $466 received in the 1947–49 period.

In other words, the farmer's share of the consumer's food dollar fell from 50 percent in 1947–49 to 40 percent last year. So far this year his share has declined a bit more—to 39 percent.

CONVENIENCE FOODS

Before analyzing what's behind widening food spreads, it is important to note that spread performs useful marketing and service functions. As the Grocery Manufacturers of America, Inc., puts it: "Without spread, our steak would be standing in an Iowa feed lot, our cranberry sauce would be in a bog on Cape Cod, and our citrus juice would be on trees in Florida or California."

Today's consumer insists on a variety of fresh fruits and vegetables all year around. For example, if a Boston housewife wants to pay the price, she can get air-freighted fresh strawberries for her shortcake in December. In addition, there is the growing demand for groceries with built-in maid service. It is estimated that today's modern supermarket offers some 7,000 items—85 percent of which are processed and prepackaged.

The housewife wants her spinach chopped and frozen, her chicken cut upon and ready to fry, her beef steaks cubed, her sausage precooked, her potatoes sliced into french fries, her hams cooked and boneless, her rolls ready to pop into the oven. She demands a variety of prepared mixes which will produce everything from cakes and cookies to puddings and pie crusts just by adding water.

What makes these convenience foods so popular, of course, is that they transfer much of the time and work involved in meal preparation from the kitchen to the manufacturer's plant. It is estimated that a few years back it took 5½ hours a day to prepare meals for a family of four. Today, using convenient foods, the job can be done in only 1½ hours.

Some observers, including farm leaders, food industry people, and Government officials, have attributed widening price spreads, in large measure, to the increasing use of convenience foods. For instance, a 1953 study by the Agriculture Department showed that 1 day's fully home-prepared meals for a family of four cost $4.90 while the same meals from fully prepared, ready-to-serve foods cost $6.70—37 percent more.

In July 1958, however, an Agriculture Department survey showed that food servicing conveniences increase the consumer's food bill by only a little over one-half of 1 percent. Specifically, for each $100 spent for groceries, the consumer paid only 61 cents for built-in maid service.

Surveying 52 unserviced foods and the equivalent quantity of serviced foods in Washington, D.C., the Department's researchers found that 28 of the highly processed foods cost more than the unprocessed items. For six items the cost was the same. For 18 foods, the highly processed forms—e.g., shelled and frozen shrimp, chopped and frozen spinach, instant tea—the cost was less than for the unprocessed ones.

Processing in some cases gives foods longer life, shrinks their bulk, prevents waste, and cuts costs of shipping, handling, and storage. An outstanding example is concentrated orange juice which the Department analysts found priced at a little over half as much as the equivalent of orange juice in whole oranges. Moreover, servicing increases demand for some foods and the greater volume permits lower prices.

Thus, the Agriculture Department concludes in its recent survey, "* * * the growth of the processed and prepared foods industry does not appear to have been the major factor in the increase in the marketing bill."

ARE PROFITS TO BLAME?

If the Agriculture Department's contention that convenience items generally add little to grocery bills is accepted, why have food prices risen so sharply during the past decade in the face of falling prices for farm products?

Middlemen's profiteering often gets the blame. If this were the case, however, the big profits would show up in earnings reports.

The table below, based on public reports, shows the net profit margins in cents per sales dollar of leading food corporations for the past decade. Except for meatpacking, which is unchanged, every category showed a smaller profit margin in 1958 than in 1949. Among food producers and processors, sugar shows the highest average for the decade—4.1 percent profit on sales. Retail grocery chains' profit amounted to 1.3 percent. These compare with the 10-year average for all reporting manufacturing corporations of 6.1 percent.

[1] Net profit margins after taxes include income from investments and other sources as well as from sales.

In view of the middlemen's profit record, it is necessary to look elsewhere for the causes of rising food prices. Most important is the steady increase in costs of moving crops from the farm to the dinner table. Labor, transportation, supplies, equipment, fuel and power, taxes, advertising and the like have all gone up.

The following table shows how the major costs making up the farm-retail spread in the Agriculture Department's market basket have increased:

Breakdown of farm food market basket

Item	1947–49	1958	Change
Retail value	$940	$1,065	+$124
Farm value	466	427	−39
Farm-retail spread	474	638	+164
Components of spread:
Labor cost	211	295	+84
Rail and truck transportation	53	80	+27
Other business expenses	179	223	+44
Federal corporate income taxes	12	20	+8
After-tax profits of processors and distributors	19	20	+1

Source: Calculated from U.S. Department of Agriculture reports.

In any consideration of food prices one final point remains to be noted: the cost of Federal farm programs. For these, the citizen pays in two ways. He pays in higher prices for food. He pays again in Federal taxes. These are a real part of the grocery bill even though they don't show up on the tape at the supermarket.

DEPRECIATING MONEY

Continuing our practice of recent years, we present below a table showing the depreciation of money in 35 countries over the period 1948–58.[1] The decline in buying power is measured in each case by the rise in the official cost of living or consumer price index.

This year, for the first time, the 10-year span is subdivided into 5-year periods. It is interesting to note that two out of three countries experienced a slower rate of depreciation during 1953–58 than in the earlier 5-year period. This reflects more normal conditions (the earlier years included the Korean war); a growing awareness of the dangers of accepting inflation as a way of life; and the increasing effectiveness of restrictive monetary and fiscal policies in preventing inflationary excesses.

FORTHCOMING VISIT OF PREMIER NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, last month, when it was announced that the President of the United States and the Premier of Soviet Russia would exchange visits to this country and Russia, I asked President Eisenhower to make certain that Mr. Khrushchev would be shown the greatest military armada ever displayed by this Nation. The reason I suggested this was that I know, and every other American knows, that Mr. Khrushchev, or any other Russian leader, understands nothing but force.

Mr. President, since that time I have pondered the question, and I still believe that Mr. Khrushchev should be shown this display of military might. Actually, I oppose the Russian Premier's visit in toto. However, I believe there is something extremely important that President Eisenhower can show Mr. Khrushchev when he comes to America, in addition to showing him our military strength.

Mr. President, that other thing is the religious side of the American way of living. I deeply believe that Mr. Khrushchev should be taken to church with President Eisenhower and his family in order that he may understand that we Americans realize and appreciate the fact that our strength, our fascinating standard of living, our joys, and our pleasures, are gifts of God Almighty and that we go to church to thank Him for these blessings.

I think if Mr. Khrushchev realizes that Americans do not believe themselves to be total masters of their own destiny, but that we are children of God trying, as best we can, to bring about God's will on this earth, which primarily is brotherly love and peace, then Mr. Khrushchev will have learned something which neither he nor any other dictator has ever been able to understand about America.

Mr. President, it is never too late for any sinner to repent, and if a visit to some church in America would disturb Mr. Khrushchev's conscience to the point that he would even question the wrongs of his past acts, then we may really accomplish something for world peace. I know there are skeptics among us who would say it would be a "waste of time" or that it would be "an insult to the church" to have Mr. Khrushchev attend Sunday services, but we must remember that the lowly struggling Christians converted some of the most hardened Roman Caesars.

Le us give Mr. Khrushchev some light when he is here. Perhaps he will see that the light of God will always project over might, although at times the road may be rough.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope the President of the United States will take Mr. Khrushchev to church when he is here.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I commend the Senator from South Carolina for the constructive and, I believe, very hopeful suggestion which he has made. The record should show that Mr. Khrushchev's parents were brought up in the faith of the Russian Orthodox Church. In fact, during my visit with the Soviet dictator, he reminded me of that. Khrushchev says he is a confirmed atheist. I guess he is. But I surely agree with the Senator from South Carolina that if Mr. Khrushchev really wants to see the United States of America, and see it all, he should attend a service in a church.

I read in the newspaper the other day that Khrushchev would like to see not only the beautiful buildings in Washington, but also the slums. It is expected that he will see our farms and factories. Some persons have suggested that he see our military installations. I join with the Senator from South Carolina in saying that the strength of our Nation is not merely in its factories, fields, and military installations; the strength of America is to be found in the deep, abiding faith of our millions of people who worship and believe in God, and who take their religion seriously.

I do not think Mr. Khrushchev would really have a picture of America without at least coming in contact with the spiritual power which is a fundamental part of our strength. Whether it will do any good or not, no one can predict. But as the Senator from South Carolina has said, the great Caesars of the Roman era were just as dictatorial, just as tyrannical, and exercised the same degree of power. Yet they were, some of them, finally brought under the influence of the great Christian church and were moved by the religious spirit.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad to have the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota, because I truly believe that if we trust in God, we will win.

PROPOSAL FOR YEAR-LONG SESSIONS OF CONGRESS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on September 3 an Associated Press dispatch was published in the newspapers of my State, setting forth some views expressed by the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY]. Not only do I find myself in complete agreement with the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, but in view of the position which I have taken parliamentarywise in the Senate in recent days, this article, published in the Oregon press, in recent days, is of great interest to me. The article, I am pleased to report, was called to my attention by several of my friends and supporters in Oregon.

I shall read a paragraph or two of it under the 3-minute rule, with appropriate deletions in accordance with the rules. It is a very fine statement, and I commented on it to the Senator from Minnesota last night. He assured me he would have no objection to my placing this very sound position, as I believe it to be, of the Senator from Minnesota in the RECORD. I told him I would like to do so; he did not suggest it to me. The article reads, in part:

Opposing a leadership drive for an early adjournment, Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, of Minnesota, said today Congress ought to "grow up" and hold yearlong sessions.

HUMPHREY, an aspirant for the 1960 Democratic presidential nomination, said he is against a proposal for unusual Saturday and Labor Day sessions in a drive to get Congress out of town by September 12.

"My view is that Congress ought to grow up to its responsibilities and recognize that the times demand that it stay on the job throughout the year," HUMPHREY said in an interview.

"We could provide opportunities at stated periods for members to go home without missing rollcall votes and we could give them an opportunity to live at least a few weeks of family life.

"This would avoid the annual rush for adjournment, when a lot of bad legislation gets passed that wouldn't have a chance at any other time. If Senators can spend more than 7 days discussing a bill for the diversion of Lake Michigan water, we can stay around long enough to take sensible action on needed legislation."

HUMPHREY said that if JOHNSON hopes to get Senate action next week on a stripped down civil rights bill, he is entertaining "a vain hope." HUMPHREY said he will be ready with controversial amendments any time the issue is brought to the floor.

I only say "Amen" to the sentiments expressed by the senior Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). The time available to the Senator from Oregon, under the 3-minute limitation, has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, let me say that not only did I make the statements as reported in the article, but I wish to compliment the reporter, for his report is thoroughly accurate. The leadership asked me what I thought about weekend sessions. I said I was opposed to them. I bowed to the will of the majority, but I expressed my point of view.

In the 3 minutes available to me, let me state that I feel it is time Congress reexamined its procedures in terms of its sessions. Every 2 years there is a congressional election, so it is quite obvious the congressional session cannot continue all year, every year. But every other year, between election years, Congress, after convening in January, can continue in session, according to the Reorganization Act, to July 31, and at that time Congress would take a recess to September 15, or whatever date might be decided upon. Then, during the recess, we would have an opportunity to visit with our constituents. That would not be a vacation but would be part of our work. We could then take a vacation, and thereafter could reconvene, to complete our legislative program.

As a family man, I find our present procedure a little discomforting, I represent the State of Minnesota, not the District of Columbia. Some of the Humphreys ought to be back in Minnesota occasionally; so, Mrs. Humphrey and the children go home, for the purpose of at least maintaining a homestead in our State. They remain there until September, then return here in September—at which time I go to Minnesota. Certainly this is a poor way to promote family life; and I do not believe it makes for good legislation. Quite frankly, I get ornery when Mom is away that long.

So, Mr. President, I think we should revise our schedule. My children are growing up, and I am getting old in this job. Furthermore, there are younger Members of the Senate and they are deserving of a program which will enable them to work here, then have a vacation and do a little traveling, and then return here for further legislative work.

I so suggest, and I am prepared to support such a move.

COMMUNIST ATTACKS ON LAOS

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, my purpose is to make a few remarks about the Lao situation, in the hope that they will reach the Russian people.

The President of the United States, in working toward the achievement of peace, extended to Khrushchev an invitation to come to our country. There has been wide divergence of opinion on the merits of the invitation. There are many, however, who felt that no stone should be left unturned in working to achieve peace.

We now are confronted with the shocking situation that while Khrushchev is figuratively on his way to the United States, there are rather clear evidences that the Communists have provoked the disorders and the attacks which have been foisted upon the Lao people.

It appears that, on August 30, at five different points, attacks were made from the North Vietnamese border into Laos; and the evidences show that some months before those attacks were made, the head of the Lao Government visited Khrushchev. From that time on, there began a dissemination of propaganda provoking trouble in Laos.

Now we have seen a shocking spectacle at the United Nations: When a motion was made to send investigators to Laos, with a view to establishing the facts in regard to what provoked the disorders, the Soviet Government's representatives voted against the motion.

The great difficulty lies in the fact that we are a member of the SEATO agreement, and under that agreement we have an obligation to Laos—namely, if we are called upon to protect Laos against attack or invasion, we are obligated to do so.

My plea is made now to the Russian people. We should let them know that, in this instance, while Khrushchev is figuratively on his way to the United States, and is professing to promote peace, he is actively engaged in disturbance and in provocation that might lead to world disorder. It is meaningless for us to make this plea to the Soviet government; but I believe that the Soviet people, the Russians, who are good in purpose, and want peace, should know of this betrayal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 3 minutes available to the Senator from Ohio have expired.

Mr. LAUSCHE. May I have an additional 2 minutes? I so request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, throughout the satellite nations and throughout Soviet Russia, word is circulated about Khrushchev's professions of devotion to the attainment of peace. The Russian people probably do not know what has been done in Laos, but they should know. It is my hope that, in some way, through the available means of communication, there will be delivered to the people of the satellite countries and to the Russian people this message of the betrayal of the honest efforts to achieve peace.

It is one thing to talk about peace; it is another to work and act for it. I submit that Khrushchev's acts are completely contradictory of his words.

As I have stated, I hope that this message will in some way reach the people of Soviet Russia.

STEPPING UP POLICIES THAT GO "OVER THE HEADS" OF OBSTRUCTIONIST COMMUNIST LEADERS TO DOMINATED PEOPLE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in view of the remarks of my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] and in view of the forthcoming visit of Premier Khrushchev, I believe it is time to take a brief look at Communist activities and policies around the world. I am sure when Khrushchev comes here, the President and he are going to have a showdown. That is the very purpose of their having the proposed talks.

As an example of the strangely contradictory policies of the Communist nations, we find that they are temporarily holding aloft the "dove of peace" in Europe; by contrast, they are brandishing the sword of aggression in Asia.

The question, then, is how we can most effectively deal with such a twisting tortuous Communist policy line.

Overall, I believe the East-West struggle—a complex one—will be won by a many-faceted approach to the challenges, including an effective presentation to the "mind" of the world of free ideas, ideals, and goals.

Unfortunately, the Iron and the Bamboo Curtains have acted as a wall against greater understanding and accommodation of views between the Western World and the people under Communist domination.

Recent events, however, provide strong evidence that a most effective way to reduce East-West tensions may well be stepped-up effort for more direct contacts on the people-to-people level. From all indications, those under Communist domination are hungering for a closer look at, and better understanding of, our way of life.

During the Nixon-to-Moscow trip, for example, the Vice President received warm greetings from the Soviet people. The U.S. exhibit in Moscow, according to reliable reports, also made a tremendous impression upon the millions of visitors who viewed the display of exhibits delineating the U.S. way of life. For whatever its value, even Tass, the Soviet News Agency, expressed approval of our exhibit.

Perhaps the greatest obstruction to easing East-West tensions continues to be the Communist leadership itself. For a variety of self-serving reasons, the Communist ruling clique—only 4 to 6 percent of the population in the Soviet Union, and about 2 percent in Red China—continues to stir up trouble, create tension, and act in ways that threaten war, whereas peace could otherwise be accomplished policywise. Those engaged in the Communist conspiracy appear to find it necessary to foster chaotic, strife-riddled, high-tension conditions, rather that a peaceful climate—in which they may fear—and rightly so, I believe—that their military, economic, social and political theories would "die on the vine."

From a review of the growth of communism in the world, it is apparent that people do not accept it voluntarily; rather, it is imposed upon them either by coups, revolutions, or military aggression, after which control is maintained by military force.

In view of that background, it still appears to be extremely doubtful that the Communists are likely to adhere to peaceful policies, except for temporary periods in which they may serve their own purposes.

In negotiations with the Communists, however, the free world has the right—in fact, it is a necessity—to require that the protestations of "peace" by such leaders as Khrushchev be "backed up" by their acts.

The recent aggressions in Asia—including the invasion of Tibet, the violation of the India-Chinese border, aggression in Laos—provide more evidence that, while Communist leaders spout "words of peace" in one part of the world, they embark on troublemaking campaigns in other areas that threaten peace.

Because of this kind of policy line by the ruling Communists, it would appear to be of special value to expand, wherever possible, the direct contacts with people behind the Iron and Bamboo Curtains.

In effect, this would "take us over the heads" of the Communist leaders, directly to the people. In the long run, such action may accomplish more than long - winded, unfruitful discussions around a conference table. Insofar as such conferences serve to stave off greater tensions or war itself, however, we must continue to meet with the Communists to discuss issues with them and try to reach agreements, if at all possible, that will prevent existing differences from "swelling," and perhaps eventually erupting into a world conflagration.

As a major example of people-to-people contacts, the upcoming exchange of visits by President Eisenhower and Premier Khrushchev will provide a significant opportunity for the President—respected, admired, and beloved abroad, as well as at home—to be directly in touch with the Russian people. The Eisenhower trip, if taken, I believe, will demonstrate that, despite the barrage of misleading Communist propaganda, during the post-World War II era, the Russian people still are friendly to the United States; that they are interested in our way of life; that they want more consumer goods for better living for more people—as we have them—and that they, themselves, are sincerely dedicated to peace, not war.

On the opposite side of the coin, I am confident that Khrushchev will have relatively little persuasive impact on the American people.

Consequently, our policies and programs, insofar as possible, can, and should, I believe, be directed to more effective people-to-people contacts with the masses under Communist domination. In the long run, the effort may make a valuable contribution to a peaceful solution to world problems.

Illustrating the interest of the Russian people in learning of our way of life, recently, there have been significant reviews published of the effectiveness of the U.S. exhibit, for example, in portraying our way of life to the Russian people. These included the following articles: First, from the Milwaukee Journal, "U.S. Exhibit Did Well in Reaching Soviets," and second, "Tass Calls U.S. Show in Moscow Success," from the Christian Science Monitor.

I request unanimous consent to have the articles printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. EXHIBIT DID WELL IN REACHING SOVIETS—STUDY OF REACTIONS OF VISITORS TO THE SHOW FINDS IT GOT ACROSS AMERICAN IDEAS

Moscow, U.S.S.R.—The U.S. Government has given itself a B-plus in popularity and an A-plus in communicating ideas to the Russians at the American national exhibition in Moscow, which closed last week.

This is the verdict of a critical report card on the exhibit, which will be studied by Washington. The analysis rates the effectiveness of the many displays and also analyzes the feelings and reactions of Russians to the first direct American propaganda effort inside the Soviet Union.

The critique, conducted since the opening of the fair on July 25, has been prepared under supervision of Ralph K. White, Chief of the Communism Analysis Division of the Office of Research and Analysis of the U.S. Information Agency. White is a psychologist who has specialized in public opinion and psychological causes of war.

WATCHED THE CROWDS

He interviewed the guides and workers at the exhibit, watched the crowds, analyzed comment on books, studied Russians' preferences on voting machines and questions asked of the electronic answering machine and collected hundreds of random comments overheard on the fairgrounds.

His report and additions that will be made by General Manager Harold C. McClellan can be fairly summarized as follows:

The exhibit enjoyed a "moderate success" in popularity with 2,700,000 visitors. But in communicating the ideas the Americans would like to communicate to the Russian people its success was "simply tremendous."

GUIDES HELPED CAUSE

The 75 guides and other Russian-speaking specialists who spoke daily to Russian visitors and answered their questions about the exhibit were lauded by White. Their personal presentations considerably increased the good will of the United States. While not all they said was believed, their presence offered many Russians their first chance to hear the American side of things.

The exhibit successfully suggested that the United States was a middle-of-the-road country with elements of social security, unemployment benefits, and educational opportunities for ambitious youngsters of all strata.

The "Family of Man" photograph exhibition was first in total impact. The intelligent young Russians whom Americans want most to reach favored this exhibit. (The picture exhibit, a camera testament to mankind, was created from 503 photographs by Edward Steichen, famed New York photographer and a former Milwaukeean.)

PHOTOS MOVED STUDENTS

There is evidence that while the general public was most taken with color television and automobiles, students preferred the "Family of Man." The photo show had a quality of depth that moved the Russians, whereas cars and television caused more impersonal admiration.

Washington will receive the following advice about future exhibitions in the Soviet Union:

1. At a similar exhibit the number of guides ought to be doubled.

2. Circarama, the 360° film travelog, satisfied the Russians' evident desire for travel abroad. There should be at least two or more such films to satisfy the greater proportion of visitors.

MORE TECHNICAL DISPLAY

3. Russians' expectations of more technical displays might be met by having three or four times as many machines in motion, providing much more technical information about existing displays, such as air conditioners and business machines, displaying scientific demonstrations and showing films of American industrial processes.

4. There should be clear dual emphasis on luxury and average items instead of the equivocal in-between approach of the first show.

5. There should be just as much emphasis on consumer goods but a half dozen instead of two dozen cars might be sufficient. The architecture display should be dropped or drastically improved and half the number of toys and sporting goods would suffice.

6. While abstract paintings were important to demonstrate freedom of expression, nearly all abstract sculpture encountered disinterest or hostility.

TASS CALLS U.S. SHOW IN MOSCOW SUCCESS

Moscow.—The U.S. national exhibition in Moscow closed September 4 after a popular and sometimes controversial summer showing of American wares and ways of living. Among other things, it was the scene of the famous Nixon-Khrushchev kitchen debate.

The Soviet news agency Tass called the exhibit a success. It reported more than 2 million persons visited the show during its 43 days. An American official put the attendance at 2,700,000 Soviet citizens.

Closing ceremonies included the lowering of the United States and Soviet flags at the exhibit's main entrance in Sokolniki Park, 15 minutes by subway from downtown Moscow.

The Soviet press has sharply criticized the exhibition in its opening stages and Soviet officials banned some of the books put on display.

SHOW'S EMPHASIS CRITICIZED

Other Soviet critics said the show put too much emphasis on consumer goods and everyday living and not enough on industrial and scientific accomplishments. A cement floor pulverized into dust storms under the tramping of thousands of feet and had to be replaced.

But the criticism simmered down and kind words began to appear. Tass even expressed the hope this would not be the last such exhibit.

Harold C. McClellan, a San Marino, Calif., paint company executive, who directed the exhibition, said he is happy at what has been accomplished.

"No one at this point can realize the exhibit's impact, but the fact that 2,700,000 Russians crowded the area and got their first look at the American people and their accomplishments must have had an important result," he declared.

CONGRESSMEN TAKE TOUR

Scores of thousands of visitors jammed the exhibition grounds on the last day despite bad weather.

They paid special attention to a model of an American earth satellite, cars, radios, and electrical equipment.

The exhibition staff expressed hope that this exhibit, the first of its kind, would be followed by others.

After the exhibition closed it was toured by a group of U.S. Congressmen who had arrived in Moscow earlier in the day. The exhibit was opened July 24 by Vice President RICHARD M. NIXON. It was on opening day that Mr. NIXON and Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev had their running verbal duel—part of it caught on TV sound tape—in the kitchen of the American model home.

Mr. Khrushchev paid another visit to the show September 3. On his earlier visit he had expressed praise for some parts of the show and criticized others.

On the last tour, the Soviet leader declared it would have been a better exhibit if U.S. officials had asked him what to display.

Work crews will refurbish the golden aluminum dome, the center of the exhibition, and the glass display pavilion.

They will be turned over to Soviet officials September 15 under an agreement that brought the exhibit here in exchange for the recent Soviet display in New York.

Soviet and American officials are negotiating the disposition of other parts of the display, including the model American home.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2504) to authorize the sale at market prices of agricultural commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide feed for livestock in areas determined to be emergency areas, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 1540. An act for the relief of the estate of John Steve;

H.R. 4965. An act for the relief of Pioneer Air Lines, Inc.;

H.R. 6712. An act for the relief of Sam J. Buzzanca;

H.R. 6885. An act for the relief of Neal E. Andersen;

H.R. 7260. An act for the relief of John Napoli;

H.R. 7758. An act to improve the administration of overseas activities of the Government of the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 7932. An act for the relief of William E. Dulin;

H.R. 8110. An act for the relief of Miss Elsie Robey;

H.R. 8761. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles H. Biederman; and

H.R. 9069. An act to provide standards for the issuance of passports, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 9105) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred, as indicated:

H.R. 1540. An act for the relief of the estate of John Steve;

H.R. 4965. An act for the relief of Pioneer Air Lines, Inc.;

H.R. 6712. An act for the relief of Sam J. Buzzanca;

H.R. 6885. An act for the relief of Neal E. Andersen;

H.R. 7260. An act for the relief of John Napoli;

H.R. 7932. An act for the relief of William E. Dulin;

H.R. 8110. An act for the relief of Miss Elsie Robey; and H.R. 8761. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles H. Biederman; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 7758. An act to improve the administration of overseas activities of the Government of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

H.R. 9069. An act to provide standards for the issuance of passports, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CRACKING DOWN ON OBSCENE MAIL

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the abuse of the mails by certain entrepreneurs in pornographic material has aroused the proper ire of a great many Americans. Postmaster General Summerfield has mounted a great offensive against the barons of obscenity, and his efforts have drawn strong support all over the country.

Effective and laudable as may be the Post Office Department's vigorous efforts to rid our mails of offensive material, that crusade is not enough. Congress also must play a part. I am confident Congress will, before long, enact sound and reasonable laws to help the Government crack down on those who would contaminate the minds of our young people with filthy material.

The newspapers of America and their columnists deserve a great deal of credit for the manner in which they have publicized the dangers of obscene mail and the magnitude of the problem. In a syndicated article published this morning, Roscoe Drummond, the able student of government and public morality, has pointed up some of the outstanding facets of the pornography business. Since this is the first of several columns, I look forward to reading its supplements.

I hope Mr. Drummond's comments will be read carefully by every Member of the Senate and the House, as well as many Americans. I ask unanimous consent that his column be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OBSCENITY IN MAILS—OFFENSE AGAINST SOCIETY COMPOUNDED THREEFOLD

(By Roscoe Drummond)

There is good reason to be wrathfully aroused by the massive abuse of the mails to sell obscenity to teenage boys and girls.

Let's not allow ourselves to be distracted from the main problem by a side debate on "Lady Chatterly's Lover." The courts have ruled it mailable and most people, I think, will be willing to go the extra mile to guard against capricious Government censorship.

But there is no issue of capricious Government censorship in dealing with the calculated commercial corruption of youth by the mail-order filth racket.

It is no valid use of free speech to yell "fire" in a theater.

It is no valid use of free speech to engage in a conspiracy to teach the overthrow of the Government by force.

It is no valid use of free speech to promote for profit the overthrow of the morals and moral fiber of the Nation's young people.

Have no doubt about it, today the mail-order sales of pornographic literature, obscene pictures, and erotic equipment have become big business and is helping to produce big crime.

The purpose of this column is to show something of the magnitude of this offensive, corrupt and corrupting enterprise. Later columns will deal with what is being done and what more can be done to destroy it.

By conservative estimate the gross revenue from this filthy business runs to half a billion dollars a year—and probably much more.

The Inspection Service of the Post Office Department estimates that as many as 1 million children this year will be on the receiving end of this terrible racket—at least 1 of every 35 children in the country.

The obscenity business focuses its attention more and more on the Nation's children—teenage boys and girls mostly, but even younger. They flush this pornographic material into the unsuspecting hands of many young people through the family mailbox.

At first it reaches most children unsolicited. The pornographic peddlers are like dope peddlers. First, they slyly get the young people hooked with the drug—the obscenity drug—and then work to make them regular customers.

It is the purveyors who seek out the children, not the children who first seek out the purveyors. They buy lists from standard sources. They advertise innocent items, like model airplane parts, toys, stamps. The child sends for these things and the dealer in obscenity has the name to use for his evil traffic. Soon the child is receiving solicitations through the mails.

All this adds up to an offense against society compounded threefold. There is the baited trap to catch young people. There is the pattern of progression by which children are lured to increase their depravity. And later it becomes an addiction which leads to and increases juvenile delinquency.

And when crime becomes profitable business, the racketeers begin to take over as they are now elbowing into the merchandising of obscenity.

Thus, criminals are begetting criminals, nurturing and nourishing them. All these are the reasons why Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield needs and deserves the support of every church organization, every parent, every civic leader to help smother this awful business.

THOUGHTFUL EDITORIALS FROM THE SPORTING NEWS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the August 26, 1959, edition of the Sporting News—that great publication which is must reading for dyed-in-the-wool sports lovers—contains two thoughtful editorials dealing with recent developments involving our national pastime of baseball.

In the first editorial the Sporting News points out the great challenge which lies ahead of Branch Rickey and his partners as they attempt to get the Continental League off the ground and into operation. Although I do not entirely share the paper's pessimism about the chances for success of the third major league, its comments deserve study by all who are concerned with this latest forward step in baseball.

I certainly share the Sporting News' high regard for Mr. Rickey, and wish him well as he faces the toughest task of his illustrious career.

In another editorial, the Sporting News incisively points out the great shortcoming of the sports bill recently reported by the Antitrust Subcommittee to the Senate Judiciary Committee. I agree that any such measure, if it is to be fair and complete, must include baseball within its purview.

I call attention particularly to the last paragraph, which reads as follows:

Baseball needs specific congressional exemption from the antitrust laws—not necessarily a blanket exemption, but assurance that those rules without which it could not survive as a unique sport business are beyond attack. We hope the friends of the game will keep pressing for that type of legislation.

Mr. President, I assure the lovers of baseball that I am their friend and I shall continue to work for legislation which will recognize the fine record and necessary practices of our national pastime. I will continue to strive for a bill which will do equal justice to all our great professional team sports.

Mr. President, I hope the thoughtful comments of the Sporting News, particularly in the light of the high regard held for this publication and the expertise it brings to these issues, will be read very carefully by a wide audience. I ask unanimous consent to have these two editorials printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRAILBLAZER RICKEY FACES TOUGHEST TASK

Branch Rickey will be 78 years old in December, but the club owners of the newly-organized third major, the Continental League, obviously believe the Mahatma is young enough to cope with at least one more challenge before he calls it a career.

Certainly nobody could have brought to the office of president of the fledgling circuit a record of longer experience or greater resourcefulness in dealing with baseball problems. Even the all-important question confronting the newcomers—where will they find their players?—hardly can be expected to unnerve the man who founded the farm system as we know it.

The St. Louis Cardinals of Branch's younger days were in a similar quandary. They couldn't outbid the wealthy owners for young talent. But their astute front-office chief hit on the most satisfactory of all replacement plans. He grew his own future stars, setting an example which was widely followed, in spite of the opposition of the first commissioner, Kenesaw M. Landis.

Sticking firmly to his proven methods, he moved to Brooklyn and established another dynasty. During this span, he also broke baseball's unofficial but effective color line, thus opening the big league gates for scores of athletes who needed only the opportunity to prove themselves as talented as any others in the game.

Rickey's youth movement at Pittsburgh was not a quick success, but he provided the nucleus of the club which no longer is the doormat of the National League. And all the while he remained one of baseball's most profound students, one of its most eloquent orators, one of its stanchest defenders against attack or criticism.

Rickey is a great name in baseball. We do not share his optimism about the future of the Continental League, but we hope his presidency of that circuit will bring new distinction to an already impressive list of honors.

[From the Sporting News, Aug. 26, 1959]

KEFAUVER PROPOSAL FALLS SHORT

Senator ESTES KEFAUVER and fellow sponsors of the measure which would exempt professional football, basketball, and hockey from the antitrust laws may have valid reasons for omitting baseball from their suggested legislation.

It is true the national pastime has territorial and television complications which do not affect the fall and winter sports. Since KEFAUVER'S committee could not devise a bill which it believed would cover all sports fairly, the Tennessean left baseball under the famous umbrella of the Holmes and subsequent Supreme Court rulings and moved for corresponding protection of the others.

As far as baseball is concerned, however, the new proposal solves no problems. The Sporting News hoped for a law which would spell out antitrust exemptions for such structural features as the reserve clause and any others necessary to prevent a jungle struggle for survival.

We believed such action not only would answer many troublesome questions, but would end for all time the necessity of baseball going into court to defend itself against expensive antitrust suits.

Oh yes, there were such suits in spite of that Holmes precedent and later findings which declined to overthrow it. The simple fact is that the game's top executives lived for years in almost paralyzing fear of the day when another set of Justices might overthrow their favored status.

Presumably, they still must struggle with such worries. As long as there is one disgruntled player and one lawyer willing to present his case, there will be one attempt to test the durability of that umbrella. Baseball could win a thousand favorable decisions, and still be distressed, if not ruined, by the costs.

Baseball needs specific congressional exemption from the antitrust laws—not necessarily a blanket exemption, but assurance that those rules without which it could not survive as a unique sport-business are beyond attack. We hope the friends of the game will keep pressing for that type of legislation.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Can the Senator tell us the situation as to S. 2425, to which the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] has offered an amendment?

Mr. KEATING. The bill came before the Committee on the Judiciary at its last meeting, and was put over until the next meeting.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from New York is offering an amendment to that bill which will give some protection to the minor leagues——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KEATING. The Senator from New York has faced the possibility that no bill will come out of the committee if his amendment is offered in the committee. Therefore it is his plan to discuss his amendment, and not press it in the committee, but bring it up on the floor when the bill comes before the Senate.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator very much.

VISIT BY PREMIER KRUSHCHEV

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, in a few days Mr. Khrushchev, from Russia, will be in this country. No one knows at the present time what the dispositions will be. Various questions have been raised by Mr. Khrushchev's intended entrance into this country.

First of all, regardless of how bitter people may feel, or how people may feel about Mr. Khrushchev, I hope that he will be treated with decorum and outward courtesy at all times while he is a guest of our country.

What I fear more than anything else with respect to the Khrushchev visit is that the people of America will forget essentially what kind of a man he is. He is a clever man, as all those who have talked with him say over and over. I think we should not forget this.

Even though many people would like to believe there is a cleavage developing between Red China and Russia, we should not forget there is nothing yet to prove this is a cleavage of any distinction.

The Lao situation today follows the complete pattern which Russia has followed since World War II, in putting on a bit of pressure at one point, going as far as it can, releasing the pressure there, and putting on pressure at another point. All I have to do to remind Senators of this is to recall the successive incidents in the Near East, the successive Quemoy incidents, and the successive pressures in Vietnam and in the Far East.

So while we will greet this man formally and give him all the courtesies due a head of state, let us not forget what he is. Let us not permit the American people to forget for a moment what kind of man he is. Let us not forget we are not going to change his character, and we are not going to change the course of history by his visit, except in a very small perceptible degree, perhaps.

Only if the American people become "starry eyed" about this visit do we have anything to fear from the visit. If we keep realities about us and remember what kind of man Mr. Khrushchev is, if we remember what communism stands for, and if we remember the history of the last 15 years, we have nothing to fear from the visit.

Mr. President, I desire to address myself to another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 3 minutes on another subject.

PORNOGRAPHIC LITERATURE

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, last week I went to the office of the Postmaster General and saw some of the very modern machines which are being used to speed up our postal system. While I was at the office I went into a room, at the Postmaster General's insistence, which he had locked off, in which he had collected various pornographic materials which are sent through the mails.

I cannot say that I was simply shocked, for I was disgusted. In fact, I felt like retching in that room where the materials were contained.

This experience has been so recent for me that I do not know exactly what we can do about the matter. I will say one thing: If we have to have a special session of the Senate, or an executive session of the Senate, next January, we ought to have it and we ought to make every Member of the Senate look at that filth which is being purveyed to the children of this country, as well as to grownups. If we do not find a way of putting real teeth in the laws concerning this material, there is something wrong with us as Americans and as Members of the Senate.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will my distinguished friend yield to me?

Mr. ALLOTT. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. My friend probably knows that by a conservative estimate the gross revenue from this filthy traffic has reached the amount of a half billion dollars a year. This filth is being poured into the homes of our children, when they write for some toy, or model airplane or other item, which though legitimately advertised, merely serves as bait to attract an inquiry. Then these "characters" send the children this scum. It is simply flooding the homes of this country. The Post Office Department estimates that a million children will receive this rotten material this year. That amounts to 1 of every 35 children in the country.

Mr. ALLOTT. I agree with the Senator entirely. He is correct. The business is quite big. I appreciate the Senator's comments.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLOTT. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. It seems to me there would be no objection whatsoever to legislation in this field, if the Senator would introduce a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I would be happy to vote for such a bill. My guess is that whatever the Senator thinks should be done to tighten up the law in this matter would receive a unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. ALLOTT. I know the Members will not enjoy it, but I hope every Member of the Senate will see this material.

Mr. President, I desire to speak on another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 3 minutes on another subject.

Mr. NEUBERGER subsequently said: Mr. President, I was present in the Chamber earlier today when the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] and the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT] made some references to the very unfortunate, shabby, and shocking purveyance of pornographic and obscene literature through the U.S. mails.

As a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service I went with the chairman of that committee—and the very able ranking member of the committee [Mr. CARLSON], who is now present in the Chamber, for the purpose of viewing some of the disgraceful exhibits. They were disgusting. I share the views of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado.

I had intended to place in the RECORD the very excellent column by Roscoe Drummond in the Washington Post of September 9, which commends the Postmaster General for his efforts to tighten the laws so as to make possible—we hope—driving much of this material from the mails, and particularly from the hands of children, who can be adversely influenced by it psychologically for the rest of their lives.

I wish to add one further word. A great deal of this material, particularly the very disgraceful and degrading films, is purchased by some very important organizations in the United States for so-called "smokers," and such materials are displayed to some of the leading adults in many communities in the United States.

Thus, this traffic is also the problem of local law enforcement officers, as well as of the Postmaster General, the Congress, and the executive arm of Government. Once again it is demonstrated that we in the Congress will not be able to accomplish our goal of eliminating these obscene materials unless we have effective local law enforcement.

The problem is somewhat similar to some of the situations developed by the McClellan committee. They were not problems peculiar to trade unions, in many essentials. They were problems involving arson, murder, assault, and other dreadful crimes, which have been prohibited by the criminal codes of our States and country for many decades, and by civilized society all over the world for centuries.

Unless we have better local law enforcement, both by U.S. attorneys and local district attorneys, we shall not be able to accomplish our purposes in this respect.

SENATE RULES

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] a few minutes ago spoke about methods of reforming, perhaps, the times and occasions when the Senate would meet. I can join in regard to much of what the Senator says, because, the way the Senate meets, those who have families are placed in a very serious situation, where they are separated from their families and families are broken up. I think we should take a very good look at the way the sessions are handled.

I also wish to suggest, Mr. President, that the occasions of the last few days have brought forth to me very clearly and plainly that the rules of the Senate—particularly rule XXII, with respect to the closing off of debate—which were adopted many years ago, which were amended in 1949, and again amended in 1959, need to be reconsidered. There has now come a time in the Senate of the United States when the entire business of the Senate, the whole will of the Senate, the will of the overwhelming majority of the Senate—even the will of the American people—can be thwarted by the delaying tactics which are available to an individual Member under the rules.

I have been one of those who has fought against a too strict cloture rule. I shall continue to do so, and I shall fight for rules which will protect minorities in the Senate. But I am no longer going to fight for a rule—and I will fight to change the rule—which permits the entire Senate to be abused by one man.

TRIBUTE TO CONGRESS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I hope the Members of this body who are present will listen carefully. In New Mexico we have a television station, KOAT-TV, channel 7. On September 15 Mr. Phil Close closed the night television broadcast with the following editorial concerning Congress:

> In closing tonight, this food for thought. Along about this time of the year, the people as a group, and the press in general, begin to get a little impatient with Congress. Senators are accused of dragging their feet, Congressmen are often accused of clamping the lid on important legislation. However, if for just 1 day, every person in the Nation could read the complete CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it would make one thing clear. The boys in Washington may take a while to get things accomplished, but a great deal of research and thinking goes into their final decrees. The RECORD is full of very enlightening reasoning by men supporting both sides of any controversy. And the choice of which side to take can sometimes be tough. Generally speaking, though, Congress as a body does an excellent job in keeping the wheels of Government going. The proof of this is that the wheels have never stopped, and look good for the next three or four centuries, at least.

THE RAILROAD SITUATION AND THE TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1958

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a few days ago the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] delivered a significant and timely speech in the Senate about the railroad situation and the failure of the Transportation Act of 1958 to remedy the ills that beset the hard-pressed railroad industry.

I fear that the old saw about the weather, that is, "Everyone talks about it, but no one does anything about it," might well apply to the railroad situation.

I had hoped, as I am sure other Senators did, when in 1958 we passed the bill known as the Transportation Act of 1958, to which subject the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], and the other Senators had given so much thought and attention, that we had at least made one step forward toward the relief of the railroads. Perhaps that is not so.

Studies of transportation problems are now being made under the direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and by the Department of Commerce, at the request of the President. It is hoped that out of these studies will come further recommendations to assure the Nation of adequate transportation facilities.

Few industries have had more to do with the development of America, and with welding the States together, than the transportation industry. As said by the Senator from New Hampshire the other day, we began to regulate the railroads many years ago when it was believed they had a monopoly of transportation. Not so today. In this year of our Lord, 1959, the railroads are handling less than 4 percent of the intercity passenger miles, and less than 50 percent of the intercity ton miles of freight. The erosion process has been aided and abetted by billions of dollars spent by the Federal Government, the States and municipalities on the development of water, air and highway transportation. We have continued to impose more and more regulations on the railroads and more and more taxes, until the twin burden, regulations and taxes, has in some instances become almost unbearable. Fortunately, under the able leadership of the Governor of New York, that State is trying to do something about the tax burden. So is its sister State of New Jersey.

There are, however, a dozen or more bills pending in the Senate and the House to impose more and more regulations upon the railroad industry. Bills to regulate hours of service, the operation of track motor cars, the making of accident reports, to give the Interstate Commerce Commission more power to prescribe standards of maintenance for track, equipment, signals, and the like are pending. Another bill, S. 1789, would give the Commission more power over per diem charges—the rental paid one railroad to another for the use of freight cars. Congress, earlier this year, enacted legislation imposing an additional burden of more than $100 million a year on the industry in the way of increased railroad retirement and unemployment insurance taxes for railroad employees. That burden under the sliding scale of increasing those taxes, will eventually rise to more than one quarter billion dollars per year. How long can this go on? This Nation in World War I and again in World War II, saw how vital are the railroads in wartime. Members of the subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee, after hearings recently held, have expressed concern about the ability of the railroads to do another such fine job as they did in World War II, if we should have another emergency.

The time has come, Mr. President, when we must stop imposing more and more burdens upon the railroad industry. The time has come when we must give the able men who run the railroads more freedom to operate their railroads as other businesses are operated. The railroad industry is one of our largest employers of labor, one of the Nation's largest taxpayers, one of the largest purchasers of the products of American industry and agriculture. The time has come when we must stop treating the railroads as the stepchild of American industry. True, in days when the railroad industry was growing, when ribbons of steel were being laid across the prairies of my native Middle West to link the industrial East with the golden West to make America, there may have been a few robber barons. Those days are long since past. Let us not continue to heap coals upon the heads of the men who run America's railroads today, for the sins of those in the industry perpetrated long before anyone within the sound of my voice sat here.

I join the Senator from New Hampshire in expressing the hope that out of the studies currently under way, will come recommendations for legislation that will more nearly equalize the competition between our agencies of transportation. I hope for legislation that will give to the railroads a plain, old-fashioned, American, square deal to which every man and woman, yes, every industry, is entitled, and with less than which no one should be satisfied. We need the railroads in peacetime and in time of war. Let us stop imposing further regulations upon them. What the railroad industry needs now is less regulation, not more.

THE LABOR-MANAGEMENT REFORM BILL

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the action taken by the conference on the labor reform legislation which appears on pages 17326 and 17327 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 28, 1959, which I had inserted, and which is a comparison of the first of six titles of the Landrum-Griffin bill, be reprinted in the body of the RECORD, and that there be added thereto a summary analysis of the conference agreement on title VII.

There being no objection, the summaries were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE ACTION TAKEN BY THE CONFEREES ON LABOR REFORM LEGISLATION

Definitions: Adopted the House language, which includes definitions of "Secretary," "officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative," and "district court of the United States," not contained in the Senate bill.

Title I—Bill of rights for union members: Senate bill required the union member to exhaust reasonable hearing procedures within the union not exceeding a period of 6 months before instituting legal or administrative proceedings against the union or its officers. House provision required only a 4 months' waiting period. Conference adopted House provision.

Right to copies of collective bargaining agreements: Failure to make copies available to employees and members covered by collective bargaining agreements made a crime by Senate bill. House provision enforced by injunction actions brought by Secretary of Labor in Federal courts. Conference adopted House provision.

Title II—Reporting by unions: Both bills require detailed union organizational and financial reports. Conference adopted House language which required every union to adopt a constitution and bylaws and which contained no exemption for small unions. Conference also adopted Senate provision requiring union financial reports to be in such categories as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe.

Union officers and employees conflict-of-interest reports: Senate bill required conflict-of-interest reports from every officer and employee receiving more than $5,000 a year in wages, salary, expenses, and allowances from the union. House provision required filing of conflict-of-interest reports from union officers and employees regardless of amount received from the union. Conference adopted House provision.

Reporting by employers: Senate bill required reports from employers and labor relations consultants on certain payments or loans to unions or union officers and employees and on expenditures for activities designed to persuade employees to exercise or not to exercise their rights. House bill would require these reports where the expenditures were for the purpose of interfering with, coercing or restraining employees in the exercise of their rights. Conference adopted compromise language requiring: (1) a report from an employer of any expenditure where an object thereof is to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights; (2) a report from an employer and a labor relations consultant of any agreement or arrangement whereby the labor relations consultant undertakes activities to persuade employees in the exercise of their rights.

Attorney-client communications: House provision gave both attorney and client an exemption from reporting any privileged communication. Senate bill gave this exemption to the attorney. Conference adopted Senate provision.

Reports made public information: House bill made reports public information whereas Senate bill also gave Secretary authority to use reports as basis for compilation of studies and statistical reports. Conference adopted Senate provision.

Criminal provision: House bill made violations of title II a crime whereas Senate bill also made violations of rules and regulations issued by Secretary a crime. Conference adopted House provision.

Commissioner of Labor reports: Senate bill provided for Commissioner of Labor reports. No provision in House bill. Conference adopted House provision.

Non-Communist affidavits: Senate bill requires affidavits to be filed by employers and union officers. No provision in House bill. Conference adopted House provision.

Title III—Trusteeships: Both bills substantially the same. Trusteeships under House provision presumed valid for period of 18 months whereas Senate bill provided only 12 months. Conference adopted House provision.

Title IV—Elections: Senate bill required union to comply with reasonable requests of candidates for union office to mail campaign literature under union auspices at candidates expense, but preserved privacy of membership lists. House provision gave candidates right to inspect and copy list of members where there is a union shop. Conference adopted Senate provisions and House provision with respect to inspection.

Removal of union officers: House bill provides removal procedures where union constitution does not provide an adequate procedure for removal of union officers guilty of serious misconduct. Senate bill provides removal procedures even where there is an adequate procedure in union constitution but it is not being followed. Conference adopted Senate provision.

Title V—Codes of ethical practices: Senate bill contains such a code. Not in House bill. Conference adopted House provision.

Title V—Safeguards for unions: Both bills impose a fiduciary responsibility upon union officers. House bill also gives union member right to sue union officer for breach of fiduciary responsibility. Not contained in Senate bill. Conference adopted House provision.

Bonding: Senate bill provides for blanket bonding of union officers and employees handling union funds with a maximum bond of $250,000. House bill required personal bonding not to exceed $500,000 and prohibited placing of bond with surety company in which any officer or employee had an interest. Conference adopted House provision.

Loans to union officers: Senate bill prohibited unions from making loans to its officers in excess of $1,500, whereas House had $2,500. Conference adopted $2,000.

Holding union office: Senate bill prohibited convicts and persons violating titles II and III from holding union office. House bill extended prohibition to Communists and ex-Communists, but disqualification removed if citizen's rights restored or Justice Department Parole Board approves such person's service as an officer. House bill also extends prohibition to labor relations consultants and employer associations. Conference adopted House provision.

Summary analysis of conference agreement as to title VII, Taft-Hartley amendments

	House bill (Landrum-Griffin)	Senate bill (Kennedy-Ervin)	Conference agreement
I. No man's land	State labor boards and courts could assume jurisdiction and apply State law as to cases declined by NLRB. (Administration recommendation.)	State boards only (12 States) could take jurisdiction—and apply Federal law—to cases declined by NLRB.	Adopts House provision in full. Adds provision to assure that NLRB will continue to take cases falling under its standards as of Aug. 1, 1959; and allows Board to delegate to its regional directors certain powers in representation cases.
II. Hot cargo agreements	Bans all hot cargo agreements	Bans only hot cargo agreements with motor carriers subject to pt. II of Interstate Commerce Act.	Adopts House provision with modification as to application in garment and construction industries.
III. Other secondary boycotts	1. Closes loophole which permitted secondary boycott through coercion applied directly against secondary employer (instead of his employees).	No provision	Adopts House provision.
	2. Closes loophole which permitted secondary boycott by inducing employees individually (rather than in concert).	do	Do.
	3. Closes loophole which permitted secondary boycotts involving railroads, municipalities, and governmental agencies because their employees were not "employees" under definition in the act.	do	Do.
	4. Prohibits secondary customer picketing at retail store which happens to sell product produced by manufacturer with whom union has dispute.	do	Adopts House provision with clarification that other forms of publicity are not prohibited; also clarification that picketing at primary site is not secondary boycott.
IV. Organizational picketing	1. After an election, bans picketing for 12 months.	Same, except 9 months	Adopts House provision.
	2. Bans picketing when another union certified or lawfully recognized.	Same	Same.
	3. Before election, restricts picketing to reasonable time not to exceed 30 days.	No provision	Adopts House provision.
	4. Before election, restricted picketing unless union could show 30 percent interest among employees.	do	Substitutes mandatory election procedure. Informational picketing which does not affect deliveries or service is not banned.
	5. Provides for enforcement through mandatory injunction obtained through NLRB, and/or suit for damages.	Discretionary injunction by NLRB. Union could delay issuance of injunction and continue picketing by charging employer with unfair labor practices.	Mandatory injunction; no damage suit; union can charge unfair practices but cannot block injunction except in limited situations under sec. 8(a)(2).
V. Other provisions:
1. Voting by economic strikers	Employer could not petition during economic strike for election for 1 year.	Economic strikers could vote without limitation.	Can vote during period of 1 year after strike commences.
2. Prehire, building and construction industry.	Sec. 702. Administration provision	Broader provision. Sec. 702	Adopts Senate provision.
3. General Counsel, vacancy	Sec. 704	Same	Same.
4. Priority handling of certain unfair labor charges.	Sec. 706	Same	Same.
5. Common situs, building and construction industry.	No provision	No provision	Dropped.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR MARGARET CHASE SMITH, OF MAINE

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, unfortunately I was not present on the floor of the Senate recently when the acting minority leader [Mr. KUCHEL] paid a most highly deserved tribute to our gallant and gracious senior Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH]. On Monday evening, September 7, the senior Senator from California commemorated MARGARET CHASE SMITH's accomplishment of participating, that day, in her 700th consecutive yea-and-nay vote.

I wish to join in tribute to this remarkable demonstration of public service. Any Senator in this body would treasure such a record of steady, industrious service; and I am sure the people of Maine themselves are pleased and grateful for being so well represented.

Although a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, which I am proud to serve, I was born, reared, and educated in Maine, and I am happy that my home State is represented in the Senate in this conscientious, able manner.

All of us in the Senate express our appreciation for Mrs. SMITH's presence and her labors on behalf of the people of the State of Maine and our Nation, which, with high-principled devotion, she so effectively serves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

WORLD PEACE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 3 minutes in the morning hour.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church of Toledo, Oreg., dated August 17, 1959. I shall read only the first paragraph of the letter, and then I ask unanimous consent that the entire letter and the resolutions appertaining thereto be printed in the RECORD:

I write to inform you of the resolutions on world peace made by the annual Oregon Conference of the Methodist Church which met May 26–31 of this year in Medford, Oreg. This conference consisted mainly of one ministerial and one lay delegate from 170 churches representing approximately 50,000 members. The statements were developed in the following way.

The Conference Committee on World Peace which meets throughout the year studied, wrote and proposed a number of resolutions. These were printed in a study booklet which was sent out about 6 weeks preceding the conference meeting to all delegates to be studied. The conference when it met was divided into sections, one of which discussed and amended these proposed resolutions. They were then taken before the total conference for any further discussion and voted upon. As a result of this process, the following resolutions were made and we request that you give them your careful consideration.

There being no objection, the letter and resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRINITY METHODIST CHURCH,
Toledo, Oreg., August 17, 1959.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. MORSE: I write to inform you of the resolution on world peace made by the annual Oregon conference of the Methodist Church which met May 26–31 of this year in Medford, Oreg. This conference consisted mainly of one ministerial and one lay delegate from 170 churches representing approximately 50,000 members. The statements were developed in the following way. The conference committee on world peace which meets throughout the year studied, wrote, and proposed a number of resolutions. These were printed in a study booklet which was sent out about 6 weeks preceding the conference meeting to all delegates to be studied. The conference when it met was divided into sections, one of which discussed and amended these proposed resolutions. They were then taken before the total conference for any further discussion and voted upon. As a result of this process, the following resolutions were made and we request that you give them your careful consideration:

"War is absurd. It is absurd politically because modern weapons assure the annihilation of the human community. War is irrational for it never solves the problems of the race; it compounds them. War is indefensible. God's action in Christ is to reconcile men with each other and with Him, and war tears apart the human community and alienates man from God.

"Though the cry of the human community is universal in the demand that war be ended and peace be spread across the face of the earth, there is little agreement as to method of accomplishment.

"Our faith teaches us that security is not to be found in postures of defense, no matter how powerful, but in constructive relationships with our fellow man and with God. Therefore, we say "no" to all who flout the love of Christ, to the defender of injustice in the name of order, to those who sow the seeds of war or urge war as inevitable. We say "yes" to all that conforms to the love of Christ, to those who are the peacemakers and who hope, struggle, and suffer for the cause of men.

"From this perspective we offer the following resolutions:

"1. The United Nations: We believe that the United Nations and its agencies should be supported, strengthened, and improved. Moreover, if these facilities are to become most effective, the United Nations, with membership open to all nations must be given sufficient authority to enact, interpret, and enforce world law against aggression and war.

"2. United Nations membership: We believe that the United Nations in its work for peace and disarmament is weakened by the absence of any government. We, therefore, urge the State Department of the United States, the Oregon annual conference, and the national board of world peace of the Methodist Church to seek interchange of ideas with all governments and nations including encouragement of trade and passage of press and church representatives both ways behind all curtains, and we urge our U.S. State Department to support the admission of any nation into the United Nations that meets the requirements of the charter of the United Nations.

"3. Political freedom: We believe in self-government, and the participation in political processes by all persons within a nation.

"4. Disarmament: The United States should assume greater initiative toward bringing national armaments under U.N. inspection and control in a process directed toward their consequent reduction, limitation and eventual abolition.

"5. Nuclear power: We are totally opposed to the resumption of nuclear-weapon testing under any circumstances. We take this stand for the following reasons:

"Nuclear testing can continue only if we accept the proposition that some genetic and somatic damage from radiation is socially tolerable. We believe that Christian love means that any damage to any persons is socially intolerable. Particularly is this true when it appears that much of this damage would occur in persons who are not citizens of the testing nations. The argument that damage may occur to a small percentage (0.01 percent to 0.04 percent) of world population is irrelevant. Such a percentage means 125,000 to 4 million people, many of whom will suffer 100 to 200 years from now. To continue testing is to perpetrate a 'folly in thoughtlessness' and in irresponsibility. (Source of statistical information: The U.N. Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation quoted in Consumers Report, March 1959, vol. 24, No. 3.)

"We are gratified by progress that is being made in the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and urge its further development.

"6. Peacetime conscription: We urge the abolition of peacetime conscription.

"7. World economic development: We support the statement of the Council of Bishops (Cincinnati, Nov. 13, 1958): 'To lay firm foundations of peace, we give hearty endorsement to such foreign policy endeavor as the Hoover European program of relief, the Marshall plan, atoms for peace, a lowering of trade barriers, a strengthening of such other mutual aid programs as those dealing with technical assistance and the development of natural resources for nations in rapid social and economic change and urge that we labor untiringly for the independence of colonies and satellite nations.'

"8. Military support or dictatorship: Since the Methodist Church has been a strong supporter of democracy and freedom, and since other nations of the world interested in democracy and freedom, have looked to the United States of America as an example, we urge our Congressmen and our State Department to discontinue military support of dictatorships."

Sincerely,

The Reverend VERNON A. GROVES,
Secretary of Committee on World Peace, Oregon Conference of the Methodist Church.

EDITORIAL COMMENT ON SENATOR MORSE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, we are so accustomed as Senators to welcome the introduction of material into the RECORD which may be favorable to us that seldom are we fair enough to grant the same consideration to material that is not very favorable. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post of September 8, 1959, entitled "Hair Shirt," which is none too complimentary to the senior Senator from Oregon.

I have no intention of commenting upon the editor's value judgments. I am perfectly willing to let my record speak for itself and leave them to their own opinion.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may appear at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAIR SHIRT

Senator MORSE droned on yesterday while the Senate fumed. Until he relented to permit work on the surplus crop disposal bill, about the only point of agreement between him and the leadership was his statement that he is "not a candidate for a popularity contest in the Senate." Yet the Oregon maverick's harassing tactics did serve to demonstrate graphically his essential point: the absurdity of the congressional rush to get out of town before Mr. Khrushchev arrives.

It would be unthinkable for Congress to adjourn before completing action on badly needed legislation apart from the surplus disposal bill; civil rights, including extension of the Civil Rights Commission; the gasoline tax increase; a new public works bill; the foreign aid appropriation; stopgap housing authority; at least a minimal corrective on bond interest rates. These measures are too important for lick-and-promise consideration.

A perfectly simple remedy has long been advocated. That is for Congress to recess in July, permit Members to take a well-earned vacation with their families, and then reconvene for a cleanup session in October. It is too late, of course, for such a solution this year. The next best thing would be to adopt Senator SMATHERS' suggestion of a recess now, with a further session in the fall. This would at least give Members an excuse to get away before Mr. Khrushchev descends, if they are determined to run from him; and it would permit interested legislators to remain and meet with Mr. Khrushchev in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

In his annoying way Senator MORSE has been pricking the Senate's conscience. If Senators are exasperated with him, they ought to be even more exasperated with themselves.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the editorial was the basis for some press inquiry this morning as to my course of action in view of certain comments that have already been made on the floor.

Let me say to the Senate that I still stand ready and willing at all times to vote to adopt the Morse antifilibuster resolution in the Senate. This would return the Senate to true majority rule with full protection of minority rights. I have never varied from that.

Mr. President, my course of action in the parliamentary situation which has confronted us in recent days has been to follow the rules, and to follow the rules in no way that, in my judgment, would impede the giving of consideration to legislation that is ready for action. I have demonstrated that time and time again. However, Mr. President, I insist that the whole Senate give consideration to such legislation.

As I said to the press this morning and repeat now, I intend to continue to do what I can to apply the rules of the Senate in a way that I believe will assure the careful consideration of legislation in these closing days of the session.

As an old horseman I know that it is impossible to lead a horse to water and make him drink, but it is possible to lead a horse to water. All I propose to do is to make available to the Senate its own rules if it wishes to drink the nourishment thereof.

I will always be found on the side of those who desire to improve these rules because they sorely need improving. I hope that by calling attention to their application it may be helpful in improving them.

Let me make one thing very clear, as I did to the press this morning. The press used the word "relenting." It is not my word. I have no intention of relenting in my opposition to unanimous-consent agreements to limit debate and fixing the time to vote, now or next year or any other time. On some rather extraordinary occasion when it is demonstrated to me that the public interest dictates agreement to such a request, I will agree.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the practice we have adopted in the Senate of doing most of our business by way of unanimous-consent agreements limiting debate and fixing the time to vote is not in the public interest, and as long as the rules are what they are, I intend to object to any such request.

RESUMPTION OF DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, reports in the press on September 8 indicate that general disarmament negotiations will be resumed within the next few months. A four-power communique issued by the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and the Soviet Union states that a special disarmament committee will be established as—

"A useful means of exploring through mutual consultation avenues of possible progress toward such agreements and recommendations on the limitation and reduction of all types of armaments and armed forces under effective international controls."

I believe that this move on the part of the four powers is to be heralded and praised. Disarmament negotiations have been suspended since 1957 and their resumption as indicated by this announcement is an opportunity to make progress toward a dimunition of the pace of the armaments race in which the major powers of the world are now engaged.

The new disarmament committee will be composed of 10 nations, 5 of which will be Western nations and 5 of which will be Soviet bloc nations. The Western Powers will consist of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Canada, and Italy. The Soviet bloc nations will be represented by the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, and Rumania.

With the exception of the United States and Canada all of the nations on the new disarmament committee are European or are partly European. This may appear to give the membership of the committee an unbalanced geographical composition. But this composition, with the exception of the exclusion of Red China, does reflect the existing power situation in the world today. If there is to be any progress in the field of arms control these are the nations that will be primarily involved. I do not wish to dwell long on the subject of the exclusion of Red China from these talks. But I wish to warn my colleagues that if we are to make substantial progress in the area of arms control, particularly in the area of the control and reduction of conventional weapons and manpower, it will be dangerous for the free world if prohibitions and limitations on the Western Powers and the Soviet Union do not also apply to Red China.

The announcement of the resumption of the disarmament negotiations has brought some criticism to the effect that the United Nations has been bypassed as the proper forum through which disarmament negotiations should be conducted. I sympathize with the concern expressed by many of my friends that the United Nations must not be ignored, but instead must eventually be brought into the disarmament picture. The four-power communique, however, recognizes the role of the United Nations. The communique states:

> The United Nations Charter recognizes that disarmament matters are of worldwide interest and concern. Accordingly, ultimate responsibility for general disarmament measures rests with the United Nations.
> The setting up of the disarmament committee in no way diminishes or encroaches upon the United Nations responsibilities in this field.

Furthermore, the Secretary General of the United Nations in his report on the work of the United Nations for the past year also indicated that the new disarmament committee was not necessarily a bypassing of the United Nations. His report recognized that ultimate responsibility for disarmament measures continues to rest with the United Nations, but that a committee outside of the United Nations could deal with the problem. The committee should report its findings and its recommendations, if any, to the United Nations Disarmament Commission.

The new disarmament committee contains an equal number of Western and Soviet nations. It has been feared by some that the granting of equal representation to the Soviet bloc sets an unfortunate precedent. I believe, Mr. President, that the composition of the new committee, with the exception I have noted above, reflects the power situation existing in the world today.

Questions of proper procedures and the appropriate number of nations to be represented are not of primary concern. The most important question is: Can progress be made? Can some accomplishment derive from this procedure? I believe the world does not wish to have procedures block the possibility of progress in the field of arms control. At the same time I would not wish to have my remarks interpreted as favoring in all cases negotiations based on the principle of parity, that is an equal number of Soviet bloc and Western nations.

There will be many questions, indeed there are many questions, in which the parity concept would be false. There are 82 members of the United Nations. In many cases their interests cannot be divided into two main groups: that of interests of the Soviet bloc and interests of the free Western Powers. In many cases the interests will be more diverse than this and the negotiations involved must reflect this diversity. In fact many of the important disputes existing in the world today and pending before the United Nations stem from problems of the Middle East, Africa, and southeast Asia. If arms control proposals were to be considered as solutions or partial solutions for some of these disputes the nations of Asia, Africa, and the Middle East would have to be represented.

Considering all these factors I continue to believe that we must rejoice in the decisions to resume general disarmament negotiations. Let us hope that the proposals advanced and the spirit in which negotiations are conducted will be conducive to producing harmonious and positive results.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to make one further point. This is the need for proper preparation on the part of our Government as we proceed to enter into these negotiations. I have introduced an amendment to the mutual security appropriation bill, which will probably be before us tomorrow, which would enable the Government to be better prepared in the area of arms control. I regret that the amendment was not accepted in committee, although I appeared and testified on it. This amendment would provide the Department of State with $400,000 to make or contract for special studies in the field of arms control.

These studies would be concerned to a large degree with problems of control and inspection to accompany specific arms control proposals. Many of these studies could not be completed prior to the resumption of the disarmament negotiations shortly after the first of the year. But, they would help the Government in its preparation for the continuing negotiations that would undoubtedly follow.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank those Senators who have seen fit to cosponsor this amendment with me. They are Senators HART, CLARK, MURRAY, MANSFIELD, MOSS, CHURCH, NEUBERGER, DOUGLAS, ENGLE, CASE of South Dakota, and BUSH. Many other Senators wrote me their intentions of support for the amendment although for various reasons they did not ask to be cosponsors.

By adopting this amendment the Senate can emphasize the need to make progress in the arms control area. We can demonstrate our conviction that the Government must be well prepared for the negotiations and discussions to be held in the months ahead.

ADEQUATE REGULATIONS TO PROTECT THE PUBLIC AGAINST TRANSPORTATION OF HIGH EXPLOSIVES

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, passage of S. 1806, which I hope will occur today, is of special significance to my State. On August 7, 1959, a truckload of explosives was accidently detonated in the heart of the city of Roseburg, Oreg. Thirteen persons died in that explosion and property damage has been estimated at $12 million.

The people of Roseburg are now rebuilding their shattered city, repairing the twisted and torn structures which housed their families and their businesses. This bill will not help them replace their lost loved ones or their homes. But it may help prevent another community from suffering a similar tragedy.

Mr. President, I publicly urged enactment of this bill on August 8, 1959, the day immediately following the Roseburg catastrophe.

Following the action of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in reporting the bill, I wrote Senate Majority Leader LYNDON B. JOHNSON asking his cooperation to insure early consideration of S. 1806 so that both Houses of Congress might have an opportunity to act upon it during this session. The majority leader assured me of his full support.

I believe that it is the minimum step which Congress should take to protect Americans against the obvious dangers involved in movement of explosives by motor carriers. I know other members of the Oregon delegation feel the same way.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is currently holding hearings in Roseburg as part of its investigation of that disaster. I am pleased that the ICC is carrying out a thorough study of this incident. On the day of the explosion I wired Mr. Kenneth H. Tuggle, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, asking for a complete investigation. From such a review may come facts which will aid in further protecting the general public.

In this connection, I recently wrote to Mr. Tuggle to suggest that the ICC embark on a study of the degree of risk to public safety involved in movement of explosives by truck versus other forms of transportation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of my letter, together with a portion of the Senate report summarizing the provisions of S. 1806, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter and excerpt were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS,
September 2, 1959.

Hon. KENNETH H. TUGGLE,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The recent disaster in Roseburg, Oreg., has again focused public attention on the dangers inherent in transportation of explosives. While we cannot alter the result of that catastrophe, the knowledge of what occurred there should serve as a goad to action to help prevent such a future happening.

In this connection, I announced publicly on August 8 my support of S. 1806, which would strengthen legislation designed to protect the public against hazards involved in transportation of explosives and other dangerous substances. I am hopeful that the 86th Congress will approve this bill.

However, it seems to me that several other areas should be investigated to determine whether or not congressional action might be desirable to increase public safety with respect to movement of explosives. Two points come to mind:

1. It has been suggested to me that the Roseburg incident dramatizes the special risk connected with the conveyance of explosives by motor vehicle. While it is not clear that the extent of the loss of life and property damage caused by the Roseburg explosion would have been substantially less if the explosives had been loaded on a railroad car sided at a local spur, it has been pointed out to me that it is nevertheless true that transportation of explosives by highway exposes the general public to greater danger through proximity than does transportation by rail, water, or air.

The argument advanced is this:

Trucks share the highways and streets with the general public, including passenger cars, buses, and pedestrians. Alongside these byways are hotels, schools, hospitals, stores, and homes occupied by people. An accident to an explosives-laden truck is likely automatically to involve other motor vehicles or bystanders along the highway right-of-way.

On the other hand, railroads possess their own private rights-of-way. Tugs and barges travel on rivers and streams which rarely are close to buildings or structures occupied by large numbers of people. Neither form of transportation rubs hubcaps with cars and trucks.

Trucks are subject only to the control of their drivers. They are exposed to normal road hazards and the vagaries of other drivers and motor vehicles. The fuel which propels trucks is immediately adjacent to its cargo.

An analogy is suggested between a freight elevator and a passenger elevator in a hotel or office building. Where would a lethal cargo of live explosives be transported? The answer is obvious: the freight elevator. This might not be complete insurance against a tragedy, because an explosion in a freight elevator could do great damage. Yet it is evident that the explosion would be far more perilous to human life if it occurred in a loaded passenger elevator.

From this reasoning it follows that limitation of movement of explosives by motor vehicle would be in the public interest.

In reviewing this general suggestion, I have noted several general objections. For instance, prohibition of conveyance of explosives by truck would mean that areas served by no other form of transportation would have no way of obtaining needed shipments of this commodity. Restriction of movement of trucks would necessitate detailed consideration of each shipment and situation to determine availability of other forms of transportation, route to be followed, travel time, and other factors. Limitation of amounts carried in a single load, to decrease the magnitude of risk, runs into the difficulty of coping with the varying nature of different explosives whose efficacy cannot be judged by a single simple uniform weight or size standard, in addition to raising the question of the value in terms of safety of numerous small loads with increased exposure versus one large load with greater destructive potential.

Despite these factors, it seems to me that it would be a beneficial project for the Commission to review the question of method of transportation of explosives with a view to advising Congress as to whether or not it would be desirable for the Federal Government to enact legislation dealing with the type of conveyance employed to carry explosives.

Such a study might include examination of feasibility and desirability of such ideas as prohibition of transportation of explosives on highways except where other appropriate transportation is not available, use of escort vehicles preceding and following trucks, designation of specific routes, regulation of the hours during which explosives might be trucked most safely, prior notification of route and time schedules, outlawing of mixed cargoes, limitation of amounts of explosives which may be carried in a single load, restriction of trucking of explosives to short hauls, and other methods which might increase safety.

I am aware of the fact that the proposal which I advance is not based on a new suggestion. The Commission has, of course, received similar appeals in the past. However, I am convinced that a detailed study in depth is called for, and I hope that the Commission will see fit to embark upon such an investigation.

2. It has been suggested to me that increased authority in the area of regulation, inspection, and enforcement, with addition of personnel necessary to carry out such enlarged functions, could be a significant aid to prevention of incidents involving loss of life and property due to accidental detonation of explosives in transit by motor vehicle.

I would be most interested in learning from the Commission of any areas, other than those covered in S. 1806, where the ICC believes that further grants of authority would accomplish this purpose, and the extent to which available personnel should be increased so as to insure that existing laws and regulations and any recommended additions are efficiently and effectively implemented.

I trust that the Commission will give the two points which I have raised serious consideration and that I will receive a report from the ICC supplying me with pertinent data related to this request and indicating the views of the organization with respect to amendment of Federal law which might appear advisable in the public interest.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely,

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
U.S. Senator.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS OF S. 1806

I. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this bill is to revise and bring up to date the provisions of the Transportation of Explosives Act (18 U.S.C. 831–835). The bill would bring the transportation of radioactive materials and etiologic agents under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and would extend the penalties for violations of the Transportation of Explosives Act, now applicable only to common carriers, to private and contract carriers. The bill is similar to S. 1491, 85th Congress, which was passed by the Senate in 1957. Exhaustive hearings were held by the Surface Transportation Subcommittee on S. 1491.

II. PURPOSES OF THE BILL

The Transportation of Explosives Act was enacted in 1908 and while it has served its purpose well, it now needs revision in many respects. There has been a tremendous increase in the transportation of dangerous articles following the increase in the production of radioactive materials and etiologic agents. This act in its present form does not provide for regulations for the transportation of etiologic agents; neither does the act specifically cover radioactive materials. The Interstate Commerce Commission has prescribed regulations for such materials by classifying them as poisons. Etiologic agents such as live viruses, bacteria, and the like are not poisons, so there is some question as to whether the Commission has the authority to prescribe regulations on such commodities. This bill would correct this situation and would place the transportation of these articles squarely within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

As justification for enactment of a bill which would promote safety in the transportation of explosives and dangerous articles, one has only to compare the change in traffic conditions since passage of the Transportation of Explosives Act. In 1900, or about the time this act was passed, there were only about 8,000 motor vehicle registrations within the United States. Today there are over 68 million such registrations. The Institute of Makers of Explosives estimated that in 1957 about 612 million pounds of commercial explosives moved by motor vehicles in long-distance hauls from manufacturing plants.

In its present form the Transportation of Explosives Act applies to common carriers only and violations of its provisions are subject to maximum penalties of $10,000 or 10 years imprisonment or both. On the other hand, the very same violations when committed by private or contract carriers are prosecuted under section 222(a) of the Interstate Commerce Act which carries a maximum penalty of only $500. The bill would therefore remove this anomaly and would extend the provisions of the Explosives Act to include contract and private carriers.

The dangers inherent in explosives and other dangerous articles transported in intrastate commerce are equally as great as when transported in interstate commerce. To meet this fact, the bill would extend the present provisions relating to packing, marking, and so forth, to shippers tendering such articles to interstate carriers irrespective of whether the shipments are destined for movement in interstate, intrastate, or foreign commerce, and to all shipments of dangerous articles including intrastate shipments handled on interstate vehicles or commingled with interstate traffic. The bill would further extend the provisions of this act to include all for-hire carriers of passengers by land, and the present exemption of specific quantities of various articles would be changed so as to authorize the Commission to prescribe the kind, amounts, and conditions under which such articles may be so transported.

The bill would amend present provisions of the act relating to the marking of packages to include the tendering of such articles to any carrier by land or water and to any person carrying such articles upon any interstate carrier by land, including private as well as common and contract carriers.

The Explosives Act prohibits the transportation of nitroglycerin or other like explosives by common carriers but there is no such prohibition against the transportation of such commodities by contract or private motor carriers. This bill would not restrict to any particular class of carriers or persons the transportation of these dangerous commodities or of radioactive materials or etiologic agents, but would strictly limit and regulate their transportation by providing that they shall not be transported except under such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe. This restriction or limitation is needed in view of the heavy traffic conditions and the increased volume of explosives being transported.

Prosecution for violations of the Commission's transportation of explosives regulations has been extremely difficult because of the requirement in section 835 of the act that violators must have knowledge that they violated the Commission's regulations. While the committee believes that every reasonable precaution should be taken to provide for punishing those violating a statute whose purpose is to promote safety, the creation of an absolute liability is deemed too stringent. These violations often do not arise from any affirmative intent but result more from neglect when the law requires care, or from inaction or indifference when the law imposes a duty to act (Boyce Motor Lines v. U.S., 342 U.S. 337).

Whatever the intent of the violator, the potential danger to society remains the same whether the violation is brought about by haphazard indifference, careless conduct, or is prompted by an evil purpose. Certainly a person standing in responsible relation to a public danger should be charged with the knowledge if he is aware that certain rules and regulations exist for the furtherance of safety. A plea of ignorance of the terms of these regulations, if an awareness of the existence of the regulations exists, should not permit him to escape responsibility for failure to observe rules established to promote safety in the handling of dangerous articles.

Your committee, therefore, rather than establishing absolute liability in this instance prefers to somewhat limit the liability by amending section 834(f) of the bill so as to provide that any person "being aware that the Interstate Commerce Commission has formulated regulations for the safe transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles," who violates such regulations shall be subject to the penalties of fine or imprisonment as provided in the act. Thus, those who are in a position to be on notice that Interstate Commerce Commission regulations should be observed for the handling of explosives and other dangerous articles are made subject to penalties for failure to observe such regulations.

This bill would include in the definition of "person" a partnership, thus bringing a partnership within the provisions of the Commission's explosives regulations. This change is considered necessary because the Supreme Court has sustained a lower court's holding that a partnership is not a legal entity for the purposes of criminal liability under regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission (U.S. v. American Freightways Co., 352 U.S. 1020, decided Mar. 4, 1957).

INTEREST RATES ON E AND H SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, in connection with House bill 9035, a bill to permit the issuance of series E and H U.S. savings bonds at interest rates above the existing maximum, to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to designate certain exchanges of Government securities to be made without recognition of gain or loss, and for other purposes, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. BIBLE in the chair) appointed Mr. BYRD of Virginia, Mr. KERR, Mr. FREAR, Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware, and Mr. CARLSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE NEW WEST

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, most of us are mindful of the ever-growing interest in questions which affect the West. I mean the Western States of the United States. This is reflected, sometimes unfortunately, on the TV screens. It is reflected in the political uprising which has been sweeping the West in recent years. It is reflected in the economy as it concerns resource development in the West.

On August 29, 1959, the Washington Post and Times Herald published another interesting article on the new West. This is becoming a popular subject for writers, particularly in the East. I found this particular article, entitled "Magnolias Losing Out to Sagebrush," written by Malvina Lindsay, to be so interesting that I shared it with my colleagues nearby at the time, letting them read it for themselves. Apparently they found the article so intriguing that they passed it around to others. It has come back to my desk only this morning, some two weeks later.

Because of their interest in it, as well as my own, I thought that perhaps the few Senators who had not seen the article firsthand might enjoy reading it. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article, entitled "Magnolias Losing Out to Sagebrush," written by Malvina Lindsay, and published in the Washington Post and Times Herald of August 29, 1959, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAGNOLIAS LOSING OUT TO SAGEBRUSH

(By Malvina Lindsay)

"You know, I like the West." The remark may have seemed a little patronizing to me, a former midwesterner, but there were stars in the eyes of the returned easterner who made it.

One meets such persons everywhere. They have been on vacation to see in reality the open plains, the towering mountains, the winding trails along hazardous gorges that have become familiar to them through television Westerns. In the wake of recent earthquakes, new tourists were trooping into Yellowstone Park as others left.

The West has been a constant magnet to Americans through the years as a source of fortune and adventure. "Lem Hayes," my grandmother would exclaim. "Oh, yes, I remember him. When I was a young girl he came by our house one night to say goodby. He was going west. He brought his fiddle and he played and sang, 'My Little Maggie May' ". She would then sigh. "So many of the young men used to go west."

In more recent years the older people have been going west, seeking havens for retirement. And families, rather than young men, have struck out for western areas where things are on the move.

Now the West is also a growing source of nostalgia. Its dramatization on stage (one New York musical had four Buffalo Bills), on screen, above all, on television; its dominance in magazine pictures and print; its lure for vacationists, including those from overseas, indicate it may be displacing the ante bellum South as the main front of this country's golden age folklore.

I once asked a French writer who had been connected with the translation and publication in France of "Gone With the Wind" how she accounted for the popularity there of this Civil War novel. "One reason," she said, "is because it portrays a favorite American golden age—your ante bellum period—that is somewhat similar to one of ours, the romantic and colorful era of Louis XIV. We always identify ourselves with the fortunate, leisured people of such times."

But recently I have wondered if the ante bellum picture—despite all the Civil War interest—wasn't beginning to fade a little. Like many other Americans I have long felt its emotional grip. Portrayals of white pillared mansions among live oaks with dripping Spanish moss swaying in the wind, still do things to me. But an imagined vista of the Rockies does more. I think an even greater number of Americans have the same experience, especially if they must fight traffic in car or on foot and listen to the din of juke boxes or of neighbors' televisions.

Historian Walter Prescott Webb may contend that the history and culture of the West have been scant and arid because of the dominance of the desert. But to today's Americans its adventure, its quietude and, above all, its elbow room have become a precious treasure of the imagination.

One main reason for this is that, as the 20th Century Fund pointed out in a recent report, the "feeling of being crowded * * * is the almost universal experience of today's citizen." The American especially clings to his dream of open country and clear land. This, according to the fund, has resulted in our big urban sprawl, and is causing a sad waste of the land that is left to us.

As population, technology, industry, and modern living impinge further on our space, we will cling all the more to our idealized home on the range. As our lives become outwardly more uniform, we will cherish the more the freewheeling, adventurous days of the Old West. In our inner eye the sagebrush may crowd out the magnolia.

It is frequently said that the West has been ruined. It is true that in some overcrowded national parks natural beauty has been despoiled by tourists on wheels and by commercial exploitation. And two-gun cowboys on bucking broncos may have given place to cavalcades of motor cars. But at least the landscape is still there with its open, beckoning sense of space. There is much beauty left, but if Americans want to retain this in other forms than home movies, memory and folklore, they will need to see that their Government is vigilant in its protection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 4546. An act for the relief of Margaret P. Copin;

H.R. 5196. An act to increase the maximum rates of per diem allowance for employees of the Government traveling on official business, and for other purposes;

H.R. 7036. An act for the relief of William J. Barbiero;

H.R. 7935. An act for the relief of Fr. Kenneth M. Rizer;

H.R. 8801. An act for the relief of the Maco Warehouse Co.; and

H.J. Res. 352. Joint resolution to authorize preliminary study and review in connection with proposed additional building for the Library of Congress.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 4546. An act for the relief of Margaret P. Copin; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

H.R. 5196. An act to increase the maximum rates of per diem allowance for employees of the Government traveling on official business, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Government Operations.

H.R. 7036. An act for the relief of William J. Barbiero;

H.R. 7935. An act for the relief of Fr. Kenneth M. Rizer; and

H.R. 8801. An act for the relief of the Maco Warehouse Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.J. Res. 352. Joint resolution to authorize preliminary study and review in connection with proposed additional building for the Library of Congress; to the Committee on Public Works.

CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask that there now be the call of the calendar heretofore ordered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order previously entered, the call of the calendar will take place automatically as the next business of the Senate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Beall	Bush
Allott	Bennett	Butler
Anderson	Bible	Byrd, Va.
Bartlett	Bridges	Byrd, W. Va.
Cannon	Holland	Mundt
Capehart	Hruska	Murray
Carlson	Humphrey	Muskie

Hayden	Morse	Young, Ohio
Hickenlooper	Morton
Hill	Moss

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). A quorum is present.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order, the Senate will now proceed to the call of the calendar; and the first measure on the calendar will be stated.

MEDALS IN COMMEMORATION OF THE FOUNDING OF THE PONY EXPRESS

The bill (S. 2454) to provide for the striking of medals in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the founding of the pony express was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

CONFEREES ON THE GOVERNMENT BONDS INTEREST RATE BILL

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object to consideration of this bill—let me say that last night I made the point that I thought the conferees on the interest rate bill should represent the majority view of the Senate on the Anderson amendment on the interest rates.

I have discussed this matter with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] and the other members of the committee. The Senator from New Mexico is satisfied with the conferees, in connection with the amendment; and, therefore, I shall not raise the point I mentioned last night.

MEDALS IN COMMEMORATION OF THE FOUNDING OF THE PONY EXPRESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of Calendar No. 812, Senate bill 2454?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2454) to provide for the striking of medals in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the founding of the pony express was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Pony Express, which was founded and operated by the Russell, Majors, and Waddell Company between Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Sacramento, California, in the years 1860–1861, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to strike and furnish to the National Pony Express Centennial Association not more than five hundred thousand medals with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined by the National Pony Express Centennial Association subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The medals shall be made and delivered at such times as may be required by the Association in quantities of not less than two thousand, but no medals shall be made after December 31, 1961. The medals shall be considered to be national medals within the meaning of section 3551 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause such medals to be struck and furnished at not less than the estimated cost of manufacture, including labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, and overhead expenses; and security satisfactory to the Director of the Mint shall be furnished to indemnify the United States for the full payment of such cost.

SEC. 3. The medals authorized to be issued pursuant to this Act shall be of such size or sizes and of such metals as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury in consultation with such Association.

MEDALS IN COMMEMORATION OF THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF STATEHOOD OF KANSAS

The bill (S. 2431) to provide for the striking of medals in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of statehood of the State of Kansas was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of statehood of Kansas, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to strike and furnish to the Kansas Centennial Commission not more than twenty thousand medals of either silver or bronze or both, of a suitable size and with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined solely by the Secretary of the Treasury. The medals shall be made and delivered at such times as may be requested by the commission in quantities of not less than twenty-five hundred, but no medals shall be made after December 31, 1961. The medals shall be considered to be national medals within the meaning of section 3551 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause such medals to be struck and furnished at no less than the estimated cost of manufacture, including labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, and overhead expenses; and security satisfactory to the Director of the Mint shall be furnished to indemnify the United States for the full payment of such cost.

(b) Upon authorization from the Kansas Centennial Commission, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause duplicates in silver or bronze or both of such medal to be coined and sold, under such regulations as he may prescribe at a price sufficient to cover the cost thereof (including labor).

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2578) to provide a program of assistance to correct inequities in the construction of fishing vessels and to enable the fishing industry of the United States to regain a favorable economic status, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, Mr. President, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK ACT

The bill (S. 2517) to amend section 7 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ENGLE obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The law provides that the new States of Alaska and Hawaii, as would all other States, each would have one representative on the Board of the Home Loan Bank of San Francisco. This bill would provide additional members so as not to deprive the State of California of its present representation.

We understand there is no objection in San Francisco to this provision; and no objection in regard to the bill was voiced in our committee.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I understand that the entire purpose of the bill is to provide Alaska and Hawaii with representation on the Board. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The present law provides for at least one representative from each State, but it was felt that California, which has approximately two-thirds of the share accounts, should not be deprived of any of its present representation, which would be the result of Alaskan and Hawaiian statehood, if this bill does not pass.

Mr. MORSE. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2517) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (a) of section 7 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the language in the first sentence after the first colon and inserting in lieu of the matter so stricken the following: "Provided, That the Board may by regulation increase the number of elective directors of any Federal home loan bank having a district which includes five or more States to a number not exceeding thirteen, but any additional elective directors shall be apportioned as nearly as may be practicable in the same manner and order as is provided for the apportionment of elective directors under subsections (c) and (d) hereof: Provided further, That there shall not be less than one nor more than three elective directors from any of the States in any district in which the number of elective directors is increased."

SEC. 2. Subsection (b) of said section 7 is hereby amended by adding thereto at the end thereof the following sentence: "In the case of any district in which the Board has by regulation increased the number of elective directors pursuant to subsection (a) the Board may by regulation provide for an additional number of directors to be appointed and to hold office as provided in the first sentence of this subsection, but the total number of appointive directors shall not exceed one-half the total number of elective directors in such district: Provided, That the term of the initial incumbent of any office established pursuant to this sentence shall expire at the end of the fourth calendar year beginning with the calendar year current at the time of his appointment, except that the Board may provide for any such initial incumbent a shorter term expiring at the end of a calendar year."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2402) to clarify the authority of the Postmaster General to provide for the expeditious, efficient, and economical transportation of mail, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Over as not calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY CONTROL PROBLEMS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 694) to provide Federal assistance for projects which will demonstrate or develop techniques and practices leading to a solution of the Nation's juvenile delinquency control problems was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I am personally in favor of this measure, but I feel it may be open to certain amendments and therefore should go over as not being proper calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over as not being proper calendar business.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: I agree with the Senator from California that Calendar No. 819, S. 694, is not appropriate calendar business on unanimous consent; but it is very important business, in my judgment, for the Senate to transact before it adjourns, and I hope that the leadership of the Senate will schedule the bill for treatment by motion.

This morning, in the morning hour, there was considerable amount of discussion about some of the problems relating to the youth of our country. I think the pornographic material that is being fed into the channels of mail transportation in this country is polluting the minds of our youth. I happened to sit on the committee that handled the juvenile delinquency bill. I give assurance to my colleagues here in the Senate that this bill has nationwide support from juvenile delinquency authorities. We would like to have a broader bill than this. It is a bill that has been cut down considerably. But even this bill is better than nothing. We ought to get started on this program.

I certainly hope, before we adjourn, this juvenile delinquency bill will be brought up by motion, and if objection be made, that it be voted up or down.

Mr. JAVITS subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to join my colleague from Oregon in everything he has said, and to emphasize the vital struggle we are having in our large cities, like my city of New York, to deal with juvenile delinquency and the need to have national leadership in this struggle. I hope very much the leadership will give us a chance to act on this bill before we adjourn.

BILL PASSED OVER

A bill (H.R. 7244) to promote and preserve local management of savings and loan associations by protecting them against encroachment by holding companies was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Over as not calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT

A bill (H.R. 8305) to amend the Federal Credit Union Act was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation of the bill is requested.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, H.R. 8305 would rewrite the entire Federal Credit Union Act. In doing so, it would make a number of changes in the act in order to bring it up to date and to reflect the current status of the credit union movement.

In the committee's report on H.R. 8305 we pointed out the phenomenal growth in credit unions, particularly Federal credit unions, during the 25 years since Senator Morris Sheppard appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee and successfully urged the enactment of the Federal Credit Union Act. As the report shows, in 1935 savings in all credit unions were less than $50 million. Now the figure is $3.9 billion. Federal credit unions have grown from 772, with 119,000 members and $2 million of assets at the end of 1935, to 9,030 credit unions, with 5,209,912 members and over $2 billion of assets.

This growth proves beyond question that credit unions have found an important and significant place in the Nation's financial structure. They have performed the function of providing a convenient, safe, and remunerative form of savings; and they have also provided a convenient and economical form of borrowing for their members.

This demonstration of their ability to handle savings and loans effectively makes it appropriate to consider a further expansion of their lending functions, and it also makes it appropriate to consider whether rearrangements in their administrative procedures could make them even more effective than they now are.

It was because of these developments that on April 23 of this year I introduced S. 1786, which would have revised the Federal Credit Union Act extensively. When the House of Representatives passed H.R. 8305, the Senate took that bill under consideration, held hearings on it and on Senator McCARTHY's S. 1985 and my S. 1786. After careful consideration the committee reported out H.R. 8305. H.R. 8305 would make a number of changes in the present law:

First. It would increase the maximum maturity of a loan from 3 years to 5 years. The Director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions would be authorized to require that loans be amortized. He could not, however, require by regulation more frequent amortization than once a year. This would not, of course, prevent the credit union itself from requiring quarterly or monthly amortization if it saw fit.

Second. It would increase the unsecured loan limit from $400 to $750. The House had recommended the unsecured loan limit be increased to $1,000, but the committee felt that an increase from $400 to $750 was sufficient for the time being.

Third. It would authorize Federal credit unions to cash checks or to write checks and money orders, and to charge reasonable fees for doing so. These services would, however, be limited to members.

Fourth. It would permit space in a Federal building to be used by State or Federal credit unions if 95 percent of the members are or were at the time of joining Federal employees and members of their families.

Fifth. It would include Federal credit unions within the criminal laws, prohibiting robbery and related crimes.

In addition, H.R. 8305 would make a number of changes in the administrative provisions of the Federal Credit Union Act in order to enable them to operate more effectively. The supervisory committee would be chosen and might be suspended by the board of directors instead of by the members. The credit committee might appoint loan officers, who might be paid. The board of directors might appoint an executive committee to handle some of its activities and it might appoint a membership officer. The board of directors, rather than the members, would declare dividends.

The committee made two changes in the bill as it passed the House. One of these I have already mentioned—changing the maximum unsecured loan limit to $750. The other change made by the committee relates to the question of central credit unions. The Credit Union National Association urged that the Federal Credit Union Act authorize the establishment of Federal central credit unions, which Federal credit unions and their officers might join. This was opposed by the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions and the administration generally. The House did not approve the proposal, but instructed the Director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions to submit a draft of legislation providing for such unions. Under the circumstances, the Senate committee felt that it was inappropriate to ask for a draft of legislation. Instead, the committee amended the bill to instruct the Director to make a study of the desirability of these central credit unions and to submit a report of this study by April 15, 1960, along with its recommendations for legislation.

H.R. 8305, as amended by the committee, is a sound and effective bill. It will enable the Federal credit unions to perform their functions even more effectively than they are now doing. I urge that it be enacted this session.

Mr. KEATING. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama for the explanation. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments on page 15, line 8, after the word "of", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$750"; in line 9, after the word "over", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$750", and on page 30, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 3. The Director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions shall submit to the Congress on or before January 15, 1960, a draft of legislation providing for federally chartered central credit unions.

And, in lieu thereof, to insert:

SEC. 3. The Director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions shall make a study of the desirability of providing for federally chartered central credit unions, and shall submit to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, for transmission to the Congress on or before April 15, 1960, a report of the results thereof and such recommendations for legislation thereon as the Director deems appropriate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF ACT OF 1930

The bill (H.R. 6579) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide for the temporary free importation of extracts, decoctions, and preparations of hemlock suitable for use for tanning was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLACING OF CERTAIN PUMICE STONE ON FREE LIST

The bill (H.R. 6368) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place certain pumice stone on the free list was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCHARGE OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE FROM CONSIDERATION OF S. 2391, THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL—RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 174) to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2391) to extend the Commission on Civil Rights and to provide further means for securing and protecting the right to vote, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THURMOND. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to make a short statement on Senate Resolution 174, Calendar No. 825.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will reserve his right to object on the next bill, he will be able to make a statement on Senate Resolution 174, which will appear at that place in the RECORD.

The bill (H.R. 6733) for the relief of Paul & Beekman, Inc., and others was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to make a statement with respect to Calendar No. 825, Senate Resolution 174, to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of S. 2391, which was submitted by me and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CASE] on August 25.

There was no hidden motive behind this resolution on our part. The plain fact was, and is, that with the discharge resolution pending on the Calendar, the Senate and the leadership is armed with one more legitimate method it can utilize, should it wish, to call up the civil rights bill.

I believe the right to consider a civil rights bill should be afforded, although doing it may require unusual procedure in the days ahead, just as it did in 1957.

On January 20, 1959, I think the majority leader himself sounded the note, at least for me, and I think for many others who feel as I do, when he said the Senate will provide in the civil rights field the leadership that the American people yearn for.

Mr. President, there are several courses which are open to the majority leadership. The resolution which has been passed over on the call of the calendar can be taken up by motion. I refer to the discharge resolution.

In addition, a bill as to which civil rights amendments have been printed can be taken up by motion. There are two such bills which are now on the calendar. Amendments have been offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] and by my colleague [Mr. KEATING].

Third, if the House passes a civil rights bill and sends it to the Senate, the bill can be taken up for immediate consideration by motion, as was done in 1957.

Mr. President, I do not know which of these alternatives the Senate majority leadership will choose. Should none of these be chosen, then those of us who are pledged to the passage of meaningful and adequate civil rights legislation will have available to us two courses of action.

First, we can propose a civil rights amendment to any bill which may be pending before the Senate. We can move to set aside whatever business is pending before the Senate and to replace it with the discharge resolution.

There has been a great deal of speculation about the calling up of a civil rights bill at this session of Congress. I would say that the speculation is premature. A number of things will have to happen before the situation can be clear.

For one thing, the life of the Civil Rights Commission needs to be extended. This opportunity will come before the Senate in regard to consideration of the Mutual Security appropriation bill. The Senator from Arizona (Mr. HAYDEN) has already given notice that he will make a motion to suspend the rules.

I wish to point out that while it is a highly desirable thing to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission, that is not, in and of itself, meaningful civil rights legislation.

For another thing, those of us who favor a meaningful civil rights bill—and such a bill should now give effective weight to the findings of the Federal Civil Rights Commission, which have recently been published—must determine what is the best plan for obtaining our objective.

Neither of these two things which I have mentioned is as yet clarified. One thing is clear to me, however. The specter of extended debate has now been pretty well exorcised from these proceedings, because those of us who favor a civil rights bill, in common with many other Senators, have already lost the time for summer vacations with our children and families, because of the sheer volume of work of the calendar. If the circumstances dictate that we must remain in session for some more weeks or months in the cause of an equal opportunity for all citizens, I believe that will be cheerfully accepted by a majority of the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] in regard to the course of action he recommends to the Senate with respect to proposed civil rights legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks which I made during the morning hour in regard to the Civil Rights Commission be transposed for printing at this point in the RECORD, in connection with the discussion of Calendar No. 825.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORT OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in view of the comments which have been made in the Senate and in the press with regard to the Civil Rights Commission, I wish to raise my voice briefly today in high commendation of the work of the Civil Rights Commission, and the report just filed with the President of the United States.

We will have an adequate opportunity, I believe, before this session adjourns sine die, for a rather full discussion of the legislative future of the Civil Rights Commission. I think it is particularly proper, in defense of the Civil Rights Commission and its report, to place at this point in the RECORD section 4 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

> The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

I think that is particularly apropos in view of another section of the Constitution, which I shall read in a moment. Before doing that, I shall read from Article II, section 1 of the Constitution, the second paragraph of which reads:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The fifth paragraph of section 1, article II, reads:

> The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

Then, we have that great protection of the right of franchise in the United States emblazoned to the glory of this Republic in the 15th amendment, section 1, which reads as follows:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2 of the 15th amendment reads:

> The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Mr. President, I commend the Civil Rights Commission for taking the sound constitutional stand it in effect has taken by pointing out to the American people once again that the Constitution means exactly what it says and that the 15th amendment means exactly what it says, namely, that in this country there shall be no denial of full voting privileges to anyone in Federal elections because of race, color, or creed. Congress has not only the constitutional right but also the clear duty to pass such legislation as may be necessary and appropriate to guarantee first-class voting privileges to all citizens of the United States.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. I spoke on this subject in the morning hour, pointing out the fear or the suspicion which was growing in the minds of some that the extension of the Civil Rights Commission might be considered a civil rights bill. It would be nothing of the kind. It would not be a compliance with the representations made that we would have an opportunity to pass on a meaningful civil rights bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my earlier remarks, made in the morning hour, may be printed in the RECORD at this point, since it is a more appropriate spot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, on a final subject, the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is as good a friend, I hope, as I have in this body. I admire him. I respect him. I often find myself in agreement with him.

I, however, am in violent disagreement with the statements which he made here this morning with regard to the report of the Civil Rights Commission. I was distressed to hear these statements made by such an able and influential Senator and one who has been honored by the majority party with the second highest gift within their power to bestow.

I have a high regard for every sovereign State of this Nation. I would feel very bad were I to violate the rules of the Senate which require that no Senator shall speak ill of another sovereign State. The records, however, of the Civil Rights Commission have revealed that in one of the counties in the Senator's State 25 Negroes claimed that the board of registrars had unlawfully refused to put their names on the voting lists. The registrars refused to testify when inquiry was made. They resigned when the Attorney General sued to compel the registration of apparently qualified Negroes under the Civil Rights Act of 1957. As a result, there was nobody to sue. New registrars were named, and they have refused to serve out of fear that they would have to register Negroes.

Mr. President, as I view it, that is a situation which requires legislative correction. This report of the Civil Rights Commission is not an extreme document. It is, in fact, moderate and balanced. In some respects it had unanimous approval. In several important respects it had the approval of five of the six members. Yet it is now being subjected to violent and unbridled attack.

This morning's Washington Post had an excellent editorial on this subject entitled "Conscience of the Nation." There was only one sentence in it which disturbed me. It stated:

> For the moment, however, the effect of the report is to relieve the pressure on Congress for a comprehensive civil rights bill.

It is my hope that it will not be considered that we are getting a civil rights bill this session if we do nothing more than extend the life of the Commission. That should follow as a matter of course. It is not, in my judgment, any compliance with the representations that were made to us, that a bill to protect the voting and other rights of our citizens would be brought before us in this session, simply to give us an opportunity to vote on the extension of the Civil Rights Commission.

There is a very great furor being built up, and I may be forgiven, I hope, Mr. President, if I voice a suspicion that in some quarters it may be felt that the extension of the Commission may be made a big enough issue to stop any further action in this field; and to that I protest.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following my remarks, the editorial to which I referred, entitled "Conscience of the Nation."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSCIENCE OF THE NATION

One striking effect of the Civil Rights Commission report is to make the House and Senate bills to bolster civil rights look pallid by comparison. Both houses have been balking over mild, narrow, and halting steps toward the elimination of discriminatory treatment on grounds of race. The Commission which Congress created to act as a sort of conscience to the Nation in this sphere has looked at the problem objectively and come in with sweeping proposals that would go far toward wiping out the disfranchisement of minorities instead of inching toward improvements.

We doubt that either the recommended constitutional amendment or the drastic proposals for temporary Federal registration officials in localities where state or local officials fail in their duty can be enacted at the present time. But they serve to focus national attention on the problem. The report itself gives further extended emphasis to the fact that the Negro is disfranchised in many parts of the South. By inaction the country has brought about "a partial repudiation of our faith in the democratic system."

The proposed constitutional amendment would wipe out all state control over voter qualifications, except age, and length of local residence. In effect it would establish universal suffrage, except for persons legally confined, without any educational or other requirements that could be twisted into discriminatory devices in administration. This is open to the familiar objection of Federal encroachment on state prerogatives; moreover, it won the support of only three of the Commission's six members. It would, of course, require a two-thirds vote in Congress.

As a practical matter, therefore, attention is likely to be centered on the proposal for temporary Federal registration of voters where that becomes necessary to prevent inexcusable disfranchisement. This suggestion grew out of the actual situation that has developed in some counties since the Commission began its work, and it is given additional cogency by the fact that five of the six members support it.

In Macon County, Ala., the CRC heard 25 Negroes who claimed that the board of registrars had unlawfully refused to put their names on the voting rolls. The registrars refused to testify. They also resigned so that when the Attorney General sued to compel the registration of apparently qualified Negroes, under the Civil Rights Act of 1957, there was no one to sue. New registrars were named and refused to serve out of fear that they would have to register Negroes.

Obviously this situation, and others like it, are intolerable. The result is not merely to deny Negroes the right to vote in Alabama and some other Southern States but also to taint elections for the Presidency and Members of Congress. In these circumstances temporary Federal registration of voters would be perhaps the most potent lever by which to induce local officials to put their own houses in order.

For the moment, however, the effect of the report is to relieve the pressure on Congress for a comprehensive civil rights bill. New legislation must now be shaped in the light of the Commission's findings and recommendations in the fields of education and housing as well as voting. The imperative for this session is to continue the work of the Commission. Without action, the CRC would be a dead duck in 60 days, and Congress would be in the position of having stopped its investigative work because it has been forthright in its findings and recommendations. Regardless of how much opposition arises, therefore, continuation of the CRC as a going concern seems to us imperative.

Mr. SPARKMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask for the attention of the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING], the acting minority leader.

A few minutes ago the Senator made reference to a situation in one of the counties in Alabama—specifically Macon County, Ala.—in which persons resigned from positions as registrars and other persons declined to serve.

Mr. President, the situation was brought about by the actions of the Civil Rights Commission and by their effort to have a ruling in court that a person serving as registrar could not resign, or if he attempted to resign, that he would continue to be liable for the acts of the board during the time he was a member of the board of registrars, and continuing through the future.

Let it be said that in every decision—and there were several of them in the Federal courts of the United States—the contentions of the Civil Rights Commission were turned down and decisions were made upholding the State of Alabama.

It is because of such decisions that the Civil Rights Commission now is trying to have Federal registrars go down into the States to register voters—commissars sent out from Washington into the distant provinces to serve as registrars at the grassroots where basic democracy lies. I say it is not only time to scorn such recommendations of the Commission, but it is time to kill that Commission. I shall certainly do my best to bring that about.

Mr. DOUGLAS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that the statement I am about to make be printed in the RECORD at the point where the comments of other Senators on Calendar No. 825, Senate Resolution 174, are reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the Committee on the Judiciary will report, in the concluding days of the session, a substantial civil rights bill.

I remind the Senate and the country that both political parties and a substantial majority of the individual Members of both the House and the Senate are committed to some effective action; and certainly the Judiciary Committee should give to the Senate the benefit of its study and recommendations.

The Judiciary Committee has certainly had an adequate time to do this. Bills on civil rights have been under consideration by the Judiciary Committee for at least 6 months. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] has reported the dilatory action of the Judiciary Committee in considering various civil rights measures; and in default of action by the Judiciary Committee the Senate has not only the right, but the duty, by some such step as the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] proposed, to bring such civil rights legislation to the floor for action.

I will support Senate Resolution 174, submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] and the Senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CASE] to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of Senate bill 2391, a bill to extend the Commission on Civil Rights, and to provide further for securing the protection of the right to vote.

I hope that a large majority of the Senate will support such a move, and I hope the necessary action—either in the form of the Senator's discharge resolution or by the other routes outlined by him in his remarks—will be taken at the appropriate time.

I emphasize, however, that we cannot fulfill our obligations to the American people in this field by the passage of any watered-down, token legislation, which fails to deal with the most grievous denials, of constitutional rights today.

I have read the report of the President's Commission on Civil Rights, which was issued yesterday, and which appeared in the press this morning. I was pleasantly surprised by the report. I had not had very high expectations for the work of the Commission up to that time. In my judgment the report is an excellent one.

I wish to call attention to a few points in that report which tend to be neglected. The first point is that the Commission finds that the Voting Rights Act of 1957, which we passed 2 years ago, has not resulted in the addition of a single vote by the Negro population of the country. It has been a complete dead letter, and the Department of Justice has failed to enforce the act.

The second point I wish to emphasize is that the Commission points out that compliance with public school desegregation decisions of the Supreme Court has distinctly slowed. There has been very little progress in the past year; and the report which has just been issued analyzing developments when schools opened this fall, which report comes from a responsible reporting service in Nashville, Tenn., shows that there has been very little progress this September.

The Civil Rights Commission points out what some of us have been contending for a long time, namely, that the job of obtaining compliance with the principles of the 14th and 15th amendments should not be left entirely to the courts, but that the Congress and the President, and the whole executive branch have a responsibility in this field.

I feel this most intensely. I believe that the recommendations of the Commission are sound and well established.

The discharge resolution submitted by the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Jersey relates to Senate bill 2391, which, with pending amendments submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], includes the constructive proposals of Senate bill 810, which was sponsored by 17 Members of this body, and was designed to help give effect to the decisions of the Supreme Court relating to public education. It also contains other significant proposals to protect the voting rights and other constitutional rights of American citizens. The bill and pending amendments thus constitute meaningful legislation that would deal constructively with major problems I have mentioned.

Mr. President, the conscience of our Nation and the conscience of the Senate should not allow us to ignore the pressing need to protect human rights and human dignity today. Therefore, let us resolve that at the earliest possible date we shall grasp this nettle, this opportunity, to help our country to carry out its constitutional guarantees of equal justice for all our citizens.

We can do this either by the discharge route, proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], or by other available means to bring such a measure to the floor of the Senate.

I hope very much that the leaders of both political parties in this body will agree to a date certain when these matters may be raised, debated, and voted upon by the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an editorial entitled "A Hopeful Approach," which was originally printed in Progressive magazine for June 1959 and which cogently points out the need for the passage of legislation like that proposed in S. 810.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A HOPEFUL APPROACH

Few issues confronting the 86th Congress carry so great a challenge to advance our well-being at home and our stature abroad as the issue of civil rights. The whole world—a majority of whose inhabitants are colored—will be watching this month and next as the legislative body of the most powerful democracy on earth seeks to forge new legal instruments designed to open the doors of equal opportunity to the one-tenth of its people currently consigned to the status of second-class citizens.

There will be skirmishes in Congress in many sectors of the field of civil rights, but none will be so important as the major battle to provide legislative direction and executive leadership in the struggle to integrate the public schools of the land.

It is now 5 years since the U.S. Supreme Court, by unanimous judgment, outlawed segregation in the public schools. The latest survey by the reliable Southern Education Reporting Service showed that in the 17 Southern and border States and the District of Columbia about 473,000 Negro pupils—of whom 75 percent are in Missouri, Maryland, and the District of Columbia—are in districts where some desegregation at least has been started in elementary or high schools. But only 148,500 of these are reported to be attending mixed schools.

In a fair number of communities, ranging from larger cities, like Louisville, Baltimore, and Washington, to tiny towns in Texas there has been a heartening effort to live up to constitutional obligations with speed, efficiency, and good will. Perhaps the most dramatic recent advance occurred in Virginia. The crumbling of massive resistance in the face of court decisions resulted in the desegregation of a dozen schools, but the number of Negro children admitted to previously all-white schools—17 in Norfolk, 9 in Alexandria, 4 in Arlington, and 21 in Warren County (with no white pupils)—was disappointingly small.

The rate of progress on the college level has been somewhat more encouraging. As of last fall, 114 of the 202 formerly all-white public colleges in 13 of the 17 Southern and border States were willing to accept Negroes. More than 2,000 Negroes were reported to be enrolled in these schools.

All this adds up to a measure of progress, but a pitifully small one 5 years after the Supreme Court's celebrated decisions. It would be comforting to count these as gains toward a goal if they were part of a continuing process. But this is not the case. In substantially more than two-thirds of the 2,900 biracial school districts in the South there has been no progress at all. Ten million children, Negro and white, go to school in the 2,100 districts in which there has been no start whatever toward desegregation. In six States—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina—there has been no desegregation, and the advances in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia have been quite feeble.

All in all, the South's record of compliance with the mandate of the Supreme Court has been a dismal one. No one, of course, expected integration to become an accomplished fact in 5 years, but it was not too much to hope that a reasonable start would be made in most of the southern school districts. Instead there has been open defiance, violence, and the enactment of scores of measures designed to make enforcement of the Court order impossible.

Hearings before congressional committees on a variety of civil rights bills have disclosed a shocking lawlessness in official circles. Southern governors, attorneys general, and other State officials refused, without exception, to acknowledge that the 14th amendment, as interpreted in the Supreme Court's school desegregation cases, is the law of the land. They came before the committees of Congress not to plead for time to effectuate an orderly transition to integration without Federal pressure, but to defy the law and to insist they would never comply. Typical was the testimony of Gov. John Patterson, of Alabama. "The citizens of Alabama," he said, "will not tolerate or support an integrated school system. They will scrap their public school system rather than submit to the integration of the races."

Southern State officials have sought to nurture among their constituents the belief that decisions of the Supreme Court are not the law of the land and can be disobeyed with impunity. They have succeeded in large measure because the other two branches of Federal Government have failed completely to support the judiciary. The Eisenhower administration, fatally weakened by the President's commitment to inaction, has done virtually nothing to enforce the law. Congress, paralyzed by the power of its southern bloc, has made no contribution toward winning southern acceptance of the rulings of the judiciary.

The pressure for congressional action to promote compliance in the face of increasing official southern arrogance has been growing steadily in recent years. The result has been the introduction of three sets of bills in this session of Congress—one by the administration, another by Senator Majority Leader LYNDON JOHNSON, and the third by Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS, Illinois Democrat, and 16 other Senators from both parties.

The Eisenhower and Johnson proposals seem to us pitifully inadequate. The heart of the President's program is a provision that would make it a criminal offense to use force or threats of force to interfere with court orders in school cases. This, surely, is a worthy purpose, but it deals only with interference by force or threats, not in any way with the simple refusal of State and local officials to comply with the law. Moreover, it applies only to such use of force in situations where there are court orders, not to situations where mob leaders are acting against school authorities seeking peaceful desegregation on their own initiative without benefit of a court ruling. And finally, the President's proposal contains no provision empowering the Attorney General of the United States to seek injunctions against those who would deny the equal protection of laws.

The legislation advanced by Senator JOHNSON, the Senate's chief apostle of that curious kind of surrender known by its disciples as moderation, seems to us an even more timorous approach to the problem. The Johnson measure would establish a Community Relations Service dedicated to conciliation of racial disputes. Here, again, is a worthy purpose, but there is nothing in the record to suggest that Southern State officials are prepared to exchange defiance for conciliation. Nor is there anything in the Johnson measure to indicate that it seeks more than the restoration of peaceful relations. There is nothing, for example, to indicate that peaceful relations should be restored in accordance with the law of the land. In fact, there is nothing in the Johnson proposal to suggest that the Supreme Court decision is the law of the land; on the contrary, its principal provisions seem to say that one can haggle with the law in pursuit of a bargain that settles for something less than the letter and spirit of the law.

Far different from the administration and Johnson bills in outlook and approach is the measure sponsored by Senator DOUGLAS and 16 of his colleagues. This bill, S. 810, would go a long way toward ranging Congress and the Executive alongside the Supreme Court in accepting the legal and moral responsibility for upholding the constitutional rights enunciated in the 14th amendment. Moreover, by providing Government with the tools of technical, financial, and legal assistance, the Douglas measure would no longer leave the sole burden of initiating the moves to sustain the constitutional right to integrated education upon the shoulders of relatively poor, weak, and increasingly hard-pressed individuals, who must act in the face of hostile threats and unyielding local resistance.

The principal provisions of the Douglas bill are:

1. The declaration that the Federal Government accepts the legal and moral responsibility for implementing the constitutional requirements for desegregation.

2. Provision is made for vitally needed Federal technical and financial assistance and Federal leadership to States and local communities whose schools are still segregated. Primary emphasis is placed on such affirmative aids as the gathering and distribution of helpful data and surveys, the holding of conferences, the establishment of advisory councils, and the making available of specialists' services, with authorized appropriations up to $2,500,000 per year for 5 years.

The bill also authorizes grants to State and local units of government to meet the costs of additional measures required by desegregation while at the same time assisting in the maintenance of existing educational standards, including grants for employment of additional teachers, inservice or short-course teacher training, construction or enlargement of school facilities, and replacement of withdrawn State funds. Appropriations of up to $40 million a year for 5 years are authorized for these purposes.

Moreover, by an extended procedure requiring local consultation and participation, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is also authorized to propose desegregation plans.

There is no blackjack in S. 810. The bill's authorized assistance provisions can operate only if the local community agrees and requests aid, and the desegregation plan sections can be effective, short of lengthy court proceedings, only if the community accepts them.

3. The most controversial feature of the Douglas bill is its provision for Federal legal assistance in securing equal protection of the laws, especially where private parties are unable to vindicate the constitutional rights of school children. This part of the bill seeks to enact the principle of part III stricken from last year's civil rights bill after a bitter battle. It would authorize the Attorney General to file civil suits to prevent denials in equal protection cases because of race, color, religion, or national origin.

This last provision is urgently needed, Senator DOUGLAS pointed out, "because without it the weakest, the poorest, and those most subject to intimidation or coercion are required to fight their case with their own resources against the legal talent, power, legislation, and economic resources which a State opposed to desegregation can throw into the breach. Because of the antibarratry laws [which make it a penal offense in some Southern States for anyone to offer financial or legal assistance for court actions to interested parties suing to protect their constitutional rights], the anti-NAACP laws, school placement laws, and the multitude of other barriers thrown up to resist the law of the land, the scales of justice can only be evenly balanced if these legal and economic burdens of enforcement are borne in part by the Federal Government, whose duty it is to enforce the law.

"To require, as is now the case, that this burden be placed solely on the backs of the fathers and mothers of Negro children in areas which are overwhelmingly hostile to them is to apply that concept of justice made famous by Anatole France's remark that the 'law in its majestic equality forbids the rich as well as the poor to sleep under bridges, to beg in the streets, and to steal bread.' "

The Douglas bill's authorization for the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief is hemmed in with a variety of safeguards designed to provide recalcitrant southern communities with their day in court—and more. Moreover, there is nothing novel about the use of the injunction to secure compliance with law. Unfair labor practices, national emergency strikes, antitrust law violations, wage-and-hour law infractions, defense production act violations, and scores of others affecting both personal and public rights—more than 45 in all—are reached by similar actions under existing laws.

Here, in the Douglas bill, are the ingredients of a hopeful approach to one of the most compelling problems facing our country. The measure recognizes the deep roots of resistance in the South, in social custom and practice. That is why its emphasis is on a transition to compliance with the law in a reasonable, conciliatory, and affirmative manner, with special stress placed on a maximum of cooperation and agreement between Federal and local governments and a considerable measure of Federal aid for communities bent on adhering to the law with a minimum of dislocation. Assistance and prevention are the keynote themes of the bill, not penalties and restrictions. In fact, there is no criminal section in the bill.

Here, in the Douglas bill, is an opportunity for Americans of good will to join together in working toward a creative solution to a controversy which has produced bitterness and despair for so many years. It is no cure-all, to be sure, but it represents a helpful beginning which would advance our well-being here at home and our honor and stature throughout the world. We urge readers of the Progressive who share our judgment to do everything in their power to support S. 810—by notifying their Senators and Representatives, by writing letters to their local newspapers, and by mobilizing the organizations to which they belong in support of this measure.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD excerpts from a very excellent report on school desegregation by the Southern Regional Council, a fine body in the South, having as members citizens from both races.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM A BACKGROUND REPORT ON SCHOOL DESEGREGATION FOR 1959–60 BY THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, ATLANTA, GA.

Nineteen hundred and fifty-eight-nineteen hundred and fifty-nine was a year in which a steadily growing body of southerners discovered that the old slogans and old passions were inadequate for the present needs of southern society. While the political spokesmen of the South kept up the attack on school desegregation by saying the familiar things about racial differences and States rights, new issues appeared more meaningful to many of their constituents. For them, the basic issue had become the defense of the public schools. As was demonstrated in both Little Rock and Virginia, this was a cause which for a large number of southerners transcended in importance the question of segregation versus desegregation.

The closing of schools in Little Rock, Charlottesville, Front Royal, and Norfolk affected 16,300 youths. Through hastily organized private schools, correspondence courses, and the generosity of other public-school systems, the majority of these were educated in some fashion. About 1,800, however, got no schooling.[1]

Looking back on 1958–59, the fifth school year after the Supreme Court's decision in the School Segregation cases, one can take note of the major developments and in doing so raise the question as to which of them were the most significant of the future. The educational derailment of the 16,000 young people will certainly have consequences, but they are of the kind about which one can only conjecture. To the minds of some, the fact that southerners showed enough firmness of resolve to shut down schools will seem the crucial revelation of the year. Others will believe that the capitulation of the Virginia State government and the reopening of the schools there in February 1959 was a more prophetic indication of the South's next direction. There must be still other observers who think that the primary fact about 1958–59 was that for the first year in three there was no violence around the schools, no use of troops.

1. THE PRESENT SITUATION

At the end of the 1958–59 school year no desegregation had occurred in the public schools of six States. These were Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

In the remaining five States of the old Confederacy varying degrees of resistance had been manifested in the years after 1954 and by 1959 had held desegregation to minimal levels. The record was as follows:

	Desegregated districts [1]	Negroes in desegregated schools
Arkansas	8 of 228	80
North Carolina	4 of 174	14
Tennessee	3 of 142	82
Texas	[2] 125 of 722	[2] 3,250
Virginia	4 of 128	30

[1] The number given is the total number of districts with biracial populations; the full number of school districts in Arkansas is 422; in Tennessee, 153; in Texas, 1,646; in Virginia, 129. All of North Carolina's school districts are biracial. Throughout the discussion here and in the next several pages, statistics are derived, principally, from the Statistical Summary of the Southern Education Reporting Service, 6th printing, May 15, 1959.
[2] Estimated.

Excepting Texas, only 206 Negro youths were, in 1958–59, in attendance with white pupils in the 11 States of the South; 45 of these were in the federally owned schools of Oak Ridge (Tennessee). An additional 21 Negroes attended the high school of Front Royal (Virginia); as no white pupils were with them, they are not included in the Virginia count.

In the District of Columbia and in the other States where segregation was legally practiced in the schools prior to 1954, official policies, supported by decisive elements of public opinion, have assisted desegregation. Over the first 5 years, the principal, if less publicized, accomplishment of the Supreme Court's decision is the thousands of children of these areas whose education has been without racial separation.

In these places, officials have given leadership to desegregation. In North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, sometimes in Arkansas, and now in Virginia, officials and governments have dedicated themselves to as little desegregation as is legally necessary. In the six States of the deep South, the governmental policy has been one of complete defiance. There is good evidence that Florida is not as adamant as the other deep South States, no one of which, for that matter, has yet had to face the legal crisis which induced Virginia to accept some desegregation, and which has brought 2 years of turmoil to Little Rock.

These 11 States—those which have complied under duress and those which are as yet completely segregated—began in the interval between the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court and the 1955 implementing order to erect their legislative defenses. Indeed, some law-making had begun earlier than 1954. It has continued into 1959. By 1959, however, it had become apparent which legislative measures might reasonably be expected to avoid or limit desegregation, and which ones were clearly useless or merely ebullient, blustering diversions. Although a legislature might, even in 1959, appropriate $500,000 for an advertising campaign to sell the southern way of life (vetoed by the Governor, Collins of Florida), most efforts to maintain segregation were more serious. The days of interposition, of resolutions demanding the impeachment of Supreme Court justices, of nullification of the 14th and 15th amendments, of bold claims for the States' police powers, were ended, though their fruits will remain on the statute books as memorials of the times: future generations of South Carolinians will, in all likelihood, continue subject to the law of 1958 which requires for the Confederate flag the same sanctity of treatment as for the Stars and Stripes.

[1] The figures given in this paragraph are those of Mr. Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, June 22, 1959.

But these things have been the fuss and feathers of the resistance. By 1959, four legislative policies had been selected, or had survived, as the principal opposition to desegregation. The further or more rapid advance of educational equality will encounter these, and the decisive legal cases and political contests of the next year or more will revolve about them. They are:

1. Pupil placement laws: These are intended to prevent or minimize desegregation through assigning children to particular schools on the basis of social and psychological criteria, which do not include race. That the result may be little different is demonstrated by the record of the Virginia Pupil Placement Board, which has assigned nearly 420,000 children during 30 months, without sending even one to a school attended by the other race. Some form of pupil placement law has been enacted by Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.[2] The Supreme Court would not declare the Alabama law unconstitutional on its face, though it stated that the application of the law could make it so. North Carolina's administration of the law has so far survived two challenges in Federal courts. The Virginia law is being disregarded in Arlington, Charlottesville, and Norfolk.

Georgia and South Carolina have no pupil placement laws; the Louisiana placement law was voided by a Federal court in 1956.

2. School closing laws: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia have statutes which require or authorize the closing of schools, either by State or local authorities, to prevent their desegregation; Texas (as do Florida and Virginia) has a so-called Little Rock statute providing for school closure in the event of the use of Federal force. Only Tennessee has refrained from setting up any legal machinery for an educational shutdown. The decision of the three-man Federal district court in Virginia last January made the price of schoolclosing extremely high. In effect, the court ruled that a State could not shut the schools in one locality while leaving open other schools in the State (James v. Almond). The June decision in Little Rock (Aaron v. McKinley), is to much the same point: the laws under which the Little Rock high schools closed were ruled to be an evasion of constitutional rights.

Still to be decided is the legality of a complete, statewide abandonment of public education. Needless to say, it is a decision which all can hope will never have to be reached.

3. Private school plans: Private schools have two possible uses in the segregationists' strategy: (a) to assume the whole function of education if the public schools are closed; (b) to provide a segregated education for some, most, or all white children if the public schools are desegregated. There seems to be general agreement that (a) a large-scale private school plan cannot work without State financial aid; and (b) the only form such aid might legally take would be direct tuition grants to the students.

Some sort of private school plan, with tuition grants, has been enacted in Alabama, Arkansas,[3] Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina and Virginia.

4. Harassment of the NAACP: A mass of legislation has been passed to curb the activities of the NAACP. Old barratry laws have been reinvigorated, membership and financial statements have been required, legislative investigating committees and special commissions have been created and set to work. One important result has been that, for the first time in our history, the Supreme Court has declared and affirmed the freedom of association as a constitutional right (NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449).

Though certainly there have been differences of degree of vigor with which the legislatures have enacted, the committees have investigated, and the executives have prosecuted, 10 of the Southern States have sought by legislative action to cripple the NAACP's ability to operate within their boundaries. The one exception is North Carolina. The aim of this legislation has been to block Negro entrance to the courts by enfeeblement of the NAACP; regardless of whether this has been achieved, much of the NAACP's energies and money have been diverted to defending itself rather than combating segregation.

These four devices—pupil placement, school closings, private schools, and NAACP harassment—are the chosen last defense of segregation. One of them, school closing, is so destructive in its potential consequences as to represent an immediate threat to the national interest.

In the main, southern public opinion has acquiesced in these actions.

This, however, must be said with clear explanation. The official policies of defiance and obstruction have been, beyond any doubt, almost unanimously opposed by one-quarter of the South's citizens; i.e., the Negroes. They have likewise been publicly combated by a small group of white liberals, by many clergymen, and by a small but distinguished group of editors. Especially during the past year, a large and still growing number of white southerners—often called moderates—who had previously been silent, have voiced their dislike of the consequences of the resistance measures, although so far their protests have been confined largely to the school closing laws.

With these qualifications, it can be said that the Governors and legislators of the Southern States have, since 1954, acted with the endorsement of effective public opinion. The climate of opinion in the South between early 1955 and the fall of 1958, and the southern political spokesmen, reciprocally reenforced each other and fashioned something akin to a regional conformity of speech. Massive resistance created, and in turn was sustained by, a massive orthodoxy, first broken by the reaction of Virginians to the school closings of September 1958. Throughout the South, the spectacle of closed schools has been a catalyst to dissent and protest; as a result, open public discussion of the wisdom of resistance now exists and grows, in every State of the South with the possible exceptions of Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

2. DEVELOPMENTS OF 1958–59

For a long time, poeple have spoken and written of the "process of desegregation." The word "process" implies change that more or less moves from its own momentum, that keeps going unless it is stopped. The year 1958–59, as have the other since 1954, showed that the word does not describe what is happening in the South. The political and social leaders of the region have demonstrated again, as in the past, that they will not succumb, in their racial policies, to a "process." Desegregation is not a change which—at least in this generation—will spread through its own momentum; it is not a "process," but a "campaign" which has to be continuously reenforced. Like any campaign, desegregation has had and will have its "battles," which will be determined by the relative strength of the parties.

Events in Arkansas and Virginia dominated the news in 1958–59. No historian will dispute the newspapers' judgment of their importance. If, as seems likely, they can be gaged as defeats for southern resistance to national authority, there is still the question of whether the Arkansas and Virginia struggles represent Gettysburg and Vicksburg—turning points midway through a long fight—or whether they were episodes in a Wilderness Campaign, just before Appomattox. Probably the realistic answer is that they were Gettysburg and Vicksburg, and that the southern crisis has still a long course to run.

The point is worth making because many persons outside the South have not understood it, and consequently have anticipated too much too soon. The breakdown of the massive structure of resistance in Virginia, despite all the careful planning of Senator BYRD and his political associates, will not mean the end of the South's travail. What happened in Virginia last year is of the greatest importance, probably even larger in impact than the dispatch of troops to Little Rock in 1957. But it does not mark the end of a crisis which has tired the spirits of a region and rubbed raw the nerves of its people, both white and colored. With or without the valued leadership of Virginia, other States will undoubtedly employ the statutory devices described in the last section: pupil placement, school closings, and tuition grants. Furthermore, the segregationists can be expected to maintain and to enlarge a counterattack on the sources of strength of those who are trying to bring about a reform of southern racial policies.

In short, reform did not proceed automatically when the cork of "separate but equal" was pulled from the constitutional bottle. It will now proceed automatically because the State government in Virginia made a strategic retreat.

The segregationists have another hope that reform will not go forward at all. From any realistic view it is a last-straw yearning. But the South has always included a lot of people who can recognize a straw for what it is, and still trust all their weight to it. The events of 1958–59 in Arkansas and Virginia forced the recognition that for the South there are only three alternatives; desegregation; the abolition of public schools; or the near miracle of a disintegration of the pressures for reform.

By counter-offensive against the supporters of desegregation, the present southern political and social leadership will do what it can to bring off the miracle. Unless the signs of the time are in mad disarray, it will not succeed. But the endeavor will bring damage to many persons and institutions, and values which stand in its path, and Americans of all sections ought to be alert to the threat.

To date, the attack by Negroes on legally compelled segregation has been supported strongly by the Federal courts, by American public opinion outside the South, and by religious leaders. Without these allies, the campaign for desegregation would not have progressed. Were these supports to be sufficiently weakened, desegregation would halt.

The southern political and social leadership has shown its awareness of these facts

[2] After Mar. 1, 1960, localities in Virginia may choose to be independent of the State pupil placement board.

[3] Declared unconstitutional by a U.S. district court on June 18, 1959. Governor Faubus has announced that the State will appeal.

by (a) joining every move in Congress to limit the power of the Supreme Court; (b) using whatever propaganda means it can find to reach northern public opinion (e.g. the Carleton Putnam letter reprinted in scores of nonsouthern newspapers) and to disparage the NAACP; and (c) strong local resistance to the social ministry of the clergy, including in too many places outright persecution. The first two of these counter-moves received special employment during 1958–59, and the third continued in unabated force. Were any to succeed, the pace of desegregation would be measurably slowed. Were they all to succeed, desegregation would stop; this is an unlikely prospect, but not an impossible one, and it is the one last, faintly realistic hope which the segregation leaders have, after the happenings of 1958–59 in Arkansas and Virgina.

Little Rock

The chief results of the past year in Arkansas are (1) a stronger, more explicit statement of law by the Supreme Court; (2) a growing disenchantment in the city of Little Rock with extremist leadership; and (3) a quiet but widespread resolve in communities throughout the South that "Little Rock will not happen here."

Increasingly, people in the South spoke and thought of the Little Rock situation as a "mess"; from the viewpoint of the conservative segregationists, Little Rock came to seem a botch; moderates were discovering in it a stern, and chastening, object lesson. Arkansas could never, in the white southerner's manner of looking at his society and its traditions, occupy the place of authoritative leadership which Virginia has filled. Massive resistance there was led by the sort of men whom a conservative region feels honored to follow. The point is worth emphasizing, because in a controversy which is in large measure an issue of emotions, white southerners lost another emotional reassurance when Virginia abdicated its leadership. The void could not be filled by Arkansas, where, as a matter of fact, by May Governor Faubus was appealing over television to the "good, honest, hard-working people of the lower and middle classes" to support him against the "charge of the Cadillac brigade of wealthy and prominent leaders."

As in Virginia, the harassment of the NAACP ramified in Arkansas into threats against the civil liberties of some white persons, particularly teachers. The Arkansas tendency here, as in other respects, however, was to run to extremes, and the result was the first clear electoral defeat for Governor Faubus. On May 5, his three adherents on the Little Rock School Board, in the absence of the three moderate members, purged 44 teachers from the Little Rock schools. The reaction was swift and pained. The Council of Parent-Teacher Associations (white) was followed by the Committee To Stop This Outrageous Purge (STOP), formed by 179 prominent businessmen, in petitioning for the recall of the three officers. Segregationists promptly petitioned for the recall of the other three board members, and the election was held May 25. The Governor publicly and repeatedly asked for the retention of his three friends, all of whom were recalled, while the other three were retained: the voting was close in all six elections.

The recall was the first clearcut instance of popular unwillingness to follow the Governor. During the preceding 10 months, Arkansas had demonstrated to the rest of the South—and the region was not wholly inattentive—that defiance of national law and the bitter-end defense of segregation carried with it the potential for one-man rule. Mr. Faubus had been renominated for an unprecedented third term on July 29, 1958, in the Democratic primary. From the largest turnout in Arkansas' history, he carried 70 percent of the vote and all 75 counties. In the special session of the legislature in late August, his legislative program of stronger resistance was passed as he presented it, with only one dissenting vote. In the election of September 27, a plebiscite held to approve or disapprove his closing of the schools, the second largest vote in Little Rock's history gave its endorsement by better than 2½ to 1. And in the congressional election in November, Representative Brooks Hays, who in the July primary had been renominated easily, was unseated by the write-in candidacy of the Governor's choice, Dr. DALE ALFORD. Although Representative Hays carried 4 of the 6 counties in the district, he lost Little Rock by 1,400 votes and the whole of Pulaski County by 5,500; even if allegations which have been made of irregularities are subsequently verified, the ALFORD write-in vote was startlingly impressive against a man of Hays' popularity and prestige.

The election of Representative ALFORD may have been, however, the high point of the Governor's success. On November 7, in one of the first serious local challenges he had received since he closed Central High in September 1957, the Arkansas Education Association passed a strong resolution, concluding with the statement "the public school system is not expendable." (Immediately, the legislative council, an interim group of the State legislature, ordered its Committee on Subversion in Education to "investigate.") Even earlier, prior to the September plebiscite, the Women's Emergency Committee To Open Our Schools had been formed, and 63 Little Rock lawyers had publicly advised the people that the Governor's plan to operate private schools with public money was probably unconstitutional.

After the ALFORD triumph, the uninterrupted ascendancy began to be checked. In the Little Rock school board election in December, required because of the resignation of the besieged and frustrated old board, a slate of moderates sponsored by businessmen ran against a slate of uncompromising segregationists. Three of each were elected, creating the impasse which led to the recall election 6 months later. The Governor had publicly attacked the whole moderate ticket. Beginning early in 1959, first through their chamber of commerce, and then through STOP, Little Rock businessmen took a stand for an open, free public school system. And in the regular legislative session in the spring of 1959, the Governor got almost, but this time not quite, all he asked for, and in contrast to the special session in August, was actually turned down on one measure.

The stiffening of local opposition was caused in part by the growing feeling that the administration was irresponsible and oppressive; but there were other reasons as well. The business community especially had become apprehensive over the effects of the controversy on the local economy. Not a single new business had located in Little Rock since the first school closing in September 1957, and reports of economic stagnation were frequent. The whole city, moreover, grew tired of the wearying load of its own notoriety, and concerned with the hardship being imposed on its children. And finally, there were the Federal courts, and a spreading popular awareness that they, and not the Governor, represented the "immovable object".

This had been put into some doubt when, on June 20, 1958, Judge Lemley of the U.S. District Court allowed the resegregation of Little Rock schools until January 1961. Within two months he had been overruled by a higher court; and when that decision was appealed to the Supreme Court, the judgment, on September 12 and 29, was the firmest statement of law yet read to the South. The Court held that neither violence nor its threat were sufficient grounds for postponing desegregation; and it made clear that all State officers were legally bound to uphold the Constitution as the Supreme Court interpreted it.

"The constitutional rights of respondents are not to be sacrificed or yielded to the violence and disorder which have followed upon the actions of the Governor and legislature. As this Court said some 41 years ago in a unanimous opinion in a case involving another aspect of racial segregation: "It is urged that this proposed segregation will promote the public peace by preventing race conflicts. Desirable as this is, and important as is the preservation of the public peace, this aim cannot be accomplished by laws or ordinances which deny rights created or protected by the Federal Constitution." Buchanan v. Warley (245 U.S. 60, 81). Thus law and order are not here to be preserved by depriving the Negro children of their constitutional rights. The record before us clearly establishes that the growth of the Board's difficulties to a magnitude beyond its unaided power to control is the product of State action. Those difficulties, as counsel for the Board forthrightly conceded on the oral argument in this Court, can also be brought under control by State action.

* * * * *

"In short, the constitutional rights of children not to be discriminated against in school admission on grounds of race or color declared by this Court in the Brown case can neither be nullified openly and directly by State legislators or State executives or judicial officers, nor nullified indirectly by them through evasive schemes for segregation whether attempted "ingeniously or ingenuously." (Smith v. Texas, 311 U.S. 128, 132.)

* * * * *

"It follows that the interpretation of the 14th amendment enunciated by this Court in the Brown case is the supreme law of the land, and article VI of the Constitution makes it of binding effect on the States 'anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.' Every State legislator and executive and judicial officer is solemnly committed by oath taken pursuant to article VI, 3 'to support this constitution.'

"No State legislator or executive or judicial officer can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it.

"It is, of course, quite true that the responsibility for public education is primarily the concern of the States, but it is equally true that such responsibilities, like all other State activity, must be exercised consistently with Federal constitutional requirements as they apply to State action. * * * State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds, or property cannot be squared with the amendment's command that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The right of a student not to be segregated on racial grounds in schools so maintained is indeed so fundamental and pervasive that it is embraced in the concept of due process of law."

Two further Federal decisions have deepened the Little Rock dilemma. An injunction, issued March 7, ended the distribution of State money to the private schools which had been established after Governor Faubus, on September 12, 1958, closed the city's four high schools. On June 18, 1959, a three judge district court declared unconstitutional the school closing and tuition grant laws.

For Governor Faubus, a year which had begun grandly, with a thundering reelection and a judicial retreat, had ended with frustration. There was no discernible next move which he could take without jeopardizing his administration. But the rules of chess do not apply in politics, and the stalemate in which the Governor had been put by the Federal courts and the voters of Little Rock did not mean for him a drawn game, but the prelude to either surrender or reckless defiance. On June 24, Governor Faubus stated that the Federal Government would need "live ammunition" to carry out the desegregation orders in Little Rock, and that he would do nothing to curb mob violence if it came. From an unpredictable man, responsible southerners might still hope for a soberer second thought.

Virginia

In Virginia also, the most obvious result of the State's legislative resistance to the Supreme Court was the strengthening of the Federal judicial commands.

The white senior and junior high schools of Norfolk were closed by Governor Almond September 27, 1958 after the last litigious gambit against the admission of 17 Negroes had been played. Along with other closed schools of the State, they reopened on February 2, following decisions on January 19 by both Federal and State courts. The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals ruled that the State was obligated by its own constitution to maintain a public school system. A three judge Federal district court held that Virginia, by operating schools throughout most of the State while not so doing in Norfolk, was unconstitutionally discriminating against the people—white and colored—of Norfolk. On January 27, a Federal district court prevented the city council from cutting off local funds for the schools.

Lane High and Venable Elementary Schools in Charlottesville were closed by the Governor on September 19, 1958, in the face of a court order to desegregate. An order the next month laid down the principle that public school teachers could not teach in private segregated schools. The schools reopened on February 2, 1959, on a segregated basis, but after approval by the Federal judge (and endorsement by the NAACP) of a plan for desegregation in September.

In Warren County, 1 of 17 Virginia counties with no Negro secondary school, the Federal court enjoined segregation and the high school was closed under the massive resistance laws on September 12. When it reopened, the white pupils were kept away by their parents and 21 Negro youths were the entire student body.

On September 27, 1958, the Arlington County schools were directed to admit four Negroes in February. They entered in that month, as did nine Negroes in the city of Alexandria, which had been ordered in February 1959 to desegregate. In March, the county school board was ordered to reexamine other applications which had been denied. The court of appeals found that Negro applicants were being subjected to placement tests not applicable to the white children; on July 25, in a further stage of the same litigation, a district court ordered 12 rejected applicants admitted because they met the criteria in effect for white children. No violence or disorder has accompanied any instance of desegregation in Virginia.

A Federal district court decision on August 4, 1958, postponing desegregation in Prince Edward County until 1965, was overruled on May 5, 1959, and desegration ordered for September. The county has since decided to close its schools and end all local educational functions.

For Virginia, 1958–59 meant a hardening of the Federal judicial stand. There were two other results of potentially equal importance. One was the emergence of popular protest against the consequences of massive resistance. A second was the dramatic change in the State's executive and legislative policies.

In June 1958 the Arlington (County) Organizing Committee to Preserve Public Schools was formed. Similar committees appeared in the other troubled localities; they merged in November into the Virginia Committee for Public Schools, with chapters throughout the State. Its membership rose to 25,000 and it came to exert a pronounced influence on public policy. The membership of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, a prosegregation organization associated with the Southern Regional Council, grew to 1,400.

The indignation and uneasiness which these groups felt was working also in other quarters. November 11, 1958, is an important date in the chronicle of the past year, because on that day Mr. James J. Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News-Leader, and the intellectual champion of massive resistance, made a speech in which he recommended "new weapons and new tactics," recognized that there might be some desegregation, and endorsed local option. The next morning the influential Richmond Times-Dispatch urged the Governor to appoint a commission to plot a new policy for the State.

More spectacular was the change of Governor Almond. On January 20, the day following the Federal and State court decisions, he spoke over radio and television, calling upon Virginians "to stand firmly with me in this struggle."

"The people of Virginia through their elected representatives and by registering their convictions in the exercise of their franchise have repeatedly made it crystal clear that they cannot and will not support a system of public education on a racially integrated basis. I make it equally clear that I cannot and that I will not break faith with them."

A week later, on January 28, Governor Almond addressed the special session of the General Assembly. He appeared then as the leader in "new tactics," which turned out to be the old principles of law compliance, public education, and local option. A commission was appointed, chaired by Senator Perrow. New policies for the State were set and, by the narrowest of margins, enacted in May 1958 by the legislature. The recent State elections in Virginia have somewhat improved the legislative majority of a governor who within a few days changed from one of the South's most articulate voices of resistance to the acknowledged political leader of moderate opinion.

The general shape of the new legislation in Virginia, resulting from the Perrow Commission recommendations, may be described as local option, which means that only the locality through its own initiative and decision can close its schools; by the same token, no locality can be forced by the State to do so. Tuition grants are now available for any child desiring for any reason to attend a private school.

Thus did Virginia in February change course. The results of the old were tougher Federal judicial decrees, the loneliness of defeat, and chaotic schooling for the children of Charlottesville, Front Royal, and Norfolk. The results of the new course, tried since February, have been quiet, more or less normal, schools. The new course may also provide for the traditional South new leadership and a new but recognizable image of itself as it ought to be; if so, the Virginia experience will have been of incalculable importance.

PAUL & BEEKMAN, INC.

The bill (H.R. 6733) for the relief of Paul & Beekman, Inc., and others was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINE PACIFIC FESTIVAL

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 281) authorizing and requesting the President to issue a proclamation with respect to the 1959 Pacific Festival, and for other purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 169) concerning the desirability of holding an international exposition in the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

SALARY INCREASES FOR POLICE OF NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 8464) to amend the act of October 24, 1951, to provide salary increases for the police for the National Zoological Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over by request, Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, by request.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to speak for a moment regarding Calendar No. 829. I appreciate the fact that the Senator from New York objected to consideration of the bill by request. I hope that in some way, somehow, any differences in respect to the bill can be ironed out before adjournment of the Congress.

So long as we assume the obligation which we assume of functioning as the Government of the District of Columbia, we have an obligation to see to it that we are fair and decent to the people who do not have any representation, except our representation by proxy, so to speak.

This is not a monumental piece of proposed legislation The bill does not involve great sums of money. However, it does involve a question of being fair to a few policemen at the National Zoological Park who have only us to look to in getting fair treatment.

I trust, Mr. President, that we shall, on another call of the calendar, or, if necessary, by motion, pass the bill, because, Mr. President, we should never overlook the fact that we have the duty to do the right thing by the people who find themselves in the position of these policemen.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield to me?

Mr. MORSE. I have finished.

Mr. KEATING. I assure the distinguished Senator I have no personal objection to the bill. My objection was made solely in my representative capacity as chairman of the Republican calendar committee. My preferences as to places to visit are: First, the Senate of the United States; second, the ball park; third, the zoo. I enjoy the zoo very much. I wish to be protected properly while I am at the zoo, and I will support the bill when it is considered by the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. I do not think the Senator from New York heard my comment that I recognized he made the objection by request.

COMPUTATION OF TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH SERVICE ON A UNIT BASIS FOR MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

The bill (H.R. 8593) to amend the act of June 23, 1949, as amended, to provide that telephone and telegraph service furnished Members of the House of Representatives shall be computed on a unit basis was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARING ENTITLED "ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT OF MISSILE PROGRAMS"

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 234) authorizing the printing of additional copies of the hearing entitled "Organization and Management of Missile Programs," was considered and agreed to.

PRINTING AS HOUSE DOCUMENT 16TH REPORT OF COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 378) authorizing the printing of the 16th report of the Commission of Fine Arts as a House document was considered and agreed to.

INCREASE OF FUNDS FOR THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

The resolution (S. Res. 170) to increase the amount of funds for the Committee on the Judiciary was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That S. Res. 59, Eighty-sixth Congress, agreed to February 2, 1959 (authorizing an investigation of the administration of the national security law and matters relating to espionage), is hereby amended by striking out "$224,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$239,000".

PRINTING AS SENATE DOCUMENT LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT FROM THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE TO STUDY THE U.S. MILITARY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

The resolution (S. Res. 171) authorizing the printing as a Senate document a "Letter to the President of the United States From the President's Committee To Study the U.S. Military Assistance Program" was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a "Letter to the President of the United States From the President's Committee To Study the United States Military Assistance Program and the Committee's Final Report," and the President's letter of transmittal of that report, dated August 20, 1959, be printed with illustrations as a Senate document.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF SENATE REPORT ON "THE STATUS OF WORLD HEALTH"

The resolution (S. Res. 175) to print additional copies of Senate report on "The Status of World Health," was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROUTY. Over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. PROUTY subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of Calendar No. 835, Senate Resolution 175. Inadvertently, I believe, I objected to its consideration when it was called previously. I did not intend to have it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 175) to print additional copies of Senate report on "The Status of World Health."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 175) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Government Operations two thousand additional copies of Senate Report Numbered 161, Eighty-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "The Status of World Health."

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR INVESTIGATION OF HEALTH AND MEDICAL RESEARCH FACILITIES

The resolution (S. Res. 176) providing additional funds for the investigation of health and medical research facilities was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That S. Res. 42, Eighty-sixth Congress, agreed to February 3, 1959 (authorizing the Committee on Government Operations to make a complete study of all matters pertaining to international activities of Federal executive branch departments and agencies in the field of health and medical research), is hereby amended by striking out "$45,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$55,000".

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

The resolution (S. Res. 177) providing additional funds for the Select Committee on Small Business was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in discharging the duties imposed upon it by S. Res. 58, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to February 20, 1950, as amended, the Select Committee on Small Business is authorized to expend the sum of $10,000 from the contingent fund of the Senate in addition to any other moneys available to the committee for such purpose. The authority contained in this resolution shall expire January 31, 1960.

PRINTING OF REPORT ENTITLED "FACILITY NEEDS—SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION RESEARCH" AS SENATE DOCUMENT

The resolution (S. Res. 178) authorizing the printing of the report entitled "Facility Needs—Soil and Water Conservation Research" as a Senate document was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the findings of the working group appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, entitled "Facility Needs—Soil and Water Conservation Research," be printed as a Senate document.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE CITY OF CHEYENNE, WYO.—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 857) to authorize the Administrator of General Services to convey certain lands in the State of Wyoming to the city of Cheyenne, Wyo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, by request.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to make a request with regard to the objection to consideration of the bill. I should like to ask that the objection be withheld long enough for me to make a brief statement on the bill, so that it will be in the RECORD for future consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withhold his objection?

Mr. KEATING. I am glad to withhold my objection, Mr. President.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, S. 857 would authorize the Administrator of the General Services Administration to convey certain veterans hospital lands in the city of Cheyenne to the State of Wyoming without consideration.

The land proposed to be conveyed was originally given to the Veterans' Administration by the city of Cheyenne without consideration in order that a veterans' hospital might be constructed on the site. The original conveyance consisted of a 600-acre tract.

In 1948, 431 acres was reconveyed to the city of Cheyenne without consideration because the additional acres were determined not to be necessary for hospital purposes.

In July 1955 the Veterans' Administration reported an additional 90.2 acres as excess property. Sixty and two-tenths acres of the surplus land were reconveyed to the city for airport purposes.

S. 857 covers the remaining 30 acres that had been declared excess property in 1955. Cheyenne city officials have stated that the 30 acres would be utilized for park and recreational facilities.

Mr. President, I have no objection to this bill because the Morse formula is inapplicable. This bill falls squarely within the principle of the Roseburg Veterans Hospital case which I discussed in the Senate last August in connection with the dispute over the Lillie Moore land transfer. My discussion of the Roseburg Veterans Hospital reconveyance appears in the RECORD, volume 104, part 12, on page 16214.

Inasmuch as the city conveyed the land in question to the Federal Government without consideration, it is only fair that the Federal Government should reconvey any lands that are no longer necessary for the purposes for which the original conveyance to the Government was made.

Mr. President, I hope the bill will eventually pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York renew his objection?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, by request.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND TO THE CITY OF MOBILE, ALA.

The bill (S. 47) to direct the Administrator of General Services to convey to the city of Mobile, Ala., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain land was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consideration of Calendar No. 877, H.R. 2386, an identical bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 2386) to direct the Administrator of General Services to convey to the city of Mobile, Ala., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in 1939, the United States conveyed the customhouse property to the city of Mobile, Ala., for public purposes at 50 percent of appraised value.

The city of Mobile now desires to obtain the property free of any Federal reversionary interest.

S. 47 as originally introduced called for a gratuitous conveyance of the remaining interest of the United States. However, as reported by the Senate Government Operations Committee, the bill directs the Administrator of the General Services Administration to convey to the city of Mobile, at the current fair market value, all the right, title and interest of the United States in this property.

The committee amendment eliminates any Morse formula problem. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 2386) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill S. 74 will be indefinitely postponed.

USE OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY FOR GENERAL EDUCATIONAL PURPOSE, LOUISIANA UNIVERSITY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 121) to permit certain real property heretofore conveyed to the board of supervisors of Louisiana State University to be used for general educational purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 878, H.R. 6669, an identical bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 6669) to amend the act of July 14, 1945, to provide that the Louisiana State University may use certain real property heretofore conveyed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. In the interest of saving time, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD a statement of mine with respect to this bill and an explanation of the fact that it does not violate the Morse formula.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

The Louisiana Rural Rehabilitation Corporation was the owner of 3,113 acres which was subsequently transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture, as trustee, pursuant to an agreement of 1937 between the corporation and the United States. The agreement obligated the Secretary of Agriculture to administer the assets of the corporation "for rural rehabilitation purposes in the State of Louisiana."

Public Law 41 of the 82d Congress authorized the conveyance of the entire tract to Louisiana State University for general educational purposes. However, Public Law 41 provided that 25 acres should be transferred to the parish of Rapides for use in holding livestock and agricultural expositions.

Senate Joint Resolution 121 would authorize release of the 25-acre restriction so that the entire tract would be restored to the State university for educational purposes in accordance with the proposal contained in Public Law 41.

The resolution does not violate the Morse formula because it merely implements the trust arrangement for the benefit of the cestui of the trust.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 6669) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF SURPLUS PROPERTY TO CERTAIN AGENCIES

The bill (S. 1018) to authorize the donation of surplus property to certain agencies engaged in cooperative agricultural extension work, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I wonder if we could have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation is called for. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Mississippi proceeds, the Chair will again insist that the Senate be in order. We make much better progress in going through a lengthy calendar if we have order. The Senator will not proceed until we do have order.

The Senator from Mississippi may proceed.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING] presided at the hearings on this bill. He is detained somewhere. I would rather have him make the explanation.

However, the actual operation of the bill as presented by the committee is very limited and covers only a situation in which the Post Office Department has excess furniture, and similar supplies, and when it has already permitted the Extension Service located in that post office building to have the use of the surplus property.

In such a case the bill permits the Post Office Department to transfer the ownership and title of that property now in use and in the possession of the Extension Service to the Extension Service.

The only reason why legislation on the subject is necessary is that the Extension Service does not qualify as a Federal agency; otherwise, they could receive this property under present law.

The bill itself is limited to the narrow confines of furniture or utilities of that kind already being used in the post office building; in other words, it confirms the loan and the title.

A more far-reaching effect is coming into being in a ruling of the executive branch of the Government, qualifying the Extension Service as an agency being engaged in educational work, and thus making it eligible for certain limited amounts of furniture.

The committee unanimously reported the bill. The subcommittee also was unanimous in its report.

Mr. PROUTY. Has the Senator any estimate of the cost involved?

Mr. STENNIS. I do not know that there is available any particular estimate of cost or value. Only secondhand property is involved. It is already out of use by the Post Office Department. It is located in the post office building and it is being used by the Extension Service. Technically, it cannot be transferred to the Extension Service. The bill would permit such a transfer.

Mr. PROUTY. I thank the Senator for his explanation. I have no objection.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MORSE. In my opinion, this is a good bill. That opinion is based on an understanding which I wish the Senator to check. As I understand, the bill would have uniform application. It does not single out any particular town or any particular beneficiary, but is to be a uniform policy.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes; it is nationwide in its application, but it applies only to transfers or loans of the property concerned which have already been made.

Mr. MORSE. The uniform principle makes it a very sound piece of legislation. Next, I understand it is to apply to the future as well as to the past. Is that correct?

Mr. STENNIS. The bill itself will have no application to the future. As I understand, under a new policy in the executive department, the Extension Service is made eligible for the transfer of such property to it in the future, as an educational institution or agency. That will dispense with the need for legislation on the subject in the future.

Mr. MORSE. That is the point I wish to make.

Mr. STENNIS. That policy is more far reaching than the bill.

Mr. MORSE. I approve of the bill.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Government Operations with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, notwithstanding any provision of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, or any other law, the Postmaster General and the Administrator of General Services are hereby authorized and directed to transfer, as soon as practicable after date of enactment hereof, without cost, to any State or county agency engaged in cooperative agricultural extension work pursuant to the Act of May 8, 1914, as amended (7 U.S.C. 341–348), for the use of such agency, all right, title, and interest in and to any office equipment, materials, books, or other supplies (whether or not capitalized in a working capital fund established under section 405 of the National Security Act of 1947, as amended, or any similar fund) which have heretofore been assigned for use to any such State or county agency by the Post Office Department or the General Services Administration, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize and direct the transfer of certain personal property to State and county agencies engaged in cooperative agricultural extension work."

ISSUANCE OF GOLD MEDAL IN HONOR OF THE LATE PROFESSOR ROBERT H. GODDARD

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 19) to authorize the issuance of a gold medal in honor of the late Professor Robert H. Goddard was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee was unanimous in reporting House Joint Resolution 19, to authorize the Congress to present an appropriate gold medal to the family of the late Dr. Robert H. Goddard. For this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to strike the medal. The selection of suitable emblems and inscriptions for the medal, and the presentation to Dr. Goddard's family, would be made by the chairmen of the House Committee on Science and Astronautics and the Senate Committee on Aeronautical and Space Sciences, in behalf of the Congress.

Duplicate medals in bronze would be coined and sold by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, it is entirely fitting that we should thus honor the memory of this American genius. His pioneering work in the development of rockets laid the basic groundwork for all of today's missiles and satellites.

It should be a great inspiration to all Americans—and especially our young boys and girls—that this dedicated man, working virtually alone and unnoticed, through sheer determination and devotion to his country, built the foundation for developments which are having, and will have a profound effect on the history of the world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD at this point a biography of Dr. Goddard and a summary of his achievements.

There being no objection, the biography and summary were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIOGRAPHY OF ROBERT HUTCHINGS GODDARD

Physicist; born in Worcester, Mass., October 5, 1882. Education: bachelor of science degree, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, 1908; master of arts degree, Clark University, 1910, doctor of philosophy degree, 1911, doctor of science degree, 1945. Married Esther Christine Kisk, June 21, 1924. Instructor, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, 1909–11, Princeton University, 1912–13; instructor and fellow in physics, 1914–15, assistant professor, 1915–19, professor, 1919–43, Clark University, also director of the physical laboratories. Leave of absence, 1930–32 and 1934–42, engaged in rocket research, under Daniel and Florence Guggenheim Foundation grants; director of research, Bureau of Aeronautics, Navy Department, 1942–45; consulting engineer, Curtiss-Wright Corp., 1943–45. Served as director of research, U.S. Signal Corps, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, and Mount Wilson Observatory, Calif., World War, 1918. Member of board of directors, American Rocket Society; fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; member of the American Physical Society, American Meteorological Society, Institute of the Aeronautical Sciences, National Aeronautic Association, Geophysical Union, Sigma Xi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon. Home: Mescalero Ranch, Roswell, N. Mex., and Worcester, Mass. Died August 10, 1945.

SUMMARY OF ACHIEVEMENTS OF DR. ROBERT HUTCHINGS GODDARD

1. Dr. Robert Hutchings Goddard is the man whose 30 years of almost singlehanded research launched the age of rockets and guided missiles as surely as the Wright brothers launched the age of aircraft.

2. He left around 200 patents, many of them basic, in the field of rocketry and jet propulsion. There were also 22 volumes of painstaking records of his experiments and theories.

3. Dr. Goddard was the first and only rocket pioneer who was American and he was the first to undertake rocket research in the concrete sense.

4. As early as 1907 Dr. Goddard made what is believed to be the first suggestion for a gyrostabilizer for airplanes, a form of stabilizer which proved effective and was generally adopted.

5. During his early years he developed the mathematical principles of rocket motors and flight, and built and shot the world's first gyrocontrolled rocket.

6. In 1912 he began serious development of a problem which proved a lifelong interest, that of the theory and construction of single and multiple charge rockets, using dry and liquid fuel, for attainment of high altitudes.

7. Dr. Goddard was the first to develop a general theory of rocket action, including the important optimum velocity principle, showing that a rocket is not only a projectile but a motor of highest efficiency and greatest potentialities.

8. In 1914 he was granted two U.S. patents which are still basic to rocketry; the rocket nozzle designed for maximum thrust, and a combustion chamber and fuel system which covered the step-rocket principle. He used smokeless powder in the new nozzle and combustion chamber design, which burned at a high efficiency of 60 percent with exhaust velocity of over 6,000 feet per second. Thirty-five years after the firing of the test step-rocket the U.S. Army applied the same principles in a two-stage rocket which reached 250 miles above White Sands Proving Grounds.

9. By 1918 progress was such that he devised an exhaust jet designed so as to practically eliminate inefficiency in functioning, and in test shots a jet of burning exhaust gas achieved a velocity of 7,920 feet per second.

10. On the verge of World War I he offered the military a rocket weapon, new and adaptable. Dr. Goddard was working on the problem of housing the fuel for the rocket and methods to feed the fuel into the combustion chamber. Early in 1918 he demonstrated rockets at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds, showing a novel recoilless rocket launcher. The first successful military rocket was 1 inch in diameter and 18 inches long, propelled by a stick of solid nitroglycerine one-half inch in diameter, launched from a light tube about 4½ feet long. The military lost interest when World War I ended before the rockets could be put into mass production and the plans and models were safely stored away, to be reclaimed and launched as the bazooka in the Second World War.

11. About 6 months after leaving the military missile work Dr. Goddard reported on his work, and included tables of starting weights of rockets designed to attain altitudes of over 400 miles. The report was completed in May 1919 and published by Smithsonian Institute late in 1919 as a report on a "Method of Reaching Extreme Altitudes."

12. On March 16, 1926, with a few experts from Smithsonian watching, he tested a motor and rocket. The rocket went up and covered 184 feet at a speed of about 60 miles per hour. Historically this feat was without equal as it was the world's first liquid-fuel rocket ascent.

13. July 17, 1929, he set a rocket on a 60-foot launching tower he had constructed near Auburn, Mass. In the rocket nose, the instrument section, he had placed a barometer, a thermometer and a camera focused on the two measuring instruments, with the shutter release attached to a tripping device that would eject a parachute when the rocket reached its peak altitude and the camera would record the instrument readings at the highest flight point. The rocket rose 90 feet and nosed over and traveled horizonally 171 feet and returned to earth, the instruments unbroken and safe.

14. He was one of the great pioneers of rocketry, beginning when almost nobody had an inkling of the potentials of rockets and by the end of his career he had completed the groundwork on all essential features of modern aerodynamically shaped liquid-propelled rockets. Almost singlehandedly he developed rocketry from a vague dream to one of the most significant branches of modern engineering. His scientific writings include "A Method of Reaching Extreme Altitudes" (1919), "On the Efficient Utilization of Solar Energy" (1929), and "Liquid-Propellent Rocket Development" (1936), as well as several articles for scientific publications.

In the course of his pioneering work, Dr. Goddard—

Was first to develop a rocket motor using liquid fuels (liquid oxygen and gasoline), anticipating the German V–2's about 15 years.

Was first to develop and shoot a liquid-fuel rocket (March 16, 1926, at Auburn, Mass.).

Was first to shoot a liquid-fuel rocket faster than the speed of sound (1935, near Roswell, N. Mex.)

First developed gyro steering apparatus for rockets, about 10 years before the Germans did it.

First used vanes in the blast of the rocket motor for steering rockets.

Received the first U.S. patent on the idea of multistage rockets.

First explored mathematically the practicality of using rocket power to reach high altitudes, and to shoot to the moon.

Was first to develop in detail the mathematical theory of rocket propulsion and rocket flight.

First proved, by actual test, that a rocket will work in a vacuum; that it needs no air to push against.

Developed and demonstrated the basic idea of the bazooka during World War I (1918), though his plans lay unused in the U.S. Army files until they were put to use in World War II.

First developed pumps suitable for rocket fuels, self-cooling rocket motors, variable-thrust rocket motors, practical rocket landing devices, and scientifically forecast jet-driven airplanes, rocketborne mail and express, and travel in space.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement prepared by him.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF TEXAS

As chairman of the Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee, I heartily concur in the recommendation of my good friend from Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, to authorize the issuance of a gold medal in honor of the late Dr. Robert Hutchings Goddard.

This award would honor the memory of the man whose 30 years of dedicated research developed rocketry from a vague dream to one of the most significant branches of modern science.

Dr. Goddard's almost singlehanded research launched the age of rockets and guided missiles as surely as the Wright brothers launched the age of aircraft. The accomplishments of this American pioneer are a mirror image of the development of rocketry.

Dr. Goddard left a priceless heritage of scientific achievement to his fellowmen, holding almost 200 patents in the field of rocketry and jet propulsion, including the first U.S. patent on the idea of multistage rockets. He left 22 volumes of painstaking records of his experiments and mathematical theories of rocket propulsion and rocket flight.

A few examples will serve to illustrate Dr. Goddard's foresight and accomplishment. In 1918 he demonstrated the first successful military rocket—which was to become decades later the famed bazooka of World War II. In 1926 he launched the world's first liquid-fuel rocket. He was the first to develop a rocket motor using liquid fuels, anticipating the German V–2 rockets of World War II by about 15 years. In 1935 he was the first to shoot a liquid-fuel rocket faster than the speed of sound.

Dr. Goddard served his country with distinction with the Signal Corps in World War I and with the Navy in World War II.

It is indeed fitting that the recognition now given to Dr. Goddard's work by scientists the world over should also be publicly acknowledged by his country.

I commend the distinguished chairman and members of the Banking and Currency Committee for their recommendation that this recognition should take place.

I join them in their belief that a gold medal to honor Dr. Goddard would be a fitting recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 19) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION OF SECTION 5136 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 493) making a technical correction in section 5136 of the Revised Statutes (relating to national banks) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The bill (H.R. 163) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act with respect to the crediting of service of U.S. Commissioners for purposes of such act was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Civil Service Retirement Act extends coverage to U.S. Commissioners whose fees total $3,000 in each of 3 consecutive years.

Prior to July 1, 1945, the Government was on a 6-day week. U.S. Commissioners who have no fixed hours or days of duty were required to work 313 days to obtain 1 year of credit for retirement purposes—365 days minus 52 Sundays equals 313.

H.R. 163 provides that since July 1, 1945, U.S. Commissioners will receive credit at the rate of 1 year for each 260 days of service—52 weeks times 5 days each equals 260.

The effect of this change in law is to place the few U.S. Commissioners who qualify for credit on essentially the same basis as other Federal employees who since 1945 have been on a basic 5-day week or a 260-day year.

ABSENCE FROM DUTY BY CIVILIAN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES ON CERTAIN DAYS

The bill (H.R. 5752) to provide for absence from duty by civilian officers and employees of the Government on certain days, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I wonder if we may have an explanation of the bill by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, this legislation does not establish any new or additional legal holidays. It does not give any Federal employee any right, privilege, or benefit not clearly intended under existing law. It will cause no interference or delay in the operations or services of any Government department or agency. The bill merely closes a gap in the law which has continued largely due to oversight and has been brought to special attention because, under existing law, hundreds of thousands of Federal employees would have received, except for a Presidential Executive order, only 6 days off to observe legal holidays in 1959 instead of the eight legal holidays which they had a right to expect and which many other Federal workers received because of variations in their workweeks and without the Presidential Executive order. Similar loss of holiday time off will recur in later years from time to time, by reason of the calendar days on which certain holidays happen to fall in such years. In short, the loss of holidays may be said to be due to accident of the calendar which was not taken into consideration when the Congress laid down the policy of eight legal holidays each year for Federal employees.

This legislation is recommended by the committee with full recognition that certain essential Government services must be provided for the workdays on which employees will be excused to observe legal holidays. Service to business and the public by the postal establishment, for instance, must be maintained, not only as a matter of public convenience and necessity but, also, to prevent the disruption of orderly and expeditious movement of the mails and overloading of storage facilities which would result were post offices and other facilities to be closed down on such days. These and similar necessary Government functions will not be interrupted as a result of this legislation. Management, of course, will take all possible measures to provide adequate service at a minimum cost through appropriate assignment of employees, the granting of compensatory time off where suitable, and careful planning of work schedules.

Mr. PROUTY. In other words, this measure would place in the law what the President already has authority to do?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes. He did it this year. There will not be another such instance for about 2 years.

Mr. PROUTY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to present consideration of House bill 5752?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE IN LIMITATION ON BASIC COMPENSATION OF CIVILIAN KEEPERS OF LIGHTHOUSES

The bill (H.R. 2245) to amend subsection 432(g) of title 14, United States

Code, to increase the limitation on basic compensation of civilian keepers of lighthouses was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2612) to amend the Small Business Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H.R. 8599) to amend the Small Business Act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2611) to amend the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

APPLICATION OF MERCHANT MARINE ACT OF 1936 TO CERTAIN FUNCTIONS RELATING TO FISHING VESSELS

The bill (S. 2481) to continue the application of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, to certain functions relating to fishing vessels transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to permit the efficient execution of functions relating to the issuance of Federal ship mortgage insurance on fishing vessels, pursuant to the Merchant Marine Act of June 29, 1936, as amended (49 Stat. 1985; 46 U.S.C., 1952 edition, sec. 1271 and the following), which functions relating to fishing vessels have been transferred to the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956, the Secretary of the Interior hereafter may exercise authority comparable to the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the said Merchant Marine Act of 1936, including, but not limited to, the authority contained in the amendment to such Act of July 15, 1958 (72 Stat. 358).

Mr. LAUSCHE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to a discussion of Calendar No. 852, S. 2481.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will return to the consideration of Calendar No. 852, S. 2481.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, is this the bill in which it is intended to give to the fishing industry subsidies provided by the Merchant Marine Act?

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, that is not the purpose of this bill. Another bill on the calendar has that purpose, and that bill was passed over.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator from California.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I suggest, since the Senate has returned to the consideration of Calendar No. 852, S. 2481, that I did not object to its consideration. But I do have a request from the Senator that it go over for the purpose of being taken up on motion, on the ground that it is not calendar business. So I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 3610) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to increase grants for construction of sewage treatment works and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, not Consent Calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 155) to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Service Act of 1949, so as to permit donations of surplus property to libraries which are tax supported or publicly owned and operated, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, not Consent Calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADJUSTMENTS IN ANNUITIES UNDER THE FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT SYSTEM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1502) to provide for adjustments in the annuities under the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) The annuity of each retired officer who, on August 1, 1959, is receiving or entitled to receive an annuity from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, based on service which terminated on or before July 31, 1959, shall be increased by 10 per centum.

(b) The annuity otherwise payable from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund to each survivor annuitant who, on August 1, 1959, is receiving or entitled to receive an annuity based on service which terminated on or before July 31, 1959, shall be increased by 10 per centum.

(c) The increases provided by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall take effect on the first day of the first month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. The annuity of each retired officer who, on or after August 1, 1959, is receiving or entitled to receive an annuity from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, based on service which terminated on or after August 1, 1959, shall be increased on the first day of the first month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act or on the commencing date of annuity, whichever is later, in accordance with the following schedule:

If annuity commences between:	Annuity shall be increased by—
September 1, 1959 and June 30, 1960	6 per centum
July 1, 1960 and June 30, 1961	4 per centum
July 1, 1961 and June 30, 1962	2 per centum

SEC. 3. The annuity of any survivor annuitant who, on or after August 1, 1959, is receiving or entitled to receive an annuity from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, based on service which terminated on or after August 1, 1959, shall be increased on the first day of the first month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act or on the commencing date of annuity, whichever is later, in accordance with the following schedule:

If annuity commences between:	Annuity shall be increased by—
September 1, 1959 and June 30, 1960	6 per centum
July 1, 1960 and June 30, 1961	4 per centum
July 1, 1961 and June 30, 1962	2 per centum

SEC. 4. No increase provided by the foregoing provisions of this Act shall be computed on any additional annuity purchased with voluntary contributions pursuant to the provisions of section 881 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended.

SEC. 5. Nothing contained in Public Law 85-882 shall operate to increase any annuity which commences on or after September 1, 1959.

SEC. 6. Section 5 of Public Law 503, Eighty-fourth Congress, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. In any case where a participant under the Foreign Service retirement and disability system died before August 29, 1954, leaving a widow who is not entitled to receive an annuity under the system and who is not receiving benefits under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to grant such widow an annuity of not to exceed $2,400 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a brief statement in support of the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR SPARKMAN

S. 1502 seeks to do two things. First, it would provide a 10-percent increase in the annuities of retired Foreign Service officers and their survivors. Second, it would increase from $1,200 to $2,400 per year the amount of a gratuity which the Secretary of State is authorized to pay to widows of Foreign Service officers who have died leaving such widows without annuities under the Foreign Service retirement system, provided such widows are not receiving benefits under the Federal Employment Compensation Act.

Mr. President, this bill is very much needed. We are all aware of the adverse effect which inflation has upon retired people generally. Retired Government employees are no exception. Several cost-of-living increases in annuities of retired Government personnel have been made during the last few years. Retired Foreign Service officers have sometimes shared in these cost-of-living increases and sometimes not. At the moment retired Foreign Service personnel lag some 10 percent behind other civilian retired people in the receipt of these cost-of-living increases. S. 1502 will place retired Foreign Service personnel and their survivors in the same relative position as retired civil service employees. Mr. President, I regret that this bill will not fully carry out the intent of Congress when it enacted the Foreign Service retirement and disability system. That system aimed at providing comfortable pensions for retired Foreign Service personnel. Inflation has frustrated that legislation objective and the 10-percent increase obtained in this bill will not fully undo the damage.

The original version of this 1502 would have gone a long way toward meeting the objective of the Foreign Service retirement system because it would have tied annuities of persons who have already retired to the annuities of those retiring now. There was objection to this and we have had to settle for less. The 10-percent across-the-board increase is fully supported by the administration.

I shall conclude, Mr. President, in quoting from the recommendation from the Committee on Foreign Relations on S. 1502.

"The Committee on Foreign Relations recommends that the Senate move to repair some of the damage done by inflation to the orderly and adequate retirement system previously established by law for Foreign Service personnel. Upward adjustment of 10 percent in Foreign Service annuities will place retired Foreign Service officers on a par with retired civil service employees. The committee accordingly recommends that the Senate approve S. 1502, as amended."

WONG SUE CHEE

The bill (S. 1696) for the relief of Wong Sue Chee was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That, for the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Wong Sue Chee shall be held and considered to be the minor alien child of Eddie Huie, a citizen of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRSH MARINSKI

The bill (S. 1822) for the relief of Hirsh Marinski was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Hirsh Marinski shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

MILEVA LOVRIC

The bill (S. 2129) for the relief of Mileva Lovric was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Mileva Lovric shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

SERGIUSZ RUDCZENKO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2319) for the relief of Sergiusz Rudczenko.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of my junior colleague. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On the first page, line 3, strike out "section 212 (a)(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "sections 212(a)(6) and 212(a)(15)".

On page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out "this exemption shall apply only to a ground" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "these exemptions shall apply only to grounds".

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, any condition or control which the Attorney General may deem necessary to impose pursuant to the provisions of the first section of this Act shall not be grounds for precluding the classification of Sergiusz Rudczenko as an immigrant under section 203(a)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND The amendment is acceptable, but the Immigration Service informs me that the bill is adequate as it is, and that the amendment would serve no purpose.

Mr. MORSE. The communications which I have received are to the effect that the bill is not adequate as it stands.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Immigration Service has informed the Immigration Subcommittee that the bill is adequate.

Mr. MORSE. Let me read to the Senator an excerpt from a letter which I have received from the Immigration and Naturalization Service, dated September 8, 1959.

The American Ambassador to Poland informed you on July 10, 1959, that an immigrant visa under the first preference portion of the quota for Poland will not be issued because of the beneficiary's inability to go to work at his profession while hospitalized, plus the possibility that the beneficiary may be excludable as likely to become a public charge. Therefore, it appears that the enactment of S. 2319 in its present form will not assure the beneficiary's admission to this country. As the son of a U.S. citizen, the beneficiary is entitled to fourth preference quota status under the quota for Poland with a registration date of November 12, 1958. According to the latest available information, immigrant visas are being issued to such aliens with a registration date prior to January 1, 1958. The district director of this Service at Portland, Oreg., has been instructed to advise and assist Mr. Rudczenko's father in filing a fourth preference visa petition for the beneficiary.

I shall ask to have placed in the RECORD a letter from the man's counsel, who asks for such an amendment. I am offering it only by request.

I wish now to read a paragraph from another communication, from the Ambassador to Poland:

If a private bill were passed in his behalf with the understanding that he would have to enter a sanitarium upon his arrival in the United States, he would no longer be entitled to first preference status since he would be unable to go to work.

The amendment which I have been asked to offer would cover this problem. The immigration authorities have told me that the amendment would clear up the entire situation.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I should like to have the record show that the Immigration Service has informed the subcommittee of the letter which the Senator has received from the Ambassador to Poland. When the bill was reported on the 31st of August, the subcommittee was informed officially that the bill was adequate. We will accept the amendment, but I think the record should show that the subcommittee was informed officially on the 31st of August that the bill was adequate as it was.

Mr. MORSE. I do not question that. I only point out that, as of September 8, the Immigration authorities expressed to me a completely contrary position, and suggested that the amendment would help.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a letter dated July 10, which I received from the Ambassador to Poland; my letter to the chairman of the committee, dated July 30; my letter to the attorney for the individual involved, dated July 30; a letter which I received from the attorney, dated September 5; and a letter which I received from the Commissioner of Immigration dated September 8, in support of my amendment.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Warsaw, Poland, July 10, 1959.

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: I refer to your letter of July 1, 1959, regarding the immigrant visa case of Mr. Sergiusz Rudczenko, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mileti Rudczenko, of Portland. Mr. Rudczenko and his family are applicants under the first-preference portion of the Polish quota and they are being sponsored by Gotteland & Koczarski, architects, 325 Second and Cherry Building, Seattle, Wash.

Mr. Rudczenko was born in Brzesc nad Bugiem, Poland, on August 16, 1930. He is presently residing at Narutowicza 35/8, Lodz, Poland. On January 26, 1955, he married Irena Markiewicz, who was born in Pruzana, Poland, on October 1, 1933. They have a daughter, Malgorzata, who was born in Lodz, Poland, on January 21, 1956. Neither Mr. Rudczenko nor his wife were previously married.

Mr. Rudczenko is a building engineer and he graduated from the Evening School of Engineering in Lodz, Poland, in 1955. He was found ineligible to receive a visa to the United States as of January 2, 1959, under section 212(a)(6) of the Immigration and Nationality Act because of pulmonary tuberculosis. His application can be reconsidered in January 1960.

If a private bill were passed in his behalf with the understanding that he would have to enter a sanatorium upon his arrival in the United States, he would no longer be entitled to first-preference status, since he would be unable to go to work. He and his family would then have to be considered under the nonpreference portion of the Polish quota, with a registration date of November 12, 1958, the date on which the first-preference visa petition was filed in their behalf. At the present time, the nonpreference portion of the Polish quota is heavily oversubscribed and the Embassy is unable to issue visas to applicants in this category who were registered after June 30, 1947.

If the private bill authorizes the issuance of visas to this family ahead of their turn on the quota waiting list, the possibility would still arise as to their ineligibility under section 212(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act as persons who are likely to become public charges, since no information has been submitted to the Embassy as to how Mr. Rudczenko's sanatorium expenses would be met and how his wife and child would be supported until such time as he would be released from the sanatorium and would be able to work to support his family.

I wish to assure you that if a private bill is passed which takes care of all the disqualifications mentioned above, the Embassy would process this family's visa application as expeditiously as possible.

Your continued interest has been noted.

Very truly yours,

JACOB D. BEAM,
Ambassador.

JULY 30, 1959.

Re S. 2319.
Hon. JAMES O. EASTLAND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR EASTLAND: In June of this year Mr. Samuel M. Suwol, an attorney of Portland, Oreg., discussed with me the problems that have been experienced by Mr. Sergiusz Rudczenko in obtaining admission for permanent residence in the United States.

On July 1, I wrote to Mr. Suwol advising of my interest in the matter and informing him that before taking further action I would await the report from the American Consul at Warsaw, as well as the receipt of affidavits to be supplied by Mr. Rudczenko's sponsors. However, on the same date—July 1, 1959—Senator NEUBERGER introduced a bill for the relief of Sergiusz Rudczenko, S. 2319.

In response to my request, Ambassador Beam replied to my inquiry concerning the status of Mr. Rudczenko's case. A copy of the Ambassador's letter, dated July 10, is enclosed.

The statement appearing on page 2 of the Ambassador's report, with reference to possible ineligibility of Mr. Rudczenko and his family under section 212(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, caused me a great deal of concern. For this reason, I discussed the case with legislative counsel. After thoroughly reviewing the matter legislative counsel advised that the adoption of the enclosed amendment to the bill S. 2319 would eliminate any obstacle that might exist under section 212(a)(15) if the proposed relief bill should be enacted.

I urge your serious consideration to the inclusion of the amendment set forth on the attached page.

Sincerely yours,

WAYNE MORSE.

JULY 30, 1959.

Re S. 2319.
Mr. SAMUEL M. SUWOL,
Attorney at Law,
Portland, Oreg.

DEAR MR. SUWOL: Supplementing my letter of July 10, I enclose a copy of a report addressed to me by Ambassador Beam with respect to the immigration status of Mr. Sergiusz Rudczenko.

You will note that on page 2 of the Ambassador's report, the possible application of section 212(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act is discussed. I was concerned over the possibility that, if the bill was not amended to correct the specific matter, a problem of some consequence might confront Mr. Rudczenko at some time in the future. Therefore, after consultation with legislative counsel, I wrote to Senator EASTLAND suggesting the inclusion of my amendment to S. 2319. A copy of my letter to Senator EASTLAND and a copy of the proposed amendment are enclosed.

If you have any questions or comments concerning the amendment, I shall be glad to hear from you. In the meantime, I shall be pleased to do everything possible to obtain speedy enactment of legislation to assist Mr. Rudczenko and his family.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely,

WAYNE MORSE.

PORTLAND, OREG., September 5, 1959.
Re Sergiusz Rudczenko, S. 2319.
Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senator from Oregon,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: Thank you for your kind letter and copy of Report No. 842 of Senate Judiciary Committee on S. 2319.

The thing that troubles me is the following: "Reports favorably thereon without amendment."

As you have written me and the memo from Ambassador Beam indicates, the effect of the passage of the bill without the amendment you proposed would forfeit the first preference status of this young man.

Would you then be so kind as to submit the amendment on the floor of the Senate so that this young man will not lose his first preference? If he loses his first preference he won't be able to come in.

Cordially,

SAM SUWOL.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE,
Washington, D.C., September 8, 1959.
Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: This refers to your interest in the case of Sergiusz Rudczenko, beneficiary of S. 2319, 86th Congress.

S. 2319 would waive the provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act which excludes from admission into the United States aliens who are afflicted with tuberculosis in any form, or with leprosy, or any dangerous contagious disease, and would authorize the issuance of a visa and the beneficiary's admission into the United States for permanent residence, if he is otherwise admissible under that act. It would also direct that his admission be under such conditions and controls as the Attorney General, after consultation with the Surgeon General of the U.S. Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, may deem necesary to impose. The bill would further require that a bond be deposited to insure that the beneficiary shall not become a public charge. It limits the exemption granted the beneficiary to a ground for exclusion known to the Department of State or the Department of Justice prior to the date of its enactment.

The American Ambassador to Poland informed you on July 10, 1959, that an immigrant visa under the first preference portion of the quota for Poland will not be issued because of the beneficiary's inability to go to work at his profession while hospitalized, plus the possibility that the beneficiary may be excludable as likely to become a public charge. Therefore, it appears that the enactment of S. 2319 in its present form will not assure the beneficiary's admission to this country. As the son of a U.S. citizen, the beneficiary is entitled to fourth preference quota status under the quota for Poland with a registration date of November 12, 1958. According to the latest available information, immigrant visas are being issued to such aliens with a registration date prior to January 1, 1958. The district director of this Service at Portland, Oreg., has been instructed to advise and assist Mr. Rudczenko's father in filing a fourth preference visa petition for the beneficiary.

Sincerely,

J. M. SWING,
Commissioner.

Mr. EASTLAND. We accept the amendment.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, like the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I was also informed by the Immigration Service that the amendment offered by my colleague was not necessary to the purposes of the bill. However, like the chairman of the committee, I have no objection whatsoever to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding the provision of sections 212(a)(6) and 212(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Sergiusz Rudczenko may be issued a visa and be admitted to the United States for permanent residence if he is found to be otherwise admissible under the provisions of that Act under such conditions and controls which the Attorney General, after consultation with the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, may deem necessary to impose: Provided, That a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by the Attorney General, be deposited as prescribed by section 213 of the said Act: Provided further, That these exemptions shall apply only to grounds for exclusion of which the Department of State or the Department of Justice has knowledge prior to the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, any condition or control which the Attorney General may deem necessary to impose pursuant to the provisions of the first section of this Act shall not be grounds for precluding the classification of Sergiusz Rudczenko as an immigrant under section 203(a)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

ACQUISITION OF LAND IN VICINITY OF ANY FEDERAL PENAL INSTITUTION

The bill (S. 2347) to amend section 7 of the act of July 28, 1950 (ch. 503, 64 Stat. 381; 5 U.S.C. 341f) to authorize the Attorney General to acquire land in the vicinity of any Federal penal or correctional institution when considered essential to the protection of the health or safety of the inmates of the institution, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 7 of the Act of July 28, 1950 (ch. 503, 64 Stat. 381; 5 U.S.C. 341f) is amended by inserting the words "or in the vicinity of" immediately following the words "adjacent to".

Mr. ENGLE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which Calendar No. 860, S. 2347, was passed, for the purpose of considering the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from California that the House bill is not at the desk. The Parliamentarian has advised the Chair that there is no House bill on this subject at the desk.

Mr. ENGLE. I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California withdraws his request.

The bill (S. 2347) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERNARDINE LOVSE (NADICA LOVSE)

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2321) for the relief of Bernardine Lovse (Nadica Lovse), which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment in line 8, after the word "natural", to strike out "parents" and insert "mother", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of sections 101(a)(27)(A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, Bernardine Lovse (Nadica Lovse), shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Andy Hocevar and Jennie Hocevar, citizens of the United States: Provided, That the natural mother of the said Bernardine Lovse (Nadica Lovse) shall not, by virtue of such parentage, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD PETER GUSTAV BREDEE AND GEORGE EDWARD BREDEE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 231) for the relief of Richard Peter Gustav Bredee and George Edward Bredee, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, in the administration of the immigration and nationality laws, Patricia Crouse Bredee shall be held and considered to have resided in and to have been physically present in the United States for a period of five years after she had attained the age of sixteen years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Patricia Crouse Bredee."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 1665) for the relief of Mrs. Vassiliki P. Theodorou was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROUTY. Over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PROUTY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 863, H.R. 1665, which was previously passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 1665) for the relief of Mrs. Vassiliki P. Theodorou.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CECIL E. FINLEY

The bill (H.R. 2946) for the relief of Cecil E. Finley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PROUTY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which Calendar No. 864, H.R. 2946, was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PROUTY. Over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES IN CIVIL CASES

The bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 1870 of title 28, United States Code, to authorize the district courts to allow additional peremptory challenges in civil cases to multiple plaintiffs as well as multiple defendants was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8277) for the relief of Harold William Abbott and others, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the initials "A. D.", to strike out "Smith" and insert "Smirch".

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 182) referring to S. 2496 to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROUTY. Over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

SYLVESTER L. GARDNER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7225) for the relief of Sylvester L. Gardner, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 2, line 15, after the word "Act", to strike out "in excess of 10 per centum thereof".

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL RULES OF JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

The bill (H.R. 8461) to amend the act of September 2, 1958, establishing a Commission and Advisory Committee on International Rules of Judicial Procedure was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJUSTMENT OF CERTAIN IRRIGATION CHARGES AGAINST NON-INDIAN-OWNED LANDS

The bill (H.R. 839) to approve an order of the Secretary of the Interior adjusting certain irrigation charges against non-Indian-owned lands under the Wapato Indian Irrigation project, Washington, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CERTAIN LAND TO THE NEZ PERCE TRIBE OF IDAHO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2379) to donate to the Nez Perce Tribe of Idaho, 11.25 acres of Federal land in Idaho County, Idaho, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with an amendment in line 4, after the word "land", to insert "and improvements thereon", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in the following-described land and improvements thereon, formerly known as the Kamiah Day School Reserve, is hereby declared to be held by the United States of America in trust for the Nez Perce Tribe: South half east half north half, east half south half, east half west half south half of lot 11, section 7, township 33 north, range 4 east, Boise meridian, in Idaho County, Idaho, containing 11.25 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by me on Calendar No. 880, Senate bill 2379.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

S. 2379 would authorize the gratuitous conveyance of 11.25 acres of Federal land situated in what is known as the Kamiah Reserve.

The property would be used by the Indians for the benefit of the tribal membership.

The conveyance is not subject to objection under the Morse Formula; it represents a carrying out of trust obligations with respect to our American Indians.

EQUALIZATION OF ALLOTMENTS ON THE AGUA CALIENTE RESERVATION, CALIF.

The bill (H.R. 8587) to provide for the equalization of allotments on the Agua Caliente Reservation in California, and for other purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF TRUST INTERESTS IN TRIBAL LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1352) to authorize enrolled members of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., to acquire trust interests in tribal lands of the reservation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, at the beginning of line 4, to strike out "Fort Berthold"; in line 6, after the word "authorized", to insert "notwithstanding the provisions of the constitution of the Three Affiliated Tribes", and on page 2, line 4, after the word "owner", to insert "or in the name of the individual Indian owner without restriction, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Tribal Business Council, of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation, North Dakota, is hereby authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of the constitution of the Three Affiliated Tribes, to dispose of tribal lands within the boundaries of such reservation to any enrolled member of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe. Title to any land conveyed under this Act shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the individual Indian owner, or in the name of the individual Indian owner without restriction, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize enrolled members of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation, North Dakota, to acquire tribal lands of the reservation, and for other purposes."

USE OF FUNDS IN FAVOR OF THE KIOW, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2085) to authorize the use of funds arising from a judgment in favor of the Kiow, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 891, H.R. 7437, an identical House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 7437) to authorize the use of funds arising from a judgment in favor of the Kiow, Comanche, and Arapaho Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2085 is indefinitely postponed.

SALE OF CERTAIN LAND OWNED BY THE CREEK TRIBE OF INDIANS

The bill (S. 2485) to authorize the sale of 40 acres of land owned by the Creek Tribe of Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 892, H.R. 8514, an identical bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 8514) to authorize the sale of 40 acres of land owned by the Creek Tribe of Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2485 is indefinitely postponed.

DIVISION OF TRIBAL ASSETS OF THE CATAWBA INDIAN TRIBE OF SOUTH CAROLINA

The bill (S. 2596) to provide for the division of the tribal assets of the Catawba Indian Tribe of South Carolina among the members of the Tribe and for the purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 895, H.R. 6128, an identical bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 6128) to provide for the division of the tribal assets of the Catawba Indian Tribe of South Carolina among the members of the tribe, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 2596 is indefinitely postponed.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS

The bill (S. 2565) to amend the act of August 9, 1955 (69 Stat. 539), relating to leases of Indian lands, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, on the calendar, as No. 940, is the bill, H.R. 6672, which includes subject matter in S. 2565. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider H.R. 6672, and that the language in H.R. 6672 be stricken and that the language of S. 2565 be substituted therefor, and that the Senate pass the House bill as thus amended.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico whether calendar 940, H.R. 6672, is an identical bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not.

Mr. KEATING. It has been represented to us that the call of the calendar would be terminated at No. 938. Therefore, the bills following that number are bills which we have not had an opportunity to consider. Another calendar call will be held tomorrow morning, and if it would be satisfactory to the Senator from New Mexico, I suggest that we take the House bill up at that time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I prefer to pass the Senate bill. I was merely trying to expedite matters in the final few days. If we could pass the House bill as amended by the Senate language, we could immediately go to conference.

Mr. KEATING. I have no objection to the Senate bill. If the Senator does not intend to object in any way, I think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it fair to say that I thought the decision to terminate the call of the calendar at No. 938 was based upon the fact that reports on bills following that number were not available. The House report on Calendar No. 940, H.R. 6672, is available.

Calendar No. 940, House bill 6672, is available. The House bill relates to only one tribe, whereas the Senate bill relates to three tribes.

Mr. KEATING. The House bill is available; but the members of the calendar committee have not had an opportunity to examine it—or, more properly, I should say the staff has not had an opportunity to do so. Therefore, I did not wish to pass on a measure which I should have examined.

Mr. ANDERSON. I only wish to make plain that I believe we should strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill, and substitute the language of the Senate bill, so that the language of Calendar No. 886, Senate bill 2565, will be before the Senate.

Mr. KEATING. In other words, use the House bill number, but the Senate bill text; is that the Senator's proposal?

Mr. ANDERSON. Exactly.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me inquire of the Senator from New Mexico whether he intends to ask that the language of the House bill be inserted in the Senate bill, in lieu of the present text of the Senate bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I intend to move that all after the enacting clause of the House bill be stricken out, and that the text of the Senate bill be inserted, in lieu thereof.

Mr. ENGLE. Then I object.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 940, House bill 6672; and if that consent is given, I shall ask that all after the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out, and that the text of Senate bill 2565, Calendar No. 886, as proposed to be amended, be inserted, in lieu thereof.

Mr. ENGLE. However, the Senate bill relates to three tribes, whereas the House bill relates to only one tribe.

I understand that the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs wishes to hold hearings on the Seminole Tribe, which is covered by the Senate bill.

I do not wish to obstruct the taking of action on the Senate bill, but I do not want to see the House bill included in the package and then have the entire package fail of enactment. I make this statement because the chairman of the House committee has given us to understand that he will not be willing to have the House proceed with the package bill until his committee has held hearings on the Seminole Tribe.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator from California was formerly, when he was a Member of the House, chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs. He was its chairman for a long time, and he is familiar with the practice there.

Our purpose is to have both bills go to conference and then see what the conferees will do.

The chairman of the House committee certainly would be a member of the conference committee, and at that time he could make such suggestions as he might wish to make.

Mr. ENGLE. That is true. However, inasmuch as the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs has already said he would not be willing to proceed with the bill relating to the Seminoles without holding hearings, we would make a conference on that bill impossible, and, in that event, we would have lost our opportunity to have a bill on this subject enacted into law.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Apparently the Senator from New Mexico is a three-tribe man, not a one-tribe man.

I believe I share his views in regard to being a three-tribe man, not a one-tribe man.

I prefer the language of the Senate bill, and I have no objection to that bill.

Mr. ENGLE. I have no objection, either.

Mr. KEATING. Then why not have the Senate pass the Senate bill, and have it go to conference; and if the conference breaks up, that will not be our problem.

Mr. ANDERSON. Precisely.

I merely say that in the conference there may be objection to including in the bill the provisions in regard to the Seminole Tribe.

But I understand there was no objection to the position taken here in regard to House bill 6672; and I certainly have no objection to it.

Then we would succeed with respect to taking action in regard to two of the tribes, even though we might not succeed in taking action in regard to the Seminoles.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico is always a strong conferee, and it would not be likely that he would recede from the position taken by the Senate. But if he found that he had to do so, we would still succeed in taking action in regard to two of the three tribes.

Mr. ENGLE. I understand there is no objection insofar as the Navajos are concerned.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct.

Of course, my interest in having a conference in this connection is that in the conference the conferees might succeed in taking action in regard to two of the three tribes, whereas otherwise, at this late date, we might not accomplish anything in this connection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of Calendar No. 940, House bill 6672.

Mr. ENGLE. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Is it understood that the action we propose is that all after the enacting clause of House bill 6672 be stricken out, and that there be inserted, in lieu thereof, the text of Senate bill 2565, Calendar No. 886? I do not wish there to be any misunderstanding by my good friend, the Senator from California.

Mr. ENGLE. That is what I understood.

Mr. ANDERSON. And my request is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill, and to insert, in lieu thereof, the text of Senate bill 2565, as proposed to be amended.

Mr. ENGLE. That is my understanding. I also understand that if the bill goes to conference and if there is objection to the inclusion of the provisions in regard to the Seminoles, the Senator from New Mexico, as one of the conferees, will be willing to drop out the provisions in regard to the Seminoles, and to include only the provisions in regard to the Navajos and the Agua Calientes, and to have the bill with the inclusion of those provisions go to the White House.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is my agreement; I have made that statement publicly, and I will stand by it.

Mr. ENGLE. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6672) to authorize longer term leases of Indian lands on the Agua Caliente (Palm Springs) Reservation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause of House bill 6672 be stricken out, and that the text of Calendar No. 886, Senate bill 2565, as proposed to be amended by the committee, be inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 6672) was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2565 will be indefinitely postponed.

MINUTE MAN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, MASS.—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill, H.R. 5892, to provide for the establishment of Minute Man National Historical Park, in Massachusetts, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ENGLE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which House bill 5892 was passed be reconsidered; and that the Senate return to the consideration of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I interpose objection to consideration of the bill at this time; and I ask that the bill go over, as not being calendar business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I have talked to the Senator from California. I understand that he will not object if the bill is brought up by motion, following the calendar.

Mr. ENGLE. That is correct. Personally, I have no objection at all to the bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO BE INCLUDED IN THE INDEPENDENCE NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

The bill (H.R. 6781) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain additional property to be included in the Independence National Historical Park was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO W. A. NOLEN AND WILEY W. WALKER IN YALOBUSHA COUNTY, MISS.

The bill (H.R. 1735) to provide for conveyance of certain real property of the United States in Yalobusha County, Miss., to W. A. Nolen and Wiley W. Walker was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—although I shall not object—I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I have prepared in regard to the bill, in connection with the Morse formula, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

H.R. 1735 is designed to do equity on behalf of persons in possession of certain public lands under color of title.

According to Senate Report No. 858, the 40-acre tract in question was taken by the State of Mississippi for alleged delinquent taxes in 1933, and was deeded by the State to predecessors in interest of Messrs. Nolen and Walker.

Nolen and Walker have been in possession and have improved the property, particularly through the planting of pine seedlings.

The report of the Department of the Interior indicates it has no objection to the proposed conveyance, provided the claimants meet the terms and conditions of the Color of Title Act.

H.R. 1735, as passed by the House of Representatives, contains the color of title provision.

In view of the fact that the bill is designed to do equity and to bring the case within the provisions of the color of title law, the proposed transfer is not objectionable under the Morse formula.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 1735) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUIET TITLE AND POSSESSION TO CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY

The bill (H.R. 4714) to quiet title and possession with respect to certain real property adjacent to the Rocky Mountain Arsenal, Denver, Colo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement I have prepared on this bill, in regard to the relationship of the bill to the Morse formula.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

This bill is designed to remove a cloud on a title of 10 acres of land inadventently included by the United States in a declaration of taking of certain land in the 1940's for use as the Rocky Mountain Arsenal, Colo.

In view of the fact that the Government has no interest in this land, no violation of the Morse formula is involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 4714) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 910) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with Calendar No. 893, Senate bill 910, four letters which I have received from county judges in Oregon, in support of the bill.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YAMHILL COUNTY,
COUNTY COURT,
McMinnville, Oreg., August 27, 1959.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: I would like to take this opportunity to urge your support of S. 910 dealing with payment in lieu of taxes and urge you to contact the following members of the Senate Government Operations Committee: MCCLELLAN, of Arkansas, chairman; JACKSON, of Washington; ERVIN, of North Carolina; HUMPHREY, of Minnesota; GRUENING, of Alaska; MUNDT, of South Dakota; CURTIS, of Nebraska; CAPEHART, of Indiana; and MUSKIE, of Maine.

Sincerely yours,

GUY SHUMWAY,
Commissioner.

JOSEPHINE COUNTY, OREG.,
COUNTY COURT,
Grants Pass, Oreg., March 3, 1959.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: It has been called to the attention of the Josephine County Court that Senator HUMPHREY, of Minnesota, has introduced Senate bill 910 which provides for payment in lieu of taxes on Government property at the local level.

We have discussed this bill and are certainly in favor of the provisions of the bill. I am sure that you are fully aware of the problems that local government have when called upon to give the ordinary local services—school, road, street lighting, sewage disposal, local law enforcement—all that are necessary at the local level with only part of the property on the local tax base.

We hope that you will see fit to actively support this bill and see that it is passed at this session of Congress.

With kindest personal regards.

Very truly yours,

RAYMOND A. LATHROP,
County Judge.

HOOD RIVER COUNTY COURT,
Hood River, Oreg., February 13, 1959.

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We need all the support we can get on Senate bill 910. Any assistance you can give will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE W. KRIEG,
County Commissioner.

BAKER COUNTY,
Baker, Oreg., February 10, 1959.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senator for Oregon,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: I would appreciate very much if you would take a few minutes of your time and look at S. 910 bill. This is the bill that has to do with payments in lieu of taxes.

The Association of Oregon Counties has been the leader in trying to get a payments-in-lieu-of-taxes bill enacted. In recent years the National Association of County Officials has also supported this measure.

If this bill is one that you could support, I would appreciate if you would do so. If this bill is to your liking, I am sure it will lend tremendous influence to it if you cosponsor it.

Any help that you could give us in this matter would be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

LLOYD REA,
County Judge.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (H.R. 6249) to liberalize the tariff laws for works of art and other exhibition material, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. ENGLE. The language of this bill is already covered by a bill which presently is at the White House, and we understand it will be signed by the President.

I would ask unanimous consent that this bill be indefinitely postponed, and also that Calendar No. 765, which deals with a similar matter, likewise be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KEATING. Is this the bill which was discussed at such length and with such vigor and enthusiastic oratory, in connection with the subject of wood moldings?

Mr. ENGLE. Yes; and the Senator from New Mexico also participated in that debate.

Let me say that our meritorious provision in that bill was stricken out by means of an amendment of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH], although over our vigorous protests. Nevertheless, that provision was stricken out of the bill.

The bill is now at the White House. Therefore, this bill is unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, House bill 6249 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. ENGLE. I make the same request in regard to Calendar No. 765.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Calendar No. 765, House bill 4576, to suspend for a temporary period the duty on book bindings and covers imported by certain institutions, will likewise be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2568) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, with respect to cooperation with States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. By request, I ask that this bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, let me say that I think I concur with the position of the Senator from California, in that the bill may not be calendar business.

The able Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], formerly a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and I have discussed this matter many times. The Senator from Iowa thought it might be possible to have the bill passed during the call of the Consent Calendar.

I have no objection to the attitude taken by the able Senator from California. I only suggest that there might be some question whether the next measure on the calendar would also need to go over.

Mr. ENGLE. I have no personal objection; but I have received from another Senator a request that the bill go over.

Mr. ANDERSON. I recognize that; and I have no criticism of the action taken.

AMENDMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1954

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2569) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Atomic Energy, with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "section 91 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, is amended by adding the following subsection d.:

"'d. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, in the event there is a delivery to the Department of Defense, pursuant to subsection b. (1) of this section, or manufacture, production, or acquisition by the Department of Defense, pursuant to subsection b. (2) of this section, in accordance with a directive issued by the President under subsection b. of this section, the President may, to the extent he deems necessary in the national interest, authorize the Department of Defense to establish and prescribe standards or instructions applicable to special nuclear material or atomic weapons so delivered or atomic weapons or utilization facilities so manufactured, produced, or acquired, in order to protect health and minimize danger to life or property.'"; on page 2, at the beginning of line 7, to strike out "SEC. 2. Subsection" and insert "subsection", and at the beginning of line 11, to change the section number from "3" to "2"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection 161 m. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, is amended by striking out "Section 103 or 104" and inserting in lieu thereof "Section 103, 104, 53 a. (4), or 63 a. (4)".

SEC. 2. Section 163 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "from receiving compensation" the following words "from a source other than a nonprofit educational institution".

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may file a statement in connection with this bill, which may be helpful in understanding it, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 161 AND SECTION 163—STATEMENT BY SENATOR ANDERSON

S. 2569 is a bill recommended by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy to make two minor amendments to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. The purpose of the amendments is explained in the committee report (S. Rept. No. 871) which also includes as an appendix, a statement by AEC Chairman John A. McCone, indicating the reasons why the AEC had requested these amendments.

As indicated by the committee amendments, the Joint Committee deleted section 1 of the bill because the committee concluded that more consideration is needed by the AEC and the Department of Defense on the subject matter covered by the original section 1. The two agencies have been requested to review the subject of their respective responsibilities for safety of nuclear materials, atomic weapons, and military reactors under the control of the Department of Defense and to present a report to the Joint Committee for further consideration during the next session of Congress.

Section 1 of the bill as reported out (original sec. 2) amends subsection 161m of the Atomic Energy Act to authorize the Commission to enter into agreements for the performance of certain services by the Commission with material licensees, as well as with facility licensees, as presently authorized by the act. Mr. McCone testified that it would be a convenience both to the industry and to the Commission if the Commission could enter into such agreements with material licensees, or fuel suppliers.

Section 2 of the bill as reported out (sec. 3 of the original bill) amends section 163 of the act to provide that members of AEC advisory committees, particularly the General Advisory Committee, will not be subject to conflict of interest statutes merely because of compensation received from nonprofit educational institutions.

The reasons for the recommended amendments, as well as the AEC statement in support thereof, are set forth in the committee report.

Mr. President, I urge all members to pass this bill, as amended by the Joint Committee.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1892) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Norman project, Oklahoma, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF RECLAMATION PROJECT ACT OF 1939—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 1778) to amend section 17(b) of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEATING. Over.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from New York will withhold his objection for just a moment. This bill may not be calendar business. I merely desire to say that year after year after year, time after time after time, we have presented this measure, every 2 or 3 years. This is certainly as nonpolitical a bill as I have seen. We have trusted Secretaries of the Interior and, without exception, they have handled the trust in admirable fashion. I will not question the Senator from New York if he thinks it is not calendar business. I only say we do this every 2 or 3 years. It occurred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs it might be well to do this once and for all, and forget it. The Secretary concurs in that viewpoint. The Bureau of the Budget concurs in that viewpoint. I hope the Senator from New York will not be constrained to object, although I would agree with him in advance this might not be regarded as calendar business.

Mr. KEATING. I simply want to say I do not feel too strongly, personally, about it, and I know that this is legislation requested by the Department of the Interior, but it would make permanent the 1939 statute, which has been extended from time to time, the latest extension expiring December 31, 1960.

By taking this action to make it permanent, a measure of control over the Interior Department in exercising its present temporary authority may well be lost. Therefore, it seems to me that serious consideration should be given to an amendment to provide a simple extension of authority up to a further fixed period of time.

If the Senator from New Mexico felt disposed to amend the bill before us for a 2- or 3-year extension, I would have no objection. Otherwise I feel it is a measure which should have discussion by being called up by motion, which is not possible at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course the Senator from New York is well within his rights in objecting. We tried to short-circuit the time on the floor by making this proposal. I have no authority to change the terms of the bill. I therefore recognize the objection of the Senator as being valid.

Mr. KEATING. I have no objection to the measure being called up for consideration by motion today or any other time, but I do not think it is proper calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL BOATING ACT OF 1958

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2598) to amend the Federal Boating Act of 1958 to extend until January 1, 1961, the period when certain provisions of that act will take effect, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "thereof", to strike out "January 1, 1961" and insert "April 1, 1961"; in line 9, after the word "thereof", to strike out "January 1, 1961" and insert "April 1, 1961", and on page 2, line 3, after the word "thereof", to strike out "January 1, 1961" and insert "April 1, 1961"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) paragraph (8) of subsection (c) of section 3 of the Federal Boating Act of 1958 is amended by striking out "April 1, 1960," and inserting in lieu thereof "April 1, 1961,".

(b) Subsection (b) of section 11 of the Federal Boating Act of 1958 is amended by striking out "April 1, 1960." and inserting in lieu thereof "April 1, 1961.".

(c) Section 12 of the Federal Boating Act of 1958 is amended by striking out "April 1, 1960," and inserting in lieu thereof "April 1, 1961.".

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 901, H.R. 8728, which is a similar House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 8728) to amend the Federal Boating Act of 1958, to extend for an additional year the period when certain provisions of that act will take effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8728).

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I move to amend H.R. 8728 by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the language of S. 2598 as amended. I do that because, although they are practically identical bills, an error was made in the House bill, and for that reason we want to pass the House bill with the Senate language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill (H.R. 8728) was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill S. 2598 is indefinitely postponed.

AIR POLLUTION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7476) to extend for 2 additional years the authority of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with respect to air pollution.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, there is an amendment at the desk which represents the text of the air-pollution legislation as it passed the Senate several months ago. The amendment is offered on behalf of the able senior Senator from New Mexico, the able senior Senator from Oklahoma, and myself, all of whom desire, if there is no objection by the calendar committees, to substitute the language of the previously passed Senate bill for the language of the House bill. I shall be glad to discuss it.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KUCHEL. I yield.

Mr. ENGLE. I desire to join my colleague in this amendment. The House passed a simple extension of the act. The Senate bill is a much more comprehensive and a much better worked-out piece of legislation. We desire to substitute the language of the Senate bill which previously passed the Senate, and send the bill back to conference.

Mr. KUCHEL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, all of us recognize the merit of the Air Pollution Control Act which was enacted in 1955. This act authorized a program for research and technical assistance to obtain data and to devise and develop methods for control and abatement of air pollution. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, were charged with the responsibility of its administration.

In April of this year, this body approved Senate bill 441, as amended, extending the present 5-year act for a period of 4 years and increased the authorization for annual appropriations from $5 million to $7.5 million. A short time ago the other body approved H.R. 7476, extending the act 2 additional years with no change in the authorized appropriations of $5 million a year.

Both committees clearly recognized that air pollution is a national problem and, as yet, still unsolved. While substantial progress toward solution has been made on all levels of government and industry, the committees were fully aware that the problem of air pollution will remain with us for a good many years to come, notwithstanding the effective and outstanding work already accomplished under the auspices of this act.

Mr. President, I believe there is no doubt in this body that it is in the national interest to continue the Air Pollution Control Act. Both committees after intensive study were of this opinion. The only question remaining then is the term of this continuance.

This is not a partisan issue. This is not a sectional nor an economic issue. This is in the nature of a scientific problem. We must look to the scientists, the air pollution experts, if we are to arrive at a reasoned logical answer.

What say the scientists? Dr. Theodore Bauer, of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, in his testimony before a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives on May 19, 1959, made the following observations:

1. That, to date, the development of air pollution problems has outpaced the accumulation of scientific knowledge needed to deal with them.

2. In the future it appears inevitable, in addition to increasing urbanization, that new technology will produce greater potential for total air pollution, both in quantity and in variety.

3. Continued research and application of its results will be needed to keep abreast of these problems.

4. The air pollution program authorization should be extended without any specific termination date.

I am not a scientist, but these observations and recommendations of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare make good sense. Research in any field should not be unduly hampered if it is to be of maximum effectiveness. Some types of projects take years to complete. By definition, basic, original research is incompatible with a time boundary. The breakthrough may come tomorrow, next year, 5 years, 50 years, or never. Air pollution and its solution involves this type of research and study.

Therefore, it follows that we should use a "maximum" type of approach rather than a "minimum" type in extending this act. If the Congress desires reports from time to time, this can be accomplished by other means.

It would be most foolish, and contrary to the national interest, to force the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Surgeon General to observe a 2-year deadline in planning and executing research and study projects.

Likewise with the trend towards greater urbanization of our population and the increasing incidence of air pollution we should liberalize the amount of funds to be expended toward the solution of one of modern civilization's most vexing problems. The Senate Public Works

Committee and the Senate as a body recognized this need. In addition, the increase provided by S. 441 acknowledged the fact that our dollar buys less today than it did 5 years ago.

Mr. President, at the very least we should insist upon the enactment of S. 441. To do less would be a tragic disservice to the great majority of our people who live and work in the cities of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from California for himself and other Senators will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 1 to strike out lines 3 through 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section 5 of the Act of July 14, 1955 (42 U.S.C. 1857(d)), is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a)" after "SEC. 5.",

(2) after $5,000,000 in the first sentence insert a comma and the following "and for each of the four fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1960, and ending June 30, 1964, not to exceed $7,500,000",

(3) by inserting "for surveys and studies and" before "for research" in clauses (1) and (2) of such first sentence, and

(4) by striking out "by the Surgeon General" in the last sentence.

SEC. 2. Such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 8. It is hereby declared to be the intent of the Congress that any Federal department or agency having jurisdiction over any building, installation or other property shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of the United States and within any available appropriations cooperate with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and with any interstate agency or any State or local government air pollution control agency in preventing or controlling the pollution of the air in any area insofar as the discharge of any matter from or by such property may cause or contribute to pollution of the air in such area."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to extend the duration of the Federal air pollution control law, and for other purposes."

LEASING OF LAND ON THE COLORADO RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ. AND CALIF.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2286) to authorize the leasing of land on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz. and Calif., and for other purposes.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I have an amendment pending at the desk, which I should like to call up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from California will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 1, line 8, immediately after the word "reservation", to insert "which are located within Arizona".

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President——

Mr. KUCHEL. I shall be glad to make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I think the Senator should.

Mr. KUCHEL. The able junior Senator from Arizona has sponsored the bill now before us to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to execute leases on the lands of the Colorado River Indian Reservation in both Arizona and California.

The Colorado River apparently, over the years, has meandered from one location to another, and I think it is probably true there is a question of what property constitutes Government-owned land and what properties constitute privately owned land.

The Palo Verdi Irrigation District, located on the California side of the Colorado River, objects to that part of the bill dealing with the land located in California and urges that in those instances where there may be a dispute as to the ownership of the property involved simply quieting title by legal action is available to the Government and the private landowners to resolve the dispute.

I have spoken to my friend from Arizona. He will accept the amendment.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, there is some dispute over the ownership of the land. In fact, there is an intimation that the owners will go to the Supreme Court on a question concerning the waters of the river. I have no objection to accepting the amendment. While the land is Indian land, it is not too close to the river and not much of it has been developed. It will be very helpful if the bill is passed by both Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, until a determination has been made of the beneficial ownership of the lands on the Colorado River Reservation, Arizona and California, that were set apart by the United States for the Indians of the Colorado River and its tributaries, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease any unassigned lands on the reservation which are located within Arizona and to approve leases made by the holders of assignments heretofore made, for such uses and terms as are authorized by the Act of August 9, 1955 (59 Stat. 539), and by the Act of May 11, 1938 (52 Stat. 347). Income received from such leases of unassigned lands may be expended or advanced by the Secretary for the benefit of the Colorado River Indian tribes and their members. Income received from such leases of assigned lands may be expended or advanced by the Secretary for the benefit of the assignee.

The title was amended so as to read: "An Act to authorize the leasing of certain land in Arizona which comprises a part of the Colorado River Indian Reservation, and for other purposes."

EXEMPTIONS FROM ADMISSIONS TAX BENEFITING CRIPPLED CHILDREN

The bill (H.R. 4857) to amend section 4233 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the exemptions from the admissions tax for athletic games benefiting crippled or retarded children, shall apply where the participants have recently attended designated schools or colleges as well as where they are currently students, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an explanation of H.R. 4857.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF H.R. 4857

This bill amends two of the exemptions from the admissions tax to provide that in determining whether an athletic game is played between students from elementary or secondary schools, or colleges, where the proceeds inure to a hospital for crippled children, or an exempt organization operated exclusively for the benefit of retarded children, the term "student" is to include anyone who was a student at the school or college within the 8 months immediately before the athletic game. This will make the exemption available for all-star and other similar benefit games even though the game is played shortly after the end of the school or college year. This is to be effective for amounts paid on or after the date of enactment. The bill, which is favored by the Treasury Department, was reported unanimously by your committee.

CHANGES IN CERTAIN EXCISE TAX LAWS

The bill (H.R. 8725) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to make technical changes in certain excise tax laws, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an explanation of H.R. 8725.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF H.R. 8725 WHICH MAKES TECHNICAL CHANGES IN CERTAIN EXCISE TAX LAWS

(1) It deletes from the tax on jewelry "coral" when sold as a stone and not as a part of a piece of mounted jewelry.

(2) It makes it clear that the exemptions from the retailers, manufacturers, communications, and transportation-of-persons taxes for nonprofit educational organizations include parochial schools which are merely an activity of a church as well as those which are separate educational organizations. It also makes a similar modification in the case of the exemption for nonprofit educational organizations in the case of the admissions tax.

(3) It modifies the exemption from the club dues tax presently available in the case of capital improvements. This exemption is to be available for payments for capital improvements, whether made in connection with the dues tax or the initiation tax, which are spent for the construction or reconstruction within the 3 year period after the club receives the amount from the member. In addition, the exemption is to be available with respect to furnishings and fixtures for the use of the facility constructed or reconstructed.

(4) It restores the exemption, in the case of the communications taxes, formerly provided for common carriers and communication companies in the case of leased wires now classified as general telephone service which connect two stations for which a toll charge would otherwise be made.

(5) It modifies the documentary stamp tax applicable to transfers to make it apply in the case of stock rights or warrants on the basis of the value of the rights or warrants rather than on the basis of the value of the underlying stock.

(6) It reduces from $250 to $10 the occupational tax applicable to so-called claw, crane, or digger machines used at carnivals or fairs where the charge is not in excess of 10 cents, the merchandise prizes provided have a value of not more than $1 and the machines are activated by a nonelectrical mechanism.

FURTHER DETAILED EXPLANATION OF H.R. 8725 WHICH MAKES TECHNICAL CHANGES IN CERTAIN EXCISE TAX LAWS

1. Deletion of coral from the list of semiprecious stones subject to the 10 percent jewelry tax

Before the enactment of the Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958 there was included in the base of the 10 percent retail tax on jewelry and related items "pearls, precious and semiprecious stones, and imitations thereof." However, the Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958 deleted the reference to "precious and semiprecious stones, and imitations thereof" and substituted a specific list of stones which are subject to tax.

Among the stones specifically listed in the 1958 act was coral. However, it has been found that although some coral is sold for use as a gem, most of it is sold as ornamentation of fish bowls. In addition, coral has a relatively small value unless combined with mountings or settings. In view of this the Ways and Means Committee omitted coral from the list of stones subject to tax.

Necklaces, or other articles of adornment, containing coral, will continue to be taxable, however, under another provision of the tax on jewelry.

This change is to become effective as of the beginning of the first month starting more than 10 days after the date of enactment of this bill.

2. Certain nonprofit educational organizations

The Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958 provided an exemption for nonprofit educational organizations in the case of retailers' excises, manufacturers' excises, the taxes on communications services and the tax on the transportation of persons.

Under the 1958 act these exempt nonprofit educational organizations were defined as educational organizations described in section 503(b)(2) of the code which are exempt from income tax under section 501(a). Section 503(b)(2) of the code refers to "an educational organization which normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and normally has a regular enrolled body of pupils or students in attendance at the place where its educational activities are regularly carried on."

Questions have been raised as to whether the reference to educational organizations in this definition covers parochial schools which are merely an activity of a church and not separate corporate entities. In accord with the general view of the intent of Congress, the Treasury took the position that the exemption for nonprofit educational organizations did cover these parochial schools. The bill amends the code on this point so that it clearly reflects this position.

The code also contains an exemption from the admissions taxes for educational institutions described in section 503(b)(2) which are exempt from income tax under section 501(a). Although this was not provided by the 1958 act, the Ways and Means Committee, for purposes of consistency and uniformity in excise tax administration, added a clause specifically including within this exemption schools carried on as an activity of other exempt religious, educational, charitable, etc., organizations, in the same manner as in the case of the other taxes.

The amendments relating to the changes made by the Technical Changes Act of 1958 are made as of the general effective date for title I of that act, namely, January 1, 1959.

The amendment to the admissions tax exemption is to be effective as of the beginning of the first month starting more than 10 days after the date of enactment of this bill.

3. Exemption for capital improvement in the case of the club dues tax

In the case of the 20 percent club dues tax, the Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958 provided an exemption for assessments for capital improvements. Operating experience under this exemption has suggested to the Treasury the desirability of several refinements in this exemption.

First, reference to exemptions only for assessments for capital improvements has limited the application of the exemption to dues, since the term "dues" is defined as including any assessment. This prevents an exemption for initiation fees, even though the amounts collected are used for the construction or reconstruction of otherwise qualifying capital improvements. As a result, the bill provides an exemption for amounts paid for dues or membership fees or as initiation fees (instead of referring only to assessments since this only covers dues).

Second, the exemption is not available in the case of assessments for furnishings and equipment since such amounts are not the facility being constructed or reconstructed. This has presented problems to the Treasury in trying to allocate assessments between the nontaxable portion for construction and the taxable portion for furnishings and fixtures, particularly when the club itself does not know in advance how the assessment will be divided. Therefore, the bill provides an exemption, not only in the case of the construction or reconstruction of a facility, but also for furnishings or equipment (including installation charges) for such a facility. To qualify, the furnishings or equipment must be necessary for use of the facility upon the completion of the work. For example, this would include required furniture, drapes, carpeting, refrigerators, etc., for a new facility, or for any portion of an existing facility which is reconstructed.

Third, there is no indication in the present exemption as to how long after the payment of the assessment the construction or reconstruction may occur, or how specific the plans must be for this construction or reconstruction. As a result, the exemption is limited by the bill to amounts spent within 3 years after the date of payment by the club member. The tax on amounts not so spent becomes payable immediately after the expiration of the 3-year period, and in this case is payable by the club rather than the member. The shift in the incidence of the tax is provided because of the problem which would otherwise be presented in attempting to trace back to members of the club 3 years earlier.

These changes are made effective for amounts paid on or after the first day of the first month beginning more than 10 days after the date of enactment of this bill.

4. Exemption for certain telephone lines used by common carriers, or communications companies

The Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958 made a major revision in the terminology and definitions of the taxable types of communications services.

One of the former taxable categories was "leased wire, teletypewriter, or talking circuit special service." Most of this old category is now in what is called wire mileage service. However, a portion now appears in the category known as general telephone service.

Formerly, leased wires were included in local telephone service when they were entirely within a local exchange area. The 1958 act, however, dropped this distinction and instead included in general telephone service, service which may be connected to a telephone exchange. As a result, "general telephone service" now includes some of the leased wire services beyond a local exchange area.

The problem with which the bill is concerned relates to the exemption previously provided for "leased wire, teletypewriter, or talking circuit special services" in the case of common carriers (such as the railroads, airlines, and trucking companies) and telephone, telegraph, and radio broadcasting companies. The exemption for these carriers or communication companies was continued by the 1958 act for those services classified as "wire mileage service." It is not available, however, for the wire services classified as general telephone services. The denial of this existing exemption was not intended in the 1958 act and the bill therefore corrects this oversight.

The bill deals with this problem by providing an exemption for any telephone line constituting general telephone service used by a common carrier, telephone or telegraph company, or radio company in the conduct of its business. However, this new exemption is available only if the telephone line connects stations between any two of which there would be a toll charge in the case of the usual telephone service. This limitation is in lieu of the former restriction to the effect that not all of the leased wire could be in a local exchange area for the exemption to be available.

These changes are made effective as if they had been enacted as a part of the Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958 at the time of its enactment and thus is effective back to January 1, 1959. This will assure continuity of the exemption applicable to leased wire services.

5. Measure for documentary stamp transfer tax in the case of stock rights on warrants

Before the passage of the Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1958, the documentary stamp transfer tax in the case of stock was based primarily on the par or face value of the certificates or shares. The 1958 act changed this to a tax of 4 cents per $100 based on the actual value of the shares.

A problem has arisen with this "actual value" tax in the case of stock rights and warrants. The statute imposes a tax on the "rights to subscribe for or to receive" shares or certificates of stock. However, the only tax base referred to in the statute is the actual value of the certificates or of the shares. As a result, the Treasury has held that in the case of the transfer of rights to subscribe for, or to receive, stock, the tax is based, not on the value of the rights sold, but rather on the value of the underlying shares of stock to be acquired upon the exercise of the rights. Thus, the tax imposed in the case of stock rights or warrants may be several times the tax which would result from taxing the value of the rights or warrants.

The discrimination referred to can be illustrated by an example. Assume a person sells for $1,000 a block of 100 warrants to buy a specific stock at $20 a share. Assume further that the stock is then selling for $29 a share with the result that the 100 shares of stock underlying the warrants have a value of $2,900. Under present law at a rate of 4 cents per $100 of this value, this means a stamp tax of $1.16 on the block of 100 warrants. However, if the tax were based on the value of the warrants, namely, the $1,000, rather than the value of the stock, the tax would be 40 cents or about a third of the tax now imposed.

The bill corrects this problem by basing the tax in the case of "rights to subscribe for or to receive" shares or certificates on the actual value of the "rights" rather than on the actual value of the shares or certificates.

This change is to be effective as of the first day of the first month beginning more than 10 days after the date of enactment of this bill.

6. Gaming devices commonly known as claw, crane, and digger machines

Under present law an occupational tax of $10 per year is levied with respect to a music or amusement machine or with respect to certain 1-cent vending machines dispensing merchandise prizes with a retail value of not more than 5 cents. Other slot or gaming machines are subject to an occupational tax of $250 per year per machine.

Included in with the gaming machines are certain so-called claw, crane, and digger machines. The bill provides that these claw, crane, or digger machines are to be subject to a $10 a year tax, instead of the regular $250 gaming machine tax, if the following four conditions are met:

(1) The charge for each operation of the machine is not more than 10 cents;

(2) The prizes dispensed by the machine are merchandise with a retail value of not more than $1, there is no advertisement to the effect that any prize other than that dispensed by the machine is offered, and no such other prize is given;

(3) The device is activated by a crank and has a nonelectrical mechanism; and

(4) The device is not operated other than in connection with carnivals or county or State fairs.

This amendment is made effective for periods beginning after June 30, 1960.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, with regard to Calendar No. 905, I have an amendment at the desk which proposes to allow a tax exemption, as a charitable contribution, for contributions made privately to the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund, provided that the contributions were actually used for the Fund's purposes in the United States or any of its possessions.

Mr. President, this has no relation, obviously, to the text of the bill. It was hoped, in view of the lateness of the session, that the amendment might be attached to the bill in order to carry the idea over to the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, we have been unable to obtain reports from the appropriate Government departments, particularly the Treasury Department. I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Finance that this is a desirable and needed bill, and hence I shall not press my amendment and I shall not press any objection.

Mr. President, I wish to invite to the attention of the Senate what is really a pretty shameful proposition. If an individual American makes a contribution to the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund, one of the most humanitarian and heartfelt causes on earth, that contribution is not tax deductible because the law does not cover the Fund.

Mr. President, the entire amount involved is estimated at about $10,000 a year. The reason why we have not yet heard from the Treasury Department is that the Treasury Department is troubled about various charitable contributions which go for eleemosynary and philanthropic purposes abroad. I do not know how the Treasury Department is going to resolve that problem.

There are a great number of extremely desirable causes to which Americans ought to be permitted to contribute, which do good work abroad. However, I point out with respect to UNICEF, the contributions are to be used in the United States. It would be sheer "mumbo jumbo" to say that UNICEF ought to organize an American charitable corporation. In addition, that might discourage gifts which would go from Americans directly to UNICEF.

Mr. President, I shall not seek to hold up action on Calendar No. 905. That would be unfair. My great affection for the chairman of the committee and my great reliance on his views dictate that I not do so. I simply want to have this matter before the Senate. I believe I shall have the cooperation of a great many members of the Committee on Finance, and I hope of the Treasury Department, in order to be able to do this highly desirable thing at the earliest possible date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of H.R. 8725?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 8725) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PROSPECTING PERMITS FOR PHOSPHATE

The bill (S. 2061) to authorize the issuance of prospecting permits for phosphate in lands belonging to the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to passage of the bill. In fact, I think it is a good thing for prospecting for phosphate to go forward on the public lands of the United States, particularly in the Western areas where there are great deposits and where the deposits ought to be better utilized for the service of our whole Nation.

However, we have problems in our State not on the public lands but on lands which at one time belonged to the United States, as to which reservations have been made of phosphate and mineral rights. Those problems are of various kinds. For instance, in some cases there have been residential developments on those lands, and there is still no easy method of getting quitclaim deeds or any surrender of the phosphate rights of the United States. In other cases, there have been relatively small acreages which have been mined all the way around. There is no chance to return to them, so the phosphate values have been lost. There are other problems which I shall not take the time of the Senate to relate for the record.

I understand that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs is quite conversant with the fact that we have these problems and has every intention of making a special study of them early next year, with the hope of reporting proposed legislation which will make possible various solutions, as the facts may require.

I have conferred on this matter with my distinguished friend the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. Moss], one of the authors of the pending bill, and I should like to ask the Senator for the record whether my understanding is correct that his able committee is instigating a study of the subject which I have mentioned, the subject of phosphate and mineral reservations in Florida, with the hope of bringing forward early next year proposed legislation which will make it possible for us to solve those problems to the advantage both of the Nation and of the private owners of the surface rights?

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I assure the distinguished Senator from Florida that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs does intend to conduct a study early next year in an attempt to find a solution for the problems presented by the Senator from Florida.

The bill presently under consideration applies only to public lands, and would not affect the situation described by the distinguished Senator. We recognize that there is a problem because of the reservation of the mineral rights by the Federal Government in many lands in Florida and in other areas. I assure the Senator we will go forward with hearings and find a solution to that problem as soon as possible.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friend. I am thoroughly satisfied with the bill. I want to make it clear that we in Florida are in support of the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2061) to authorize the issuance of prospecting permits for phosphate in lands belonging to the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) section 9 of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437, 440), as amended (30 U.S.C. 211), is further amended by the insertion of an (a) at the beginning of the section and by the addition of the two following subsections:

"(b) Where prospecting or exploratory work is necessary to determine the existence or workability of phosphate deposits in any unclaimed, undeveloped area, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue, to any applicant qualified under this Act, a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for phosphate deposits, including associated minerals, for a period of two years, for not more than two thousand five hundred and sixty acres; and if prior to the expiration of the permit the permittee shows to the Secretary that valuable deposits of phosphate have been discovered within the area covered by his permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for any or all of the land embraced in the prospecting permit.

"(c) Any phosphate permit issued under this section may be extended by the Secretary for such an additional period, not in excess of four years, as he deems advisable, if he finds that the permittee has been unable, with reasonable diligence, to determine the existence or workability of phosphate deposits in the area covered by the permit and desires to prosecute further prospecting or exploration, or for other reasons warranting such an extension in the opinion of the Secretary."

(b) Section 12 of the Mineral Leasing Act (41 Stat. 437, 441), as amended (30 U.S.C., sec. 214), is further amended by the insertion of the words "or permit" immediately after the word "lease" wherever it appears.

(c) The ninth sentence of section 27 of the Mineral Leasing Act (41 Stat. 437, 448), as amended (30 U.S.C., sec. 184), is further amended by the insertion of the words "or permits" immediately after the words "phosphate leases".

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PROUTY. Over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEASING A PORTION OF TWIN CITIES ARSENAL, MINN.—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 2449) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to lease a portion of Twin Cities Arsenal, Minn., to Independent School District No. 16, Minnesota, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Over, Mr. President, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I withhold the request.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask to have it printed and lie on the table, for consideration when the bill is considered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the desk.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement about the bill.

Mr. President, H.R. 2449 would authorize the Secretary of the Army to lease, without consideration and for a 2-year period, to Independent School District No. 16, Minnesota, certain space in one of the buildings at the Twin Cities Arsenal, Minneapolis.

In 1950, the Army leased the building for $12,000 per annum, less $1,000 estimated for maintenance. The building is now occupied by the district on a 5-year lease beginning July 1, 1958, revocable at will by the Secretary of the Army.

The Senate Armed Services Committee has been advised that the district cannot afford the present rent payment. In fact, a letter from the Secretary of the Army to the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, dated May 8, 1959, indicates that the school district concluded the most it could pay was $2,500 per annum.

The Secretary of the Army opposes H.R. 2449 since it would provide relief for one school district alone.

H.R. 2449, as reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee, violates the Morse formula.

My amendment would provide for the payment of 50 percent of the fair market value of the leasehold interest.

I think that is fair, Mr. President. If it is legislative assistance which is needed in order to pay the rent, which is a fair rent, Mr. President—particularly made more fair by my amendment, which would provide for only 50 percent of the value of the leasehold interest—I suggest they should turn to legislative bodies in the State of Minnesota and not to the Federal legislative body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California renew his request?

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO THE COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

The bill (H.R. 2247) to authorize the conveyance of certain real property of the United States to the county of Sacramento, Calif., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a brief statement on the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

I wish to point out that the bill involves, in a way, the exchange of services. I am satisfied from the financial accounting which has been submitted to me that the Federal Government will get a fair trade out of the proposed exchange. If the Federal Government had to build the sewage facilities which the county proposes to give it in this exchange, the Federal Government would have to pay much more than it could possibly get from the sale of the Government facilities. I am satisfied, after having made very careful search into the money values involved that the Federal Government is not losing by this exchange.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

This bill would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to convey the Camp Kohler sewage treatment plant to Sacramento County without consideration.

Senate Report No. 896 indicates that the plant was constructed during World War II at a cost of $128,770 to the Government.

The report does not clearly indicate the Federal benefits involved in this gratuitous transfer, other than the agreement of the county (sec. 3 of H.R. 2247) to process without charge to the Government all sewage and waste water from two installations at the Camp Kohler Annex.

No monetary value is placed on this service.

The Department of the Air Force advised me in a telephone conversation today that the value of the sewage service to be rendered by the county is $1,100 per annum.

Inasmuch as a public use is involved, the Morse formula would require payment of 50 percent of fair appraised market value of the property to be transferred.

The depreciated value of the facility that originally cost $128,770 would be offset in a relatively short period of time by the $1,100 annual sewage service to be rendered by the county. This service would be of unlimited duration.

The $485,000 in improvements to the sewage plant was added by the county pursuant to the terms of a written lease entered into in 1955.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 8315) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to lease a part of Fort Crowder, Mo., to Stella Reorganized Schools R–I, Missouri, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PROUTY. Over.

Mr. MORSE. If the Senator will withhold his objection for just a moment——

Mr. PROUTY. I withhold my objection.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, H.R. 8315, as reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee, would authorize the Secretary of the Army to lease, without consideration and for a period of 2 years, a portion of Fort Crowder, Mo., to the Stella Reorganized Schools R–I. The Fort Crowder space covered by the bill would be occupied by the school. The district is in the process of erecting a new school building to replace one that was destroyed by fire. The space would be used during the construction of the new building.

Report No. 897 indicates that the Army requires $6,200 a year rental and that this is fair market rental.

Regardless of the appealing circumstances, the bill, in its present form, violates the Morse formula. In view of the public purpose of the proposed lease arrangement, 50 percent of fair-appraised lease value should be paid by the district.

I submit an amendment at this time, so that it may be printed and be available when the bill comes up again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, my amendment offers a very fair adjustment. It means that all of us as Federal taxpayers would be contributing 50 percent of the fair lease rental value. I think that public bodies in the State of Missouri ought to be willing to contribute the other 50 percent.

Mr. PROUTY. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

DISPOSAL OF DIAMONDS AND OTHER GEMS

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 166) providing the approval of the Congress under the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, of the disposal of rough cuttable gem-quality diamonds, cut and polished diamonds, osmium, rhodium, ruthenium, and zircon concentrates from the national stockpile, was considered and agreed to.

DEFINITION OF TERM "A MEMBER OF A RESERVE COMPONENT"

The bill (H.R. 6269) to amend section 265 of the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952 to define the term "a member of a reserve component" so as to include a member of the Army or Air Force without specification of component was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF ACTIVE DUTY PROMOTION OPPORTUNITY

The bill (H.R. 8189) to improve the active duty promotion of Air Force officers from the grade of captain to the grade of major, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, members of the Armed Services Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, have unanimously recommended passage of this bill. Its purpose is to authorize an additional 3,000 majors by making an exception to the Officers Grade Limitation Act.

This proposed legislation will permit Reserve captains now on active duty to be promoted to the grade of major. Unless it is passed, the Air Force will be confronted with an imbalance and perhaps a sensitive morale problem by June 30, 1961, when there will be 6,400 Reserve captains who have completed 14 or more years of active duty.

There has been adequate testimony before the committee on the part of the Defense Department and the Air Force regarding the necessity for the men who would be granted relief through passage of this amendment. Most of the officers covered by this legislation are performing a vital mission in the Strategic Air Command. Others are serving on special air missions or as pilots in the Military Air Transport Service.

The Officers Grade Limitation Act permits the Air Force at this time to have only 23,000 officers serving in the grade of major. This has inhibited the promotion of many, many Reserve captains who have fully demonstrated that they have earned a promotion and who have many years of competent service behind them, yet are prevented from becoming majors because of the Limitation Act. The Air Force states that the situation would be corrected by the passage of this bill and that the additional number of majors is necessary and fully justified.

Since those officers who will be affected by this legislation now hold the grade of major in the Reserves, they will qualify for retirement pay in this grade. Therefore, there is no increased retirement cost envisioned under the terms of H.R. 8189.

The Air Force has estimated the cost for the next 2 years of this bill at approximately $3 million. While it is recommended by the Department of Defense, and the Bureau of the Budget has no objection, the intent of the bill will be accomplished within the present fiscal framework that the Air Force is operating under.

This is a simple act, Mr. President, and will operate only for 2 years. It has been given full hearing and full review by the members of the Armed Services Committee, and I respectfully urge its passage by the Senate.

I point out further that under the law as it now exists captains in the Regulars are required to be either advanced to the rank of major or released from the service at the end of 14 years. Therefore the Regulars are required to be advanced, while the regulation does not apply to the Reserves. As a result of the limitation, the Reserves are not eligible for promotion because of the limitation on numbers, even though they are eligible in every other respect. The pending bill would merely permit these 14-year service Reserve officers to be promoted to the grade of major, and would do away with an inequitable situation and satisfy a need which the Air Force has testified exists.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not correct to say that the principal evidence before the committee was that this was an emergency situation because the Air Force had all these Reserve captains, and only 40 percent of them had any chance of being promoted to major? They testified that if the bill were passed and the act applied for 2 years, it would create 3,000 vacancies and would permit 80 percent, instead of 40 percent, of those Reserve captains to be given a chance to be promoted to major. We felt that it was a fair temporary measure and would clear up the situation in 2 years.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is absolutely correct. Reserve officers now in the long-term 14-year captain category have only a 40 percent opportunity of promotion. The passage of the bill would raise that percentage opportunity to 80 percent. It is very important to note that the Defense Department and the Air Force say that these men are urgently needed. They are men who should not be released from the service.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It is a question not only of fairness to the men involved but also a question of morale for the whole Reserve Air Force.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I am very glad that there is an opportunity to discuss this general problem briefly on the floor of the Senate. First I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Nevada for the part he has played in the subcommittee on this matter.

Earlier, in August, I inspected two of my Air National Guard outfits. One of the most serious problems we face there is wrapped up in the problem presented by the bill. It must be met some day. In my outfits there are captains who have been flying since World War II. Groups are commanded by majors. They could not be promoted because of the Reserve Act.

Many of the captains we are talking about, as was brought out by evidence, are pilots of B–47's. This is a responsibility which calls for at least the grade of major. This subject applies very strongly to the morale of the Armed Services. It is not right to ask a man to assume responsibilities of higher command when he knows he will wind up as a captain doing that job.

I certainly hope that there will be no objection to this bill. This action is long overdue. I think the committee should pursue this question next year, with the idea of arriving at some solution of the problems which exist in the other grades in the commissioned ranks. This is a good step forward. As a Reserve officer, I thank my friend from Nevada [Mr. CANNON], who is also a Reserve officer, and will be interested in this measure.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for pointing up this very important problem. The chairman of the committee has already announced that hearings will be held next year on the problems which the Senator has specifically mentioned in connection with the Air National Guard officers.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I felt that an explanation should be placed in the RECORD. That was my only reason for asking for it. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 8189) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPLOSIVES AND COMBUSTIBLES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1806) to revise title 18, chapter 39, United States Code, entitled "Explosives and Combustibles," which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the word "as", to strike out "defined" and insert "those terms are used"; in line 23, after the word "a", where it appears the second time, to strike out "Territorial" and insert "Territory"; in line 25, after the word "States.", to strike out "The term 'United States', as used herein means all the States and the District of Columbia. For the purpose of this Act, the District of Columbia shall be deemed to be a State." and insert "The term 'United States' means all the States and the District of Columbia."; on page 3, after line 4, to insert:

"State" includes the District of Columbia.

And in line 20, after the word "the", to insert "Interstate Commerce"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That title 18 of the United States Code, chapter 39, sections 831–835, inclusive, entitled "Explosives and Combustibles", as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 39—EXPLOSIVES AND OTHER DANGEROUS ARTICLES

"Sec.
831. Definitions.
832. Transportation of explosives, radioactive materials, etiologic agents, and other dangerous articles.
833. Marking packages containing explosives and other dangerous articles.
834. Regulation by Interstate Commerce Commission.
835. Administration.

"§ 831. Definitions

"As used in this chapter—

"Unless otherwise indicated, 'carrier' means any person engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, by land, other than pipelines, as a common, contract, or private carrier, or freight forwarder as those terms are used in the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and officers, agents, and employees of such carriers.

" 'Person' means any individual, firm, copartnership, corporation, company, association, or joint-stock association, and includes any trustee, receiver, assignee, or personal representative thereof.

" 'For-hire carrier' includes common and contract carriers.

" 'Shipper' shall be construed to include officers, agents, and employees of shippers.

" 'Interstate and foreign commerce' means commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term 'United States' means all the States and the District of Columbia.

" 'State' includes the District of Columbia.

" 'Detonating fuzes' means fuzes used in military service to detonate the explosive charges of military projectiles, mines, bombs, or torpedoes.

" 'Fuzes' means devices used in igniting the explosive charges of projectiles.

" 'Fuses' means the slow-burning fuses used commercially to convey fire to an explosive combustible mass.

" 'Fusees' means the fusees ordinarily used on steamboats, railroads, and motor carriers as night signals.

" 'Radioactive materials' means any materials or combination of materials that spontaneously emit ionizing radiation.

" 'Etiologic agents' means the causative agent of such diseases as may from time to time be listed in regulations governing etiologic agents prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under section 834 of this chapter.

"§ 832. Transportation of explosives, radioactive materials, etiologic agents, and other dangerous articles

"(a) Any person who knowingly transports, carries, or conveys within the United States any dangerous explosives, such as and including dynamite, blasting caps, detonating fuses, black powder, gunpowder, or other like explosive, or any radioactive materials, or etiologic agents, on or in any passenger car or passenger vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers by any for-hire carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, by land, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and, if the death or bodily injury of any person results from a violation of this section, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both: Provided, however, That such explosives, radioactive materials, or etiologic agents may be transported on or in such car or vehicle whenever the Interstate Commerce Commission finds that an emergency requires an expedited movement, in which case such emergency movements shall be made subject to such regulations as the Commission may deem necessary or desirable in the public interest in each instance: Provided further, That under this section it shall be lawful to transport, on or in any such car or vehicle, small quantities of explosives, radioactive materials, etiologic agents, or other dangerous commodities of the kinds, in such amounts, and under such conditions as may be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission to involve no appreciable danger to persons or property: And provided further, That it shall be lawful to transport on or in any such car or vehicle such fusees, torpedoes, rockets, or other signal devices as may be essential to promote safety in the operation of any such car or vehicle on or in which transported. This section shall not prevent the transportation of military forces with their accompanying munitions of war on passenger-equipment cars or vehicles.

"(b) No person shall knowingly transport, carry, or convey within the United States liquid nitroglycerin, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other similarly dangerous explosives, or radioactive materials, or etiologic agents, on or in any car or vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers or property by any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, by land, except under such rules and regulations as the Commission shall specifically prescribe with respect to the safe transportation of such commodities. The Commission shall from time to time determine and prescribe what explosives are 'other similarly dangerous explosives', and may prescribe the route or routes over which such explosives, radioactive materials, or etiologic agents shall be transported. Any person who violates this provision, or any regulation prescribed hereunder by the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and, if the death or bodily injury of any person results from a violation of this section, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"(c) Any shipment of radioactive materials made by or under the direction or supervision of the Atomic Energy Commission or the Department of Defense which is escorted by personnel specially designated by or under the authority of the Atomic Energy Commission or the Department of Defense, as the case may be, for the purpose of national security, shall be exempt from the requirements of sections 831–835 of this chapter and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder. In the case of any shipment of radioactive materials made by or under the direction or supervision of the Atomic Energy Commission or the Department of Defense, which is not so escorted by specially designated personnel, certification upon the bill of lading by or under the authority of the Atomic Energy Commission or the Department of Defense, as the case may be, that the shipment contains radioactive materials shall be conclusive as to content, and no further description shall be necessary or required; but each package, receptacle, or other container in such unescorted shipment shall on the outside thereof be plainly marked 'radioactive materials,' and shall not be opened for inspection by the carrier.

"§ 833. Marking packages containing explosives and other dangerous articles

"Any person who knowingly delivers to any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water, and any person who knowingly carries on or in any car or vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers or property by any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, by land, any explosive, or other dangerous article, specified in or designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to section 834 of this chapter, under any false or deceptive marking, description, invoice, shipping order, or other declaration, or any person who so delivers any such article without informing such carrier in writing of the true character thereof, at the time such delivery is made, or without plainly marking on the outside of every package containing explosives or other dangerous articles the contents thereof, if such marking is required by regulations prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and, if the death or bodily injury of any person results from the violation of this section, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"§ 834. Regulations by Interstate Commerce Commission

"(a) The Interstate Commerce Commission shall formulate regulations for the safe transportation within the United States of explosives and other dangerous articles, including radioactive materials, etiologic agents, flammable liquids, flammable solids, oxidizing materials, corrosive liquids, compressed gases, and poisonous substances, which shall be binding upon all carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce which transport explosives or other dangerous articles by land, and upon all shippers making shipments of explosives or other dangerous articles via any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water.

"(b) The Commission, of its own motion, or upon application made by any interested party, may make changes or modifications in such regulations, made desirable by new information or altered conditions. Before adopting any regulations relating to radioactive materials the Interstate Commerce Commission shall advise and consult with the Atomic Energy Commission.

"(c) Such regulations shall be in accord with the best-known practicable means for securing safety in transit, covering the packing, marking, loading, handling while in transit, and the precautions necessary to determine whether the material when offered is in proper condition to transport.

"(d) Such regulations, as well as all changes or modifications thereof, shall, unless a shorter time is specified by the Commission, take effect ninety days after their formulation and publication by the Commission and shall be in effect until reversed, set aside, or modified.

"(e) In the execution of sections 831–835, inclusive, of this chapter the Commission may utilize the services of carrier and shipper associations and may avail itself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Federal Government, and of State and local governments, but no official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such service except as now permitted by law.

"(f) Any person who, being aware that the Interstate Commerce Commission has formulated regulations for the safe transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles, violates any such regulation shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and, if the death or bodily injury of any person results from such violation, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"§ 835. Administration

"(a) The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized and directed to administer, execute, and enforce all provisions of sections 831–835, inclusive, of this chapter, to make all necessary orders in connection therewith, and to prescribe rules, regulations, and procedure for such administration, and to employ such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out these functions.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to make such studies and conduct such investigations, obtain such information, and hold such hearings as it may deem necessary or proper to assist it in exercising any authority provided in sections 831–835, inclusive, of this chapter. For such purposes the Commission is authorized to administer oaths and affirmations, and by subpena to require any person to appear and testify, or to appear and produce documents, or both, at any designated place. No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this paragraph because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (49 U.S.C. 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege. Witnesses subpenaed under this subsection shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"(c) In administering and enforcing the provisions of sections 831–835, inclusive, of this chapter and the regulations prescribed thereunder the Commission shall have and exercise all the powers conferred upon it by the Interstate Commerce Act, including procedural and investigative powers and the power to examine and inspect records and properties of carriers engaged in transporting explosives and other dangerous articles in interstate or foreign commerce and the records and properties of shippers to the extent that such records and properties pertain to the packing and shipping of explosives and other dangerous articles and the nature of such commodities."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I am sure I speak for other Members of the Oregon delegation in expressing appreciation to the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. MAGNUSON] for reporting this bill so promptly, after a very tragic disaster occurred at Roseburg, Oreg., where a truck loaded with high explosives blew up in the heart of the city. It caused great loss of life and property.

The two Senators from Oregon and the Representative from the Fourth District of Oregon, the Honorable CHARLES O. PORTER, made a representation to the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] about the urgency of reporting this bill, to tighten the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission governing the transportation of high explosives, radioactive materials, viruses, and other cargoes which can be dangerous to human health and life.

The Senator from Washington acted promptly, and the result is the early passage of the bill.

I also desire to express my gratitude to the able majority leader, who, upon hearing from Members of the Oregon delegation, scheduled the bill for consideration so early.

While this bill will not accomplish miracles, I feel that it will add some protection to the American people, who are endangered when high explosives are carried on routes of transportation which are shared with the general traveling public.

However, I do believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission should give further thought to the possibility of encouraging the transportation of high explosives by such alternative means of transportation—particularly by barge and rail—as are not shared with private automobiles traveled in by the American public.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to join in the views expressed by my colleague.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter dated August 25, 1959, which I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. MAGNUSON].

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 25, 1959.

Re S. 1806.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MAGGIE: Last Wednesday in the Senate I discussed in some detail the terrible disaster that struck Roseburg, Oreg., in the early morning hours of August 7. Although the facts have not been formally compiled and announced by the Interstate Commerce Commission as yet, the reports I have received indicate that the Roseburg disaster was caused by the explosion of a dynamite and ammonium nitrate-laden truck which had been parked beside a building in the heart of the business section of Roseburg during the evening of August 6. A fire which broke out in the building adjacent to the truck is said to have caused the explosion.

Before I made my speech in the Senate on August 19, you will recall that I talked to you about the bill, S. 1806, to revise the Transportation of Explosives Act, which you introduced in the Senate on April 27, 1959. At that time, you indicated that you consider this legislative proposal to be of an urgent nature and that you would cooperate in obtaining its early consideration in the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Let me say to you that the people of Roseburg, Oreg., and residents of every city in the Nation owe you a deep debt of gratitude for having introduced S. 1806 and for expressing your willingness to obtain early action in committee.

In my opinion, this legislative proposal is one of the most important items now pending in the Congress. The safety of hundreds of thousands of people over the length and breadth of the Nation is closely related to the protection that will be afforded through the passage of this bill. Not for a moment would I disparage the excellent record made by the carriers who haul large quantities of explosives daily without causing loss of life or property, but I am firmly convinced that the amendment is required as a deterrent to the few who may be indifferent to the safety of others in the transportation of explosives.

S. 1806 contains a number of important provisions but the most significant, in my opinion, are those which make the full power and authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the Transportation of Explosives Act and the maximum penalties of the act applicable to contract and private carriers as well as to common carriers.

As pointed out in Senate Report No. 281 of the 85th Congress, the Transportation of Explosives Act, adopted nearly 50 years ago, needs revision in many respects in order that it may effectively and efficiently regulate the transportation of dangerous explosives and other materials of hazardous nature. Transportation media and systems of today are far more intricate and complicated than they were 50 years ago when the Transportation of Explosives Act was put on the statute books. But the point I wish to emphasize particularly is the fact that the transportation of explosives by contract and private carriers involves just as much potential danger to the people of our Nation as does the transportation of these materials by common carriers.

What was said in 1957 in Senate Report No. 281 with respect to the penalties for violations of the Transportation of Explosives Act is germane today. I quote from page 2 of that report:

"In its present form the Transportation of Explosives Act applies to common carriers only and violations of its provisions are subject to maximum penalties of $10,000 or 10 years imprisonment or both. On the other hand, the very same violations when committed by private or contract carriers are prosecuted under section 222(a) of the Interstate Commerce Act which carries a maximum penalty of only $100. The bill would therefore remove this anomaly and would extend the provisions of the Explosives Act to include contract and private carriers."

The above-quoted comments applied to the bill, S, 1491, which was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on May 2, 1957. S. 1806, which you introduced this year, seeks to accomplish the same objectives as S. 1491 of the 85th Congress.

As an aside, I should point out that you and Senator SMATHERS are to be commended for having brought S. 1491 to the floor of the Senate in 1957 and for having achieved its passage in the Senate. Had the House responded as did the Senate in 1957, the Roseburg disaster might never have occurred.

The facts as reported to me concerning the Roseburg explosion indicate that a truck operating as a private carrier by the Pacific Powder Co., of Tenino, Wash., was loaded with approximately 6 tons of high explosives consisting of dynamite and ammonium nitrate. The truck reached Roseburg early in the evening of August 6 and was parked for the night, with the brakes securely fixed and the cab locked. It was left unattended in the heart of the business district of Roseburg. The building near which the truck was parked caught fire, and the firemen who were called to the scene recognized immediately the danger inherent in a truckload of explosives standing beside a burning building. According to the story as it was told to me, the firemen tried to move the truck by the use of a jeep equipped with a winch but they were unable to tow the truck because of its firmly set brakes. The explosion which ensued almost immediately caused at least 16 deaths, resulted in more than 52 cases of severe injury, and brought about millions of dollars of property damage losses.

Had your amendment to the Transportation of Explosives Act, as envisaged in S. 1806, been on the statute books on August 7, 1959, the terrible Roseburg disaster of August 7 might never have occurred. I say this in all sincerity because the very effectve penalties applicable to common carriers instead of relatively minor penalties applicable to private and contract carriers would have had tremendous deterrent effects against the parking of the truck and its explosive contents unattended in the early hours of August 7. Had S. 1806 been on the statute books, the company shipping the explosives would have been subject to a potential maximum penalty of $10,000 and possible maximum imprisonment of 10 years for its officials instead of a relatively nominal penalty.

It is imperative that no time be lost in enacting S. 1806 because every day and every night in numerous parts of the United States private and contract carrier trucks are carrying explosives capable of inflicting enormous injury, such as that which was inflicted in the Roseburg case, and are endangering the people in heavily populated communities.

I would be the first to concede that the enactment of S. 1806 and the more rigid safety requirements it involves, may cost shippers of explosives more money than they now spend in shipping by private and common carriers. However, when human lives and enormous property values are at stake, I am not for a moment impressed by the so-called increased cost argument. The few pennies of additional cost that will be involved in the shipment of each unit of explosives will, in my opinion, be far outweighed by the savings of lives and property in consequence of the more rigid safety requirements inherent in S. 1806.

Bearing in mind the intense and prolonged suffering of scores of human beings who were injured in the Roseburg disaster; the anguish of those who perished in this catastrophe, and the distress of the surviving relatives and friends of those whose lives were lost, I have no patience with those who suggest that S. 1806 would involve some additional cost to shippers and users of explosives. Nor am I impressed with the arguments of those who insist that passage of S. 1806 will put them out of business. When human lives are at stake, I intend to work for the preservation of those lives even though higher transportation costs may be involved. I hope we are not at the point in America where we are placing the existence of certain types of business above the value of human lives.

For the foregoing reasons, I feel that the passage of S. 1806 is a "must" for this session of the Congress. The people of Roseburg, Oregon, the State of Oregon and, indeed, the entire Nation will be grateful to you for everything you can do to bring about the early passage in committee and in the Senate of S. 1806, which is of such great importance to the protection of human life.

With appreciation and best personal regards,

Sincerely,

WAYNE MORSE.

Mr. MORSE. I point out to the Senate that a bill in practically the same form was passed by the Senate in 1957. At that time action was not taken in the House; but I believe that in view of the tragic event which occurred in Roseburg, Oreg., with regard to the explosion of the truck loaded with high explosives, with great loss of life and property, the chances are that the bill will quickly pass the House. At least, I hope the leadership of the House will give it immediate attention.

INCLUSION OF CERTAIN NONMINERAL LANDS IN PATENTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2033) to amend the mining laws of the United States to provide for the inclusion of certain nonmineral lands in patents to placer claims, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "is", to strike out "used or occupied" and insert "needed"; in line 10, after the word "claim", to insert "and is used or occupied by the proprietor for such purposes"; on page 2, line 5, after the word "exceed", to strike out "ten" and insert "five", and, in the same line, after the word "acres", to strike out "for each individual claimant,"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2337 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (30 U.S.C. 42) is amended (1) by adding "(a)" after "SEC. 2337.", and (2) by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(b) Where nonmineral land is needed by the proprietor of a placer claim for mining, milling, processing, beneficiation, or other operations in connection with such claim, and is used or occupied by the proprietor for such purposes, such land may be included in an application for a patent for such claim, and may be patented therewith subject to the same requirements as to survey and notice as are applicable to placers. No location made of such nonmineral land shall exceed five acres, and payment for the same shall be made at the rate applicable to placer claims which do not include a vein or lode."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COOPERATION IN HEALTH AND RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 129) favoring continued efforts by all nations to strengthen cooperation in health and research activities, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "welfare", to insert "and"; in line 4, after the word "Foundation", to strike out "the National Academy of Sciences and National Research Council,"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "and", to strike out "such" and insert "in cooperation with", and in line 2, after the word "bodies", to insert "such as the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research Council"; so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President of the United States, acting through the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the National Science Foundation, and in cooperation with other official and private bodies, such as the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research Council, as he deems appropriate, should (1) continue U.S. initiative in seeking to strengthen international cooperation in health and research efforts and, in connection therewith, (2) invite the medical profession of the United States, and other professions and organizations concerned with the healing arts and the life sciences, to develop plans and programs in cooperation with the scientific community of other nations toward declaration and observance of an International Public Health and Medical Research Year.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 8437) to provide for the reinstatement and validation of U.S. oil and gas lease BLM 028500, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COMPACT BETWEEN NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY FOR CREATION OF TRANSPORTATION AGENCY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 403) granting the consent of Congress to a compact entered into between the State of New York and the State of New Jersey for the creation of the New York-New Jersey Transportation Agency, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 19, after line 10, to strike out:

(b) The consent of Congress granted under this resolution shall terminate not later than June 30, 1961.

After line 12, to strike out:

(c) All "concurrent legislation" amending or supplementing this compact, as that term is defined and understood in the compact shall be submitted to Congress for its consent before such legislation becomes effective.

After line 16, to insert:

(b) Any long-range plan, when adopted by concurrent legislation of the compacting states, shall be submitted to Congress for its consent before such long-range plan becomes effective.

And, after line 20, to insert:

(c) Any concurrent legislation enacted by the compacting states amending or supplementing this compact shall be submitted to Congress for its consent before such legislation becomes effective, except that this subsection shall not apply to article 4.6 of this compact.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1886) to amend the Communication Act of 1934 with respect to community antenna television systems and certain rebroadcasting activities was announced as next in order.

Mr. ENGLE. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MANSFIELD subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] a question relative to Calendar No. 933, S. 1886, the bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 with respect to community antenna television systems and certain rebroadcasting activities, which was introduced by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. Moss] and the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. What has been the disposition of the bill?

Mr. PASTORE. So far as I know, it has been objected to by request. I think it is a bill which requires consideration as soon as the Senate can get to it. As a matter of fact, I should have thought the majority leader would give the bill some preference and call it up on motion.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is there not a possibility that Calendar 950, S. 2653, a similar bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] himself, could also be brought up at the same time, so that the various problems connected with the television industry in my own State of Montana, especially, and in the Rocky Mountain region generally, could be given the consideration which is their due, and to which the people of that area are entitled?

Mr. PASTORE. Originally, S. 1886 was introduced as an omnibus bill. We divided it into two bills, one to apply to the booster stations, in which I think the Senator from Montana is primarily interested. Then we reported as a separate bill the portion dealing with the so-called community antenna system which included consideration of S. 2303 dealing with the same subject. The booster bill is noncontroversial. I do not see how anyone could object to that. By this bill the Federal Communications Commission may grant licenses in cases where construction has already occurred. This is with reference to certain homemade booster stations to bring television reception where made difficult by the topography of the particular area.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The only question which has been raised was raised by me. I was requested to have the delay until the question could be resolved as to whether or not the bill requires the FCC to establish sound engineering standards to protect all other media of communications.

Mr. PASTORE. The Commission would be required to do so, but before they could act or would grant a license, they would have to make certain that there was conformance with certain standards and regulations which they themselves would promulgate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. So as to prevent interference with other media of communications.

Mr. PASTORE. Naturally, if there was anything against the public interest or which created harmful interference, the Commission would not grant the license.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The only reason I requested that the bill go over temporarily was so that we might establish the proper legislative history.

Mr. PASTORE. If that is the only objection, then we might simply call the bill up on motion and pass it, because, as I said before, it is a noncontroversial bill, so far as I know. But the other bill may be controversial.

I may say to the Senator from Montana that so far as the second bill is concerned, the bill having to do with community antenna systems, it could be controversial. I do not think it could be passed on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANSFIELD. But the Senator from Rhode Island and the other members of his committee are in favor of both bills, are they?

Mr. PASTORE. I am in favor of both bills.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator and his committee do their best to get both bills before the Senate?

Mr. PASTORE. That is right. But I think we ought to pass the booster bill this afternoon.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I assume that with the leadership on both sides of the aisle concurring, and with the approval of the Senator from Arkansas, at the next call of the calendar, which may be tomorrow or the next day, at least one of the bills could be called up, and then the other could be called up at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. PASTORE. That is correct. I subscribe to that course of action.

PRESIDENT ADAMS PARKWAY

The bill (H.R. 7125) to provide for a study of the feasibility of establishing the President Adams Parkway was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 793) to amend Title 23 of the United States Code in order to increase the amount authorized for bridges over Federal dams was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over, on the ground that it is not proper calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS AT THE JOHN DAY LOCK, OREGON

The bill (S. 2362) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey to the city of Arlington, Oreg., certain lands at the John Day lock and dam project was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the Secretary of the Army determines that any land within the corporate limits of the city of Arlington, Oregon, acquired for construction of the John Day lock and dam as authorized by the River and Harbor Act of May 17, 1950 (64 Stat. 163, 167), is no longer required for project purposes, he is authorized and directed, subject to the further provisions of this Act, to convey to the city of Arlington all right, title, and interest of the United States therein.

SEC. 2. Any conveyances made pursuant to this Act shall be (A) at market value as determined by the Secretary of the Army in accordance with the formula set forth in section 3 of this Act; (B) upon terms and conditions determined by the said Secretary to be in the public interest; and (C) subject to reservations and restrictions determined by the said Secretary to be necessary for the development, maintenance, or operation of the John Day lock and dam project.

SEC. 3. The market value of any property conveyed under this Act shall be equal to the price for which the land was acquired by the United States, adjusted to reflect (A) any increase in the value thereof resulting from improvements placed thereon by the United States, excluding, however, any enhancement in value resulting from the construction of the John Day lock and dam; or (B) any decrease in the value thereof resulting from (1) any reservation, exception, restriction, or condition to which the conveyance is made subject; and (2) any damage to the land caused by the United States.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Army may delegate any authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or employee of the Department of the Army. Any such officer or employee shall exercise the authority so delegated under rules and regulations approved by the Secretary.

SEC. 5. The proceeds from any conveyance made under this Act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 6. This Act shall terminate six years after the date of its enactment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point a letter dated September 4, 1959, which I addressed to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], chairman of the Committee on Public Works.

There being no objection the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 4, 1959.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
Chairman, Senate Public Works Committee, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DENNIS: It is my understanding that the Senate Public Works Committee will soon have under consideration S. 2362, to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey certain lands within the John Day lock and dam project to the city of Arlington, Oreg.

I am pleased to be a sponsor of S. 2362 because for several years I have been working closely with Arlington in its efforts to bring about an orderly and efficient relocation of an important section of the city. This relocation is necessary because within a few years the reservoir of the John Day Dam will inundate a sizable portion of the present city of Arlington.

After extensive consultations with the Corps of Engineers, the general plan of relocation, as proposed by Mayor Harford, received the approval of the Chief of Engineers, and discussions concerning implementation of the plan were then undertaken with the District Engineer in Walla Walla, Wash.

According to Brigadier General Person, Assistant Chief of Engineers for Civil Works, the relocation plan is feasible and proper and constitutes a reasonable solution to the corps' land acquisition program at Arlington. I have studied this matter carefully and I agree fully with the views expressed by the corps concerning this project.

S. 2362 was introduced after thorough consultation with officials of the Department of the Army and staff members of the offices of the Oregon Senators and that of Congressman ULLMAN. The plan was modeled generally after a plan that passed the Senate and became law in August 1956. This bill to which I refer was H.R. 9770 of the 84th Congress, which became Public Law 902. It is, of course, reassuring to have a precedent of this type, but even if no precedent were in existence, it is my opinion that the merits of the proposed relocation plan to be undertaken by the city of Arlington are completely ample to justify prompt passage of S. 2362 by the Congress.

Passage of this bill will provide the legal means whereby Arlington, through repurchase of land and carefully planned development of an area adjacent to the Columbia River to be filled by the Corps of Engineers, can bring into being a waterfront area and other city developments that will be sources of pride to present future residents of the city.

The bill protects the taxpayer of the United States through assurance of payment of fair market value, as prescribed in the language of sections 2 and 3. Passage of the bill would be in the interest not only of the city of Arlington, but of the people of the United States.

With best personal regards.

Sincerely,

WAYNE MORSE.

Mr. MORSE. It will be noted, as I pointed out to the Senator from New Mexico in the letter, that the bill protects the taxpayers of the United States through assurance of payment of fair market value, as prescribed in the language of sections 2 and 3. The passage of the bill is in the interest not only of the city of Arlington, but of the people of the United States.

I wish to add, in behalf of the residents of the Arlington area, that I appreciate, as I know my colleague does, the passage of this bill, because it will be of great help to the people in that part of my State.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point pertinent excerpts from the report of our Committee on Public Works.

There being no objection, excerpts from the report (No. 912) were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey to the city of Arlington, Oreg., at market value as determined by the Secretary, any lands within the corporate limits of said city acquired for construction of John Day lock and dam and no longer required for project purposes.

GENERAL STATEMENT

The John Day lock and dam is located on the Columbia River about 215 miles above its mouth and 3 miles downstream from the mouth of John Day River. The project was authorized by the Flood Control Act approved May 17, 1950, in accordance with the plan presented in House Document No. 531, 81st Congress. The project provides for a dam, powerplant, fish ladders, navigation lock, and other necessary appurtenant facilities.

The project will provide 500,000 acre-feet of flood-control storage, a power installation consisting initially of 12 units of 109,000 kilowatts each, a total of 1,308,000 kilowatts, and will provide a slack water pool about 75 miles long extending upstream to McNary lock and dam. The total estimated cost is $387 million. The project is under construction.

Arlington, Oreg., is located on the left bank of the Columbia River at mile 242, on Alkali Canyon, a short tributary entering the Columbia River from the south. The Flood Control Act of 1944 authorized a flood-control project consisting of improvement of 3,000 feet of Alkali Canyon through the city and necessary bridges. The construction of the John Day lock and dam, with the level of the John Day Pool, eliminated the need for the flood-control project on Alkali Canyon. No work was done on the project, having an estimated cost of $513,000.

The plan for the John Day lock and dam contemplated either raising the level of a portion of the city of Arlington, or flooding and relocating it. The city has a population of about 1,000 persons, and is the commercial center for a large farming and ranching area. Because raising the city is considered more economical, the Corps of Engineers proposes to acquire fee title to all the lands within the project area, remove the improvements, place fill on those lands that will not be permanently inundated, and make the area available for reuse in place. Land acquisition is scheduled to commence in the fall of 1959.

The city of Arlington, in anticipation of the project accomplishment as outlined, has established protective zoning with the view to having the areas of the new city redeveloped. Land adjacent to the city is steep, inaccessible, and undesirable for municipal purposes. The Chief of Engineers will arrange with the city of Arlington for the preservation or replacement of city owned or operated structures or facilities, including roads and utilities. These relocated facilities will be installed after the level of the city has been raised by the filling operation and in accordance with the overall plan adopted by the city.

When all of the relocation work has been accomplished, the United States will no longer require fee title to the property, although flowage easements may be necessary in some ports. In the absence of any other Federal agency requirement for the property, the remainder would be excess and reported to the General Services Administration for transfer or disposal. The city officials fear that if the property is disposed of by the GSA, other parties might obtain the property for a use not desired by the city.

S. 2362 would provide for conveyance of the property to the city of Arlington. The city could obtain all the property at one time, lay it out in lots of its desired size, and resell the lots in accordance with State laws.

The bill contains safeguards for the Federal Government by obtaining market value for the land and imposing necessary reservations and restrictions. The provisions of the act will terminate within 6 years, which provides assurance that there will be no large increase in market value between the time the land was acquired by the United States and the time of its sale to the city of Oregon.

The committee believes that enactment of S. 2362 would provide a means for the city of Arlington to participate in carrying out the more economical plan of the project authorization. It would require no additional funds, but rather would permit recovery of some Federal costs. The committee therefore recommends enactment of S. 2362.

The favorable comments of the Secretary of the Army on S. 2362 are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
Chairman, Committee on Public Works, U.S. Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your request for the views of the Department of the Army with respect to S. 2362, 86th Congress, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey to the city of Arlington, Oreg., certain lands at the John Day lock and dam project.

The Department of the Army interposes no objection to the above-mentioned bill, the purpose of which is stated in its title.

The Chief of Engineers, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Army, initiated construction of the John Day lock and dam on the Columbia River as authorized by the River and Harbor Act of May 17, 1950 (64 Stat. 163, 167), as outlined in House Document 531, 81st Congress. The plan for this project, as set forth in the House document, contemplates either raising the level of the city of Arlington, Oreg., or flooding and relocating it. Because raising the city is considered to be more economical, the Corps of Engineers proposes to acquire fee title to all and lands that would be within the project area, remove the improvements, place fill on those lands that will not be permanently inundated, and make the area available for reuse in place. Land acquisition will commence in the fall of 1959.

The city of Arlington, in anticipation of project accomplishment as outlined above, has established protective zoning with the view to having the areas of the new city redeveloped. In accordance with the authority of section 2 of the Flood Control Act of June 26, 1938 (52 Stat. 1215, 1216), and of section 111 of the act of July 3, 1958 (72 Stat. 297, 303), the Chief of Engineers will arrange with the city of Arlington for the preservation or replacement of city owned or operated structures or facilities including roads and utilities. These relocated facilities will be installed after the level of the city has been raised by the filling operation and in accordance with the overall plan adopted by the city.

When all of the relocation work has been accomplished the United States will no longer require fee title to the property, although flowage easements may be necessary in some parts. In the absence of any other departmental requirement for the property, the remainder would be excess and reported to General Services Administration for transfer or disposal in accordance with the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act (63 Stat. 367). It is the purpose, however, of the above-mentioned bill to provide for the conveyance of the property to the city of Arlington.

If the entire city were being relocated, the municipality would have complete control of its redevelopment. City officials say that raising the city is actually the same as "relocating it in place" and that they should be afforded identical control in the redevelopment of the city after the fill has been put in place. They have expressed a fear that they would be unable to do this if the property is reported excess, for disposal through General Services Administration, inasmuch as others might intervene and obtain property for a use not desired by the city. The pending bill is designed, therefore, to permit the municipality to step in and acquire all of the land from the United States at one time. Thereafter, having laid it out in lot sizes of its own choosing, the city proposes to resell the property under conditions determined by it in accordance with Oregon law.

The bill contains sufficient safeguards for the benefit of the project by permitting the Secretary of the Army to impose necessary reservations and restrictions. In addition, the Government in the sale would obtain market value, which is defined by the bill as being the price which the United States paid for the property, adjusted to reflect any increase in value because of Government constructed improvements or any decrease in value caused by damage or the imposition of restrictions in the conveyance. Relative to this point, it is the opinion of the Department of the Army that the placement of the fill material on the land will not, in itself, constitute an improvement since the placement of the fill is required by the project as a project expense.

By providing, in section 6, that the act shall terminate 6 years after it is enacted, the bill contains necessary assurances, in the use of the valuation formula, that there will not have been any large increase in market value of the property between the time of its acquisition by the United States and its sale to the city. At the same time this provision precludes a situation in which the United States would be unable to dispose of the land in any other manner if agreement could not be reached with the city of Arlington in a reasonable time.

Inasmuch as the bill would provide a means for the city of Arlington to participate in carrying out the more economical plan envisioned by the project authorization, this Department interposes no objection to its enactment.

Enactment of this measure will have no effect on the budgetary requirements of the Department of the Army.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,
WILBER M. BRUCKER,
Secretary of the Army.

ACQUISITION OF LAND IN THE VICINITY OF FEDERAL PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to the consideration of Calendar No. 860, Senate bill 2347.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 2347 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, since reporting S. 2347, a bill to amend section 7 of the act of July 28, 1950 (ch. 503, 64 Stat. 381; 5 U.S.C. 341f), to authorize the Attorney General to acquire land in the vicinity of any Federal penal or correctional institution when considered essential to the protection of the health or safety of the inmates of the institution, on Monday, August 31, 1959, the House has passed H.R. 7571, which has been referred to and is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary.

An examination of the House-passed bill discloses that it is identical to the Senate bill.

Mr. President, I ask that the committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 7571 and that it be substituted for consideration in lieu of S. 2347.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on the Judiciary is discharged from the consideration of House bill 7571.

The House bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 7571) to amend section 7 of the act of July 28, 1950 (ch. 503, 64 Stat. 381; 5 U.S.C. 341f), to authorize the Attorney General to acquire land in the vicinity of any Federal penal or correctional institution when considered essential to the protection of the health or safety of the inmates of the institution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 7571?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the Attorney General to acquire land "in the vicinity of" any Federal penal or correctional institution when authorized in an appropriation or other law. The present law permits such acquisition only "adjacent to" such institution. The broadened authority is desirable particularly for the acquisition of prison farm land.

The bill has been requested by the Department of Justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 7571) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2347 will be indefinitely postponed.

LOWER RIO GRANDE REHABILITATION PROJECT, TEXAS, LA FERIA DIVISION

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 4279 and Senate bill 1026.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4279.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 4279) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, rehabilitate, operate, and maintain the lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project, Texas, La Feria division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill 4279?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, H.R. 4279, as passed by the House with amendments, came before the Senate on a motion to discharge the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs from further consideration of the measure. This proposal was logical since the committee on August 12 held an extended hearing on the companion bill, S. 1026, sponsored by the distinguished majority leader, Senator LYNDON JOHNSON, and endorsed by his colleague, Senator YARBOROUGH.

Because of the urgency of the authorization for the rehabilitation of the La Feria division of the lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project to save water and protect the system, it is felt that prompt authorization of the La Feria development is imperative. The chairman of the committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], concurred in the motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of H.R. 4279.

The authorized cost of the La Feria development is $6 million repayable in 35 years—15 years less than the permissible period allowed under the Small Projects Act. The relatively small area in excess of 160 acres is required to pay interest on the acreage in excess. Only 11 farms in the district exceed 160 acres in area.

The district embraces 27,000 acres. The facilities require modernization and improvement in the interest of efficient, economical operation. Rehabilitation of the system will save, it is estimated, 15,000 acre-feet of water annually. Rehabilitation will also result in a saving of $65,000 annually in operation and maintenance costs.

The rehabilitation extends to the district's diversion, distribution, and drainage system. The benefit-cost ratio is 5 to 1.

A proposal for rehabilitation of the system was defeated at the first election. On reconsideration, the water users endorsed the proposal and the entire board of directors of the district appeared before our committee in support of the proposal. Full opportunity was given opponents to present their objections.

The La Feria development is also endorsed by the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, H.R. 4279 is a companion and identical bill to the bill which I introduced, S. 1026, authorizing the rehabilitation under the reclamations laws of the facilities of the La Feria Water Control and Improvement District at La Feria, Tex. The proposed plan calls for rehabilitation of the existing irrigation and drainage works of the district, which, though capable of serving the entire 27,000 acre of irrigable land in the district, require modernization and improvement for efficient and economical operation.

The plan of rehabilitation is designed to permit more economical operation and maintenance of the district's irrigation works, to provide more efficient water deliveries, to reduce distribution system losses, and to reduce flooding of lands in some areas by repair and improvement of the district's irrigation and drainage system. It involves a small increase in water storage, repair or replacement of deteriorated existing canal lining, installation of concrete lining or pipes in most of the presently unlined laterals of the irrigation system, rehabilitation or replacement of deteriorated or inadequate irrigation and drainage structures, an increase in drainage pumping capacity, cleaning and clearing of all earth canals and drains, and construction of access roads for maintenance purposes along all open canals, laterals, and drains.

Mr. President, this rehabilitation work is urgently needed for the conservation of Texas' precious water resources, and the cooperation of the Senate in expediting the consideration of this bill will be greatly appreciated.

In view of the fact that there is no Senate committee report on this bill, I ask unanimous consent that the appropriate portions of the report of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE

H.R. 4279, introduced by Representative KILGORE, would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, rehabilitate, operate, and maintain the La Feria division of the lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project, Texas, thereby permitting more economical operation and maintenance of the district's irrigation works, providing more efficient water deliveries, reducing distribution system losses, and reducing the flooding of lands in some areas.

BACKGROUND AND NEED

The La Feria Water Control and Improvement District is one of the 37 water control and improvement districts in the lower Rio Grande Valley, a highly developed agricultural area where crop production is almost entirely dependent upon irrigation from flows of the Rio Grande. These flows are partially regulated by Falcon Dam which was constructed by the International Boundary and Water Commission under the terms of the 1945 treaty with Mexico. Most of the diversion and distribution system now serving lands in the La Feria division has been in continuous operation for over 40 years. These facilities, capable of serving the district's entire irrigable area of about 27,000 acres, require modernization and improvement for efficient economical operation and to save for beneficial use waters now being lost through the presently inefficient system.

It is estimated that rehabilitation of the works of the La Feria division will permit the saving of some 15,000 acre-feet of water annually that is now lost through seepage and other waste. The committee was advised that 2 acre-feet out of every 3 diverted into the system are lost. With the constantly increasing use of Rio Grande water for irrigation, this rehabilitation can be a vital factor in the future in assuring the La Feria division of an adequate supply of water. Rehabilitation of the works also will result in an annual saving of $64,000 in operation and maintenance costs.

PLAN OF DEVELOPMENT

The report of the Department of the Interior on the plan of rehabilitation for the La Feria division was transmitted to the Congress on May 4, 1959, and is being printed as House Document 128. The plan provides for a general rehabilitation of the district's diversion, distribution, and drainage systems. The river pumping plant and relift pumping plant would be completely overhauled. The plan also provides for repair or replacement of deteriorated existing canal lining, installation of concrete lining or pipes in most of the presently unlined laterals of the irrigation distribution system, rehabilitation or replacement of deteriorated or inadequate irrigation drainage structures, cleaning and clearing of all earth canals and drains, and construction of access roads for maintenance purposes along all open canals and drains.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

As introduced, H.R. 4279 provided that the act of July 4, 1955, under which the construction of distribution systems may be undertaken by the contracting water users' organization with funds advanced by the Government, would apply to the La Feria division. Testimony before the committee brought out the fact that the local district actually wanted to do only part of the rehabilitation work and not the complete distribution system as provided in the abovementioned act. Therefore, at the request of the author of the bill and with the understanding that the Department of the Interior had no objection, the committee deleted the reference to the act of July 4, 1955, and cited instead the act of October 7, 1949, the Rehabilitation and Betterment Act, under which the local district can perform any part of the rehabilitation work. The committee also deleted language in the bill referring to a variable payment formula in connection with the repayment requirement. Legislation was enacted in the 85th Congress providing general authority for incorporating a variable repayment plan in repayment contracts and the inclusion of this language in specific project bills is undesirable.

ECONOMIC ASPECTS

The estimated construction cost of the rehabilitation work is $6 million and this full amount is allocated to irrigation. Under the provisions of the bill, the La Feria district would be required to repay the full amount within a 35-year period with interest on that part which is attributable to furnishing benefits to ownerships in excess of 160 acres. The district has agreed to these repayment arrangements.

Economic studies of the proposed rehabilitation project indicate that the benefits from this development would exceed the cost by a ratio of 5 to 1.

AGRICULTURAL ASPECTS

Fruits and vegetables and some cotton are the principal crops grown in the La Feria district. With respect to ownerships, the average size farm is approximately 80 acres. There are only 11 farms out of 1,868 with acreage exceeding 160 acres and the largest one is 361 acres.

COMMITTEE CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATION

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs concludes that the La Feria division has engineering and economic feasibility and that the cost can be repaid by the district in the period specified. The committee also concludes that the rehabilitation work is needed immediately and recommends that H.R. 4279 be enacted.

DEPARTMENT'S REPORT

The report of the Department of the Interior recommending the enactment of H.R. 4279 follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C., May 22, 1959.

Hon. WAYNE N. ASPINALL,
Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. ASPINALL: A report has been requested from this Department on H.R. 4279, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, rehabilitate, operate, and maintain the lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project, Texas, La Feria division.

We recommend that H.R. 4279 be enacted with the amendment hereafter set out.

Our planning report on the La Feria division was transmitted to the Speaker of the House on May 4 and was referred to your committee. If enacted, H.R. 4279 would, in effect, provide the means of carrying out the recommendations made in that report.

The proposed plan calls for rehabilitation of the existing irrigation and drainage works of the La Feria Water Control and Improvement District, Cameron County No. 3. Those works, though capable of serving the entire 27,000 acres of irrigable land in the district, require modernization and improvement for efficient and economical operation.

The plan of rehabilitation, therefore, is designed to permit more economical operation and maintenance of the district's irrigation works, to provide more efficient water deliveries, to reduce distribution system losses, and to reduce flooding of lands in some areas by repair and improvement of the district's irrigation and drainage system. It involves a small increase in water storage, repair or replacement of deteriorated existing canal lining, installation of concerete lining or pipes in most of the presently unlined laterals of the irrigation system, rehabilitation or replacement of deteriorated or inadequate irrigation and drainage structures, an increase in drainage pumping capacity, cleaning and clearing of all earth canals and drains, and construction of access roads for maintenance purposes along all open canals, laterals, and drains. H.R. 4279 calls specifically for the applicability to the La Feria division of the act of July 4, 1955 (69 Stat. 244) under which the construction of distribution systems may be undertaken by the contracting water users' organization itself with funds advanced by the Government.

The total estimated construction cost of the proposed plan of rehabilitation for the La Feria division is about $6 million on the basis of January 1959 prices. The entire cost is allocable to irrigation and, with the exception of $9,500 already contributed by the district toward investigation costs, is reimbursable. Under the provisions of the bill the district would be required to repay this cost within a 35-year period. The amortization capacity of the district lands is ample for repayment of the estimated construction costs by the water users within a period of 35 years.

The proposed plan for rehabilitation of the La Feria division has engineering feasibility and is economically justified. On the basis of a 35-year period of analysis, the evaluated annual direct benefits were estimated to exceed annual costs in the ratio of about 1.4 to 1.

H.R. 4279 would provide, in lieu of the excess lands provisions of the Federal reclamation laws, for the payment of interest by the owners of excess land similar to the requirement of section 5(c)(2) of the Small Reclamation Projects Act of 1956 (70 Stat. 1044), as amended. An identical provision is contained in the act of April 7, 1958 (72 Stat. 83), relating to the Mercedes division of this same lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project.

In view of the current construction cost estimate of $6 million, we recommend the substitution of the expression "the sum of $6 million (January 1959 costs)" for "the sum of $5,750,000 (July 1958 costs)" in line 13, page 3.

We should like at this time to bring to your attention a correction which ought to be made at an appropriate time in the act of April 7, 1958 (72 Stat. 82), the Mercedes division authorizing legislation. In section 1 of that act, reference is made to "the lower Rio Grande reclamation project." The proper reference, as it is correctly stated in the title of that act and in section 1 of H.R. 4279, is "lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project."

A statement of the information called for by Public Law 801, 84th Congress, is attached.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that there would be no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

FRED G. AANDAHL,
Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I express gratitude to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] for his diligent work in connection with the La Feria bill, which has just been presented. Except for him, the committee would not have made the progress it has made. I am certain that the relief afforded by the bill would not have been forthcoming. I express the gratitude of myself, my colleague [Mr. YARBOROUGH], and the citizens of my State for the work which the Senator from New Mexico has done in this connection.

I urge that the bill be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 4279) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WRIGHT BROTHERS DAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 513, designating the 17th day of December 1959, as Wright Brothers Day, and that the Senate proceed to consider it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading, and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF NORMAN PROJECT, OKLAHOMA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 898, Senate bill 1892, and I call this motion to the attention of the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1892) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Norman project, Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with amendments, on page 2, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "preservation and propagation" and insert "conservation and development"; after line 7, to insert:

The Secretary may enter into suitable contracts with municipal organizations, or other organizations as defined in section 2, Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (38 Stat. 1187), to undertake with non-Federal financing the construction of pumping plants, pipelines, and other conduits, or of any of such works, for furnishing water for municipal, domestic, and industrial use, and to advance to such organizations during the construction period funds to cover an appropriate share of the costs thereof attributable to furnishing water to Tinker Air Force Base.

At the beginning of line 20, to strike out "thereof in accordance with the methods used in determining the allocations made on page XI and table 4, page 25, Document Numbered 420, Eighty-fifth Congress, second session, but with appropriate adjustments for changes in actual cost of construction, under the following conditions:" and insert "thereof in accordance with the following conditions:"; on page 3, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "preservation and propagation" and insert "conservation and development"; at the beginning of line 12, to insert "under the provisions of the Federal reclamation laws, and to the extent appropriate, under the Water Supply Act of 1958"; in line 19, after the word "and", to insert "notwithstanding the provisions in the Water Supply Act of 1958 relating to the rate of interest"; on page 6, line 8, after the word "project", to strike out "for recreation, as set forth in House Document Numbered 420, Eighty-fifth Congress, second session" and insert "for minimum basic recreational facilities as determined by the Secretary", and after line 18, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 9. The second sentence of section 5(f) of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Colorado River storage project and participating projects, and for other purposes", approved April 11, 1956 (70 Stat. 109) is amended to read as follows: "Such interest rate shall not exceed the average rate of interest, computed as of the end of the calendar month next preceding the date on which such advance is made, borne by all outstanding interest-bearing marketable public debt obligations of the United States which mature fifteen or more years from the date of their issuance, and by adjusting such average rate of interest to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct, operate and maintain the Norman Federal reclamation project, Oklahoma, in accordance with the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, and Acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto), except so far as those laws are inconsistent with this Act, for the principal purposes of storing, regulating, and furnishing water for municipal, domestic, and industrial use, and for controlling floods, and, as incidents to the foregoing for the additional purposes of regulating the flow of the Little River, providing for the conservation and development of fish and wildlife, and of enhancing recreational opportunities. The Norman project shall consist of the following principal work: A reservoir on Little River near Norman, Oklahoma, pumping plants, pipelines, and other conduits for furnishing water for municipal, domestic, and industrial use.

The Secretary may enter into suitable contracts with municipal organizatons, or other organizations as defined in section 2, Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (38 Stat. 1187), to undertake with non-Federal financing the construction of pumping plants, pipelines, and other conduits, or of any of such works, for furnishing water for municipal, domestic, and industrial use, and to advance to such organizations during the construction period funds to cover an appropriate share of the costs thereof attributable to furnishing water to Tinker Air Force Base.

SEC. 2. In constructing, operating, and maintaining the Norman project, the Secretary shall allocate proper costs thereof in accordance with the following conditions:

(a) Allocations to flood control, recreation, and the conservation and development of fish and wildlife and water supply for Tinker Air Force Base shall be nonreturnable.

(b) Allocations to municipal water supply, including domestic, manufacturing, and industrial uses, with the exception of that for Tinker Air Force Base, shall be repayable to the United States by the water users through contracts with municipal corporations, or other organizations as defined by section 2, Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (53 Stat. 1187), and title III of the Flood Control Act of 1958 under the provisions of the Federal reclamation laws, and to the extent appropriate, under the Water Supply Act of 1958. Such contracts shall be precedent to the commencement of construction of any project unit affecting the individual municipalities, and shall provide for repayment of constructon costs allocated to municipal water supply in not to exceed fifty years from the date water is first delivered for that purpose, and notwithstanding the provisions in the Water Supply Act of 1958 relating to the rate of interest, payments of said construction cost shall include interest on unamortized balances of that allocation at a rate equal to the average rate (which rate shall be certified by the Secretary of the Treasury) paid by the United States on its marketable long-term securities outstanding on the date of this Act and adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum: Provided, That the water users' organization be responsible for the disposal and sale of all water surplus to its requirements, and that the revenues therefrom shall be used by the organization for the retirement of project debt payment, payment of interest, and payment of operation and maintenance cost.

(c) Upon the completion of the payment of the water users' construction cost obligation, together with the interest thereon, the water users shall have a permanent right to the use of that portion of the project allocable to municipal water supply purposes.

SEC. 3. Contracts may be entered into with the water users' organization pursuant to the provisions of this Act without regard to the last sentence of subsection (c) of section 9 of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939.

SEC. 4. The Secretary is authorized to transfer to the project water users the care, operation, and maintenance of the works herein authorized, and, if such transfer is made, to deduct from the obligation of the water users the reasonable capitalized equivalent of that portion of the estimated operation and maintenance cost of the undertaking which, if the United States continues to operate the project, would be allocated to flood control and fish and wildlife purposes. Prior to taking over the care, operation, and maintenance of said works, the water users' organization shall obligate itself to operate them in accordance with criteria specified by the Secretary of the Army with respect to flood control and the Secretary of the Interior with respect to fish and wildlife: Provided, That operation and maintenance and replacement cost of furnishing water supply to Tinker Air Force Base, as contemplated in the plan of development, shall be provided by an appropriate agreement between the Secretary of Defense and the water users' organization.

SEC. 5. Construction of the Norman project herein authorized may be undertaken in such units or stages as in the opinion of the Secretary best serves the project requirements and the relative needs for water of the several municipal users. Repayment contracts negotiated in connection with each unit or stage of construction shall be subject to the terms and conditions of section 2 of this Act.

SEC. 6. The Secretary may, upon conclusion of a suitable agreement with any qualified agency of the State of Oklahoma or a political subdivision thereof for assumption of the administration, operation, and maintenance thereof at the earliest practicable date, construct or permit the construction of public park and recreational facilities on lands owned by the United States adjacent to the reservoirs of the Norman project, when such use is determined by the Secretary not to be contrary to the public interest, all under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. No recreational use of any area to which this section applies shall be permitted which is inconsistent with the laws of the State of Oklahoma for the protection of fish and game and the protection of the public health, safety, and welfare. The Federal costs of constructing the facilities authorized by this section shall be limited to the nonreimbursable costs of the Norman project for minimum basic recreational facilities as determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 7. Expenditures for the Norman Reservoir may be made without regard to the soil survey and land classification requirements of the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1954 (43 U.S.C. 390a).

SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be required to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 9. The second sentence of section 5(f) of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Colorado River storage project and participating projects, and for other purposes", approved April 11, 1956 (70 Stat. 109) is amended to read as follows: "Such interest rate shall not exceed the average rate of interest, computed as of the end of the calendar month next preceding the date on which such advance is made, borne by all outstanding interest-bearing marketable public debt obligations of the United States which mature fifteen or more years from the date of their issuance, and by adjusting such average rate of interest to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] also can make an explanation of the bill. However, I may say that this is a project which has been very carefully considered by the Subcommittee on Reclamation and by the full Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. It relates to a municipal water supply project. The benefit-cost ratio is extremely attractive. The committee was happy to report the bill favorably at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the bill provides for the construction of a multiple-purpose project in the area of Oklahoma City, Norman, Midwest City, Del City, and Tinker Air Force Base.

The bill provides for the allocation of costs, and sets out that the reimbursable costs will be repaid in 50 years with interest to the Federal Government.

The fish and wildlife benefits and flood control projects will be nonreimbursable.

Tinker Air Force Base, which is one of the largest installations the Air Force has in the world, is set up on the basis that more than half of the cost will be reimbursable by the water industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Norman project, Oklahoma, and for other purposes."

CLAIMS FOR CERTAIN MOVING COSTS RESULTING FROM ANY PUBLIC WORKS PROJECT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 718, H.R. 4656.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 4656) to amend section 401(b) of the act of July 14, 1952, to permit applications for moving costs resulting from any public works project to be filed either 1 year from the date of acquisition or 1 year following the date of vacating the property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 2. The amendment made by this Act shall take effect as of January 1, 1959.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I have discussed the bill with the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON], who signed the report from the Committee on Armed Services. The bill was unanimously reported by that committee. Likewise, I discussed the bill with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], and the chairman of the full Committee on Armed Services, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

The bill concerns a matter of interest to the two Senators from Kentucky. I have discussed it with both of them. They have assured me that the amendment is agreeable to them. It is simply to correct an inequity which was called to our attention after the bill had been considered in committee.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD, at a point before the vote by which the Senate agreed to H.R. 4656, a statement on the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR COOPER ON H.R. 4656

I wish to comment briefly on H.R. 4656 which is identical to S. 1100 which was introduced by my colleague, Senator MARTIN, and myself. This bill would extend the time within which the Federal Government may pay the moving expenses of owners and tenants of land acquired for public works projects. Under existing law application must be made within 1 year following the date of acquisition of title to the property by the Federal Government. H.R. 4656 would require application for moving expenses to be made within 1 year following the date of acquisition or 1 year following the date the property is vacated, whichever is later.

This bill is, of course, of general applicability to all projects undertaken by the military departments. I must say, however, that it has been brought to my attention as a result of the relocation problems arising out of the construction of Barkley Dam and Reservoir in western Kentucky. The normally difficult problem of relocation has been aggravated in this instance by the fact that in the case of two communities—Kuttawa and Eddyville—parts of both communities will be under water. A part of the population must leave their homes; the remainder will stay. Because of the Barkley construction schedule it is obvious that there will be a long period of time between the date the Government acquires title to the property and the date present occupants are required to leave. The Government's normal policy of permitting occupancy of property acquired for reservoir purposes on a nominal rental basis, makes it almost certain that most of the displaced people in these two communities will not vacate the property within 1 year after the date the Government has acquired title to the property. This bill would permit the Federal Government to pay the moving costs (up to 25 percent of the value of the property acquired) as it presently is authorized to do, but would not require the displaced people to vacate their property within a year after acquisition of title to the property in order to be reimbursed for the cost of moving. All of us recognize that there are immeasurable benefits to the Nation, to a river valley and to the immediate area, whenever a large reservoir is constructed on one of our Nation's great rivers. However, it is equally clear that many landowners whose property is taken, who are forced to abandon a community in which their families have lived for generations, and whose businesses are shattered, can never be adequately compensated for their loss. As I have said, the situation in these two communities is particularly acute and I am hopeful that at least this small measure of relief can be afforded these citizens of Kuttawa and Eddyville in western Kentucky, and those who presently or in the future find themselves in similar situations.

I understand that the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada, Mr. BIBLE'S, amendment to the bill has been cleared with the chairman of the Armed Services Committee and the chairman of the subcommittee which handled this bill, and that there is no objection to it. Certainly I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada and I hope that the bill, as amended, will be approved by the Senate and that the House of Representatives will accept the Senate version.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY OF CERTAIN RELATIVES OF U.S. CITIZENS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I understand that we are awaiting copies of the report on Calendar No. 990, H.R. 5896. I want to be certain they are available before we proceed to consider the bill.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 990, H.R. 5896, the so-called immigration bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, this bill reclassifies certain close relatives of U.S. citizens and aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States. Such reclassification will expedite the reuniting of certain families. The bill also provides for the granting of nonquota status to certain close relatives of U.S. citizens or aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence who were registered on a quota waiting list prior to December 31, 1953, and in whose behalf petitions were approved prior to January 1, 1959. Approximately 57,000 aliens will benefit from this provision.

This legislation is in accordance with the recognized principle of avoiding separation of family units. However, no change is made in the Immigration and Nationality Act relating to the basic formula for the establishment of quotas.

Mr. PASTORE. Will the Senator yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I feel that because of the interest that I have had in this bill, H.R. 5896, I should not let this occasion pass without thanking the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Mr. EASTLAND, for his unfailing consideration in bringing this humanitarian measure to the floor of the Senate. My appreciation goes also to the majority leader [Mr. JOHNSON], for scheduling this bill which can give us all a touch of pride in our America in these days when the eyes of the world are upon us and the hearts of the world are anxious about America's attitude toward them.

I would be remiss if I did not also praise the clear and active thinking of Congressman WALTER of Pennsylvania whose wisdom and workmanship is the very foundation of this bill. I was proud to collaborate with him.

His experience and judgment have given us a bill which will unite families—an equitable bill fashioned sincerely in the American mold that makes for the sanctity of the family and the security of the home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Moss in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendments were considered and agreed to, as follows:

On page 2, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "brothers or" and insert "brothers"; in line 4, after the word "sisters", to strike out "or the"; in line 14, after the word "than", to strike out "the effective date of the said Act" and insert "December 31, 1953,"; in line 18, after the word "and", where it appears the second time, to strike out "the unmarried son or daughter under twenty-one years of age of the beneficiary of such petition" and insert "the children of such alien,"; in line 21, after the word "be", to strike out "a nonquota immigrant" and insert "nonquota immigrants"; in line 23, after the word "issued", to strike out "a nonquota immigrant visa" and insert "nonquota immigrant visas"; on page 3, after line 3, to strike out:

"SEC. 5. (a) The first sentence of section 205(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 180) is hereby amended to read:

"'(b) Any citizen of the United States claiming that any immigrant is his spouse or child and that such immigrant is entitled to a nonquota immigrant status under section 101(a)(27)(A), or any citizen of the United States claiming that any immigrant is his parent or unmarried son or unmarried daughter and that such immigrant is entitled to a quota immigrant status under section 203(a)(2), or any alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence claiming that any immigrant is his spouse or his unmarried son or his unmarried daughter and that such immigrant is entitled to a quota immigrant status under section 203(a)(3), or any citizen of the United States claiming that any immigrant is his brother or sister or his married son or his married daughter and that such immigrant is entitled to a preference under section 203(a)(4) may file a petition with the Attorney General.'"

And, in lieu thereof, to insert:

"SEC. 5. (a) Section 205(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 180) is hereby amended to read:

"'(b) Any citizen of the United States claiming that any immigrant is his spouse or child and that such immigrant is entitled to a nonquota immigrant status under section 101(a)(27)(A), or any citizen of the United States claiming that any immigrant is his parent or unmarried son or unmarried daughter and that such immigrant is entitled to a quota immigrant status under section 203(a)(2), or any alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence claiming that any immigrant is his spouse or his unmarried son or his unmarried daughter and that such immigrant is entitled to a quota immigrant status under section 203(a)(3), or any citizen of the United States claiming that any immigrant is his brother or sister or his married son or his married daughter and that such immigrant is entitled to a preference under section 203(a)(4) may file a petition with the Attorney General. No petition for quota immigrant status or a preference in behalf of a son or daughter under paragraphs (2), (3), or (4) of section 203(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act shall be approved by the Attorney General unless the petitioner establishes that he is a parent as defined in section 101(b)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act of the alien in respect to whom the petition is made. The petition shall be in such form and shall contain such information and be supported by such documentary evidence as the Attorney General may by regulations prescribe. The petition shall be made under oath administered by any individual having authority to administer oaths, if executed in the United States, but, if executed outside the United States, administered by a consular officer.'"

On page 5, after line 9, to strike out:

"(c) From and after the date of enactment of this Act no petition for immigrant status under paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of section 203(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 178–179) may be approved by the Attorney General unless the petitioner is the spouse or the natural parent or the brother or the sister of the alien in respect of whom the petition is made. Aliens who are the beneficiaries of immigrant status under paragraph (4) of the said section pursuant to petitioners heretofore approved by the Attorney General on the ground that they are the adopted sons or adopted daughters of United States citizens shall remain in that status notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of this Act, unless they acquire a different immigrant status pursuant to a petition hereafter approved by the Attorney General."

And, in lieu thereof, to insert:

"(c) Aliens who have been granted a preference under paragraph (4) of section 203(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act pursuant to petitions heretofore approved by the Attorney General on the ground that they are the adopted sons or adopted daughters of United States citizens shall remain in that status notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of this Act, unless they acquire a different immigrant status pursuant to a petition hereafter approved by the Attorney General."

And on page 6, line 20, after the word "amended", to insert a colon and "Provided further, That, upon his application for an immigrant visa, and for his admission into the United States, the alien is found to have retained his relationship to the petitioner, and status, as established in the approved petition."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 5896) was read the third time, and passed.

PAULINE D. KIMBROUGH

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I have a number of formal requests to make.

First I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 667.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 667) for the relief of Pauline D. Kimbrough, which was, in line 5, strike out "$6,367.20," and insert "$5,577.89,".

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF CODE RELATING TO PROHIBITION OF MISUSE BY CERTAIN AGENCIES OF NAMES, ETC., TO INDICATE FEDERAL AGENCY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House on the bill, S. 355, to amend title 18 of the United States Code so as to prohibit the misuse by collecting agencies or private detective agencies of names, emblems, and insignia to indicate Federal agency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 355) to amend title 18 of the United States Code so as to prohibit the misuse by collecting agencies or private detective agencies of names, emblems, and insignia to indicate Federal agency, which was, on page 2, line 11, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$1,000".

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNIBALE GIOVANNI PELLEGRINI

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 640.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 640) for the relief of Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, in the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini, shall be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini is coming to the United States for the purpose of adoption by Mr. and Mrs. Mose G. Quilici, citizens of the United States, and that he is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the adoption of the said Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini by the said Mr. and Mrs. Mose G. Quilici does not occur within the time necessary to conclude final adoption proceedings under the laws of the State in which the said Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini is to be adopted, he shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 242 and 243 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. In the event the adoption of the said Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini by the said Mr. and Mrs. Mose G. Quilici shall occur, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of the said Annibale Giovanni Pellegrini as of the date of the payment by him of the required visa fee: Provided further, That the natural parent of the beneficiary shall not, by virtue of such parentage, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, on July 6 the Senate passed S. 640, to grant to a minor child to be adopted by U.S. citizens the status of a nonquota immigrant. On September 1 the bill passed the House of Representatives with an amendment to provide for the temporary admission of the minor child to the United States, with provision for and adjustment of his status to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if he is promptly adopted under the laws of the State where he is to reside.

This amendment is acceptable, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 640.

The motion was agreed to.

KATHARINA HOEGER

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1171.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1171 for the relief of Katharina Hoeger, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Attorney General is authorized and directed to cancel any outstanding orders and warrants of deportation, warrants of arrest, and bond, which may have issued in the case of Marguerite Fueller. From and after the date of the enactment of this Act, the said Marguerite Fueller shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced or any such warrants and orders have issued.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, on July 15, the Senate passed S. 1837, to grant the status of permanent residence in the United States to the 62-year-old beneficiary. On September 1, the House of Representatives passed S. 1837, with an amendment to provide merely for cancellation of outstanding deportation proceedings.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 1837.

The motion was agreed to.

NASSIBEH MILDRED MILKIE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 977.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 977) for the relief of Nassibeh Mildred Milkie, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Nassibeh Mildred Milkie shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, on June 12 the Senate passed S. 977, to provide for restoration of U.S. citizenship to a native of the United States and citizen of Lebanon. On September 1, the House of Representatives passed S. 977, with an amendment to grant the beneficiary the status of permanent residence in the United States. The beneficiary must then proceed to naturalization under the regular immigration laws.

The amendment is acceptable; and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 977.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. PAULA DEML

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1627.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1627) for the relief of Mrs. Paula Deml, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Attorney General is authorized and directed to cancel any outstanding orders and warrants of deportation, warrants of arrest, and bond, which may have issued in the case of Mrs. Paula Deml. From and after the date of the enactment of this Act, the said Mrs. Paula Deml shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced or any such warrants and orders have issued.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, on July 24, the Senate passed S. 1627, to grant the status of permanent residence in the United States to a 68-year-old native and citizen of Yugoslavia. On September 1, the House of Representatives passed S. 1627, with an amendment to provide merely for cancellation of outstanding deportation proceedings.

The amendment is acceptable; and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 1627.

The motion was agreed to.

JULIA MYDLAK

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 464.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 464) for the relief of Julia Mydlak, which was, on page 1, strike out line 3 down through and including "available" in line 11, and insert "That, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to cancel any outstanding orders and warrants of deportation, warrants of arrest, and bond, which may have issued in the case of Julia Mydlak. From and after the date of the enactment of this Act, the said Julia Mydlak shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced or any such warrants and orders have issued".

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, on July 24, the Senate passed S. 464, to grant the status of permanent residence in the United States to a 70-year-old native and citizen of Poland, on September 1, the House of Representatives passed S. 464, with an amendment to provide merely for cancellation of deportation proceedings in behalf of the beneficiary.

The amendment is acceptable; and I move that the Senate concur in the House Amendment to S. 464.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RECLAMATION PROJECT ACT OF 1959

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] has to leave the floor in a few minutes. Before he leaves, he wishes to move the consideration of one of the bills which was passed over during the call of the calendar. It is Calendar No. 899, House bill 1778, which was reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

I understand the bill has been cleared on the minority side. The report (No. 873) on the bill is available, and was filed on September 2.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1778.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1778) to amend sec. 17(b) of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with amendments on page 2, line 18, after the word "such", to insert "amendatory"; in line 24, after the word "contract", to strike out "arrangements'." and insert "arrangements."; and on page 3, after the amendment just above stated, to insert "The Secretary shall report to the Congress all deferments granted under this subsection.".

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill passed be reconsidered.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to lay on the table the move to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION AND AMENDMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN RENEWAL LAWS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 952, Senate bill 2654.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, let me inquire what bill this is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It is the housing bill; and we are returning to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2654) to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the renewal of urban communities, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the renewal of urban communities, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to inform the Senate that additional bills will be added to the calendar, but the Senate will not consider any bills on the calendar if the reports on them are not available.

The reason why we have not considered, today, some of the bills already on the calendar, is that the reports were received too late. But we shall call up those bills before the end of the session.

We believe that consideration of the housing bill will not take an undue length of time, inasmuch as the Senate has already passed two housing bills at this session, and took action in an attempt to pass one of them despite the veto.

Following the housing bill, we plan to have the Senate take up Calendar No. 853, House bill 3610, to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, to increase grants for construction of sewage treatment works, and for other purposes. I am informed that the debate on that bill will not take too long today.

If my information is correct, we then plan to have the Senate take a recess at an early hour today.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7629) to make permanent the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans under section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9035) to permit the issuance of series E and H U.S. savings bonds at interest rates above the existing maximum, to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to designate certain exchanges of Government securities to be made without recognition of gain or loss, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MILLS, Mr. FORAND, Mr. KING of California, Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MASON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 36. An act for the relief of Page A. Wilson;

S. 252. An act to authorize Col. Philip M. Whitney, U.S. Army, retired, to accept and wear the decoration tendered him by the Government of the Republic of France;

S. 825. An act to revise eligibility requirements for burial in national cemeteries, and for other purposes;

S. 1081. An act for the relief of Arshalouis Simeonian;

S. 1149. An act for the relief of Capt. Thomas J. McArdle;

S. 1164. An act to authorize the appointment of a commissioner for Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz.;

S. 1613. An act for the relief of Matilda Kolich;

S. 1891. An act for the relief of Donald G. Coplan;

S. 1973. An act to extend the validity of the passport to 3 years;

S. 2101. An act for the relief of Ourania Ben Blikas;

S. 2291. An act to authorize the erection of a plaque in honor of the late Honorable Sam D. McReynolds on or near the site of the Chickamauga Dam;

S. 2390. An act to authorize the exchange of certain lands in or in the vicinity of Everglades City, Fla., in furtherance of the administration and use of the Everglades National Park;

S. 2500. An act to authorize the appointment of Elwood R. Quesada to the retired list of the Regular Air Force, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 25. Joint resolution to change the name of Roosevelt Dam, Reservoir, and Power Plant in Arizona to Theodore Roosevelt Dam, Lake, and Power Plant.

EXTENSION AND AMENDMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN RENEWAL LAWS

Mr. SPARKMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield, so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Does the Senator from Oregon think a quorum call should be had at this time?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; before the Senate acts on the housing bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MUSKIE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, this is the sixth time during this session of Congress that I have requested the Senate to support housing legislation recommended by a majority of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I recommended approval of S. 57, the conference report on that bill, and the enactment of S. 57 after it had been disapproved by the President. I recommended the enactment of a compromise bill, S. 2539, and I recommended its enactment after the President's disapproval. I now request the Senate to approve S. 2654—the third housing bill during this session—and a further compromise to accommodate the President.

During debate on the question of approving S. 2539 after it had been vetoed by the President, I stated my sincere belief that the vote on that question would be the last opportunity which Senators would have to vote on comprehensive housing legislation during this session of the Congress. Within a short time after the Senate sustained the President's veto on S. 2539, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], called a meeting of the committee to convene on the following day. The discussion on the question of housing legislation which took place in that committee meeting, and subsequent discussions involving the leadership on both sides of the aisle in both Houses of the Congress, and involving representatives of the executive branch of the Government, persuaded me that it might be possible to make certain changes in S. 2539 which would be acceptable to all parties concerned. These changes were considered yesterday in a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and S. 2654 was agreed to in the committee by a vote of 13 for, and 0 against—1 Senator voting "present," and another Senator being absent. Although I cannot agree that S. 2654 is as good a bill as was S. 2539 or S. 57, I support the new bill and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

S. 2654 is substantively identical with S. 2539 with the following changes:

First. S. 2539 authorized appropriations of $50 million for a new program of direct loans to colleges and universities for the construction of classrooms and related educational facilities. The President opposed this new program, and it does not appear in S. 2654.

Second. S. 2539 contained new authorization for urban renewal loans and grants of $650 million, with a provision that $100 million was available at the President's discretion to be used to make certain that the applications of smaller cities would not be turned down for lack of funds. The President opposed this provision on grounds that it implied a direction to commit all of the funds during a 1-year period. In order to meet the President's objection, S. 2654 retains the $650 million total authorization, but provides that $350 million will become available upon enactment, and $300 million will become available on July 1, 1960. The special discretionary fund to accommodate the needs of smaller cities is not contained in the new bill because the committee believes that the needs of cities of all sizes can be satisfied without a special fund.

Third. S. 2539 increased the FHA general insurance authorization by $8 billion, but provided that any portion of this increase which remained unused on October 1, 1960, would lapse. The President objected to this provision and requested that the FHA receive unlimited authority to insure mortgage loans. The committee does not believe that the FHA should receive unlimited authorization; but in an attempt to accommodate the President, the aforementioned date of October 1, 1960, does not appear in S. 2654. Consequently, the new bill increases the FHA general insurance authorization by $8 billion and permits this amount to remain available until used.

For the information of the Senate and for others who are concerned with legislative history of public laws, I will state my understanding of the legislative history of this bill. Senators will note that the report on S. 2654—Senate Report No. 924—contains specific comment, other than a section-by-section summary, only upon those items which represent differences between S. 2654 and S. 2539. Likewise, the report on S. 2539—Senate Report No. 715—contained specific comment only upon those items which represented differences between S. 2539 and S. 57. Consequently, it is my understanding that the legislative history of S. 2654 will be represented by the pertinent statements which appear in the reports of the Banking and Currency Committee on S. 57—Senate Report No. 41, on S. 2639—Senate Report No. 715, and on S. 2654—Senate Report No. 924.

Mr. President, as I said earlier, this is the sixth time during this session of Congress that we have dealt with a housing bill; and if I may say so, including the bill last year, which was the basis for the whole matter, it is the seventh time. I therefore feel it requires very little discussion today, and I hope we can act on the bill quickly.

Let me say that we seriously considered the President's veto message and considered each point of it. For some time it appeared we might not be able to get any bill at all. However, there soon developed a situation for which I have been pleading over a long time, and that is a cooperative spirit. We had a fine spirit of cooperation as between the two parties in both the Senate and the House of Representatives, and as between the two Houses, and with the representatives of the White House. Working in that way, we had little difficulty in agreeing upon some changes in the bill that had been vetoed, and with those changes we bring the bill to the Senate today.

Basically, the bill is the same bill that was vetoed, with one exception, namely, we eliminated the provision relating to college classrooms. It appeared that the President was more strongly set against that provision than any other.

The President made several objections to various parts of the bill, but that is the only complete deletion or basic change that is made in the measure.

We made a couple of other changes which might be represented as being more for clarification purposes than for anything else. We made it clear that the $650 million provided for urban renewal did not mean what the President interpreted it to mean, as shown in his veto message—that is, that it was to be only a 1-year program—and we did it by making it clear that it would be at least a 2-year program. We did that by making $350 million immediately available on passage of the bill, and $350 million additional available on July 1, 1960.

That clearly shows it is at least a 2-year program and not confined to 1 year. The original measure was not confined to 1 year, but the President interpreted it so.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not the view of the Senator from Alabama that we are going to have to write another housing bill next year?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. I will say something about that a little later.

Mr. President, another clarifying matter had to do with the FHA. Personally, I doubt that it made much difference whether we had a cutoff date on the new FHA authorization or not. By the way, the President objected to that. After all, the amount of authorization we make available to FHA will determine the length of time FHA can function.

Those are the only changes. One of them is a substantive change, leaving off the college classrooms. The other two are simply clarifying changes.

I will say, in slight elaboration of my answer to the Senator from Pennsylvania, I am confident that there will be a housing bill next year. As the Senator will recall, I stated at the meeting of the full committee I was confident of that, even after we removed the cutoff date for the new FHA authorization.

First of all, I am certain in my own mind that FHA will require additional insurance authorization. We will have to act on that in the next session of Congress. In my opinion the amount of authorization we give now will carry FHA to about October 1, or perhaps October 31 of next year, if we have normal housing activity, such as we are having at the present time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. It is entirely possible the authorization might run out earlier?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is. Last year the FHA estimated the $4 billion we gave them was sufficient to run for the whole year, but it ran out in less than 3 months.

By the way, we are taking away from the FHA, in the bill, the right to issue further letters of intent or to make those agreements to insure. That is what the FHA has been running on since October 31 of last year.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. As I understand the situation, the Senator is not relying on this entirely.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No.

Mr. PROXMIRE. While it is very likely that a new housing bill will be necessary because of the FHA authorization, I presume there are other reasons why the Senator from Alabama feels there will be a housing bill next year?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. The Senator from Alabama is going to enumerate them. I think there are three which are very apparent. Goodness knows how many others may show up.

First. I think the FHA will have to have additional authorization.

Second. I am quite certain that the college dormitory program will require additional funds before the year expires. We are providing $250 million in the bill. That amount simply will not be sufficient to run the program beyond 1 year.

Third, and very important, the title I home improvement program, which is a very popular program all over the country, has an expiration date under the bill of October 1, 1960. Certainly we are not going to let title I, home improvement, lapse. We would have to report a bill to extend that program even if we did not have these other things to consider.

I think everyone can rest assured there will be a housing bill next year to take care of these and other needs which may develop.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the bill still contain the valuable addition with respect to housing for the elderly?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The bill contains that provision. No deletion was made in that respect.

The Senator will recall, that was the subject of one of the strong objections of the President. I do not know exactly what will happen, but I can visualize some of the columnists in the press reporting that the President has won a great victory.

I wish to say, Mr. President, this measure is the kind of measure we ought to have when there are differences between the legislative and the executive. This is a compromise. The legislative branch conceded with regard to the college classrooms. The executive conceded with regard to housing for the elderly. Those were two points as to which there was strong objection by the President.

Mr. SMATHERS. I wish to commend the Senator for keeping that particular provision in the bill. In our State of Florida, where we have a predominance of elderly people, certainly there is no provision quite so important as that one. I wish to congratulate the able chairman of the subcommittee. I know the passage of the bill will accomplish a great deal of good for our State.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I feel it will, and I am glad the President was willing to concede on that point.

I point out, another thing to which the President had strong objection was the section on public housing. The President has conceded on that, and it remains in the bill.

I could point out other matters. In brief, however, only the three changes I mentioned are made in the bill which was vetoed. I am glad we have been able to work the bill out in a package form as we have.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. I commend the distinguished Senator from Alabama. I know this has been a very tedious and a very difficult fight for him. It is my regret we are not going to provide for the college classrooms. In my State there is a strong demand from many private colleges throughout the State for that. Under the circumstances, we can treat the subject on another occasion.

The housing for the elderly is very important to Colorado, also. That provision is in the bill, as I understand it, as it was in the previous bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct. It is unchanged.

Mr. CARROLL. What about the provison relating to municipalities and urban renewal.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That remains unchanged.

Mr. CARROLL. Is the same period of time provided to recoup the previous expenditures?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The provision remains unchanged.

Mr. CARROLL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The only change with reference to urban renewal is a change in form rather than in substance. We make it clear that it is not a 1-year program, as the President thought it was, as shown by his message. The President was mistaken, because we purposely left off the date. In this case we have spelled it out to be a 2-year program, in order that it might be certain. That is the only change in urban renewal, which, as I say, is one of form rather than substance.

Mr. CARROLL. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I agree that in form this is a 2-year program for urban renewal. I, for one, am going to take a very careful look at the program next session, to see to what extent the 2-year program we have spelled out is adequate.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly. I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLARK. If, as I suspect, it is an inadequate program, I shall certainly press for an additional grant authorization for urban renewal for fiscal year 1961.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator knows I have said from the beginning that $350 million a year is the minimum requirement. Of course, the longer we wait about getting it, the bigger the backlog that piles up. We have provided less than $350 million a year. We have provided $650 million for the 2 years.

Mr. President, this bill represents a give and take as between the Executive and the legislative branch. I am glad to urge its approval.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks a section-by-section summary of the bill as reported.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF S. 2654 AS REPORTED

Short title

The first section of the bill provides that the act may be cited by its short title—"Housing Act of 1959."

TITLE I—FHA INSURANCE PROGRAMS

Property improvement loans

Section 101: Amends section 2(a) of the National Housing Act to extend for 1 year (until October 1, 1960) FHA's home improvement and modernization insurance program.

Section 203 sales housing mortgage insurance

Section 102: (a)(1) Amends section 203(b) of the National Housing Act to increase the maximum amount of an insured mortgage covering a one-family residence from $20,000 to $22,500, and to $25,000 in case of a two-family residence.

(2) Amends section 203(b) to provide a new downpayment schedule for FHA section 203 sales housing as follows:

Valuation:	Downpayment (percent)
Up to $13,500	3
$13,500 to $18,000	10
Over $18,000	30

(3) Amends section 203(b) to permit FHA to accept VA construction inspections (as basis for application of full loan-to-value ratio) in connection with its mortgage insurance program on sales housing.

(b) Amends section 203(b) to make a nonoccupant mortgagor (builder or realtor) eligible for mortgage insurance in the same amount as that available to an owner-occupant under that section, in order to facilitate trade-in financing and avoid duplicate closing costs, if he places 15 percent of the mortgage amount in escrow to be applied to reduce the mortgage should no purchaser be found within 18 months. Under existing law, the mortgage of a nonoccupant is limited to 85 percent of the mortgage which an owner-occupant could obtain.

Low-cost housing in outlying areas

Section 103: Amends section 203(i) of the National Housing Act (relating to low-cost housing in outlying areas) to increase the maximum mortgage which may be insured under that section from $8,000 to $9,000, and to make eligible mortgages on existing housing as well as mortgages on new construction, with a reduced loan-to-value ratio (90 percent instead of 97 percent) for existing housing less than 1 year old which was not subject to FHA or VA inspection during construction. Removes $100 million insurance authorization limitation for "farm" homes insured under section 203(i).

Section 207 rental housing insurance

Section 104: Amends section 207 of the National Housing Act (the regular rental housing program) to increase from $12.5 million to $20 million the maximum amount of a mortgage which may be insured under that section.

(b) Increases dollar limits (per room and per unit) on FHA sec. 207 program as follows:

	Present law		New
	Per room	Per unit if under 4 rooms	Per room	Per unit if under 4 rooms
Garden type	$2,250	$8,100	$2,500	$9,000
Elevator type	2,700	8,400	3,000	9,400
Increase for high-cost areas	1,000		1,250

Also amends section 207 to increase the mortgage limits for trailer courts or parks from $1,000 to $1,500 per space, and from $300,000 to $500,000 per mortgage.

(c) Amends section 207 to increase the maximum interest rate for mortgages insured under that section from 4½ percent to 5¼ percent.

(d) Adds a new subsection (r) to section 207 authorizing the Commissioner to require mortgagors on housing hereafter insured under that section or any other provision of the National Housing Act to agree to pay a service charge (in lieu of insurance premiums) if the mortgages are later assigned to FHA.

(e) Amends section 207 to delete all provisions relating to housing for elderly persons, since the bill (in title II) establishes a new FHA program of mortgage insurance for elderly persons' housing.

Cooperative housing insurance

Section 105: (a) Amends section 213 to increase from $12.5 million to $20 million the maximum amount of a mortgage on cooperative housing which may be insured under that section.

(b) Amends section 213 to increase mortgage limits per room and per unit as follows:

	Present law		New
	Per room	Per unit	Per room	Per unit
Garden type:
Nonveteran	$2,250	$8,100	$2,500	$9,000
Veteran	2,375	8,550	2,500	9,000
Elevator type:
Nonveteran	2,700	8,400	3,000	9,400
Veteran	2,850	8,900	3,000	9,400
High-cost-area increase	1,000		1,250

Also amends section 213 to increase the maximum loan ratio from 85 to 90 percent of replacement cost for investor-sponsored cooperatives and from 90 (95 percent if 50 percent of cooperators are veterans) to 97 percent of replacement cost for other cooperatives.

(c) Amends section 213 to permit community facilities to be included in sales-type housing mortgages and to permit both community and commercial facilities (permitted by existing law only for management-type cooperatives) to be included in mortgages for investor-sponsored type cooperatives.

(d) Amends section 213 to increase the maximum interest rate for cooperative housing mortgages from 4½ to 5¼ percent, and the maximum interest rate for mortgages on individual dwellings replacing an original sales-type cooperative project mortgage from 5 to 5¾ percent.

(e) Amends section 213 to extend the cooperative housing program to existing structures acquired by management-type cooperatives.

Mortgage ceilings for Alaska, Guam, and Hawaii

Section 106: Amends section 214 of the National Housing Act to provide that the 50 percent higher mortgage amount which the FHA Commissioner, at his discretion, may allow in Alaska, Guam, and Hawaii, may be applied to high-cost-area mortgage amounts in the programs where such high-cost-area provisions pertain.

General mortgage insurance authorization

Section 107: Amends section 217 of the National Housing Act to increase FHA's general mortgage insurance authorization by $8 billion upon enactment. Also amends section 217 to prohibit obligation of the insurance fund by any means other than contracts of insurance or bona fide commitments to insure.

Repeal of obsolete provision

Section 108: Repeals section 218 of the National Housing Act, an obsolete provision, which permitted the transfer of application fees from the FHA section 608 program to the section 207 regular rental housing program.

Housing in urban renewal areas

Section 109: (a)(1) Amends section 220 of the National Housing Act (urban renewal housing) to increase the maximum mortgage amount which may be insured by FHA on sales housing, as follows: From $20,000 to $22,500 on one-family homes, from $20,000 to $25,000 on two-family homes, and from $27,500 to $30,000 on three-family homes.

(2) Amends section 220 to provide a new downpayment schedule on FHA section 220 sales housing as follows:

Valuation:	Downpayment (percent)
Up to $13,500	3
$13,500 to $18,000	10
Over $18,000	30

(3) Amends the section 220 sales housing provisions to permit a nonoccupant mortgagor to obtain a mortgage in the same amount as that available to an owner-occupant by placing 15 percent of the mortgage amount in escrow to be applied to the reduction of the mortgage if no purchaser is found within 18 months, the same as was done in the section 203(b) sales housing program by section 102(b) of the bill.

(b) Amends the rental housing provisions of section 220 to increase from $12.5 million to $20 million the maximum amount of a mortgage which may be insured thereunder.

(c) Amends section 220 to increase mortgage limits (per room and per unit) in multifamily projects as follows:

	Existing law		New
	Per room	Per unit	Per room	Per unit
Garden type	$2,250	$8,100	$2,500	$9,000
Elevator type	2,700	8,400	3,000	9,400
High-cost-area increase	1,000	-------	1,250	-------

(d) Amends section 220 to permit exterior land improvements (as defined by FHA Commissioner) to be included in the mortgage without being computed as a part of the per room or per unit cost limitation.

(e) Amends section 220 to permit the inclusion of such nondwelling facilities as the FHA Commissioner deems adequate to serve the needs of the occupants of the project and of other housing in the neighborhood.

Relocation housing

Section 110: (a) Amends section 221 of the National Housing Act (relocation housing) to extend the benefits of the program to any family displaced within the environs of a community that has a workable program; also authorizes the construction of relocation housing in the environs of such community provided the civil jurisdiction in the environs requests such mortgage insurance.

(b) Amends section 221(d) to increase the maximum mortgage amount for a single-family residence from $10,000 to $12,000 in high-cost areas. Makes eligible for mortgage insurance 2-, 3-, and 4-family dwellings which meet FHA minimum property standards and appropriate State and local housing ordinances or regulations.

(c)(1) Amends section 221(d) to increase the dollar amount limitations per family unit in multifamily projects from $10,000 to $12,000 in high-cost areas.

(2) Amends the existing rental housing program for nonprofit organizations in section 221(d) to provide that the maximum loan ratio (which is 100 percent under existing law and would not be changed by the bill) shall be based on replacement cost in the case of new construction and on value in the case of rehabilitation projects, instead of on value in both cases as provided by existing law.

(3) Amends section 221(d) to establish a new rental housing program for profit organizations similar to the section 220 rental housing program. The maximum loan ratio for mortgages under the new program would be 90 percent of replacement cost in the case of new construction and 90 percent of value in the case of rehabilitation projects; and the Federal Housing Commissioner would be authorized to require the mortgagor to be regulated or restricted as to rents or sales charges, capital structure, rate of return, and methods of operation. The maximum mortgage amount and dollar limitation per family unit would be the same as for nonprofit organizations.

(d) Permits inclusion of commercial and community facilities as necessary to serve occupants.

(e) Conforming amendment.

(f) Amends section 212(a) of the National Housing Act to make the labor standards provisions of that section applicable to rental housing projects constructed by profit organizations with mortgage insurance under section 221.

Servicemen's housing mortgage insurance

Section 111: Amends section 222(b) of the National Housing Act (mortgage insurance for servicemen) to (1) permit the benefits of section 222 in the insurance of mortgages meeting the requirements of section 203(i), and (2) increase the maximum insurable mortgage from $17,100 to $20,000, and in the case of the insurance of mortgages meeting the requirements of section 203(i) establish a maximum of $9,000.

Cost certification

Section 112: Amends section 227 of the National Housing Act to revise the cost-certification requirements affecting FHA section 221, and new sections 231 and 810, in accordance with amendments made by other sections of this bill.

Voluntary termination of insurance

Section 113: Amends title II of the National Housing Act by adding a new section 229 to authorize the FHA Commissioner to terminate any mortgage insurance contract covering a one- to four-family home upon request of the mortgagor and mortgagee (and upon payment of an appropriate termination charge) without the technical necessity of paying off the mortgage.

Avoidance of foreclosure

Section 114: (a) Amends title II of the National Housing Act by adding a new section 230 to authorize the FHA Commissioner to acquire any mortgage covering a one- to four-family dwelling which is insured under that act and is in default, for the purpose of avoiding foreclosure.

(b) Amends section 204(a) of the National Housing Act to authorize the Commissioner, where a default is due to circumstances beyond the mortgagor's control and will probably be corrected within a reasonable period, to extend the time for curing the default and to agree that if the mortgage is subsequently foreclosed any interest thereafter accruing will be paid (in the debentures) to the mortgagee.

Mortgage insurance for nursing homes

Section 115: This section adds to title II of the National Housing Act a new section 232 establishing a program of FHA mortgage insurance for nursing homes.

(a) Declares that it is the purpose of the new section to assist in the provision of urgently needed nursing homes.

(b) Contains definitions of terms used in the section. The term "nursing home" would mean a proprietary facility (i.e., a facility privately owned and operated for profit) which is licensed or regulated by the State (or a political subdivision thereof where there is no State licensing law) for the accommodation of convalescents and other persons who are not acutely ill and not in need of hospital care but who require skilled nursing care and related medical services; such care or services would be prescribed by, or performed under the general direction of, persons licensed by State law to provide it.

(c) Authorizes the Federal Housing Commissioner to insure mortgages on new or rehabilitated nursing homes and to make commitments for such insurance prior to the execution of such mortgages or disbursement thereon.

(d) Sets forth the conditions on which the Commissioner may insure mortgages covering nursing homes under the new program. Any such mortgage would have to be executed by a mortgagor approved by the Commissioner; and the Commissioner could require the mortgagor to be regulated or restricted as to charges and methods of operation and, if the mortgagor is a corporation, as to capital structure and rate of return. Any such mortgage would be limited in amount to $12.5 million, and to 75 percent of the estimated value of the property. The maximum interest rate would be 6 percent of the outstanding principal balance (exclusive of premium charges for insurance), and the maturity would be determined by the Commissioner.

Also provides that no mortgage may be insured under the new program unless the Commissioner has received a certification of the need for the nursing home from the State agency which has been designated under title VI of the Public Health Service Act to survey the need in the State for the construction of hospitals and for the furnishing of hospital, clinic, and similar services, and certification that there are reasonable standards of licensure and methods of operation of such homes.

(e) Authorizes the Commissioner to permit the release of a part or parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of any mortgage insured under the program.

(f) Makes the provisions of section 207 of the National Housing Act, which relate to premiums and payment of insurance, applicable to mortgages covering nursing homes under the new section 232.

Section 201(b) of the bill makes the prevailing-wage requirements of the Davis-

Bacon Act applicable to the construction of nursing homes financed with insurance under the new section 232, except where services of laborers and mechanics are donated.

Technical amendments

Section 116: Makes various amendments in the National Housing Act to add necessary cross-references between section 204 of that act (relating to payment of insurance) and the other six insurance programs (the title I property-improvement program, the sec. 213 cooperative housing program, the sec. 220 sales housing program, the sec. 221 relocation housing program, the sec. 222 servicemen's housing program, and the sec. 809 program for civilian housing at defense installations) to which the section 204 procedures apply.

Inclusion of conveyance costs in debentures

Section 117: Amends section 204(k) of the National Housing Act to permit the Federal Housing Commissioner to include certain costs of conveying property to FHA in the debentures issued to mortgagees under any of the title II sales housing programs and under the title VI and title IX programs.

Investment insurance

Section 118: Removes mortgage insurance authority ceiling under title VII of the National Housing Act.

Legal notifications sent by mail

Section 119: Amends section 512 of the National Housing Act to provide that certain legal notifications sent by the FHA Commissioner shall be considered legal notice if properly mailed to the last known address.

TITLE II—HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY

Under this title are two programs: (1) an FHA insurance program and (2) a direct loan program to assist in providing rental housing for elderly families and individuals.

FHA insurance program

Section 201: Adds a new section 231 to the National Housing Act to provide a new mortgage insurance program for the elderly. The program would be for both nonprofit and profitmaking sponsors and for new and rehabilitated structures. Maximum insurable mortgage would be $12.5 million, or $50 million for sponsors which are public or quasi-public instrumentalities.

Dollar limits would be as follows:

	Per unit
Garden type	$9,000
Elevator type	9,400

High-cost-area increase of $1,250 per room.

Loan ratios would be:

(a) New construction, 100 percent of replacement cost for nonprofit mortgagors and 90 percent of replacement cost for profitmaking mortgagors.

(b) Existing construction, 100 percent of value for nonprofit mortgagors and 90 percent of value for profitmaking mortgagors.

Interest rate on new program would not exceed 5½ percent. Maturity to be prescribed by FHA Commissioner. Not less than 50 percent of dwelling units for elderly (defined as any person, married or single, who is 62 years of age or more).

Applies Davis-Bacon Act except where laborers and mechanics donate their services to nonprofit corporation.

Loan program

Section 202: Under this section, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator would be authorized to make loans to private nonprofit corporations to construct, rehabilitate, or convert structures providing rental housing and related facilities for elderly families and elderly persons (including land acquisition and site improvement).

(a) (1) States that it is the purpose of the section to assist private nonprofit corporations to provide housing and related facilities for elderly families and elderly persons.

(2) Authorizes the Administrator to make loans to carry out such purpose, but provides that no such loan may be made unless the corporation shows that it cannot secure the necessary funds from other sources upon terms and conditions equally as favorable as those applicable to loans from the Administrator.

(3) Limits any such loan to 98 percent of the total development cost of the construction as determined by the Administrator, with a maximum maturity of 50 years. Such a loan would bear interest at a rate not more than the higher of (a) 2¾ percent or (b) the total of ¼ percent added to the average annual interest rate on all interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

(4) Authorizes the appropriation of $50 million as a revolving fund from which the Administrator would make loans under this section, limiting to $5 million the amount which may be outstanding from the revolving fund at any one time for related facilities (defined as indicated below).

(b) Confers upon the Administrator the same functions, powers, and duties as are vested in him for purposes of the college housing program under the Housing Act of 1950. Under the authority granted to the Administrator under this section, he would have power to make necessary rules and regulations, sue and be sued, deal in various ways with any property acquired or held by him, obtain insurance against loss, modify the terms and conditions of loan contracts (which may contain such covenants, conditions, and provisions as he deems necessary), and contract without advertising in certain cases, and his operations under the program would be generally subject to the Government Corporation Control Act.

(c) (1) and (2) Prohibit the use of housing constructed under the new program for transient or hotel purposes while the loans made under this section for such construction are still outstanding. The Administrator would define the term "transient or hotel purposes," but rental for any period less than 30 days would, in any event, constitute use for such purposes.

(3) Requires that all persons employed in the construction of housing under the new program be paid at not less than the prevailing wage rate in the locality, as determined in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, except in the case of persons who voluntarily donate their services without full compensation in order to lower construction costs.

(d) Defines terms used in the section. The term "elderly families" would mean families the head of which (or his spouse) is 62 years of age or over, and the term "elderly persons" would mean persons who are 62 years of age or over. The term "corporation" would be limited to private, nonprofit corporations which are approved by the Administrator as to financial responsibility. The term "related facilities" would include cafeterias or dining halls, community rooms or buildings, infirmaries and health facilities, and other essential service facilities.

TITLE III—FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Increase in mortgage ceilings

Section 301: Amends section 302(b) of the National Housing Act to increase the maximum mortgage which FNMA may purchase from $15,000 to $20,000 in the case of mortgages purchased under the secondary market operation and from $15,000 to $17,500 in the case of mortgages purchased under the special assistance function. Under the bill these limits would not be applicable to mortgages insured under section 220. Under the bill (as under existing law) these limits do not apply to mortgages insured under section 803 of the National Housing Act or to mortgages covering housing located in Alaska, Guam, or Hawaii.

Financing of existing construction

Section 302: Amends section 304(a) of the National Housing Act to permit FNMA to make advance commitments to purchase mortgages in its secondary market operations on existing construction. This is now permitted only for new housing.

Fees and charges under special assistance function; renewal of commitments

Section 303: (a) Amends section 305(b) of the National Housing Act to repeal certain statutory limitations presently applicable to the fees and charges imposed in connection with the purchase of mortgages under FNMA's special assistance function, and to give FNMA discretion to determine such fees and charges as well as the purchase price of such mortgages.

(b) Requires that FNMA renew any special assistance commitments issued prior to August 27, 1958, if hardship would otherwise occur and if failure to deliver the mortgage prior to extension was beyond control of the mortgage seller. Terms of renewed commitment cannot be less favorable than the terms of the original commitment.

Comparative housing mortgages

Section 304: Amends section 305(e) of the National Housing Act to increase the special support fund for section 213 cooperative housing mortgages by a total of $25 million. Of this increase, $12.5 million would be earmarked for mortgages on consumer cooperatives and the other $12.5 million for mortgages on builder-sponsor cooperatives.

Investments by FNMA

Section 305: Amends sections 304(b), 306 (b), and 310 of the National Housing Act to authorize FNMA to invest its excess funds in obligations which are lawful investments for fiduciary, trust, or public funds, as well as in obligations issued or guaranteed by the United States.

FNMA purchase of mortgages held by HHFA

Section 306: Amends section 306 of the National Housing Act to authorize FNMA to purchase (pursuant to commitments or otherwise), service, and sell any mortgages offered to it by the Housing and Home Finance Agency or a constituent unit or agency thereof.

TITLE IV—URBAN RENEWAL

Statewide planning

Section 401: Amends section 101(b) of the Housing Act of 1949 to direct the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to give particular encouragement to the utilization of local public agencies which are established by States to operate on a statewide basis in behalf of smaller communities undertaking or proposing to undertake urban renewal programs, subject to local governmental approval, whenever the utilization of such agencies would promote the slum clearance and urban renewal program.

Clarifying amendments

Section 402: Amends section 102 of the Housing Act of 1949 to make it clear that loan contracts under that section may cover the total cost (including interest payments) of financing definitive loans to local public agencies.

Early land acquisition and clearance

Section 403: Amends section 102(a) of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the HHFA Administrator to permit land acquisition and slum clearance prior to the signing of a loan and grant contract, provided (1) local law permits such early acquisition and clearance (2) land acquired under this procedure shall not be disposed of until the urban renewal plan is approved by the local community, or the community has consented to the disposal, and (3) the loan made to finance acquisition and clearance is secured in a manner satisfactory to the Administrator.

Urban renewal loan authorization

Section 404: Amends section 102(e) of the Housing Act of 1949 to provide for a more realistic method of determining the extent of use of borrowing authority, thereby providing sufficient authority for the administrator to enter into the loan contracts that are anticipated in the foreseeable future, without the necessity of increasing the statutory limitation on borrowing authority.

Grant authorization

Section 405: Amends section 103 of the Housing Act of 1949 (1) to provide an additional grant authorization of $350 million upon enactment and an additional $300 million on July 1, 1960; (2) to authorize the use of urban renewal grant funds to repay Treasury loans made to finance urban planning advances which are now uncollectible because of cancellation of the project; (3) to provide that where urban renewal assistance may be granted to a locality or local public agency within the applicable dollar amount and percentage limitations prescribed by title I of the 1949 act, the amount of such assistance shall not otherwise be restricted, except on the basis of (1) urgency of need and (2) feasibility, as determined by the Administrator; and (4) to authorize the Administrator to make grants for plans for community renewal programs. Such a grant could not exceed two-thirds of the cost of the planning.

Public improvements by Federal agencies

Section 406: Amends section 105(b) of the Housing Act of 1949 to facilitate public improvements involving the Federal Government and the District of Columbia in connection with urban renewal projects.

Public disclosure by redevelopers

Section 407: Amends section 105 of the Housing Act of 1949 to provide that before any commitments can be made for disposition of land to an urban-renewal developer he shall disclose, and the local public agency shall make public, a prospectus setting forth the names of the redeveloper's officers and principal members, investors, shareholders, and other interested parties, the estimated cost of the redevelopment, and the estimated rentals or sales prices of the proposed housing.

State loan ceiling

Section 408: Amends section 106(e) of the Housing Act of 1949 to eliminate the provision in existing law that not more than 12½ percent of the total loan authorization may be obligated in any one State; but does not alter the 12½-percent State limitation on grant authorization.

Relocation payments

Section 409: Amends section 106(f) of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize relocation payments when the displacement is a result of any governmental activity in an urban-renewal area, or of programs of voluntary repair and rehabilitation; increases from $100 to $200 the maximum amount of relocation payments to individuals and families; and increases from $2,500 to $3,000 the maximum amount of relocation payments to business establishments.

Hotels and other transient housing

Section 410: Amends section 106 of the Housing Act of 1949 to prohibit hotels and other transient housing from being constructed in an urban-renewal area unless the community obtains a competent independent analysis of local supply of such housing and determines that there is a need for such housing.

Low-rent housing in urban renewal areas

Section 411: Amends section 107 of the Housing Act of 1949 to facilitate the development of federally, State, or locally assisted low-rent housing in urban renewal areas by providing that where land to be acquired as part of an urban renewal project is to be used in whole or in part for low-rent public housing, it shall be made available to the public housing agency at a price equal to the fair value to a private redeveloper of rental housing in the community with similar physical characteristics and the amount of such price shall be included as part of the development cost of the low-rent housing project. The local contribution in the form of tax exemption or tax remission required under the public housing law with respect to any such project shall be accepted as a local grant-in-aid under the urban renewal program.

Planning requirements

Section 412: Amends section 110(b) of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the HHFA Administrator to expedite urban renewal projects by permitting him to omit or to simplify present detailed requirements for the urban renewal plan.

Nonresidential development

Section 413: Amends section 110(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 to permit up to 20 percent of the future capital grant authorization to be used for areas which are not predominantly residential, and which are not to be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses, even if such areas do not include a substantial number of slum dwellings as presently required.

Noncash grants-in-aid

Section 414: (a) Amends section 110(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 to provide that improvements and facilities that are otherwise eligible may be credited as local grants-in-aid to urban renewal projects provided their commencement does not precede the signing of the loan and grant contract for the project by more than 3 years.

(b) Waives the requirement in section 110(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 for communities whose projects could not obtain Federal recognition during the period from July 1, 1957, through December 31, 1957, because of limitations on the HHFA Administrator to make capital grants or to reserve funds. Under existing law, such Federal recognition is required to enable the local community to include local activities and facilities as noncash grants-in-aid.

Credit for interest payments

Section 415: Amends section 110(e) of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the HHFA to include interest on advances by a city (local public funds) as an item of gross project cost for an urban renewal project.

Uniform date

Section 416: Amends section 110(g) of the Housing Act of 1949 to make uniform the date for determining the application of the going Federal rate of interest under urban renewal contracts.

Technical

Section 417: Makes conforming amendments.

Urban renewal areas involving colleges

Section 418: Adds a new section 112 to the Housing Act of 1949 to (1) remove "predominantly residential" requirement in areas involving an educational institution; (2) permit credit toward the locality's one-third share of expenditures made by the educational institution in purchasing property and in clearing the property; (3) permit the expenditure to be counted toward a community's local share provided the expenditure is made no more than 5 years prior to the signing of the loan and grant contract for the urban renewal project.

Urban planning

Section 419: (1) Rewrites existing law (sec. 701 of the Housing Act of 1954) to provide that grants-in-aid for planning assistance may be made to State planning agencies, or in the absence of any such agency, to an agency or instrumentality of a State government designated by the Governor and approved by the Administrator; State planning agencies for statewide and interstate comprehensive planning; official State, metropolitan, and regional planning agencies empowered under State and local law or interstate compact to perform metropolitan or regional planning; and official governmental planning agancies for areas where rapid urbanization has resulted or is expected to result from establishment or increased activity of Federal installation.

(2) Extends urban planning to include municipalities of less than 50,000 population; counties of less than 50,000 population; groups of adjacent communities with common planning problems having population of less than 50,000; and cities, other municipalities, and counties suffering from a catastrophe which the President declares a major disaster.

(3) Authorizes an additional appropriation of $10 million for the program.

(4) Authorizes the Administrator to encourage, in areas embracing several municipalities or political subdivisions, planning on a unified metropolitan basis and to provide technical assistance for planning and for solution of problems.

Investment by banks in long-term obligations of local public agencies

Section 420: Amends paragraph seventh of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (12 U.S.C. 24), to permit National and State member banks of the Federal Reserve System to purchase or underwrite long-term obligations of local public agencies if such obligations are secured by an agreement with the Urban Renewal Administration. Section 5136 now permits banks to purchase and underwrite such obligations if they are short term (up to 18 months).

TITLE V—LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

Declaration of policy

Section 501: Amends section 1 of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to add the following policy objectives: To make adequate provision for larger families and for families consisting of elderly persons, and to vest in local housing authorities responsibility for the establishment of rents and eligibility requirements (subject to the approval of the Public Housing Administration).

Central administrative office facilities

Section 502: Amends section 2(5) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to permit a local public housing agency to furnish administrative facilities to the local urban renewal agency, at economic rent, in localities where the public housing agency and the local public agency operate as separate legal entities but with a common administrative staff.

Rents and income limits

Section 503: (a) Amends section 2(1) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to remove the existing requirement that rents be at least 20 percent of family income less certain deductions, providing instead that rents and income limits shall be fixed by the local public agency, subject to PHA approval, taking into consideration the rent-paying ability of the family and the financial stability and solvency of the project.

(b) Amends section 15(7)(b) of the 1937 act to reduce the "gap" between rental in the private market and rents for low-rent housing, in the case of families displaced by public action, from 20 percent to 5 percent.

Minimum age for admission of single persons and elderly families to low-rent projects

Section 504: Amends section 2(2) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to make the age requirements for admission to and occupancy of low-rent housing for elderly single persons and families conform to the age requirements generally applicable for benefits under title II of the Social Security Act (65 for men, 62 for women, and 50 for disabled persons).

Authorization

Section 505: Amends section 10(i) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to authorize the reuse of previous allocations for low-rent housing which are under annual contribution contract but will not be built, and also provides new contract authority for additional dwelling units; except that the total additional contract authority shall in no case exceed 37,000 units.

Extension of waiver in case of veterans and servicemen

Section 506: Amends section 15(8)(b) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 by extending from March 1, 1959, to October 1, 1961, the time that veterans or servicemen, or families thereof, may have a priority for admission to low-rent housing projects.

Payment for services

Section 507: Amends section 15 of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to authorize local public housing agencies utilizing public services and facilities of a municipality or other governmental agency for which separate charges are made to pay such charges (in the same amounts as would be charged private persons similarly situated) without the necessity of any amendment to the annual contributions contract.

TITLE VI—COLLEGE HOUSING

Housing loans

Section 601: Amends section 401(d) of the Housing Act of 1950 to increase the revolving fund for college housing loans by $250 million (the present ceiling is $925 million). Of the $250 million increase, $25 million is reserved for "other educational facilities," increasing the reservation for this purpose from $100 million to $125 million, and $25 million is reserved for student-nurse and intern housing facilities, increasing the reservation for this purpose from $25 million to $50 million.

Prevailing wage scale

Section 602: Provides for the prevailing wage scale under the Davis-Bacon Act to be applicable to all construction financed with college housing loans except for services voluntarily donated.

Cooperative college housing

Section 603: (a) Amends section 404(b) of the Housing Act of 1950 to provide that nonprofit student housing cooperative corporations established for the sole purpose of providing housing for students (or students and faculty) shall be eligible to receive college housing loans.

(b) Amends section 401 of such act to require that the note securing any such loan to a student housing cooperative corporation be cosigned by the educational institution where the cooperative is located. Under this amendment, title to the housing constructed with any such loan would vest in the educational institution in the event of the dissolution of the cooperative.

TITLE VII—ARMED SERVICES HOUSING

Extension of program; increase in maturity; reduction in certain insurance premiums; labor standards

Section 701: (a) Amends section 803(a) of the National Housing Act to extend the armed services housing mortgage insurance program until October 1, 1961.

(b) Amends section 803(b)(3) to increase from 25 to 30 years the maximum maturity of mortgages insured under this program.

(c) Amends section 803(b)(3) to permit the inclusion of nondwelling facilities to serve the occupants.

(d) Amends section 803(c) to permit the insurance premium on a Wherry Act project acquired by the Defense Department to be reduced below the present minimum of one-half of 1 percent.

(e) Further amends section 803 by adding a new subsection (k) which requires, as a condition of mortgage insurance under the present program, that the principal contractor or contractors engaged in the construction of the project involved certify that the laborers and mechanics employed on the project are being paid time and one-half for overtime employment.

Military housing (Wherry Act) and regular rental housing at military bases

Section 702: (a) Amends section 404(a) of the Housing Amendments of 1955 to authorize the Secretary of Defense to acquire section 207 rental housing completed before July 1, 1952, which is situated adjacent to a military installation and was certified as necessary military housing, in the same way that he is authorized under present law to acquire Wherry housing.

(b) Amends section 404(b) of the Housing Amendments of 1955 to provide that the Secretary of Defense must acquire all of the section 207 rental housing of the type described above which is located at a military installation where section 803 housing is being constructed. This same requirement already applies under existing law to Wherry housing.

(c) Amends section 407(f) of the Military Construction Act of August 30, 1957, to provide that neither Wherry housing nor section 207 rental housing shall be declared substandard because the units in such housing do not meet the minimum floor-area requirements prescribed for other military housing.

Deposits in Wherry project condemnation cases

Section 703: Amends section 404(c) of the Housing Amendments of 1955 to provide that in condemnation proceedings on Wherry projects, in those cases where the sponsor or owner had not certified the cost of the project to FHA by August 10, 1959, and the Secretary of Defense or his designee accordingly has the duty of determining the amount to be deposited with the courts for the estimated compensation to be paid, such determination shall be made "with a view to accurately estimating the equity of the sponsor or owner."

Defense housing for impacted areas

Section 704: (a) Amends title VIII of the National Housing Act by adding a new section 810 to authorize the FHA Commissioner to insure mortgages on single-family and multifamily projects (not to exceed 5,000 units), the need for which is certified by the Secretary of Defense. Insurance would be on an "acceptable risk" rather than an "economic soundness" basis. The projects would be held for rental for a period of not less than 5 years unless released by the military for sale. Priority in rental or sale is given to military personnel and essential civilian personnel of the armed services as evidenced by certification issued by the Secretary of Defense.

(b) Amends section 808 of the National Housing Act to make applicable the provisions of section 227 of the National Housing Act (cost certification).

(c) Amends section 212(a) of the National Housing Act to make applicable the prevailing wage requirements of the Davis-Bacon Act.

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

Surveys of public works planning

Section 801: Amends section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954 to authorize the Administrator to use during any fiscal year up to $50,000 from the section 702 revolving fund to conduct surveys of the status and current volume of State and local public works planning and surveys of estimated State and local public works requirements.

Disposal of Passyunk and Newport war housing projects

Section 802: (a) Extends by 2 years the period during which military personnel (and civilians employed in defense activities) may continue to occupy the Passyunk war housing projects, which are presently owned by the Housing Authority of Philadelphia pursuant to section 406 of the Housing Act of 1956, with occupancy preference and without regard to their income.

(b) Amends section 406 of the Housing Act of 1956 to provide a similar 2-year extension in the case of the housing project which was conveyed to the Housing Authority of Newport, R.I., under that section.

Farm housing research

Section 803: Amends section 603(c) of the Housing Act of 1957 to extend the farm housing research program for 2 additional years (until June 30, 1961), and to authorize appropriations of $100,000 during such additional period.

Hospital construction

Section 804: Amends section 605 of the Housing Act of 1956 so as to extend through June 30, 1960, the authority granted by that section for loans and grants to public and nonprofit agencies for hospital construction under the Defense Housing and Community Facilities and Services Act of 1951, where applications for such assistance were filed before June 30, 1953, and denied solely because of lack of funds. An appropriation of $7,500,000 would be authorized for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961.

Purchase of participating interests by savings and loan associations

Section 805: (a) Amends section 5(c) of the Home Owner's Loan Act of 1933 to permit a savings and loan association to use 20 percent of its assets to purchase participating interests in first mortgages on one- to four-family homes without regard to the existing area restriction, subject to the limitation that the agregate of such participations plus all outstanding loans made and participations purchased by the association under the existing exception from such restriction may not at any time exceed 30 percent of its assets.

(b) Further amends section 5(c) of such act to provide that participating interests in FHA or GI mortgages shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of loans which a savings and loan association may make within any of the percentage limitations contained in that section (the existing 20 percent limit on loans made without regard to the $35,000 and 50-mile restrictions, the new 20 percent limit on the purchase of participations, and the 30 percent combined limit).

(c) Further amends such section 5(c) to permit an insured savings and loan association to invest an amount not exceeding at any one time 5 percent of its withdrawable accounts in loans to finance the acquisition and development of land for primarily residential usage.

Voluntary Home Mortgage Credit Program

Section 806: Amends section 610 of the Housing Act of 1954 to extend the Voluntary Home Mortgage Credit Program until October 1, 1961.

Defense housing projects

Section 807: Amends section 606 of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense and for other purposes", approved October 14, 1940, to permit the commingling of Lanham Act and low-rent project funds and the use of all residual receipts for reduction of any Federal annual contributions contracts under the consolidated contract.

Disposal of project

Section 808: Authorizes the PHA Commissioner to modify terms and conditions of a contract, if he deems it in the public interest, relating to the Southmore Mutual Housing Corp, of South Bend, Ind., with respect to the sale of that corporation of a Lanham Act war housing project.

Real estate loans by national banks

Section 809: Adds to section 203 of the National Housing Act a new subsection (j) providing that mortgage loans insured under that section shall not be taken into account in applying the existing limitations (contained in sec. 24 of the Federal Reserve Act) on the total amount of real estate loans which a national bank may make in relation to its capital and surplus or its time and savings deposits.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I should like to lay before the Senate, so that it will be of record, the information we have with respect to the relocation of people who are displaced from urban renewal sites or from road construction operations.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, to what page is he referring?

Mr. JAVITS. I will refer to page 20 of the report, section 409, headed "Relocation Payments."

I shall of course not seek any amendment to the bill. I have not been on the floor during the presentation of the Senator from Alabama, and I do not know whether the Senator from Alabama has been properly lauded, but if he has not been he should be. I think if we have a housing bill as a result of the work of this session it will be heavily attributable to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, who attacked the problem with patience, notwithstanding his own irritation, which I think was quite just, as to the course the whole affair took. The Senator has surmounted every difficulty and has brought the whole situation into balance, to the point that at long last this tremendous effort will not be wasted.

I believe that was the real danger, that this tremendous job of an omnibus bill upon which so much labor had been expended and on which so many people had expressed themselves, would go down the drain, because we had passed merely an extension of the fundamental aspects of the act in deference to the President's veto and then had to come back next year and do the whole job over again, with all of the frustrations and difficulties which that implies.

I should like to say that I believe the whole country will be grateful to the Senator from Alabama for having somehow or other carried the matter through to what looks now, if all the signs in the sky do not get out of order, to be a happy and fine solution.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. First of all, I should like to express my thanks for his very kind remarks.

I particularly want to emphasize something that the Senator from New York has just stated. It is a matter that is easily overlooked. It is easy for people to think about public housing and urban renewal and FHA insurance, four or five big things in the bill like that, but as the Senator well knows, there are hundreds of items in the bill which would usually be overlooked. They are important items and, as I have said, probably 90 percent of them were requested by the administration.

I believe the Senator makes a good point, that it is a good thing for us to get together with give and take in order to have all of the numerous matters which are covered in the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. May I say to the Senator, too, because housing has been a kind of nonpartisan effort, that the way the Senator from Alabama has handled the matter should work out very agreeably for the President also. I should have been rather unhappy to leave the President in the position where, because of his honest convictions, with which I disagree and with which the Senator from Alabama also disagrees, with respect to the financial aspects of the proposed legislation, all of us, including the administration, would have ended up with the dust in our mouths of merely a bare extension, and with all of the fruitful effort having gone down the drain.

I wish to address myself to only one of the very fruitful aspects of the bill and put it on the agenda for the future. I refer to the question of relocation payments.

We have a very grave problem in New York City, with thousands of families displaced, and with relocation a really serious problem, involving a tremendous amount of family and human difficulty.

I am delighted to say that, together with other Senators, like the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], who is on the floor, I had something to do with the subject. The committee has endeavored to give more liberal understanding to the relocation problem.

My information, which comes to me from James Felt, the distinguished chairman of the city planning commission of my home city, a very eminent city planner and housing expert, is that we must still do some very basic and material things to help solve the relocation problem. For example, it is felt that this whole matter of relocation ought to figure into basic project costs.

As I said, I shall not disturb with any amendments the balance which we have attained. However, I mention this subject just by way of recording certain unfinished business and putting it on our agenda both before the committee and the Senate. It is a very grave difficulty, about which I shall have the privilege of presenting to the committee detailed information from the experience of the city of New York.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, when the President vetoed the last housing bill it was my view that we in Congress had walked the extra mile to meet the President, but found when we got there that he had turned his back on the cities of America. I felt there was little point in making another effort to pass a housing bill.

In this view I was joined by the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], who heads the Subcommittee on Housing of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and to whom all credit should go for the fact that we are today debating, and will shortly pass, the same housing bill in substance that we passed 3 times before.

I do not believe—and he will answer for himself—that the junior Senator from Alabama would have undertaken the great task of bringing another housing bill to the floor if he had not been substantially encouraged in that effort by emissaries of the President, who indicated that if certain minor changes were made in the bill previously vetoed, another such bill would be signed.

I commend the President and his emissaries for making those overtures, and I commend the Senator from Alabama for responding to them. However, let me say to my friends of the press that this bill represents no victory for the President. I agree with the Senator from Alabama that to some extent it is a compromise; but if anybody has been defeated in connection with this legislation, if the bill should be signed, it is certainly not the Congress of the United States.

In substance, with a number of minor changes, this is the bill which almost passed Congress as the Housing Act of 1958. I will not review the detailed history of the legislation, but I am sure that if the members of the press gallery can see how big and how thick the bill which I hold in my hand is, and if they realize that only three minor changes have been made in the bill which was vetoed a short time ago, and how relatively few changes that bill made in the bill which originally passed the Senate as S. 57, it will be difficult indeed for them to write dispatches which will carry headlines above them: "President Scores Another Victory Over Congress."

Mr. President, three changes have been made in the bill in deference to the wishes of the President. The first was to eliminate the expiration date of October 1, 1960, on the writing of additional FHA mortgage insurance. That is a change not of substance, but in form. What we did was to include the same additional authorization of $8 billion for FHA insurance that was in the vetoed bill, but to eliminate the termination date of October 1, 1960, which limited the availability of this $8 billion. The result of the change which we have made is a little hard to determine, but in all likelihood it means that FHA insurance will run out on or about October 1, 1960, just as it would have if that change had not been made. Of the $8 billion in additional insurance which the bill authorizes, as did the previous bill, over $5 billion will be used up immediately on taking up informal agreements to insure already made by FHA, and these agreements are declared in the bill to be illegal in the future. So they cannot play that trick again.

That will leave $3 billion of additional insurance authorization, which the FHA and the staff of the Committee on Banking and Currency estimate will carry FHA program from July 1, 1960, to, at the very latest, February 1, 1961.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that we may have the yeas and nays ordered on the Housing bill before too many Senators leave the Chamber?

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the housing bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK. The second change which has been made in the bill as a result of the President's objection eliminates a provision for loans for college classrooms. All this means, however, is that there are some purists on the other side of the aisle, and the President himself and his advisers, who feel that while it is all right to build college dormitories and college dining rooms, it is all wrong to build college laboratories, college libraries, and college classrooms with the aid of low-interest Federal loans.

These purists also suggested that if we wanted this program we should bring it out of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, as aid to education.

We have made a minor concession to the President. We are going to put this program in an aid to education bill. The aid to education bill has been ordered reported by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, but I doubt if it can be passed this session. However, undoubtedly we shall take it up early in the next session. When we do, members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare have agreed that they will help each other with amendments to improve the bill as it came from the committee.

One of the amendments I shall urge—and I hope the majority of my colleagues will go along—will be to provide in that bill for loans for college classrooms, college laboratories, and college libraries.

We must always remember that the President himself has advocated a program of $500 million of grants for aid for college classrooms and other academic facilities, so it seems to me highly unlikely that he could object to a $50 million program for loans if it comes to him next year as a part of the Federal aid to education bill, as I am quite hopeful it will.

So, in effect, the second concession we have made to the President is that we have agreed to take that provision out of this particular bill. I am quite confident that we will put something like it, or something better, in another bill, which will pass next year.

The final change which we made in this bill as compared with the earlier bill, the final concession we made at the behest of the President, is that, instead of making $550 million of urban renewal available immediately, with an extra $100 million at the discretion of the President if he should find that small cities were being shortchanged—which, of course, they are not, so we would never have to use the $100 million—we have added $100 million to the urban renewal program, and brought it up to $650 million; and we have said that the second $300 million may not be used until July 1, 1960.

At the snail's pace at which the Urban Renewal Administration operates in this regard, it probably cannot process more than $300 million of urban renewal applications during the next 6 or 8 months, so while in form this is said to be a 2-year urban renewal program, in fact, it is a 9-month urban renewal program.

As I stated earlier, in the colloquy with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], if we find next year that our expectations as to the speed with which the Urban Renewal Administration can do its job are not correct, and that applications can be processed more quickly—as we think they could be and should be—then I believe we shall have a bill next year which will increase the amounts of urban renewal grant authorizations.

I say again that as a practical matter, this is pretty much the bill that was vetoed twice. I say again that I commend the President's advisers for having made the first approach to the Congress, indicating that they would be willing to take this bill. I think they made a wise retreat. I think they have done the sensible thing. I think they have walked at least half the extra mile back in our direction. I suspect they regret the action they took earlier.

I give all credit to the White House and to the Republican leadership in the House for having come to us and indicated that this bill would be signed with so few changes.

I believe it is desirable for the record to run over briefly the points in the President's veto message and see to what extent this bill meets them.

The President objected in his veto message, first, to the fact that we set an expiration date next fall on the new loan insurance authorization of the Federal Housing Administration. To meet that objection we took the expiration date out, but we made sure that the FHA authorization will run out next fall anyway.

The next objection of the President is that the bill went too far, in that it called for spending more than $1¾ billion of the taxpayers' money, and that was too much. In my judgment the President of the United States vastly overestimated the spending which that bill would call for. Whether he did or did not, we have not reduced that amount.

The next objection of the President was that this was a 1-year bill which called for Federal spending at virtually the same rate as the earlier bill, which he vetoed. This is still a 1-year bill, but by the exercise of semantics we have made the urban renewal program look as though it were a 2-year program, so that objection has not been met either.

The President further objected in his veto message that the bill involved starting two new programs. One of them was loans for college classrooms, laboratories, and libraries, and the other the loan program for elderly housing, both at low interest rates.

In deference to the President we have taken the college classroom provision out of the bill. As I pointed out earlier, a similar provision—and I hope a better provision—will be in the Federal aid to education bill next year.

The President objected to the program for the elderly. With deep regret we have been unable to meet him on this objection. We all know that the present FHA program for elderly housing takes care of only the well-to-do elderly people. The program for housing moderate income or low income elderly people has accordingly been kept in the bill.

The President objected to the authorization of 37,000 units of public housing. We have been unwilling to accept that rejection, and the authorization remains in the bill. Most Senators know that a minimum of 37,000 units of public housing is essential in order to take care of families which will have to be relocated in safe and sanitary housing under existing law, because of slum clearance, highway, and other governmental programs.

The President then said that this was not the kind of housing legislation that is needed at this time; yet the present bill is the same kind of housing legislation as the earlier bill.

The President in his veto message recommended a housing bill which would contain six provisions. I shall discuss each of them very briefly.

First, a provision which would remove the ceiling on FHA mortgage insurance authority. I have already mentioned what we did in that connection. We changed the form, but not the substance.

Second, extension of the FHA program for insurance of property improvement loans. We have the same provision for extension in this bill that we had in the earlier bill, to which the President objected.

Third, a reasonable authorization for urban renewal grants. That, I think, we have done again, as I have explained. We have also provided authorization for college housing loans as the President suggested. We did not change that item at all. Also, we have not adjusted the interest rate on college housing loans, although the President so requested. We made no change there.

The President asked us to extend the voluntary home mortgage credit program, and that we have done in every bill we have passed.

Finally, the President, asked us to adjust upward the statutory interest rate ceilings governing mortgages insured under FHA's regular rental and cooperative housing programs. We made no change in this program, with respect to the interest provision, from the earlier bill.

So although I was somewhat depressed when the veto message came down a short while ago, I am now much encouraged. I think we have a bill which is substantially the same bill as the two which were vetoed. Yet we have the assurance this time, I believe, that the bill will be signed.

Again, I express appreciation to the President and his advisers, both in Congress and elsewhere, for their very fair-minded rightabout-face; for their indication of a willingness to cooperate with Congress; and finally for what appears to be their ultimate realization that the bills which passed the Senate and the House earlier were in the national interest.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. I am happy, again, to commend the Senator from Pennsylvania for the clarity of his thought on the issue in the comprehensive way he has dealt with the unfortunate veto, and his analysis of what we now are finally doing.

I wonder if the Senator would agree with me that the use of the veto this year and the philosophy which has prompted it might well afford an opportunity for a very interesting study by a scholar, perhaps a master of political science who is striving for a doctorate in political science.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the Senator thoroughly. I think it might also be a good subject for one who is seeking a doctor of philosophy in psychology.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. To that I would agree also. We might include the veto of the civil functions appropriation bill and the statement by the President that all 67 new starts represent good, necessary resource development—but not now.

As to the housing bill, the President did not say he was against housing for the elderly. He favors it—but not this way.

He certainly said that he is not opposed to classrooms and Federal assistance for building facilities at colleges—but again, not this way.

Certainly the President is not opposed to a program of urban renewal, but he insisted that it be too little over too long a period.

We see this theme running through today's vetoes. I wonder if a scholar might not run this philosophy and thought even farther back into history. I remember hearing so vividly so often during the depression the phrase: "Prosperity is just around the corner"—the attitude of "all tomorrow, but today nothing."

Mr. CLARK. I could not agree more with the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. I think he has stated very succinctly the problem which confronts us today and which will continue to confront us until January 1961.

It is said, although I do not know whether it is true, that some scholars read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Personally, I am a little skeptical about that. But if they do, perhaps they will pick up the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey, and we will have some bright young men and women down here trying to get Ph. D.'s in these interesting subjects.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it might help to clear up the discussion to observe that what is being recommended is fairly implied in the philosophy of dynamic conservatism, in which one tries as hard as he can to keep things exactly as they are.

Mr. CLARK. This is another way of saying: A Republican looks at his party.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, one Republican looked at his party. But, certainly, it would follow from this that the Republicans should be opposed to any new starts, would it not, Mr. Clark?

Mr. CLARK. I think so.

Mr. McCARTHY. If that is where they stopped, we would not be so disturbed—at least speaking for myself. But I have been bothered by the recent policy of new stops.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator from Minnesota is quite correct. We are beginning to have a lot of stops. We are coming to be like a local train instead of an express.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from Alabama for his leadership on the housing bill. He has worked long, diligently, and against great obstacles, having had two modest housing bills vetoed this year. With great patience and with the submergence of his own personal feelings, he has returned to the committee and worked until he has brought out still a third housing bill.

The tragedy of this housing bill is that the main guns of the administration have been trained upon a small appropriation for education in the bill. Out of a bill appropriating more than a billion dollars, only $50 million was provided for the building of college classrooms and providing equipment for them.

In the United States last year there were 3¼ million college students. This year there will be 3¾ million. By 1965 there will be almost 5 million. If we project the increase at the present rate, and assume that there will be no increase in the percentage of young people who go to college—and perish the thought that there will be no increase—there will be almost 5 million young people in college by 1965, and more than 6 million by 1970, which is almost double last year's rate; nearly double in just 12 years.

Colleges lack the resources to build enough classrooms, to obtain equipment, and to properly staff them. It is in the national interest that our young people have an opportunity to be educated.

I should like to read a few lines from an article entitled "Not 1 in 10 a College Graduate," written by Sylvia Porter, and published in the Temple, Tex., Telegram of September 7, 1959. The writer of the article points out that but 7.3 percent of our population aged 20 years and over is a college graduate. This means that not even 1 of every 10 Americans can claim this level of schooling today.

Every day, now, we are reading in the newspapers about the reopening of schools. We see pictures and posters depicting the back-to-school movement. Everyone is having a back-to-school movement except the Federal Government. The back-to-school movement ought to be a part of our national economy and policy. But the President vetoed a billion dollar housing bill because it contained an item which provided for the lending of $50 million for the building of college classrooms in which to train the Nation's young people.

Miss Porter has written a very perceptive column. She points out that we are making only a little headway in stepping up the percentage of people who go to school. We are doing a little to improve our lagging educational system. She says that while half of the people will have had more than 12 years of schooling by 1970, half of them will have had less than 12 years. At the present time, when we compute the education of American adults, their average amount of schooling is 10 and a fraction years. By 1970, that figure will be pulled up, Miss Porter points out, to 12 years. That means that half the population will be above the 12-year figure, or high school graduates, and half below it.

The article states:

> You may be awed by the projection that there will be 11 million college graduates in 1970 against 8 million in 1960 and only 6 million in 1950.
>
> And, of course, the educational pattern is improving.

That is pointed out in the column. The older people, who have not been to school, are dying, and the younger ones have attended school for a longer period of time. Miss Porter continues:

> But to me the percentages are scant comfort. For what might have been an adequate educational pattern in 1950 won't be an adequate one in 1960, and it'll be even less adequate in 1970.

A great many youngsters drop out of high school; or, if they finish high school, they do not go to college because they cannot afford to do so.

Mr. President, when the Government refused to lend money to colleges to build classrooms, the only recourse the colleges have left is to raise the tuition rates.

Since 1952, the average tuition rate in American colleges has gone up 71 percent. Many students cannot afford to pay such rates simply because they do not have the money to do so. Only a small percentage of the American people have the resources to send their children through college.

It has been said that any boy who has ambition can work his way through college. It is not true, because the classrooms are not there, the dormitories are not there, and the opportunities are not there. I believe it is a fine thing for students to work their way through college if they are in a position to do so. I did. But providence bestowed upon me a physical constitution which made me about as "strong as an ox." The physical effort did not hurt me, but I had classmates who were working their way through college and who developed tuberculosis because of the physical strain combined with their effort to pass their courses of study. They have already passed out of this life.

I say that burden should not be put on every young man who desires a college education. We should not say,

"Well, if you are not physically strong enough to hold down a job and go to college, you will not get an opportunity to develop your brain."

It is a well-known fact that people with poor physical constitutions sometimes have the highest order of mental ability, and they, too, can add much to this Nation's welfare if their mental capabilities be developed.

It is said, however, that we should see if a student is strong enough to work his way through college, and that if he is not, he does not need to attend college.

Mr. President, we should place more emphasis on the brainpower of this country. Admiral Rickover pointed out after his trip to Russia that he was not so much afraid of Russian missiles as he was of their efficient educational system.

Dr. Teller, the acknowledged inventor of the H-bomb, in a statement a few weeks ago pointed out that under the Russian educational system, Russia will lead us in science in 10 years if we do not do something to improve the American education system, and the opportunities people will have to be educated.

The article by Sylvia Porter continues:

The progress isn't good enough. The progress isn't fast enough. And you may have noticed that here I've mentioned only the quantity of education in America. I haven't even touched on the quality of it.

Mr. President, in bare quantity alone, we are lacking in schools for students to attend. We are robbing this generation of young Americans of the opportunity we owe to them in a democracy, and that we owe to ourselves as a people to defend this country.

The administration has squandered hundreds of millions of dollars on experimental projects that did not pan out. If an experimental missile or a nuclear seaplane is estimated to cost $100 million, $200 million, $500 million, we declare the sky is the limit. We make the experiment, regardless of cost, or of failure.

But education is no experiment, it is no gamble, it always pays off.

We voted about $45 billion in this session of the Congress for national defense. We voted about $39½ billion to the Defense Department alone in one year, and over $2,600 million to the Atomic Energy Commission, mainly because of its work in national defense. That is over $42 billion. We are about to vote over $3 billion more for foreign aid. But when we ask for $50 million to lend to colleges—not to give to them but lend it—the administration says, "The main vice of this bill is Federal aid to education in the worst way." And this, in face of the acknowledged fact that the safety of our Nation is dependent upon the level of education of our people.

How is it Federal aid in the worst way? Because it was money proposed to be lent? The President advocated grants of $500 million to colleges for building. If lending is the undesirable feature, why did not the administration say, "Remove the loan feature and give the colleges $50 million to build their classrooms"? I would vote for that. That is what we need. This is a measly start by an administration which has turned its back on the safety of America, by turning its back on the education of American youth.

I do not care how many gadgets have been constructed at the rate of $40 billion a year; they alone will not give us security. When our country will not educate its youth, it removes part of America's ability to preserve its liberties. Those who take that position are shortsighted beyond belief.

We have never had an administration in the history of this country which showed as little concept of what is needed for the safety of the American people, the education of the people. Presidents George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and Presidents who have followed them have recognized our educational needs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert following my remarks a column appearing in the Temple, Tex., Telegram of September 7, 1959, entitled "Your Money's Worth—Not 1 in 10 a College Graduate," by Sylvia Porter.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

(By Sylvia Porter)

NOT 1 IN 10 A COLLEGE GRADUATE

Are you a high school graduate? If so, only about 4 out of every 10 Americans aged 15 years and over can say the same at the beginning of this new school term in September 1959.

Are you a college graduate? If so, you're in that minor 7.3 percent of our population aged 20 years and over—meaning not even 1 of every 10 Americans can claim this level of schooling today.

Are you impressed by the pictures and news stories which traditionally appear in September, emphasizing how many millions of youngsters are pouring into our schools?

If so, perhaps you'll be less impressed when you read that the average schooling of Americans runs to only 10.8 years today, and even by 1980 the average is expected to be up to only 12 years—meaning that while half of our people will have had more than 12 years of schooling, half will have had less.

These are the back-to-school weeks when debate about our educational system always reaches a seasonal peak. In search for some not-so-obvious facts, therefore I've been digging into a recently completed study of educational attainment in our land by the Bureau of Census.

In this study are the first projections ever made by the Census Bureau of our educational levels in 1960, 1970, and 1980. The Census Bureau's underlying assumption is that "There will be no unusual political or economic conditions and no extreme changes in educational practices in this country that might seriously affect patterns of educational attainment."

Thus, the projections aren't just predictions; they are patterns based on foreseeable population growth and trends in schooling.

If you are an American who believes that ours is the best of all possible educational systems in the best of all possible economies, you may get pleasure from the projection that there will be 70 million high school graduates in 1970 against 52 million in 1960 and only 38 million in 1950. You may be awed by the projection that there will be 11 million college graduates in 1970 against 8 million in 1960 and only 6 million in 1950.

And, of course, the educational pattern is improving—reflecting not only the fact that there are more of us to be educated but also the fact that more of us are staying in school longer and our uneducated older folks are dying off.

But to me the percentages are scant comfort. For what might have been an adequate educational pattern in 1950 won't be an adequate one in 1960, and it'll be even less adequate in 1970.

We will need fewer and fewer unskilled workers in America in this coming decade, fewer and fewer ordinary farmers. We'll need millions more professionals, trained white-collar workers, craftsmen and technicians.

You don't need anyone to prove this to you. Look at any modern office or factory and see the complicated equipment, recognize that what appears complex today will seem simple 10 years from today. Think of the demands of the space age, the ever-mounting competition from nations which concentrate far more than we do on education.

The prospect that by 1970, 48 percent of us will have graduated from high school and 8½ percent from college doesn't please me. It scares me. The projection that by 1970 half of my sex will have completed high school and 6½ percent will have finished college doesn't warm my heart. It makes me wonder whether women will be able to fill the jobs that will be opening for them in this next decade.

So many youngsters drop out of high schools and don't go on to college because they can't afford to remain in school or go on.

And while we've made some strides in financing of education in recent years, the dimensions of the challenge are dramatized by the very statistics supposedly measuring our progress.

The progress isn't good enough. The progress isn't fast enough. And you may have noticed that here I've mentioned only the quantity of education in America. I haven't even touched on the quality of it.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, in the Washington Post this morning, Wednesday, September 9, there is a well written column by Bill Gold, which he writes each day under the caption "The District Line." The title of this particular article is, "Have You Completed Your Education?"

Mr. Gold comments on the Ford Foundation Fund for Adult Education and its findings. Among other things there is pointed out in this article what the Ford Foundation has found in its research study. Mr. Gold states in his column:

The American people should vastly increase the financial support of schools, colleges, and universities. We must pay our teachers and educators much more. We can afford to do so. We cannot afford not to do so.

Mr. President, this is the finding of the experts on what America should do to help improve education.

The American people should vastly increase the financial support of schools, colleges, and universities. We must pay our teachers and educators much more. We can afford to do so. We cannot afford not to do so.

The administration has turned its back on the welfare of contemporary America on all levels when it says, "We will have no new starts in education."

The Education Office of the Government has found out this fall there will be a teacher shortage of about 195,000 schoolteachers. Where do we train schoolteachers? In colleges. We train them in colleges which are overcrowded now and lacking sufficient dormitories and classrooms. The Government says we have a shortage of 195,000 teachers and more than 130,000 classrooms; the same Government says, "The worst part of this bill is trying to build the buildings and train schoolteachers to educate American children."

I wish to pay further tribute to the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama because twice this session he has brought a bill out of committee with provisions for building classrooms in colleges. He has come to the closing days of the Senate exhibiting great patience since the first housing bill was passed in February. He has worked month after month trying to do something about the education status of America, and I personally feel tremendously encouraged by the fact that we have in this body a Senator who has worked month after month and week after week trying to do something about the greatest governmental need in America today, which is to improve the education of our people.

Mr. Gold's column continues:

The principal educational task of schools is to discipline and enlighten the minds of its students—to teach them how to think; to communicate—

Mr. President, we need more people to communicate to the President's advisers. But we have to have the people educated well enough to receive communications, too, because communication is not sufficient; the ability to understand the communications received is important, too. The newspapers and magazines of America and the educators and scientists cry out louder than anyone else about the lack of education in America. We lack adequate educational opportunities, both quantitatively and qualitatively, and yet the administration never seems to have awakened to the real danger that this shortage is America's greatest danger.

And Mr. Gold continues—to analyze, criticize and decide—

Mr. President, we could well interpolate there, "and make correct decisions." This opposition to college classrooms is a wrong decision. It is wrong in national goals. It is wrong in lack of foresight.

The article reads—to cultivate their curiosity and to release their powers of creativity—

How do we develop people to cultivate their curiosity and to release their powers of creativity? Our colleges are the best places to do so. It may be done in many ways. It may be done by the self-education by many people. But colleges have proved to be the best places we have for obtaining these badly needed mental developments on a national scale—to be familiar with basic facts and ideas; to learn how to learn. We should improve the opportunities for all people to continue their liberal education after they become adults.

Mr. President, I am pointing out this as a national need. This is not a frill.

I wish to point out that democracy is not just the natural way of life of governments. It has been relatively short periods of history of the human race that they have lived under free institutions like ours, and we are the only great Nation that has ever been this large physically with a vast population which has had a democratic form of government. That democracy can survive only by the intense education of the people to make it survive.

So in Mr. Gold's article it points out—

The preservation and improvement of free institutions demand that able people exercise public leadership, and that they be well prepared for that leadership.

To a layman like me, what this boils down to is this. Education is the key to a meaningful life, and to fulfill our potential as individuals and as a free Nation, it is necessary to do a better job of educating ourselves and our leaders.

Only then will our children inherit the educational climate which is their due.

Yes, a new school year has begun, and it is indeed a day of rejoicing—for those who have not yet stopped learning.

So far as the opportunity of increasing college facilities is concerned, the President's message is black crepe on the door of higher education in America.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in full at the conclusion of my remarks the column "The District Line," by Bill Gold, from the Washington Post of today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I wish I could be as optimistic as the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania in expressing the hope that we can put this item in another bill, but after seeing the adamant opposition of the administration month after month to any support for education by this Government, to any activity to expand the educational opportunities for the youth of America, I am not so optimistic that we shall get past this administration any bill that will improve the educational opportunities for the youth of this land.

To me, it is not a minor matter to cut out the $50 million item, small as the amount is, for college classrooms, because inclusion of the provision could start a course that would lead to better opportunities for the education of many of our youth.

I shall see the bill passed without that item included with deep regret and with the realization that the administration has missed the vital key to the happiness, welfare, and education of the American people in the next generation.

However, it was not the fault of the Senate that it occurred. Great credit is due to the distinguished Senator from Alabama for working for many months and for having put in the bill this provision in an effort to try to do something about education. It is to his credit that he has worked this long and hard and has brought to the Senate a bill with as much educational benefit as there is in this bill.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 9, 1959]

THE DISTRICT LINE—HAVE YOU COMPLETED YOUR EDUCATION?

(By Bill Gold)

More than 150,000 children began a new school year in Washington's suburbs yesterday. Some 116,000 go back to school in the District today. It's a time of rejoicing for many parents. They're happy to turn over their children to a communal baby-sitting service, in the vague hope that if a youngster is fed into one end of the educational machinery and kept there for a sufficient number of years, he will automatically emerge from the other end an educated person.

The feeling among these parents is: "I completed my education when I finished school; now I want my child to complete his education." The concept of education as a lifelong process escapes them.

This notion is prevalent enough to give serious concern to educators. Eight years ago, the Ford Foundation established the Fund for Adult Education. This week the fund published a report titled "Education for Public Responsibility." Its purpose is to expand educational opportunities for leaders, and young men and women who will soon be leaders, in all fields of American life. Some excerpts from that report are worth noting:

"Parents should pay primary attention to the home as the most important of all educational institutions, and should not relinquish its basic roles to the schools.

"Adults should seek in all other ways—through churches, youth organizations, community agencies, businesses, labor unions, local governments, books, magazines, newspapers, radio, television, films, etc.—to make these influences educative for good. They should do so not only for the sake of young people, but also for the sake of their own continuing education as responsible adults.

"The American people should vastly increase the financial support of schools, colleges and universities. We must pay our teachers and educators much more. We can afford to do so. We cannot afford not to do so.

"The principal educational task of schools is to discipline and enlighten the minds of its students—to teach them how to think; to communicate; to analyze, criticize, and decide; to cultivate their curiosity and to release their powers of creativity; to be familiar with basic facts and ideas; to learn how to learn.

"We should improve the opportunities for all people to continue their liberal education after they become adults.

"Many parents have unwittingly abdicated their responsibilities for giving their children opportunities to realize sound values, emotional stability, and spiritual and intellectual growth. Parents cannot assign these responsibilities to other institutions. If they are neglected, done poorly or done wrongly, the best that other institutions can hope to do is to repair.

"Parents cannot hope to train children as they would a household pet. To educate their children properly, they must educate themselves as well.

"Most urgently, we should improve and expand educational opportunities for those who bear public responsibilities—particularly those younger leaders who are emerging.

"The preservation and improvement of free institutions demand that able people exercise public leadership, and that they be well prepared for that leadership.

"Leaders have few opportunities to prepare for greater effectiveness except those provided 'on the job,' through often unnecessary trial and sometimes calamitous error."

To a layman like me, what it boils down to is this: Education is the key to a meaningful life. He who thinks his education was complete on the day he finished school is an ignoramus. If we vote for backslappers and baby kissers rather than for men and women who have been properly trained for leadership, we will get the kind of government we deserve.

To fulfill our potential as individuals and as a free nation, it is therefore necessary to do a better job of educating ourselves and our leaders.

Only then will our children inherit the educational climate which is their due.

Yes, a new school year has begun, and it is indeed a day of rejoicing—for those who have not yet stopped learning.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the junior Senator from Texas for the wonderful discourse he has given us on the need for college classrooms, which we all acknowledge. May I also say I am grateful to him for the kind words he has had to say about me.

A few days ago I ran across an article entitled "A Second United States in 40 Years," the point of the article being that 40 years from now the population of the United States will be double what it is today. I wonder if many of us stop to consider what that means in the way of the education facilities that will be required. We are discussing a housing bill. Let us think what that population increase means in terms of housing. There are 48 million houses in the United States today. Over the period of 40 years, which may be the life of a mortgage, we shall need 48 million more houses. That is a lot of houses. That many houses are necessary just to take care of the population increase.

Assuming those houses can be used for 50 years, and while I do not know for sure, I think it is a reasonable assumption, it means we shall have to replace 2 percent of the houses every year. That means 960,000 houses a year will be needed for replacement only. This is in addition to the need for over 1 million units each year to take care of the increase in population. Put the two needs together, and the figure amounts to well over 2 million, to say nothing of the need to replace houses that are destroyed by reason of storms, fire, and so forth.

In other words, we are dealing with legislation that will provide for the construction of about 1,300,000 houses a year, if the economy stays good; but in a few years' time we are going to have to build at the rate of over 2 million houses a year.

The Senator from Texas has well described some of our unpreparedness to take care of the children that are coming along and the young adults who want a college education. At the rate we are going, we are not prepared today to take care of seeing to it that American families can live in decent homes. It poses a real challenge.

I repeat the expression of my deep appreciation to the Senator from Texas for discussing this matter.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama for adding the information to the discussion he has given of the bill as to the projected population for the next 40 years. I point out that the computation of the estimated number of college students for 1970 is more than 6 million, nearly double the present number, but does not include any increase in the percentage of our people who will be attending colleges. The Census Bureau finds that according to the trend of American occupations and the way the American people will earn their living, indisputably within the next 10 years there will be demands for a higher percentage of professional men, a higher percentage of scientists, a higher percentage of white-collar workers, and a smaller percentage of so-called common laborers, because of the mechanization of industry and because of the advances of technology.

Each year a smaller percentage of our population is working in farm labor or common labor. The ditch digger is one example. One seldom sees a ditch digger any more. Ditches are dug by machines built and operated by skilled personnel.

So with the constantly increasing percentage of our American people whose work requires college training, we must step up the number of persons who go to college, in addition to the requirements of the population increase, which will mean in 40 years a requirement of double the present number of college dormitories and college classrooms, even aside from the changing nature of the way the people earn their livelihood.

I am glad the people of my State have given me the opportunity to serve in a body which has men like the distinguished Senator from Alabama, men who are trying to do something about making adequate preparations for the maintenance of democracy at home and the training for leadership in a world that is on fire with an autocracy which seeks to turn back the pages of history to despotism. We are the bright light of democracy, but in order for us to remain the bright light of democracy, we have to have something besides a pistol on our hip. We have to know how to work for the people for the advancement of all mankind.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Dirksen	Javits
Allott	Dodd	Johnson, Tex.
Anderson	Douglas	Johnston, S.C.
Bartlett	Dworshak	Jordan
Beall	Eastland	Keating

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What did the Chair say? I did not hear what the Chair said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. A quorum is present. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to speak very briefly on the new housing bill.

I recognize the legislative position in which the Senate finds itself. It is whether or not we are to have any housing bill at all or whether we should take the President's veto to the people and let them determine in due course of time and in the exercise of their right of franchise their approval or disapproval of the President's course of action.

The matter of what Congress should do in the fact of a veto trend is a subject about which reasonable men can have very many honest differences. I am not too sure what our course of action should be. I believe we presented to the President, in our previous housing bill, as we did in our public works bill, legislation that is in the public interest.

The President under the Constitution has the duty as well as the right to veto any legislation which, in his executive judgment, is not in the public interest. Then we have the checking right of overriding it if we have the votes.

Mr. President, we get to the point where, after we are unable to garner a sufficient number of votes to override a veto, we must decide for ourselves how far we should go in compromising our own views as to what should be voted by way of a housing bill, and then we take it back to the people for their check under this great system of checks and balances of ours, in this instance exercised at the ballot boxes.

As the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Alabama know, after the last veto I said I was not so sure but that perhaps we had just better adjourn without passing a housing bill and go back and talk it over with our constituents. The President has authority to reconvene Congress in a special session, if he wants to, during the fall period. It may be that if we let these vetoed bills remain without any further compromises on our part, go back home and talk to the people of the country, they may make clear that the President ought to call a special session of Congress. We could proceed then, after we have had these conferences with the people, to decide whether we want to compromise any further.

I have studied the latest bill which the committee has brought forth, and I am inclined to vote for it in spite of its shortcomings. I wish to make it perfectly clear on the record that I am not moved to vote for it at all because of any rumor, true or false, that this one the President may sign. I will never vote in the Senate by giving any weight whatsoever to whether the President will or will not sign a piece of legislation. I do not believe in voting on legislation under any veto threat.

It does not make any difference to me whether the President will sign or will not sign any piece of legislation. I vote for it if I think it is legislation for which I ought to vote.

I expect any President to carry out his executive duty of vetoing a bill if he believes it is not in the public interest.

So I have decided, Mr. President, that I will vote for this attempt on the part of the Senate to come forward with another housing bill.

This new housing bill, I am informed by the committee, has three major differences from the last one. First, it omits the $50 million fund for college classroom loans, about which I shall speak in a moment. Second, it stretches the money for urban renewals or slum clearance over a 2-year period. The previous bill provided $650 million for 1 year. The pending bill provides that amount over a 2-year period. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] told me in a conference I had with him that actually the $650 million allowance in the previous bill was not limited to 1 year, but was to be spent as it could be spent, in accordance with a time schedule that would be developed in connection with the projects themselves. Therefore, I do not think that this objection of the President in the first place had any particular merit, and I am at a loss to understand in what way this change in the time period by specifically providing that it shall be $650 million for a 2-year period makes a great deal of difference.

In the third place, this bill contains no expiration date on FHA authority. The committee put an expiration date of October 1, 1960, into the previous housing bill because it thought FHA should come to Congress regularly for review, and I understand that was for new money. The White House thinks there should not be any limit on FHA authorization. While I have a serious question about that, Mr. President, from the standpoint of good legislative procedure because I am a great one to believe in review and checks, or, rather, checks by review.

The great strength of our governmental system is that we find year after year, throughout the whole system, checks upon the exercise of judgment by the administrators of the Government. We have much to say about the principle that this is a Government of law and not of men. If we are going to prevent that statement from becoming just a politician's platitude, it is important, whenever we pass legislation which provides for the rendering of a judgment which affects the interest and rights of others, that we see to it we have also written into the legislation a check upon the person who exercises the judgment, by way of a review of the discretion that is granted to him.

So, Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Alabama, that I much prefer the bill in its original form.

I believe that in keeping with the system of checks, it would have been better to have retained the limit on FHA authorizations, but I do not believe that removal of it is fatal to the bill, although I do not like the governmental policy implied in it.

The committee advises me that the $8 billion FHA authorization bill will, under normal housing activity, run out by the end of next summer, probably by the end of August, thus necessitating a new housing bill without the expiration date. Of course, if housing starts to slow down, the money might not run out by then.

I should like to have the Senator from Alabama check me on this point and, if I am wrong, rise and correct me. As I understand, even with this bill, we probably will be running out of money for the projects anticipated in the relatively near future—if not by next August, certainly in the next 14 or 15 months. So the problem we are dealing with here will be before us again in the form of new legislation. We hope that by that time the political climate in the country will have so changed that we may have a chance of getting a better bill through the Congress at that time. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct. I enumerated earlier, when the Senator was temporarily out of the Chamber, at least three grounds which I thought would absolutely require a new bill next year. One of them is the one which the Senator has been discussing, the need of FHA for additional insurance authorization; second, college housing; third, title I, home improvement, expires October 1, 1960; and certainly we are not going to let that die out.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator.

I understand that the President's other two objections raised in his veto message are not met in the bill before the Senate, and I am glad they are not. They were objections to direct loans to nonprofit groups for housing for the elderly, and to the 37,000 new public housing starts. Both those remain in the bill. If they had not remained in the bill, under no circumstances could I possibly have voted for the bill, because I think they are vital.

I must hold my nose and swallow hard to stand the smell of this bill with the classroom feature out of the bill. The Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] have made great arguments in debate in support of the classroom feature. I have discussed it before, and will not repeat myself today.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is a distinguished member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. He knows that we have recently reported a Federal aid to education bill. I wonder if the Senator would be inclined to join with me and several other members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare in having a college classroom, laboratory, and library amendment attached to that bill when it comes before the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. I will cosponsor it with the Senator from Pennsylvania. It is of vital importance. If we cannot have it in this bill, we should try to get it in the education bill. I know that I violate no confidences, but I wish to give credit where credit is due. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and I were discussing the problem, and he pointed out to me that under the old housing program loans were made for college dining rooms and for dormitories. Those of us who have lived and worked on campuses know that a college dining room may very well be in the same building where there are classrooms, depending upon what kind of housing plan exists on a given campus. I think we are drawing the line pretty fine when we permit loans for dining rooms and for bedrooms, but not for classrooms. All those physical facilities are necessary in order to have a college really operate. I think it is a pretty technical distinction, and an unrealistic distinction on the part of the President of the United States, in respect to the way colleges are operated, when he picks out the classroom item, so sorely needed by so many colleges, and says, "I will veto the bill, in part because that provision is in it."

Mr. CLARK. I think it is important to make the record clear, that the issue involves not only classrooms, important as they are. It involves also libraries, without which higher education cannot be conducted.

Mr. MORSE. And laboratories.

Mr. CLARK. And laboratories, without which science cannot be taught. All those things make it possible for American education to move forward at the speed which is essential if we are to meet the challenge to Western civilization.

Mr. MORSE. Without which, dining rooms and bedrooms in a college dormitory would not be of much value. There would be no students if there were not classrooms, libraries, and laboratories to use in obtaining an education.

Mr. CLARK. It is more important to help a college student while he is awake than while he is asleep.

Mr. MORSE. I made this point in passing, to show how poorly the President was advised by those who advised him on his veto message in the first place.

I have received a telegram in regard to this bill from C. Henry Bacon, Jr., president of the Douglas Fir Plywood Association, of Tacoma, Wash., urging that every effort be made to pass a housing bill before adjournment. He points out that "the effect of a slowdown in home construction will be serious for every plywood manufacturer and employee because of our great dependence on home building."

I ask unanimous consent that the telegram be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TACOMA, WASH., September 5, 1959.
Senator WAYNE MORSE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

Regret to learn housing bill has been vetoed. On behalf of the 40,000 employees and 123 manufacturers in the fir plywood industry on the west coast our industry has asked me to urge you to bend every effort to pass a housing bill before adjournment. The effect of a slowdown in home construction will be serious for every plywood manufacturer and employee because of our great dependence on homebuilding.

C. HENRY BACON, Jr.,
Persident, Douglas Fir Plywood Association.

Mr. MORSE. I received a telegram from Gene W. Rossman, executive director of the Housing Authority of Portland, Oreg. I shall read only a portion of it, because the first part is personal, and even my modesty compels me not to read it. The portion of the telegram which I wish to read is as follows:

Fight for Oregon's rights for decent, safe, and sanitary public housing for our senior citizens of low income. Here is a principle that cannot be compromised, that transcends partisan politics and that urgently needs the continuing and steadfast support of the Congress. Review RHE results of our recent survey in Portland. Don't let our low income oldsters down.

The telegram is signed by Gene W. Rossman, executive director of the Housing Authority of Portland.

I am pleased to say—and I shall so notify Mr. Rossman—that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] assures me that the provisions in this bill for elderly housing are identical with the provisions for that purpose in the bill which was vetoed by the President.

The survey to which Mr. Rossman refers in the telegram relates to a survey of living conditions for elderly people in the city of Portland. The results are comparable to the results to be found in any city in the United States of like size. They disclose some very alarming conditions. They disclose that many of our old people are living in quarters of which we as a society should be ashamed.

To think we would tolerate a social condition which requires these grand old people, because of the lack of an income, to live under these conditions is to the shame of this Nation. When we are fighting in the Senate for housing for elderly persons, we are simply seeking to live up to what is a clear moral responsibility of this Government, because governments, too, as well as individuals, have moral responsibilities.

So I am pleased to say to Mr. Rossman that the housing provisions for elderly persons remain in the bill. Likewise, I am pleased to notify him, in this statement on the floor today, that the 398 units reserved for Portland in the previous bill likewise, remain in the bill, so far as public housing is concerned.

Mr. President, I hope that when we come back next year we will recognize that we have not finished with housing legislation, but that with the passage of this bill, and, we hope, with its signature by the President, we will then proceed to provide additional housing legislation which will do much more for the elderly, which will do much more for the low income people who need more public housing, and will do much more for the students of America by way of the passage of a housing bill in line with the legislation we have previously passed, but which unfortunately was unwisely vetoed.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, do I understand correctly that the Senator from Oregon requested a quorum call a while ago and insisted on a live quorum?

Mr. MORSE. Oh, yes; I requested it.

Mr. ALLOTT. May I inquire if it was the speech which we have just heard that the majority of the Members of the Senate were called from hearings to listen to, or if it was for some other business?

Mr. MORSE. I am sure the Senator from Colorado would agree with me that nothing could be gained by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Oregon engaging in a discussion of the subject matter he has raised. The Senator from Colorado knows that the Senator from Oregon was within his parliamentary rights. The Senator from Oregon is already aware of the fact that the Senator from Colorado is not very happy about the fact that the Senator from Oregon is exercising his rights.

I may say to the Senator from Colorado that I have more important things to do than to engage in personal exchanges with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I do not yield, because the purpose of the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado is perfectly obvious, and I do not intend to clutter the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with such a discussion. I refuse to yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. I may comment, in answer to the Senator from Oregon, that he is certainly perfectly aware of and willing to use the rules of the Senate, but he is also able to use the good graces of other persons.

Last evening he departed the Senate Chamber, and I asked the acting majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD], if a unanimous-consent request would be in order. The Senator from Montana said no; that he had promised the Senator from Oregon that he would protect him on unanimous-consent requests, because the Senator from Oregon had some personal matters he wanted to attend to. I wish the Senator from Oregon had been as considerate of the rights of other Senators.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I simply want the RECORD to show that I went to the washroom on the occasion mentioned by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

On the vote, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on offical business, attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The result was announced—yeas 86, nays 7, as follows:

So the bill (S. 2654) was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

REDEFINING CITIZENSHIP QUALIFICATIONS FOR U.S. SHIPPING CORPORATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The minority leader has asked me whether I would outline as nearly as I could the program for the remainder of the day.

First, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 734, House bill 6888. After that bill is made the pending business, I shall make a brief statement.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 734, House bill 6888.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6888) to amend section 4132 of the Revised Statutes, section 37 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, section 2 of the Shipping Act, 1916, and section 905(c) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I think that the consideration of this bill will take only a minute. It was passed over during the call of the calendar, because of a question which was desired to be asked of the Senator from California.

After acting on this bill, we shall proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 933, Senate bill 1886, to amend the Communications Act of 1934 as regards community television systems. Objection was made to consideration of that bill during the call of the calendar. That objection has been withdrawn; and we think consideration of the bill will take only a few minutes.

Then we shall have the Senate consider the conference report on House bill 4002, to authorize the use of Great Lakes vessels on oceans. The Senator from California [Mr. ENGLE] will submit that report. There is some controversy about it, and we expect debate for approximately 15 or 20 minutes with the Senator from Delaware. Then we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on the question of agreeing to that conference report.

Then we shall proceed to consider the antipollution bill. We are informed that there will not be a great deal of debate on it.

Then we shall have completed our work for the day.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does the Senator from Texas expect there will be a yea-and-nay vote on the antipollution bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Let me ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] whether they expect to have a yea-and-nay vote taken on that bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not think it will be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would say "yes." At any rate, that bill is not now the pending business.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I wish to point out that I am not urging it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand.

Is the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] in the Chamber?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have spoken to the Senator from Delaware, and have agreed to make a statement which will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from California [Mr. ENGLE] will explain the bill.

Mr. President, I would prefer, if the majority leader has no objection, for the Senator from California to explain the bill. Then I should like to make certain comments. May I ask the Senator from California to explain the bill?

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill (H.R. 6888) is to resolve a difference of interpretation between the Federal Maritime Administration and the Bureau of Customs with respect to the term "citizen of the United States" as it is used in section 2 of the Shipping Act, 1916, and in the vessel documentation laws, by redefining the term.

The net effect of the amendments to the act which the bill embodies would be to include in the definition "citizen of the United States" corporations, excepting those under title VI of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, which meet the stock ownership requirements of section 2 of the Shipping Act of 1916, which are organized under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, and which have some alien directors, but not so many as to make possible a lawful meeting of the board of directors without a majority of the directors present being citizens of the United States.

At the present time, if a corporation has one foreign director, that corporation cannot engage in financing American ships under our maritime laws. For instance, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. is considered ineligible for participating in financing of U.S.-flag vessels on mortgages or loans because it has an alien director, and therefore it could not have a preferred mortgage or be entitled to any control of a vessel by virtue of any default under a mortgage. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. has one Canadian director.

The amendment would provide that any of these corporations can have alien directors on their boards of directors provided the number is not sufficient so that the alien directors could be a majority of a quorum. In other words, the bill limits the number of alien directors to a minority. Let us assume that there were nine members of a board of directors. Five could be a quorum, and therefore only two could be foreign directors.

The purpose of that amendment, let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania and to my friend from Maryland as well, is to retain the basic ownership of these ships and their financing in American hands, but not to preclude a great financial institution like the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. from having one or two alien directors, if the number of the foreign directors would not constitute more than a minority of a quorum. That is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Last year Congress passed the so-called Bowaters bill which became Public Law 85–902. Public Law 902 expressly authorizes corporations which do not qualify as "citizens of the United States" to engage in the operation in the domestic trades of the United States of company-owned barges, and so forth, if certain specified standards are met.

The Senate report on H.R. 6888 emphasizes that the question of ownership of corporations is not affected to the slightest degree by the provisions of the bill (H.R. 6888).

May I ask if H.R. 6888 curtails in any way the authority granted to noncitizen corporations under Public Law 85–902, which applies only to barges and non-self-propelled vessels and self-propelled vessels of less than 500-gross tons? My question is, and I emphasize it by repetition, Will the ownership of such corporations be affected in the slightest degree by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. ENGLE. No. The question has been raised as to whether H.R. 6888 affects in any way Public Law 85–902, adopted by the last Congress. In the course of the hearings, this question was discussed, and it was found that H.R. 6888 in no way amends public Law 85–902. In other words, in order to establish clearly the legislative history of this act, I want to make the statement now that it was not the intention of the committee, by the passage of H.R. 6888, to affect the provisions of that previous law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, in view of the answer of the Senator to the last question, he has cleared up the objection I had. I thank him for making the record.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I shall be very brief. The question of ownership of corporations is not affected to the slightest degree by the provisions of the bill. The modification of corporation citizenship requirements will not make possible noncitizenship control of vessels documented and operating under the U.S. flag, nor will it relax in any way the citizenship requirements applying to corporations operating under an operating-differential contract with the Federal Maritime Board.

As the Senator from California has said, if there are alien members on a board of directors, and if six, for example, constitute a quorum, the alien membership would be limited to a minority of a quorum, which would be no more than two.

Mr. ENGLE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SCOTT. Therefore, I urge the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 6888) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of order No. 933, S. 1886.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1886) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 with respect to community antenna television systems and certain rebroadcasting activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I do not wish to object, but I want to explain that in the exchange I had with the Senator from Rhode Island at the time this bill was called up, with regard to the minimum standards that will be required by the Federal Communications Commission, the Senate made quite clear the effect of the bill and the intention of the committee. That clears up the objection I had to the bill. I have no objection.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I think much of the confusion would be eliminated if we corrected the title, and I therefore move that the title be amended to read "A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934, with respect to certain rebroadcasting activities."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold his motion until the bill is passed?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, for the purpose of the record, I should like to inquire whether it is the intention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as soon as it is feasible, to bring up Calendar No. 950, Senate bill 2653, to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to establish jurisdiction in the Federal Communications Commission over community antenna systems.

Mr. PASTORE. Yes, within the limits of the time allotted in the situation in which we find ourselves.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an explanation of the bill may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF S. 1886, AMENDING THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934 SO AS TO PERMIT CERTAIN REBROADCASTING ACTIVITIES

S. 1886, as amended, contains two sections, each affecting the so-called booster or rebroadcasting situation. One of the provisions would amend section 318 of the Communications Act so as to clarify the present statutory requirements concerning radio operators of equipment used in rebroadcast operations, and the other section would amend section 319 of the Communications Act so as to enable the Federal Communications Commission to consider licensing booster stations engaged in rebroadcasting programs if such boosters were constructed on or before the enactment of this bill.

It should be clearly understood that the Federal Communications Commission presently has adequate authority to adopt regulations authorizing booster operations. The Commission has had the question of adopting regulations for boosters under consideration for a number of years. On April 14 it announced that after its study of the various problems posed by the use of boosters in the VHF band that it believed that if it were to adopt regulations that certain minimum requirements should be imposed upon the operation of VHF boosters. Then it proceeded to recommend two amendments to the Communications Act that are being considered in this bill. The Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, in his appearance before the committee, indicated that the Commission was holding up action with regard to regulations on VHF boosters until Congress enacted this legislation.

Basically, S. 1886, as amended, would amend two sections of the Communications Act:

(a) Under section 318 of the Communications Act the actual operation of transmitting equipment is licensed under the Communications Act and any operation thereof must be carried on only by persons holding operators' licenses issued by the Federal Communications Commission. At present the Commission is given discretion to waive that requirement for certain named activities. The FCC believes that it is enough for a licensed operator, particularly where booster equipment is concerned in smaller communities and in mountainous terrain, to turn the equipment on and have it operated under his general control without the need of his personal attendance. In order to accomplish this objective the Commission urges that section 318 be amended so as to remove the explicit requirement that transmitting equipment of boosters be operated by licensed operators. Section (1) of S. 1886 would grant this discretion to the Commission and limit the authority for waiving the operator requirements to those engaged solely in the function of rebroadcasting the signals of television broadcast stations.

(b) Under section II of S. 1886 section 319 of the Communications Act would be amended so as to enable the Federal Communications Commission to consider licensing booster stations engaged in rebroadcasting television programs if such stations were constructed on or before the enactment of this bill.

The FCC holds that under the present provisions of section 319 it would be unable to issue licenses to those boosters that are now on the air if those facilities had been constructed before the Commission granted licenses. Under this long standing construction of section 319 of the Communications Act the Commission contends it would be prohibited from authorizing the use of boosters if such boosters were constructed prior to the grant of a construction permit. Accordingly, under this legislation the Commission will be given the discretion, if it finds that the public interest, convenience and necessity will be served thereby, to waive the requirement of a construction permit for a booster that is engaged solely in rebroadcasting television signals if such booster was constructed on or before the enactment of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 318 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 318) is amended by striking out "(3) stations engaged in broadcasting, and" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(3) stations engaged in broadcasting (other than those engaged solely in the function of rebroadcasting the signals of television broadcast stations), and".

SEC. 2. Section 319(d) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 319(d)) is amended by inserting after the period at the end thereof the following: "If the Commission finds that the public interest, convenience, and necessity would be served thereby, it may waive the requirement of a permit for construction of a station that is engaged solely in rebroadcasting television signals if such station was constructed on or before the date of enactment of this Act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island before the bill passes. I have just gotten a copy of the amendment. Will the Senator from Rhode Island inform me what it does?

Mr. PASTORE. Under the present provisions of section 318 of the Communications Act the actual operation of all transmitting equipment in any station licensed under the act must be operated by persons holding an operator's license issued by the FCC. At present, the Commission is given discretion to waive that requirement except for certain named categories. In recent years the art of transmitting has advanced tremendously and the Commission believes that it should have greater statutory latitude as to the requirements of operators of transmitting equipment engaged in rebroadcasting.

For instance, at present the Commission contends that section 318 requires an operator to be in personal attendance whereas in those situations involving the booster operation the testimony before your committee establishes it is enough for the operator to turn the equipment on, have it operated under his general control, but not be in personal attendance. This is particularly true of the transmitters engaged solely in rebroadcasting such as the boosters in small communities in mountainous terrain, especially out West. It was felt that section 318 prohibits this type of an operation. The amendment herein reported would grant the FCC limited discretion in waiving the operator requirement to those engaged solely in the function of rebroadcasting the signals of television broadcasting stations.

The FCC's original request urged broad discretion which would have permitted the Commission to waive the radio operator requirement for regular broadcast stations as well as for boosters. Your committee feels this request was too broad and that the hearing record would not support such a proposal and therefore limited the discretion being granted to the Commission by the bill herein reported to those operations engaged solely in the function of rebroadcasting the signals of television broadcasting stations. In other words, the discretion to waive the explicit requirement concerning the operation of transmitting equipment in accordance with section 318 is being granted to the FCC, but it is limited to that equipment used in booster operations.

The second proposal contained in this bill as reported by your committee concerns section 319 of the Communications Act. Under the present provisions of section 319 the FCC holds that it would be unable to issue licenses to those boosters that are now on the air since those facilities were constructed before the Commission granted such facility licenses. Under the long-term provisions of section 319 of the act the Commission contends it would be prohibited from authorizing the use of boosters if such boosters were constructed prior to the grant of a construction permit. The bill would amend section 319 so as to give the FCC sufficient discretion, if it finds that the public interest, convenience, and necessity would be served thereby, to waive the requirement of a construction permit for a booster that is engaged solely in rebroadcasting television signals if such booster was constructed on or before the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. ALLOTT. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (S. 1886) was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934, with respect to certain rebroadcasting activities."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MINUTE MAN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, MASS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 887, H.R. 5892.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 5892) to provide for the establishment of Minute Man National Historical Park in Massachusetts, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, this bill has the support of my colleague from Massachusetts, and the support of Representatives McCORMACK and ROGERS of Massachusetts in the House. There is a unanimous report in favor of establishing the Minute Man National Park, which will make it possible for the national park to be established on the route which was taken in Massachusetts from Lexington to Concord at the time of the start of the War of the Revolution.

This is a good bill. It authorizes appropriations, when made.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I think it is a good bill, but I have one question regarding why there was objection to the bill earlier today.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I cannot hear the Senator. Will the Senator please speak a little louder?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. It has become almost impossible to conduct business in the Senate.

The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Oregon may proceed.

Mr. MORSE. I think the bill is a good bill. I think the RECORD should show why there was objection to consideration of the bill earlier today, as well as the Senator's answer to the objection.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. There was really no objection to the bill today. The Consent Calendar committee felt the authorization in the bill exceeded the limit of authorization which should be passed on the call of the calendar. There was no objection filed, either from the Republicans or the Democrats, as to considering the bill before the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. I think it is important to clear that up for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 5892) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF SEWAGE TREATMENT WORKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 853, H.R. 3610.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 3610) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to increase grants for construction of sewage treatment works and for other purposes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator does not mind, I should like to have the motion acted on first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from California desires to have a conference report considered. We would order the yeas and nays on the bill now, and then have the bill temporarily laid aside.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

USE OF GREAT LAKES VESSELS ON OCEANS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from California desires to present a conference report which we think will take not over 20 minutes to consider. We want to have a yea-and-nay vote on the conference report.

If the Senator from Delaware will explain to me what he wants to have a yea-and-nay vote on, we can have it ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, under the parliamentary situation we would have to have a yea-and-nay vote on the question of agreeing to the conference report. If the conference report is rejected, I shall offer a motion that new conferees be appointed with instructions to insist upon the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the conference report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to notify all Senators that we expect to vote in approximately 20 minutes, if Senators can keep within their planned schedules.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas please repeat that statement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We hope to have a vote on the conference report in about 20 or 25 minutes, if Senators can keep within their estimated schedules.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order, so that we may proceed with the business of the Senate expeditiously.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4002) to authorize the use of Great Lakes vessels on the oceans. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of September 10, 1959, p. 19000, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, the House bill permitted vessels purchased from the United States for exclusive use on the Great Lakes—including the St. Lawrence River and Gulf—and their connecting waterways to be operated in any trades and any manner permitted other vessels documented under the laws of the United States notwithstanding the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946.

The Senate amendment, which struck all after the enacting clause, adopted provisions substantially the same as the House bill as title I and added as title II a prohibition against the issuance of any ticket or pass for free or reduced rate of transportation to any official or employee of the U.S. Government or any member of his family traveling on a ship sailing under the American flag in foreign commerce or in commerce between the United States and its territories or possessions, with certain exceptions. The Senate amendment provided a penalty for violation of title II.

In short, Mr. President, the House bill as it came to the Senate was a very limited bill, simply freeing these vessels which had been purchased for use on the Great Lakes so that they could go into ocean waters.

When the bill came to the floor of the Senate, after having been reported by the committee in the form passed by the House, there was added on the floor of the Senate an amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to prohibit the issuance of free or reduced rate transportation to officials or employees of the Federal Government. That was the bill which went to conference, with the added title, title II, in dispute.

The managers on the part of the House disagreed with title II of the Senate amendment on the grounds that it is not germane to the bill. Moreover, the proposed provision is both extremely broad and complicated in its scope. Its effect on existing law and existing procedures and practices within the various Government departments which would be affected is unknown. A bill (S. 1114) is presently pending before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee which is intended to cover the objectives of the amendment. A similar bill (H.R. 4945) is pending before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the House. Departmental reports on the House bill point to numerous difficulties which would arise if the bill were enacted as proposed by this Senate amendment. If the objectives of the amendment are desirable, they should be appropriately considered after full hearings to determine the need for corrective legislation.

As a consequence, Mr. President, the Senate conferees receded from the position of the Senate and accepted the bill as originally passed by the House. The bill presently before the Senate, in the conference report, is the bill passed by the House committee, passed by the House itself, and passed by the Senate committee; with the amendment which was added on the floor of the Senate as title II stricken from it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ENGLE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As I understand the situation, neither the House bill nor the Senate version contained any requirement that food commodities had to be shipped from Atlantic ports in American vessels.

Mr. ENGLE. It did not. It was a very simple bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Therefore, the attempt of the Atlantic coast cities to throttle the St. Lawrence Seaway is not encompassed in the bill. That attempt was turned back by the action of the Senate in rejecting the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER] Monday evening. No similar provision has been attached to this bill?

Mr. ENGLE. I will say to my distinguished friend from Illinois, that is not what was added on the Senate floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand. It is not an issue?

Mr. ENGLE. No; it is not.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Even if the conference report were to be rejected, the status of the St. Lawrence Seaway would not be affected.

Mr. ENGLE. The status of the St. Lawrence Seaway is not involved. The only question which is involved is whether these vessels, which were purchased from the United States for exclusive use on the Great Lakes, will now be permitted to engage in oceangoing traffic.

Added to the bill was the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, which was stricken in the conference.

I would be glad to yield to my friend from Delaware, or to yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I should like to have the floor.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I ask that the conference report be rejected. Under the parliamentary situation, the only manner in which the Senate can get a vote to insist upon its amendment is first to reject the conference report. If the conference report is rejected, I would immediately make a motion that new conferees be appointed with instructions to insist upon the Senate amendment.

I might say in the beginning that I have no objections to that which is attempted to be accomplished by the bill itself. It would merely provide authority to take one of these passenger ships out of the Great Lakes during the winter months and use it along the Atlantic coast. However, I do believe the conferees made a mistake when they eliminated the amendment which would have prohibited subsidized trips for any Government official. This proposal has been considered by committees and Congress time and time again. It merely gets down to the point: Do we want to place the same restrictions on the merchant marine as Congress in previous years placed on the railroads and airlines; namely, that they cannot offer Government officials in either the executive or legislative branch free or subsidized trips on ocean liners?

I will read the amendment as approved by the Senate:

> That no common carrier by water subject to the Shipping Act of 1916, as amended; the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended; or any other Act; shall directly or indirectly issue any ticket or pass for the free or reduced-rate transportation to any official or employee of the United States Government (military or civilian) or to any member of their immediate families, traveling as a passenger on any ship sailing under the American flag in foreign commerce or in commerce between the United States and its Territories and possessions;

Certain exceptions are made in the amendment which would provide for the authority of the U.S. Government in the transportation of its military personnel or civilian personnel whose transportation is being paid by the U.S. Government.

These were put in the original amendment upon the request of these Departments.

This amendment would in no way restrict the right of any agency of the Government to contract for such shipping; that is, when the Government is paying for all of that transportation. The bill has been amended to clear up the objection of the Post Office Department wherein it might conflict with their right to put postal employees on a ship.

I have copies of letters here from numerous agencies of the Government, addressed to the chairman of the committee, all stating that they have no objection to the passage of the amendment as approved by the Senate.

This legislation is meritorious, and it is very much needed. I regret that the House conferees refused to accept this proposal.

The American merchant marine is subsidized by the American taxpayers to a very large extent. I will not get into an argument whether it is too much or too little, but no one will dispute the fact that this industry is subsidized. We vote on those subsidies. Certainly we cannot say that the amendment is not germane because this particular ship with which we are dealing here was subsidized to almost the *n*th degree.

I call attention to the fact that when these ships first went in the Great Lakes by an act of Congress, there were six vessels involved. They were ships from our war surplus fleet. Three vessels, costing the American taxpayers $4,000,000, $4,600,000, and $4,500,000 apiece, were sold to a Great Lakes company for an average cost of $82,000 each. Good ships, even though they were used ships, which cost $4 million sold for $62,000, $87,000, and $97,000, respectively.

There were three other vessels which cost the American taxpayers $7,733,000, $7,802,000, and $9,125,000.

Those same three vessels, which cost the American taxpayers a total of more than $24 million, were sold for use on the Great Lakes for an average price of $102,944. Although they were a part of our reserve fleet they were good ships. Certainly no man will say that is not subsidy by the American taxpayers.

I believe it is high time that we in Congress, who vote on these subsidies and who authorize these low sales, should enact this legislation and remove ourselves from criticism. I am not inferring that decisions are influenced by these free trips or subsidized trips, but we are subject to criticism and question. We should adopt restrictions that no man in any executive agency of the Government or in Congress will be in a position where he could accept from any shipping company free or subsidized transportation.

This is the same restriction which now legally applies to railroads and the airlines.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Do I understand correctly that the prohibition to which the Senator from Delaware is referring is now applicable to railroads and air carriers?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. As I understand, the Senator from Delaware is of the opinion that if that prohibition is sound when applied to railroads and air carriers, it is also sound when applied to the American merchant marine. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct. It should be applied also to the merchant marine. It should be applied even more so to the merchant marine because the American merchant marine is subsidized to an even larger extent than are the other forms of transportation.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Am I correct in my understanding that the most liberal recipients of Government subsidies are the owners of American merchant marine ships?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct. I might say that under the existing circumstances under which the American merchant marine is trading in international waters in competition with international companies, we must subsidize our shipping companies, because otherwise they could not compete with foreign competition because of the differential in labor costs. However, I do feel that we have gone too far in granting these subsidies. But whether we have or have not is not the question here today. We who determine the amount of that subsidy should not place ourselves in the position of accepting free transportation.

This subsidized transportation to Government employees and their families is not being offered for nothing. Let us be realistic.

Let us not forget that it was only a few months ago that there was a great deal of criticism expressed in the Senate with respect to an official in the executive branch of the Government who, it was disclosed, accepted hotel accommodations which were paid for by some taxpayer. I joined in that criticism and said that it was wrong—but was it any more wrong than for an employee of the Government to allow a shipping company to subsidize his or his family's vacation with a free trip to Europe or for a subsidized trip around the world? Don't forget we vote on the rate of the subsidy for the shipping companies and determine the amount that they are to get.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does the Senator understand that there is now pending a bill to further liberalize the subsidies paid to the American merchant marine?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes. I shall join the Senator from Ohio in opposing it. I think we have gone too far in this field. I recognize there are those who earnestly believe in increasing them, however, nevertheless, I do believe that we should not put ourselves in the position where someone could say that our vote may have been influenced by an offer of a free trip.

I do not charge that this has been done, but again I remind the Senate that we only recently joined in criticizing an official of the executive branch for accepting subsidized hotel facilities. Let us live by our own code.

As evidence that the shipping companies do offer these free or reduced rate trips rather freely I cite a personal example.

A few years ago when I was a member of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and when we were holding public hearings on a bill which had been endorsed enthusiastically by practically every segment of the American shipping industry—I will not go into the merits of the bill—officials of the American merchant marine directed a letter to the chairman of our committee extending through the chairman to every member of the committee, including myself, an offer of a free trip to any place where ships sail under the American flag. The offer included the whole family.

I denounced this at that time and said it was highly improper even to make such an offer to Senators who were in a position to vote on a bill in which they had a financial interest.

There is no argument about the fact that such a letter was written. There are other Members of the Senate now who were members of the committee at that time, who will remember, I am sure, that such a letter was received. From that time on I have been advocating a law which would prohibit the offering or acceptance of such free trips.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Delaware is urging a sound proposal, and I shall support him.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I thank the Senator from Ohio. It is long past the time when we in Congress should recognize the fact that this situation should be corrected and that we must remove ourselves from any possible criticism which could be directed against us if we did not do so. I do not intend to debate the matter further. I am perfectly willing to vote. The choice is clear. If we are in favor of eliminating subsidized trips on the part of any Government official, either in the legislative branch of the Government or in the executive branch, we should vote "No" on the conference report and then instruct the conferees to insist on the Senate amendment. I hope the conference report will be rejected.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I enthusiastically support the position of the Senator from Delaware. As I understand, the opponents of the position taken by the Senator from Delaware argue that if the Senator is sustained in his position, it would kill the bill. It is my understanding that it would not kill the bill. The Senator from Delaware supports the bill with the amendment to which he has referred, and he is convinced that it would not kill the bill, but that the bill would still be alive and could easily be rereferred to the conference committee and then passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Certainly it would not kill the bill. I am in favor of the bill. I have no objection to the bill. All we are asking is that the House accept this amendment, and the bill can become law. By rejecting the conference report all that we will be doing is insisting on the Senate amendment.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. HART. May I ask if the proposal the Senator seeks to add to the bill as an amendment has ever been presented on its own merits by him or anyone else?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes, indeed, and hearings have been held by the committee. However, I regret it has not been reported by the committee. This proposal has been before the Senate on numerous occasions over the past several years.

I hope today we can approve this much needed legislation. Again, I point out that this can only be accomplished under the existing parliamentary situation by just rejecting the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. LONG] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator for Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] are detained on official business.

The result was announced. Yeas 53, nays 34, as follows:

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE COAL INDUSTRY

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the year 1959 may prove to be a most significant one in the history of the American coal industry—a $5 billion business. It is an industry upon which almost 2 million Americans depend for a livelihood, and an industry upon which this Nation has long depended for the major share of its energy requirements in both wartime and peacetime.

Many, perhaps, have become aware this year for the first time that coal is a product essential to our national security. Russia, using coal as a weapon, produced a record 529 million tons of coal last year. For the first time, Russia produced more coal than the United States and did so by about 125 million tons.

The 86th Congress has given much considerate attention to the problems of the coal industry, and a number of my distinguished colleagues have risen in support of efforts to revitalize the production and marketing of coal.

Coal production last year amounted to 405 million tons, almost 100 million tons below 1957 and about 231 million tons under the record year of 1947. It is no secret that the coal industry has lagged behind other major industries since the end of World War II. This lag is of great concern to the country, not only because of its effect on employment and the economy generally, but because, as I have indicated, the prosperity and stability of this industry is essential and vital to national security.

Last February, the five major groups which are concerned with the production, transportation and use of coal formed an organization to help coal—the National Coal Policy Conference. This organization is composed of the coal producers, the United Mine Workers of America, 30 coal-carrying railroads, some of the major coal-burning electric utilities, and the Nation's principal coal equipment manufacturers.

The objectives of the National Coal Policy Conference are to sell more coal profitably, to find new uses for coal and to discourage uneconomical marketing practices in the marketing of various fuels, including coal, natural gas, and oil.

The coal slump coincides with a most paradoxical development. In this period of inflation, the price of coal has remained remarkably stable. In 1948, the price of coal at the mine averaged $4.99 per ton. In 1958, it averaged $5, an increase of 1 cent per ton in 10 years, an unparalleled record.

In the area of wages, the fact is that while the price of coal at the mine has remained stable, the average income of the American coal miner rose from $23.88 a week in 1939 to $115 per week in December of 1958. Hourly wages of miners have increased from $1.94 in 1949 to $3.26 today, an increase of 68 percent. Yet, the price line on coal itself has been held because the American coal miner is producing 78 percent more coal than he did a decade ago.

Coal qualifies, in my opinion, as our No. 1 anti-inflation commodity. Its price and productivity record is unmatched, and the principal reason for coal's price stability has been the industry's remarkable increase in productivity.

Before World War II, American coal mines were producing less than 5 tons per day per man, but by 1948 the rate of production had climbed to about 6½ tons per day per man. By 1954, production jumped to an average of 9½ tons for each miner employed, and last year the official records show that the net tons per man were 11.32 tons per shift. The rate of productivity is continuing to mount as more efficient methods are developed. It is approximately six times that of any other country in the world, since the average in other coal-producing nations, including Russia, is less than 2 tons per day.

To achieve such an astonishing record, management and labor in our American mines agreed on mechanization even though this meant the displacement of some workers. Industry leadership recognized that adjustments in production techniques were urgently needed if coal were to compete and survive.

The coal industry has withstood some economic body blows which could have spelled catastrophe for an industry with less vitality. Less than 15 years ago, the coal industry was powering the Nation's locomotives and selling the railroads more than 125 million tons of coal each year. The dieselized railways of today buy less than 4 million tons a year, and railway consumption is still declining.

Just as the diesel engine took over coal's largest customer during the past decade, so have oil and gas displaced coal for heating homes, apartment houses, and small businesses. The movement of coal through retail yards dropped from nearly 100 million tons in 1946 to approximately 34 million tons last year, a loss of 66 percent.

Despite these lost markets, the coal industry, largely through labor and management cooperation, has not only held its place as the No. 1 anti-inflation commodity but has made impressive gains in some other markets, principally in the production of electric power. Last year, for instance, coal supplied 68 percent of the fuel consumed by steam electric-generating plants in the United States.

That was more than twice as much as oil and natural gas combined, according to the National Coal Association. Electric utilities consumed 155.7 million tons of coal in 1958, an increase of 128.7 million tons over the year 1933. Even including hydroelectric power from such giant projects as Grand Coulee and Hoover Dams, coal produced 53.4 percent of all electricity generated by the power utilities, or more than all other fuels and water power combined.

In contrast with coal's 68 percent of the steam power generating market, oil supplied 8 percent and natural gas 24 percent. In areas where coal competes with other fuels, coal held 84 percent of the market, oil 5 percent and gas 11 percent. Thus, it can be concluded that coal is beginning an economic comeback through productivity and economy in such important fields as the production of electric power.

In the 38 States where coal furnished significant amounts of electric utility fuel, it produced heat at a cost of 27.3 cents per million British thermal units, while oil cost 39 cents, and natural gas 25 cents. In this same area, coal was 4 cents a ton cheaper in 1958 than in 1952, while an equivalent amount of gas cost $1.24 more and oil 86 cents more.

Still, coal production was down nearly 100 million tons last year, and the coal industry in my State of Kentucky and other States is sadly depressed. The displacement of coal is a serious matter, especially from the national security point of view. In time of war, or a similar national emergency, coal would be called upon to supply, and quickly, much more tonnage than it is now producing. During World War II the industry was required to produce and the railroads to transport 158 million more tons of coal each year as oil imports were sharply curtailed by enemy operations. There is every reason to assume that the requirement for coal during a similar crisis would be even greater now than in the past.

Reliable witnesses before several congressional committees have expressed doubt that unless conditions in the coal and railway industries improve, there is a grave question whether emergency requirements of production and transportation could be met.

The coal industry probably has a production capacity of 520 million tons annually. Statistics given to the Office of Civil Defense Mobilization by the coal industry are to the effect that at least 630 million tons of coal would be required during the third year of a major war. This assumes no conversions and, in view of our experience in the last war, is unrealistic.

Assuming that 110 million tons beyond the 520-million-ton present annual capacity would be required in the event of war, this would require an additional expenditure of from $600 million to $1 billion. With the earnings record of the coal industry since World War II—dismal indeed—the additional hundreds of millions of dollars necessary to capital expansion will not be forthcoming unless the coal situation improves dramatically.

Approximately 3 years is required to develop a typical deep modern mine, and the additional 110 million tons would be hard to come by in the event of war. Even then, the 110-million-ton estimate may be too conservative. The extent to which the coal industry will be able to fulfill its emergency obligations will to a large degree depend on the measure of prosperity and stability it attains under normal conditions.

Certain actions this year have pointed the industry in this direction. The President imposed mandatory quotas on the previously unrestricted importation of residual oil for vital reasons of national security and economy, and the Congress has looked with favor on the creation of a broad and effective program of coal research and development. Resolutions have been introduced in both branches of the Congress to establish a joint committee to make recommendations for a national fuels policy. Adoption of the purpose embodied in Senate Concurrent Resolution 73, which I am pleased to cosponsor, would be in the best interest of fair play for all the major fuel industries and in the best interests of our Nation as a whole.

Undoubtedly, the key to our future lies in the wise and efficient use of our fuel resources. All experts seem to agree that coal will loom increasingly large in the energy picture of the future, with some predicting a consumption potential of 800 million tons by 1975. Various coal interests claim that oil and natural gas are being used unwisely; that is, they are competing with coal in areas which should be reserved to coal because of its economy and abundance. There is enough coal to last a thousand years, while our domestic reserves of oil and gas, relatively speaking, are limited to only a few years. It is true that additional supplies of oil and gas are being discovered each year, but this may not continue indefinitely. The coal reserves have already been discovered.

There is little question that atomic energy will be a most important source of power for civilian uses in the years to come. However, there seems to be no doubt at present that atom-produced electricity costs a great deal more than electricity from coal, oil, and gas. This is borne out by our own experience and apparently by the experience of the Russians who have indicated that they are meeting their growing power demands by conventional coal-produced electricity.

From all evidence available, it would appear that the Soviet Union is doing everything possible to nurture, to expand, and to utilize to the fullest her coal industry. Coal is not only this Nation's No. 1 anti-inflation commodity, it is perhaps the most potent weapon in our military and economic arsenal. It is a commodity which Russia is using with ever-greater emphasis in her mammoth effort to overtake this country industrially, militarily, and in world trade and commerce.

Unless the coal industry of the United States can retain its present markets and develop new ones, so that the standards of price, production, and productivity can be profitably maintained, the Iron Curtain countries will surely take from us the dominant position as a supplier of coal which we enjoy in the world today. Authorities have told me that America mines coal so efficiently that we could normally undersell in any market anywhere. They say that in competition with other coal-producing countries, provided there is no imposition of artificial conditions such as political considerations, restrictive trade barriers, or barter arrangements, our coal industry can hold its own.

I was interested in the comment contained in a Department of the Interior publication earlier this year which said that Poland and the Soviet Union may be expected to become stronger competitors of the United States in the Western European market as far as steam coal and anthracite are concerned. While exports from the United States to Europe and other continents declined in 1958, exports of Russian and Polish coal were on the increase. Although the American coal industry could have outsold the Iron Curtain producers, because of mechanization, price stability, and productivity, dictator nations have an advantage.

Most of the coal exports from Russia and the Soviet world to free Europe move on bilateral trade agreements involving the exchange of commodities. In comparison, shipments from the United States are based on dollar purchases. The Russian Government formerly took the greater part of Poland's exportable coal. Now, through rapidly expanding mechanization and the number and increased size of her mines, Poland is permitted to use a good part of her coal for barter.

For instance, in 1957 the coal producers of this country sold Argentina 914,000 tons of coal but only 216,000 tons in 1958, a loss of almost 700,000 tons in a market which had been considered traditionally firm. U.S. coal was displaced by Polish coal. I am told that Argentina pays about $2 more per ton for Polish coal, which incidentally is inferior to American grades, but the payments are in commodities.

Another case of discrimination against American coal occurred early this year in West Germany when the Bonn government clamped a prohibitive tariff of $4.76 a ton, a virtual embargo, on our coal. As a result, our 15 million ton German market of 1958 may well drop to between 4½ to 5 million tons this year. The loss of our export markets is already coming into sharp focus. In 1957, American coal exports reached an all-time high of 81 million tons; then a year later, in 1958, it dropped to 53 million tons, a loss of about 35 percent. This means a reduction in coal output valued at about $140 million at the mine mouth; a loss of railroad revenue in excess of $100 million; an incalculable loss of coal industry jobs and payroll.

Despite the inroads into this industry's basic health, coal has an amazing vitality. It has kept itself competitive despite many hard blows in the past, and it has now organized to combat its problems systematically, vigorously, and effectively. The National Coal Policy Conference is unique in character. It includes some of the country's foremost industrial and labor leaders who already have come forward with the suggestion for a national fuels policy, a constructive and statesmanlike proposal.

The question of "Why a National Fuels Policy?" has been answered in compelling fashion by the conference, and I ask unanimous consent that this purposeful statement be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY A NATIONAL POLICY?

The national interest today requires industry, labor, and Government to work together for a national fuels policy. We have none.

Yet, the United States is faced by a serious fuel and energy problem. The availability of an adequate and assured supply of energy is basic to our national security. A continuing expansion of reliable supplies at reasonable cost is necessary to national growth, increasing prosperity, and the advance of a society and technology based on energy use.

A national fuels policy can only be achieved if the Nation looks at its energy resources as a whole, recognizing the interrelationships between the various fuels; if it takes economic and technical advantage of the flexibilities in distribution and use, drawing on each source for its most efficient and desirable contribution; if it refuses to countenance discriminatory competition, or the stifling of the further development of a competitive fuel; if it promotes long-term availablity of a reliable energy supply at a reasonable cost by sensible policies of fuel conservation, development and distribution.

Today our national legislation and Government policies treat fuels in separate compartments. The Natural Gas Act treats gas without reference to oil or coal. Government policies on imports, tax, and national defense all too frequently treat one fuel without reference to another. Atomic energy is a subsidized national development, while the coal industry, ignored, seeks not subsidies, but fair play.

Mr. MORTON. The industry clearly recognizes what its problems are and what it must achieve along the road back, but it harbors no doubts that recovery will be attained if it receives the proper attention and encouragement to which it is entitled.

THE CONDUCT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I know that Senators are bone-tired after 8 months of hard work, and we are now under the strain of night sessions before adjournment. When time to clear up unfinished business is running out, Members are due an explanation about why I have asked for the floor when my comments will not deal with any specific bill pending in this Chamber.

My explanation involves two matters.

First, all around the world, a tangle of hopes and fears have been aroused by the imminent start of the exploratory talks between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of the Soviet Union. To be sure, in the course of his recent visit to Europe, the President tried, on several public occasions, to bring the character of his meeting with Mr. Khrushchev into its proper focus. But human nature being what it is, it is likely that the realities of the picture may again be distorted the moment the Soviet Prime Minister sets foot on American soil. In the circumstances, it seemed to me that something might be gained in the cause of understanding if there was another address from the Senate floor, spoken to our friends abroad, in line with what the President from his preeminent position has already told them.

Secondly, and more importantly from an American standpoint, from the instant we adjourn, the whole conduct of the Federal Government, except for its judicial aspects, will pass exclusively into the hands of the Executive, where it will remain until Congress reconvenes in January. This is unavoidable. But it is worth noting how often in the past, fateful things occurred during such intervals of Presidential government.

It was during such a period in 1956 when the tragedy of the Suez War came to a head. Again in 1957, it was at such a time when the Russians shook the world by firing their first sputnik into outer space. And in 1958, it was in this interval when the crisis in the Formosa Straits mounted hourly.

I am not saying by indirection that the whole world is due to fall apart between now and January 1960. I am not saying that the Executive, following a secret time schedule, awaits the adjournment of Congress each year and then willfully invites the onset of a crisis. Any insinuation to that effect is nonsense, which the Republican Members of this Chamber would rightly resent, as I resented such insinuations when I heard them made at a time when a Democrat President sat in the White House.

What I am saying is in no way sensational. It is simply to note a possibility based on past experience. The possibility is that, when we reconvene 4 months from now, the affairs of the Nation may bear but little resemblance to the state of those affairs as we will presently leave them. In the circumstances, it seems worthwhile to lay down a few reference points from which we can get our bearings 4 months hence, when we return to Washington and undertake our customary judgment of how Presidential government has handled the Nation's affairs.

In what I shall say on either point—on the Eisenhower-Khrushchev visits, and on the impending operations of Presidential government—it is decidedly not my object to interfere with the responsibilities of the Executive, or to pester it with ominous threats, or to set off false alarm bells, just for the fun of it.

It is anticonstitutional for one arm of the Government by its meddling to deny the second arm the effective power it needs in the discharge of its responsibilities, while blaming, not itself, but that second arm, if the result is a miscarriage of national policy. I say it is anticonstitutional, because of what it does to the operations of public opinion as a controlling force over both the Executive and the Legislature. With power lodged in one place and responsibility in a second place, it is almost impossible for public opinion to track down and identify the real author of a national misfortune. Seeing the misfortune plainly enough, but torn by mutual accusations about who is to be blamed for it, public opinion inevitably becomes cynical about our whole system of constitutional government.

Indeed, the chief motive and the unifying theme in my remarks is the urgent need to reunite power and responsibility in the conduct of our foreign relations. And by power, I mean not only the legalistic aspects of the word, but the whole family of tangible and intangible things that make for national strength.

Right here, there is a second point that should be made quite clear. I for one, do not believe that there is any simple formula which would solve the many difficulties confronting us abroad if only the Legislature and the Executive, singly or jointly, could discover it and embrace it.

Such a notion encourages the false belief that any particular course of action which eases an immediate crisis is the wisest course. In actual fact, the easiest course, as Mr. Neville Chamberlain's experience at Munich bears witness, can in the long run be disastrous.

The notion that we can discover an easy formula can blind us to the truth that a hard and difficult line of action in which we may be engaged is the right line to pursue. It can blind us to the fact that hard work and persistence, despite all intermediate dangers and crises, can eventually lead us to the goal we have set for ourselves.

Furthermore, a belief in simple solutions encourages the false notion that every major problem confronting us abroad is subject to our exclusive control, and that if it is not brought under our control, it must be because of an error in policy. Meanwhile, from the same cause, we fail to look at the actual difficulties inherent in some of our problems. We fail to see that many of them have a motion of their own; that they will not await the pleasure of what we or the Russians want to do about them in our own good time.

And finally, a belief in simple solutions almost invariably is the father of a moralistic outlook on the political problems of foreign affairs. And this outlook in turn inevitably leads in one of two destructive directions. In one direction, the moralistic approach assumes that anyone who is in fundamental disagreement with us is totally evil, and, hence, we ought to use total force as the only way in which to deal effectively with total evil. In the second direction, when it becomes apparent that the moralistic approach has not solved a single political problem, the sanction is present to withdraw into isolationism, on the argument that the whole world is corrupt, and that only if we cut off all contact with it, can we preserve our own purity.

I mention these dangers by way of a forewarning against the shock of disillusion which may follow the illusions now gathering around the imminent exchange of visits between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Khruschev.

The Members of this body know that I have long favored such exchanges. I have not changed my mind about them. But I should like to reemphasize as I have stressed many times on previous occasions, that exchanges of this sort solve nothing of themselves. They are merely a procedure, supplementary to the regular diplomatic channels, a procedure whereby national chief executives can discuss whatever it is they want to discuss.

Common sense should tell us that we do not serve the moral values we all want to uphold, if, on moral grounds, we foreclose our right to meet our adversary and talk to him in a civil way. Common sense should tell us something else.

If the Russian Prime Minister should come to look at an Iowa cornfield and say nice things about it, or if an American President should go to look at the Bolshoi Ballet and say even nicer things about it, the exchange of compliments about valued national things will not solve the question of a divided Germany or of how to make a start on nuclear disarmament. It will not bring the world as much as 1 inch closer to the conditions that make for real peace. Yet, for a variety of reasons, there has taken hold in some quarters the belief that it is by such simple solutions that the world will rescue itself from the peril of destruction hanging over it.

If we manage to avoid in the period lying directly ahead the misguided belief in simple solutions, then I believe we may avoid the dangers that the cold war poses for all humanity.

As for myself, I believe that the national means to scale down the scope and the dangers of the cold war were, and are, at hand. I believe that such national means have not been, and are not now, being fully utilized. I believe that unless there is this full utilization, a thousand exchanges of visits between the heads of states, or a thousand summit meetings between the great powers, will not only be useless, but worse than useless. They will be useless, because nothing is more dangerous than to arouse great hopes by splendid pageants, while denying oneself access to the material means that can sway the outcome of concrete cases in dispute.

In Europe, for example, I suppose we ought to find some satisfaction in the fact that the Berlin crisis, for all practical purposes, is presicely where it was last January. In the sense that the Russians have not yet laid their hands on anything they were not entitled to have, I suppose this represents progress. But it should be remembered that they still have available all the options which they had last winter, just as the Chinese Communists have all the options they had when the shooting in the Formosa Straits was last in the news. But even if we regard the case of Berlin as a standoff thus far, the strength of the Soviet Union in the meantime has been increasing; and the strength of the West, relatively speaking, has been decreasing.

I am not talking solely about military strength; I am also talking about industrial capacity and population skills. So long as this situation persists, time favors the Soviet Union, and works against the United States. And may I add that a comment of this sort is not a betrayal of an American national secret to the Russians on the eve of Mr. Khrushchev's visit. He knows the secret already, and has proclaimed it over and again in his public utterances.

It remains for us to inform him, not by words alone, but by the resolution of our deeds, that there is nothing inevitable about the Soviet Union closing the gap between her strength and ours. America has a tremendous reserve of strength that would enable us to outstrip the Russians in any competitive realm, provided there is present the leadership to call out that full strength.

As things now stand, however, the Soviets profit not only from their own energy, but also from our apathy. Here, let me add that we, too, frequently pay the Soviets an undeserved compliment in crediting them with diabolical cleverness. They are not smarter than anyone else. At critical moments in their history, they have, in their own doctrinaire way, stumbled into fantastic blunders that the lowliest precinct captain in an American city would have warned against. The advantage they have is that they simply work harder. Not that Americans do not work. They do work hard, but too often on a wrong order of national priorities.

We cannot count on the possibility that our wrong order of priorities will be made over into a right order, because of what might occur inside the Soviet Union. We are entitled to hope, of course, that evolutionary changes in the political outlook of the Soviet people and government may result from economic changes within the Soviet Union. But this change, if it does occur at all, will be decades—perhaps generations—in coming. In the meantime, there is the problem of how we survive and prevail under the conditions of the foreseeable future where the growing industrial might of the Soviet Union will augment its already formidable military might, and its already formidable capacity to export capital and technicians in an across-the-board competition with our own.

If we are to survive and prevail, the place to begin is by closing a policy gap. We speak of foreign policy or domestic policy, but we very rarely speak of national policy. What the Russians have, and what we lack, is a national policy. And this policy gap, in its long-term implications, is more dangerous than the missile gap.

This policy gap most clearly manifests itself in national decisions as to the allocation of resources. It is frequently pointed out, by those who take a complacent view, that the United States far outproduces the Soviet Union. This is true, but the use that is made of productive capacity is of at least equal importance with the size of the capacity. On this score, there is no ground for complacency. The Russians devote a far larger proportion of their resources to defense, to education, and to the other things which really matter in the cold war and which would be decisive in a hot war. It will not do us any good to outproduce them in color TV sets if they outproduce us in missiles. It will not do us any good to train more advertising copywriters if they train more nuclear physicists. It will not do us any good to train more tax lawyers if they train more diplomats. If we put cement into backyard swimming pools, and they put it into factories, who has improved his position more?

In making decisions on the allocation of resources, the Russians have a considerable advantage over us because of the difference in the decisionmaking process in the two countries. There, it is centralized in a few men. Here, in its basic aspects, it involves all the people.

The American body politic is rather poorly organized for effective decisionmaking. I am not talking about the day-to-day kinds of decisions which are made in the various Government departments and in the National Security Council. Rather, I am talking about the multitude of decisions which are made by individuals on such things as prices, wages, consumer spending, and the use of savings. Even the structure of our Government is such that the decisions as to whether we have an adequate school system, for example, is dispersed throughout thousands of localities.

We have traditionally taken it as an article of faith that this decentralization not only safeguards the democratic process, but also results in the most efficient use of resources. I do not question this as long as it is applied within fairly narrow economic limits. If it is extended, all inclusively, to that realm of high national policy where economic and political considerations merge, it results in either national paralysis or national chaos. Some things can best be done—or can only be done—by the Federal Government, which is itself, of course, a Government of divided, or decentralized powers. It was silly, even in the 18th century, to expect the several States to provide effective armed forces for the national defense; hence the constitutional provision for Federal responsibility in this field. All I am saying is that if we now want to change substantially the allocation of resources in the United States—if we want more cement in factories and less in swimming pools, if we want more steel in schools and less in automobiles—the only way we can bring this about is by action of the Federal Government. I think we ought to bring it about. But unless the temper of the country is changed by action from below, or by leadership from on top, the general support necessary to bring it about will not be present. This is another way of saying that we will be unable to bring to any council table the evidence of the material means we need to persuade the Russians that it is in their own interest to negotiate the terms of a real peace.

It is about time, I think, that we Americans recovered our traditional capacity to be outraged about ourselves. For if any people in human history had the means to win out over a willful adversary, yet failed to use its natural strength, we are that people. This country has the natural, the industrial, and the human resources to do almost anything it wants to do—provided it passionately wants to. It is nonsense to say we cannot afford it. During World War II, we devoted between 40 and 50 percent of our gross national product, which at that time was something less than half what it is today, to the purposes of the war; and at the same time provided food, clothing, and shelter for ourselves at a comfortable level, and a great part of our allies. Yet now, when the total budget of the Federal Government amounts to less than one-sixth of our gross national product, we are told we cannot afford it. This is plainly not so. What the people who say this mean is that they do not want to pay for it.

If we are to put our full strength to use, there are a number of things we need to do, all of them expensive. For example, but in no particular order of importance:

We need to spend not just a little more, but a great deal more, on our public school system.

We need to arm ourselves better with both conventional and advanced weapons.

We need to improve Strategic Air Command bases so as to make them less vulnerable to surprise thermonuclear attack.

We need to put our program of foreign development loans on a long-term basis and give it adequate financial resources.

We need an adequate, serious program of building civil defense shelters. Our neglect in this field has been shameful, and may be fatal.

I do not know how much all of these things would cost. I do know we can afford them if we decide we want them badly enough.

If we were seriously to undertake all of these things; the Kremlin would be a great deal more impressed than it is likely to be by evidence of our determination to balance the budget.

But fiscal stability and an adequate response to the Soviet threat need not be considered as mutually exclusive alternatives.

The public arguments which we hear for a balanced budget are all predicated on the unspoken assumption that the budget must be balanced at the level of revenues yielded by the existing tax structure operating upon the existing level of production. This, of course, is only one side of the argument. It could equally well be argued that the budget should be balanced at the level of expenditures required by compelling national interests, and that the tax structure should be revised upward accordingly. This perhaps takes more courage, but it also makes more sense.

Yet, in this situation, we find such timidity in the White House that the President remarks to a group of reporters—with authority to attribute the statement to him indirectly—that he thinks "any substantial increase in Federal taxes would lead to such public resentment there would be widespread flouting of the tax laws similar to prohibition laxity." What a sad commentary this is upon the caliber of American leadership. If the Presidential fear were well founded, it would be an even sadder commentary on the American people themselves. But I do not think it is well founded.

It is significant that in the same conversation, the President referred to his concern over the trend in some corporations to hire bright young executives, not for their business imagination or managerial talents, but for their ability to spot tax loopholes. This may well be the case, but we should remember that such loopholes as exist are in the President's own inadequate tax bill of 1954.

The bulk of the American people are not looking for tax loopholes, and would not find any if they were. The tax loopholes benefit primarily big-business interests. They offer no relief for the little people of this country. Their taxes are withheld from their paychecks, without so much as a by-your-leave. They cannot afford the high-priced tax lawyers whose clients fill the air with so much caterwauling about national bankruptcy at the same time their stockholdings reach new highs in value nearly every day, until very recently.

It is a strange thing that the President who has so little faith in the American people paying their taxes is the same man who wrote, in his mutual security message to Congress:

> It is not the goal of the American people that the United States should be the richest Nation in the graveyard of history.

I do not understand how a person could hold both views. It is no wonder that the public is confused about our place in the world and what needs to be done.

As a result of the experience of the last 5 years, when one political party has controlled the executive branch and the other party the Congress, it has become increasingly clear that the American system of government centers in the Presidency. Although the President cannot compel action, action nevertheless rarely occurs, especially in matters of foreign relations, unless some impetus, or at least some support, comes from the White House. The President is the only elected official who has constitutional responsibilities in this field and who represents all the people. He is the only one with sufficient prestige to command the attention of the whole country.

How has he used that prestige in this session?

Has he used it to arouse the country to greater exertions? He has not.

The White House has continued its politically lucrative career, begun in January 1953, of concocting and selling tranquilizer pills that benumb the critical faculties of the Nation.

Has the President used his prestige to secure from the Congress the full arsenal of means he needs if America's purposes are to be successfully advanced around the world? He has done nothing of the sort.

He has used the full power of the Presidency to check the initiative started in the Congress to give him those means. Worse still, he and his agents have gone out of their way to anathematize as reckless spenders those Members of the Congress who felt that in perilous times bold measures, all contributory to national strength, were a categorical imperative.

In the whole history of the Presidency, with the possible exceptions of Herbert Hoover and James Buchanan, the performance of President Eisenhower, in this respect, stands on a bizarre plain of its own. I do not for a moment doubt that he is passionately dedicated to the search for peace. I do not for a moment doubt that he is a man whose personal charm is a great natural resource of the Nation. But I have the uneasy feeling that it is going to take more than very good intentions, and more than personal charm, to make any appreciable dent on Mr. Khrushchev or on the problems of the cold war that may crop up in the next 4 months.

Nothing would please me more than to have things work out in ways that would require my confessing 4 months from now that my apprehensions were unfounded. In any case, I have spoken my piece. And so has the President in his various messages to the Congress. Most of us wanted to give him a stronger hand to play with. He asked for, indeed demanded, a weaker hand. The responsibility for the result is now his. In the 4 months ahead, let us keep our eyes clearly focused on how he plays his hand. And, in the meantime also, let us hope that the age of miracles is still with us.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the majority whip.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for the forthrightness and the candor of the speech he has delivered in the Senate this afternoon. I think we could do well with more speeches of that nature and with fewer happy headlines, which seem to be afflicting the press of the country at this time. I am delighted the President has had a successful trip to Western Europe, but I am not delighted over the headlines, which seem to indicate that all is well with the world, that all our troubles are buried and done away with.

I wish to commend the Senator for sounding a clarion call, trying to bring home the facts to the American people, trying to bring home to the Senate and to the Congress as a whole that during the adjournment, which will be upon us shortly, there will develop a hiatus, and the responsibility of the President will be increased tremendously. Some of the results which may be achieved then will bode either good or ill for the welfare of our country.

As the Senator said, or at least implied, we wish the President every possible success in his visit with Mr. Khrushchev and in the difficult moments which face him in the months ahead. I am sure, as the Senator indicated, the President should know the Congress stands ready to support him to the best of its ability in the field of foreign affairs at all times, provided the President assumes the leadership which is inherent in the office he holds.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator from Montana for his remarks.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, in this morning's newspaper there was advance notice of the address to be made by the Senator from Arkansas. I sent to the office of the distinguished Senator to get a copy, and I read it. In my opinion, there has been no more important address delivered in the Senate since I have been a Member of this body. What the Senator talks about not only concerns the future of the free world but also what must be done if we are going to maintain our security and our freedom.

I congratulate the able Senator for the message he has given the Senate and the American people.

I should like to ask the Senator a question, if I may. Does the Senator not, in effect, state that unless our policies are changed, so that we can increase our strength—not only physical strength, but also economic and, technological strength, and strength to achieve success in our psychological efforts—all that can result is that the Soviets and their Chinese allies will rapidly assume a position in the world which will definitely affect our future security?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is exactly the point I was trying to make. Perhaps I can rephrase it.

What impelled me to speak about this matter now is that I have advocated and I do approve of these visits. However, I read the press accounts about these visits—the visit of the Vice President to Russia, and the visit of the President to Europe—and the length to which the press goes makes one think that all our problems are solved. I fear those accounts will be misinterpreted, although I still think this is a proper procedure to follow.

I will say that I first had in mind the President's reluctance to support the Committee on Foreign Relations in its recommendations to the Senate in the field of foreign aid, specifically in regard to the Development Loan Fund, which the administration refused to support. Now in the foreign aid field the whole program has been drastically cut, because of lack of support from the President and his party.

We have to couple that with recent domestic developments. The steel strike is now going into its 56th day, or something like that.

We have to couple it with the failure to make proper demands upon the country, in my opinion. It all seems to me to present a very weak picture in support of whatever the President wishes to say in his negotiations. I think we are creating the impression that everything is going fine. It is not going fine at all.

The President does not have the weapons, either in the field of economic assistance or in the field of military assistance, that he should have, I think, and especially is that true in the foreign aid field.

The Senator from Missouri is himself a far greater authority in the field of armaments than I. As a matter of fact, in this field I consider my authority to be the Senator, ratl er than basing conclusions solely upon my own judgment. I have heard many of the Senator's speeches.

Mr. SYMINGTON. The Senator is very kind, but I do not think he is accurate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think the Senator has made a great contribution in this field.

To sum it up, this country has tremendous possibilities, but the President and the executive department is not asking the country to do what it ought to do and what it is quite able to do.

In a sense the steel strike results from a feeling of overproduction. Is that not a fine thing to have occurred, to have this strike right in the midst of a period when we are having trouble develop in Laos, for example, or trouble in Tibet, and the many signs of impending difficulty with expanding communism? In a sense, these are probing operations, designed to see how determined we are. If we do not have the proper tools and weapons to meet them, we will not be determined.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, there is no question about that, and I am going to talk about the steel strike tomorrow.

So far we have lost the production of 17 millions tons of steel, and I believe that the reference of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas to the importance of doing something about this matter and not talking about it is most timely and constructive.

I, too, am for these visits, but I hope that the American people will not be lulled by them into further complacency and a further false sense of security.

Does the able Senator remember a play, in which Maude Adams had the leading part, entitled "Chanticler"?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not quite remember it. I am not sure that I saw it.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I remember a review of the play by Norman Hapgood, years ago, in which he said that charm was no substitute for a rooster. Would not the Senator agree that might be pertinent to what is going on today?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think exactly that. I do not begrudge the President his charm. I only regret that he is unwilling to demand an adequate effort on the part of this country to do what it is quite able to do. I think Americans would be much happier if they were doing more nearly what they can do. I believe the American people feel we are marking time and are not really exerting ourselves, and I do not mean just here in the Senate; I mean in the country as a whole.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Summing this up, what the Senator is saying is that he is very grateful that we have a head of state who is a very attractive and intelligent gentleman, but he would hope that the President would try to back up his ability to get along with people by taking the necessary steps so that we can negotiate economically, technologically, militarily, and psychologically, from a position of relative strength; and that the President would take these steps instead of following current policies which can only mean that in the not too distant future we will be conducting negotiations from a position of relative weakness.

Would the Senator agree?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator is quite right; and I suggest one further thought. Is it just a coincidence or not that the President began to veto bills which Congress brought out at about the time when the steel strike took place? It was bruited about that the strike was really a kind of little friendly arrangement, that it started as the summer vacations were about to begin, that the companies had all the steel they needed anyway to carry over a period, and this was a kind of little friendly arrangement between labor and management. I do not know whether it was or not. It is beginning to look pretty serious to me. I was not in on any such arrangement, but if there was, it was a silly arrangement, because we need the steel. The world needs it. Whether or not General Motors needs it because of their automobiles I do not know, but there is a need for steel in the free world.

There is need for all the production that we can have, if it is properly distributed in an orderly fashion, to strengthen the free world. The Laotians certainly need something right now. We are trying belatedly to give them some assistance, and I approve of that too. The Indians are needing assistance too on their borders. I mean, there are plenty of places where it is needed, but just as we began to get vetoes, saying, "Well, you do not need so many houses, you do not need public works, you do not need this or that," the whole economy began to draw back.

As I said, I had to revise my speech. When I first wrote it the stock market was reaching a new high every day. However, by the time I got around to delivering it it began to reach a new low every day for the last few days.

The whole economy seems to be turning around. I believe it reflects the attitude of the President. He is fearful of moving on. He does not want to move. He wants to clamp down and hold down housing, public works, and everything else, to a low level.

He did not want to support the committee on foreign aid. I realize the subject is controversial. I know that many of my colleagues do not approve of it as much as I do. The President is the one national official who can afford to ignore local projects and the competition of local projects, but he too undercut the committee and did not support the committee in its efforts to give him a strong bill with a real Development Loan Fund and with the continuity which everyone agrees it needs to make it effective.

So I think this atmosphere of restriction, of holding down our economy, is being reflected now throughout the whole country. These things get to moving. It is mysterious how depressions or recessions develop. Everything at the moment is at a standstill or moving down.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I again congratulate the Senator from Arkansas. There will not be any answer from the other side of the aisle to his masterful presentation of our position in the world because there is no answer to it. The Senator has been logical and he has been direct. I hope that everyone will read his talk and see the predicament we are getting into as a result of the actions or lack of actions on the part of the administration in the domestic and foreign fields.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I appreciate the Senator's hopes, but he knows that everybody will not read it, because it is unpleasant, and it will not be printed in very many places outside of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SYMINGTON. That does not detract from its basic value.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Arkansas, who is one of my colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee, has made a very able speech. It is because of such statesmanship as exhibited by that speech that he finds the cooperation he receives from all of us on the Foreign Relations Committee.

I am very glad that he mentioned, among other things, the plight that confronts us in regard to the steel strike. Of course, much of the steel that is being lost from production now could have been used in these new starts that the President has vetoed, or in the public works program. It could have been used for new housing, and, of course, it could have been used for these projects abroad which would have developed the economic productive power of the very people whom we have got to win over to the cause of freedom if freedom is to survive. I speak particularly of Southeast Asia and Africa.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I appreciate the remarks of my colleague. The Committee on Foreign Relations can be very proud of the legislation it has reported, regardless of how it has finally fared.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. It is our purpose to take up the water pollution bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSTRUCTION OF SEWAGE TREATMENT WORKS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3610) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to increase grants for construction of sewage treatment works and for other purposes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc, and that the bill as thus amended be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that the text of the bill will then be considered original text, and will be open to amendment.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. McNAMARA. With that reservation, I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none; and the amendments are agreed to en bloc.

The amendments agreed to en bloc are as follows:

On page 1, line 10, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$400,000"; on page 2, line 15, after the word "share", to strike out "and the total of all the amounts so determined shall be the maximum amount of the grant which may be made under this section on account of such project" and insert "except that for the purposes of this proviso the $400,000 limitation provided in this clause shall be $250,000 and the total of all the amounts so determined shall not be in excess of $500,000"; in line 25, after the word "year", to insert "following that"; on page 3, at the beginning of line 19, to strike out $100,000,000" and insert "$80,000,000"; in line 20, after the word "thereof", to strike out "$1,000,000,000" and insert "$800,000,000"; after line 21, to strike out:

"(4) Section 6 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(f) The Surgeon General shall take such action as may be necessary to insure that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on projects for which grants are made under this section shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on the same type of work on similar construction in the immediate locality, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, in accordance with the Act of March 3, 1931, as amended, known as the Davis-Bacon Act (46 Stat. 1494; 40 U.S.C., secs. 276a through 276a 5).'"

And, on page 4, after line 8, to strike out:

"SEC. 2. Within one year after the enactment of this Act the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall submit a written report to the Congress on the activities and future plans of the Federal water pollution control program, including construction, enforcement, research, and State services."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, in my opinion this is as important a bill as has ever been presented to this body. No people in the country know more about its importance than do the good people of the District of Columbia and surrounding areas in Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And West Virginia.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Water pollution is becoming quite a problem.

In recognition of the growing problem of water pollution, the Congress in 1948 passed Public Law 845, the Water Pollution Control Act. In 1956 the Congress extended and improved the Federal water pollution control program by passing Public Law 660, the Federal Water Pollution Control Act. The 1956 act continued the Federal role of cooperative programs with the States through research, technical assistance and financial aid, including for the first time grants to municipalities to assist in building needed sewage treatment plants and interstate enforcement.

H.R. 3610, as reported, would increase the construction grants from $250,000 to $400,000 for individual projects. It provides that no grant of more than $250,000 shall be approved for a project in any State until all previously filed qualified applications from that State and political subdivisions thereof for grants not exceeding $250,000 have been approved. The bill would allow municipalities to join together to build joint treatment facilities with the $400,000 limitation being $250,000 and the total amount allotted shall not be in excess of $500,000. The bill provides for an annual authorization of $80 million instead of the present $50 million and a total authorization of $800 million instead of the present $500 million. The bill also provides for reallocation of funds in the event States are unable to utilize funds allotted under the formula now in effect.

Federal funds in the amount of $140 million have been appropriated through fiscal year 1959 with $131.6 million granted to municipalities. With this grant 1,583 projects costing $685.2 million are being constructed. An additional $45 million is being appropriated for fiscal year 1960, thus, a total appropriation of $185 million has been made. If the full $80 million is appropriated there would result a stimulation in the construction of sewage treatment works of about $416.5 million annually as contrasted with a present annual rate of about $240 million which would be an increase of 73 percent over the present rate.

With reference to the figures I have announced, there is very little difference of opinion. There is a difference of opinion as to the application of the formula in the bill. I know that some Senators—even members of the committee—will submit certain amendments, which I believe should be included in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McCARTHY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], and myself, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

(f) the Surgeon General shall take such action as may be necessary to assure that all laborers and mechanics employed by the contractors or subcontractors on projects for which grants are made under this section shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on the same type of work in similar construction in the immediate locality, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, in accordance with the act of March 3, 1931, as amended, known as the Davis-Bacon Act (46 Stat. 1494; 40 U.S.C. sec. 276a through sec. 276a5).

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, I have a very brief statement.

My amendment is the traditional Davis-Bacon amendment—that already is in effect in virtually all Federal grant construction programs.

It provides that employees working on Federal grant projects under the terms of this bill must be paid wages that prevail on similar construction in the immediate locality.

It does not seek to bring big city wages to rural areas or vice versa.

This amendment was contained in the bill as passed by the House and was struck out as a Senate committee amendment.

In my opinion this was an error, since it violates longstanding practices of insuring prevailing wages in legislation of this nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan for himself and other Senators.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 15, it is proposed to retain the language in linetype to line 18, and strike out "Except for the purposes of this proviso, the $400,000 limitation provided in this clause shall be $250,000 and the total of all amounts so determined shall not be in the excess of $500,000;" through line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I believe that this amendment would take care of a difficulty which is largely technical, although it does involve some substance.

The bill which the committee reported provides that if two or three communities combine and establish one facility, the amount for any one is limited to $400,000; but the language goes beyond that, with the following provision, which I seek to strike out by my amendment. The bill reported by the committee reads:

Except that for the purposes of this proviso, the $400,000 limitation provided in this clause shall be $250,000 and the total of all the amounts so determined shall not be in excess of $500,000.

In other words, if three communities were to act together, no one could be permitted more than $250,000, and the total amount could not exceed $500,000. This would mean that two communities acting together could not get more than $500,000, whereas acting separately, they could get up to $800,000. This might very well establish a situation in which they would spend $400,000 on two separate facilities.

At the time the bill was drawn and we had technical advice, the idea was to bear out the purposes which the distinguished Senator from Minnesota has in mind. However, after further study it appears that we did not carry out the purposes we had in mind. Hence, I feel that in justice to all concerned, in order to carry out the purposes of the bill, the amendment should be agreed to.

The language of the bill which precedes the language to which I have referred is this:

Provided further, That, in the case of a project which will serve more than one municipality, the Surgeon General shall, on such basis as he determines to be reasonable and equitable, allocate to each municipality to be served by such project its share of the estimated reasonable cost of such project, and shall then apply the limitations provided in this clause (2) to each such share as if it were a separate project to determine the maximum amount of any grant which could be made under this section with respect to each such share.

It seems to me that this limitation is really not called for.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. The Senator from Minnesota offered an amendment which I myself was about to offer. I wonder if he would mind my joining with him as a cosponsor of the amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am very happy to have the Senator do so.

Mr. ALLOTT. It seems to me that the language of the bill would result in a very inequitable situation and would clearly discourage joint action to control water pollution by communities. I understand very well what the committee, in exercising its good judgment, was trying to do. However, the bill would give a citizen living in one community in a State a very large share of the Federal contribution, whereas a citizen who happened to live in a large community which was in a cluster of communities would be limited to a very small amount. I should like to give a specific example of how that would work.

At present, the city of Denver is contemplating joining in a sewage treatment project with the cities of Arvada and Aurora. If the cities join in the venture, Denver's project, which will cost $14 million, will be limited to a governmental contribution of $250,000, which is 1.8 percent.

Aurora's project would cost $600,000. Aurora would be given $180,000 and would thus get a contribution of 30 percent.

Arvada, which has a project costing $3 million, would be limited to $250,000 and would get 8.3 percent.

So if the cities operate jointly, the range in the amounts the Federal Government will contribute will be between 1.8 percent and 30 percent.

On the other hand, if the cities build the projects individually, Denver's project, costing $14 million, would receive a maximum of $100,000, or 2.9 percent. Aurora's $600,000 project would get $180,000, or 30 percent. Arvada's project which would cost $3 million, would get $400,000, or 13 percent.

It seems to me that if the language of the bill remains, it will simply accentuate the great differences between the burden which the individual has to bear, depending on the community in which he lives, and it certainly discourages joint efforts which I believe should be encouraged.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator from Colorado is quite correct. He has described a situation which exists in many parts of the country.

Mr. JORDAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. JORDAN. Is not one of the purposes of the bill to aid small communities which lose taxable income and values to a greater extent than larger cities lose taxable income and values?

Mr. McCARTHY. I think that is a secondary purpose. The primary purpose is to aid all municipalities in solving the problem of water pollution.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. KERR. If the Senator from North Carolina will look at line 2, page 2, he will find the language:

Provided further, That no grant of more than $250,000 shall be approved for a project in any State until all previously filed qualified applications from that State and political subdivisions thereof for grants not exceeding $250,000 have first been approved.

Mr. JORDAN. I saw that.

Mr. KERR. In other words, one community or a union of two or more would not be eligible for assistance until after all the eligible applications for $250,000 in the State had been taken care of.

Mr. McCARTHY. The protection which the Senator from North Carolina is concerned about is already built into the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Since the origin of the program, it has been the idea in committees and in Congress that every community in a State, no matter how small it might be, could participate in the program.

Mr. JORDAN. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "at the end of the fiscal year following that" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "within six months following the end of the fiscal year."

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, under the House language, the sums allotted to a State, which are not obligated at the end of the fiscal year for which they were allotted, can be reallotted by the Surgeon General to other States.

In the committee, I offered an amendment which would extend the time to 2 years, because of the difficulty being experienced by some of the smaller States not utilizing the money. However, I have been advised by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare that the funds, if not obligated within the 2-year period, would revert to the Treasury. In other words, I think that a substantial amount of money might be unused and would have to be turned back to the Treasury.

My amendment gives the smaller States, or any State, up to 18 months in which to utilize those funds. The amendment has the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and of other Senators, as well.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The amendment now being offered is one which was submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE]. The Senator from Vermont is but clarifying what the Senator from Maine had in mind when he offered his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have had no objection to the amendments offered to the bill, but I must voice my opposition to the bill as such.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KERR. May we have the third reading of the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is perfectly all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and the bill to be a read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, roughly 2 years ago, when this program was begun, Congress authorized $50 million a year for 10 years, or an aggregate of $500 million. I am not insensitive of the fact that communities have taken advantage of the program.

What is before us at present is a proposal to raise the ante from $50 million to $80 million a year, for a total of $800 million. That would be a normal increase of $300 million over what was authorized in the first instance.

The Federal Government shall undertake 30 percent of the cost of these projects, roughly. But my objection of the program is simply that, in the first place, there is no State matching. It is astonishing to me that communities, large and small, can come to the Federal Government and ask for money, while the State of which they are political subdivisions does not call for a contribution for this kind of facility.

My second objection is that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has interposed its objection to the program and has made it very clear before the House committee, and I believe its objection is set forth in the House report.

Third, the Bureau of the Budget is opposed to the bill because of this kind of burden and this kind of impact upon future expenditures.

Last night, when we were discussing the so-called public works bill, I made the point that here was a charge on the budget for years to come. Someone countered and asked, "Why should the President of the United States be concerned beyond the 20th of January 1961?"

Mr. President, the President of the United States would be a strange creature indeed if he had no concern for his country in the days and years to come. I think it is circumspection and a commendable solicitude on his part when the President thinks down the road of the years, because no matter who occupies 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, such concern by the one who occupies that office is entirely proper.

This measure would add materially to the budget, and would result in an additional tax upon the revenues and the income of the country.

This proposal would result in a very long-term burden upon this country. Under present circumstances, the fiscal condition of the country being what it is, and in view of the uncertain conditions which confront us at the present time, I will not vote to add such a charge to the budget.

The international bankers are going to meet in Washington on the 28th of September. One cannot read a speech made by the President of the Swiss Central Bank or one made by some of the other bankers who have some doubts about the willingness of this country to sacrifice and put its fiscal affairs in order, without having a deep and abiding concern about the fiscal future of our own country. So we ought to be cautious, indeed, about putting these extra burdens upon the country.

Next, I submit this program would be a lure. Nobody has better expressed that view than has the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] in the very short supplemental views he filed. I need read only one short sentence from them:

> Availability of funds would stimulate additional applications.

Mr. President, nothing is surer than that. Available funds would be the lure; and then communities—without State matching, without a dollar of State funds—would say to the Federal Treasury officials, "We will take from the Treasury 30 percent of the cost of the project."

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator from Illinois mentioned my name. I shall appreciate it if he will yield to me.

Mr. DIRKSEN. First, will the Senator from Oregon state whether the quotation I gave is from his supplemental views?

Mr. NEUBERGER. Yes; and I wrote them myself, and I am still quite willing to subscribe to them.

A few days ago the Senator from Illinois was asking the Senate to act in such a way as to jeopardize the relations of our country with Canada—to solve the sewage disposal problems of the largest city in his State—Chicago. I wonder whether the Senator from Illinois has ever walked along a river in the Northwest and has seen thousands and thousands of fish choked to death by waste from papermills or by offal and excretion from cities? If he has seen fish runs which, some 150 years ago, in the days of Lewis and Clark——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I ask the Senator from Oregon to stop. He need go no further.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Just think of all the streams that have been choked by sewage.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will answer the Senator by saying the city of Chicago spent $400 million on sewage treatment plants, and did not ask the Federal Government for a single dollar. What does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] have to say about that?

Mr. NEUBERGER. I have this to say: In this country the industrial wealth is concentrated in a handful of States. Compare the per capita incomes in some of the States with those in the industrial States which produce all the automobiles, television sets, and other consumer goods. The rivers to which I refer flow past very small communities which have low assessed valuations and very small tax bases. Certainly it is in the national interest for all taxpayers to help preserve these rivers and our water supplies, which have been fast dwindling.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois let me answer my friend?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. I think we ought to include in the bill—if it is not already in it—a provision for Chicago to get $400,000 under this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That question, I say to my distinguished friend, is not before us at the present time. But the city of Chicago bonded itself to spend $400 million on sewage treatment plants, and did not come as a suppliant to the Federal Treasury, seeking an outlay.

Permit me now to answer the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

Mr. President, long ago—it was 30 years ago—I was on the city council, as commissioner of finance, of a little town of 10,000. I remember when the geological and water survey of our State issued an order that the towns had to stop dumping sewage into the rivers. As a member of the city council, I said, "All right; we will accept that responsibility, and we will handle that problem on our own."

I could not sell that to that particular city council. Of course, no one who is in his right mind ought to run for election to the office of councilman more than once, because by the time he finishes clearing out the ashes in the alleys and removing the water from cellars, providing fire protection, and all the rest, he will have accumulated so many enemies that he should not run for election again.

However, I had the pleasure of seeing the day come when my twin brother succeeded me on the city council, and then the council did that job on their own. The council did not march to Washington and ask the U.S. Treasury for 30 percent of the cost of the project.

Mr. NEUBERGER. There must be some wise reason for this program, because no country in the history of the world has polluted its rivers, and destroyed its fish and wildlife with that pollution, in so short a period of time and over so vast an area as has the United States. That is the real reason why we have this program of grants-in-aid before us today.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why do not the municipalities and States undertake to pay a larger share of the cost?

Mr. NEUBERGER. Because they do not have the revenue with which to pay.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the Senator from Illinois yield on this point?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield very briefly.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not believe the Senator would want the RECORD to show that the municipalities do not make great contributions in connection with projects of this type. Whereas the Federal Government has put up $131.6 million, that amount of money has been matched by municipalities which have pledged $553 million.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, here is the answer to that point: The report of the Senate committee indicates that 79 percent of this program is based on applications from towns of less than 10,000 people; and the towns and cities with less than 10,000 have the best credit of any municipalities in the United States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Among the applications from those municipalities and communities are two pages full of applications from the State of Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished chairman of the committee that I had a meeting in Peoria, with 24 mayors. All of them represented cities along the Illinois River. One by one they asked, "Will you vote for a proposal of this sort"?

I replied, "No; I will not."

So that is the answer. This bill includes authorizations of $3 million for communities in Illinois; but my answer is still "No," because I believe our municipalities are in a position and in fiscal condition to undertake this work without being attached to the strings of the Federal Treasury, with the resultant impairment and vitiation of their independence of action.

So that is the answer. I told those mayors just that. I told it to them before election day; and if they did not like it, they could go to the polls and could vote me out of the U.S. Senate. But they did not do so.

All I have to say is this: If the Congress makes all this money available, without a requirement for State matching funds, then, after all those lures have been held out, imagine the great number of cities which would apply for these Federal funds. In that connection, let us consider the situation as described by our distinguished friend from Oregon, when he said—and this bears repeating—in his brief supplemental views, which he signed:

Availability of funds would stimulate additional applications.

"Come one, come all, the dough is here."

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator has done me the honor twice to quote me. I must say I appreciate this tribute.

I would wish for no better monument than to help contribute to plans around the country to somehow restore the desecration which we have inflicted on the rivers and lakes of what we inherited as a pristine, pure continent. The people who are going to be most outraged by the attitude of the Senator from Illinois are the people who will come in the future, after the Senator from Illinois and I have passed from the Chamber, and after almost everybody else has passed from here. Some rivers are so fouled now that they are nothing but open sewers. Many of the people who live on these rivers and associated communities do not have adequate resources to have an effective program.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The delightful Senator from Oregon has the most artful and ingenious way of begging the question of anyone I have seen. All I have said is that this is a burden which ought to be shared by the States, in larger measure by the municipalities. The Senator talks about the pristine conditions, the primeval streams, the murmuring pines and the hemlocks, and the wallowing fish—and I like to catch some of them up on the Potomac, near Leesburg, when I can.

What has that got to do with the assault upon the Federal Treasury, when there is no matching by the States and the municipalities, particularly those under 10,000, which are in infinitely better fiscal shape than is the Federal Government, with a two hundred ninety-five thousand million dollar debt. I say "two hundred ninety-five thousand million." That is $295 billion, but it scares me more than if I say "thousand million," I say to my colleague the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL]. [Laughter.]

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Will the Senator agree that this is a field in which there is no question of race, religion, or national origin?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know how we could get a civil rights bill into this measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. EASTLAND. It is free from it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my old chairman of House days, who was the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee, and the unofficial mayor of Washington; and I served in that capacity once, myself. So I yield to him.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am grateful for my friend's yielding once again to me. I just feel impelled to say we never had a more capable and courageous chairman of the House District Committee than the minority leader. I feel that way about it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I wonder if I might ask the Senator from Illinois if he objected originally and during the period of reenactment of the legislation for Federal aid to airports of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did my very best to facilitate what I call "Operation Retreat and Fallback." We finally fell back from approximately $569 million to $257 million.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I speak not as of the current situation, but as of the initiation of the Federal Aid to Airports Act.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know. The acceleration of it is such that I have a difficult time to keep up with these things that move along the boulevard of life. So my friend will have to excuse me if my memory fails me a little bit in that respect.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to question my friend further and say that program is a program of Federal and local cooperation, and the States have never been called upon for matching funds in that important effort. I doubt if it is appropriate to raise the question on this important matter to indicate that we should never have Federal funds funneled to the States, or communities in the States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend forgets that the income from the airport restaurants and all the facilities goes not to the States, but to the municipalities. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, this program is a vital one, and needs to be continued and expanded. It is valuable to West Virginia and my home city of Elkins is participating in a sewage treatment project. Other communities are eager to qualify for Federal aid in this effort. They supply 70 percent of the cost.

Pure water accrues to communities through sewage treatment, thereby improving conditions for good health and giving desired recreational advantages to our people. It is a cooperative effort through the use of local and Federal funds.

Industry can expand by adequate water resources and recreational activities can be enhanced by this forward-moving plan.

The Senate Public Works Committee had tentatively set an increase at $60 million but I argued for $80 million and the committee bill contains that amount. The House bill provided $100 million annually for this purpose.

I also sponsored the compromise figure which I hope will be overwhelmingly accepted by the Senate as the aggregate of all annual grants to States to be allowed under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act. The House had passed its bill with the overall figure of $1 billion. The Senate Committee on Public Works initially recommended cutting this figure back to $600 million, but recommended to the Senate my amendment of $800 million as a total.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Why is there such a profound difference, so far as local control is concerned, between a community or a town putting up over two-thirds of the cost of a plant to clean up its nearby rivers while the Federal Government puts up one-third, and the Federal Government putting up 90 percent of the cost of a highway and the States 10 percent?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Roads are interstate in character.

Mr. NEUBERGER. What about rivers? Does a river stop at a State line? Who stops it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is primarily navigable rivers that are interstate. This is not limited to navigable rivers at all.

Mr. NEUBERGER. It is limited to any river.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is limited to a creek, a run, a stream that would not even float a rowboat.

Mr. NEUBERGER. State lines are artificial.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How far does the Senator want to go? Let us take the country over, under the wing of the Federal Government. Let the sky be the limit. Let us bankrupt the Federal institution. Have done with it.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator from Illinois is shifting the scenery. Let us get back on the issue. What is the difference between the Federal Government putting up 90 percent of the cost of a highway and putting up only 30 percent of the cost of a sewage pollution control program?

Mr. DIRKSEN. When I was a barefoot kid I used to wade in a stream that was ankle deep. I thought it was wonderful. But I never thought it had the slightest relationship to the Federal Treasury and to the Nation's Capital.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I say the origin of such a thing was not a little creek in Illinois. It was the Ohio River. It was the cities of Cincinnati and Louisville. Since my friend wants to cry so much about the taxpayers' money, why not cry about spending the taxpayers' money to build a plant to do away with sewage pollution in a foreign country. Would he cry about that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator wants to intermix the whole issue of survival, defense, and national security with a purely domestic issue. I will not go down that dead-end road.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think more of the American people than I do of all the foreigners.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor. Does my esteemed and personable friend from Philadelphia wish the floor?

Mr. CLARK. I thought the minority leader had yielded the floor. I regret the intrusion.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator from Illinois has stated that the Senator from New Mexico has brought into the discussion a question of survival. I wonder if he thinks the question of natural resources has anything to do with our survival?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, that is an academic question, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

I will say to my friend, perhaps I started in the wrong generation. Perhaps I am not the spending type, who comes to Washington every time there is an ill or a malady to be cured.

When I grew up I suppose the only contact we ever had with the Federal Government was the fact that there was a post office in town. We did not know anything about the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Interior Department, social security, and all the rest.

Mr. ELLENDER. Foreign aid.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Foreign aid. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. But this is the way things happen today.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a personal question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, to whom am I yielding?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator is yielding to foreign aid.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, as soon as I find out I will yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I must ask that the rights of the Senator from Illinois be protected. The Senator has the floor and I ask for the regular order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I cannot answer more than one or two questions at one time. [Laughter.]

Does my friend from Oregon have a question?

Mr. NEUBERGER. I would like to ask the Senator, if it is not too personal, what is the age of the distinguished Senator?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. NEUBERGER. What is the age of the distinguished Senator, if that is not too personal a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator from Illinois will be 64 very shortly.

Mr. NEUBERGER. That means the very able Senator from Illinois was growing up at the time when Gifford Pinchot and Theodore Roosevelt were using Federal funds to save our forests, our lands, our lakes, and our wild life.

I would suggest, if the Senator wants a prototype for the speech he is making in the Senate tonight, he should read the speeches delivered in this Chamber denouncing Gifford Pinchot and Theodore Roosevelt for their recklessness with the public purse in seeking to save the relatively little which remained of our original forests, uplands, soil, and so forth.

So the Senator did live in an age when able men from his own political party used funds from the Federal Treasury to save our natural resources.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I do not have to remember those denunciations. I came up at the knee of a widowed mother, one of many children. When I was young I went to school in overalls. We made it on our own. We paid our taxes. My mother was an immigrant mother. She did not look to the dome in Washington for help, even though our father was removed when I was only 5 years of age. We did not come supplicating Uncle Sam for assistance in those days.

Mr. NEUBERGER. And I ask, "Who said you did?"

Mr. DIRKSEN. We believed in frugality and thrift.

Nobody said so, but what the Senator is trying to do is to pin upon me, I think, some kind of peculiar perversity.

Mr. NEUBERGER. No.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Apparently that was a part of the age, when people made it on their own.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator pinned it on himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is exactly that simple.

The Senator from Oregon grew up in the spending age, when it was very easy to talk about resources, streams, forests, and dead fish. [Laughter.]

And let Uncle Sam pay for it. Yes. We did not look to Washington. We made it on our own. We paid our taxes. They were not as high as they are today, but we did not quarrel too much about them, because, after all, there was a sense of frugality in those days

The point I make tonight is that this is a program calling for an $800 million charge upon the Federal Treasury for the next 10 years, with no State matching. The Senator is saving money for the State of Oregon, if the State does not have to match money with the Federal Government.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The local communities will do it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but where is the State?

Mr. NEUBERGER. What is the difference whether a local community does it or the State does it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Thirty percent.

Mr. NEUBERGER. It is all right for a State to put up 10 percent of the cost of a highway.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As if the State of Oregon does not want to take its responsibilities so far as the streams are concerned.

I do not know about my State's position. I have not asked my Governor. But I know that I will accept the responsibility for matching for my State, before I come to Washington to ask Bob Anderson to dole money out of the Federal Treasury for this purpose.

Mr. NEUBERGER. As long as the Senator has mentioned the State of Oregon——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I will inform him about the position of the State of Oregon.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hope the State is in good fiscal condition. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEUBERGER. I received a telegram from the distinguished Republican Governor, asking not for $80 million but for $100 million. [Laughter].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, my friend, I simply have to say that there are Republicans who are unregenerate and unreconstructed and who embrace evil just as there are Democrats who do. [Laughter.]

I do not apologize for Governor Hatfield for one moment for sending the telegram. That simply shows the weakness of a Governor, when he supplicates the President. [Laughter.]

My Governor did not send me a telegram.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Did the Senator's Governor send him a telegram, too? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. He did not have to. He knew I knew the right thing to do.

Mr. DIRKSEN. He was sure.

Mr. HUMPHREY. He was positive. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. He was positive the Senator would do the right thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. President, I want to defend the Governor of Oregon. I am tired of hearing Republicans denouncing Republicans. [Laughter.] The Governor of Oregon is a fine young man.

Mr. DIRKSEN. He certainly is.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Is it not possible that Oregon's rivers are worth a little more saving than Illinois' rivers? [Laughter.]

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote! Vote!

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, that could be true.

I will say to the Senator, when I was a chemistry student in high school I understood that a molecule of water was made up of hydrogen and oxygen, and I do not suppose there is any difference in the water whether it is in the State of Oregon or in the State of Illinois. Water is water, wherever we find it.

I am as much interested in cleaning the streams as anybody, but I do not want to vote the paternal line tonight in the U.S. Senate, which is the greatest free, independent, undominated legislative body left in the world, and say to Uncle Sam, "We are going to commit you to spend $800 million for clean streams, rivers, runs, creeks—anything that has a drop of water, if it has any relation to pollution."

How right was that man for whom we built the memorial on the Tidal Basin, Thomas Jefferson, when he said that when we look to this Capital for a decision as to when we shall reap and when we shall sow it will not be too long before the liberties of the people are in jeopardy.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator talks about Thomas Jefferson. Does the Senator know that Thomas Jefferson was denounced in the United States—not in this Chamber, but in the U.S. Senate—for spending $2,500 to send the first Americans west?

Mr. DIRKSEN. What in God's name has that got to do with clean streams? [Laughter.]

I would like to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I pause. I want to find out what $25,000——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In the days of the great sage of Monticello, used to send people west, has to do with a charge of $800 million upon the Federal Treasury, which is opposed by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, opposed by the Bureau of the Budget and—I think I can tell Senators tonight—opposed by the President of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Whu-up!

Mr. MAGNUSON. Vote.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the Senator please give us the quotation on that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator can take it from me, I will say to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. At one time I heard the Senator say he had authority from the administration for a 3-year extension of Public Law 480, and they pulled the rug not only out from under the Senator from Illinois, but it also slipped from under my feet and from under the Senate.

I believe the Senator from Illinois. I want the Senator to know I really believe him.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me clarify it for my friend.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would like to have a little documentation, one of those "ibid's", a little footnote. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. All I have to say to my friend from Minnesota is exactly what was said on the occasion when Caesar lay prostrate, "The ides of March have come, but not gone."

They have not acted on it. The Senator from Illinois was on his back and not in the Chamber when they were dealing with Public Law 480. But the Senator said last night that there would be a vote of the public works appropriation bill in its form, and there was a veto.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator has, at times, prophetic vision, I will say. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. He has no prophecies; he simply knows.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I doubt whether the Senator has a revelation. [Laughter.]. That was what I was worried about a moment ago.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator does make a good argument, though. I realize it is not particularly relevant to the matter of stream pollution, but simply to add to the general confusion; it is always good to have the Republican leader take exception to the position of a Republican Governor and use a Democratic President as his evidence. [Laughter.]

I really feel that we have come all the way around the horn here and we have made the complete circuit, and with that I have a sneaking suspicion that there are enough votes here to pass the water pollution control bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If there is anyone who is an expert in the field of calculated confusion, it will be my distinguished friend from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I say to the Senator, mine is not calculated; it is natural. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it is. I think it is.

I am not disposed to prolong this matter. I have spoken my piece. I have assigned the reasons why I am opposed to the bill. I say that here is an $800 million charge upon the Federal Government. There are no State matching funds here. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is opposed. The Budget Bureau is opposed. I think I can say with reasonable certainty that the President is opposed.

I believe there is an awful lure when we set up money like this with no State matching. Eleven minority Members in the House filed a minority report against the bill.

Finally, 79 percent of the communities which would benefit have populations of under 10,000, and if anybody is in good fiscal shape, it is the communities of that size.

Finally, since my friend from Oregon is on his feet, I must repeat again, because this ought to be inscribed in granite, not only on memorials here but I think in schoolrooms and in lodge halls, wherever people gather, the words of my distinguished friend from Oregon, "Availability of funds will stimulate additional applications. Send them in, folks. The dough is here. The sky is the limit."

I yield the floor.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I should like to answer one question asked by my distinguished friend from Illinois.

I should like to say, first, that it was with deep regret that I learned he had been in the hospital; but if he suffered no ill effects from it, I must say that the demonstration here today has been so delightful, so entrancing, that if it was not too unpleasant an experience, I for one am not unhappy that he spent a few days in the hospital, and if a return visit would bring him back again in the same marvelous and wonderful shape that he is in here tonight, I just want to suggest to him the possibility to do it more frequently. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Illinois said that most of the money would go to communities of under 10,000 population, and that is true. Then he said something about the condition of the folks there, and I could not tell whether he said fiscal or physical, but either way I am sure that he understands that there is pollution there. It is just a matter of understanding what the situation is.

He asked what the $2,500 or $25,000 provided by Thomas Jefferson to enable people to go West had to do with pollution. If the condition of the Potomac River today is any indication of the environment in which they were accustomed to live, it may be that their going West is what started the pollution which has brought this problem to such a drastic and critical situation it is in today, and that may have had more to do with it, I would say to the Senator from Illinois, than we have been aware.

He criticized the Senator from Oregon about something that he intimated. I do not believe the Senator from Oregon indicated that the Senator from Illinois was a relic of another day. I do not think he had anything like that in mind.

However, I want to say to my good friend from Illinois that he dated himself. He said, "I know that I came up in another day and another generation." I want to say that I think it was a great day and a great generation that gave us such a fine gentleman as the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think we want the RECORD to show that any of us thought that the Senator from Illinois was born in the wrong generation, as he indicated and no one protested. We would want to make the point, however, that we do not want him to persist on living in the generation in which he was born.

Mr. KERR. I must say that if he wants to do that, that is his privilege; and who are we to deny it to him? I do not want to insist on his going along in the tremendous surge of progress, and I would say this to my great friend from Illinois. If he does not want to go along with the great surge of progress, if he does not want to be a part of this onrushing civilization, let him sit by the side of the road, but not try to stop the others. Let them go on.

We will maintain communication one way or another; and in the tremendous transportation facilities which we have, if the urge ever comes for him to catch up, we will give him a special conveyance so that he may catch up with us.

He said that when he was a boy the only contact he had with the Federal Government was through the local postmaster. That is the difference between the Senator from Illinois and me. I could not even contact the Federal Government through the local postmaster, because I did not belong to his party. I remember the story of the fellow who, after a candidate had gotten through a harangue, got up and said, "I would not vote for you if you were St. Peter himself." The candidate said, "Of course you would not. You would not live in the precinct where you could." [Laughter.]

The Senator talked about the language of the Senator from Oregon, saying that this would entice or persuade local communities to apply to participate in this program. That is the purpose of the program. The purpose of this program is to dramatize the need for elimination of pollution.

The Senator from Illinois talked about it being a State problem because many of our rivers were not navigable. That is true, but there is no pollution in any stream in this country which is not interstate in character. There are no streams but that they make their contribution to the flowage that eventually finds its way into interstate streams.

We look at the mighty Mississippi River. I have been to its source in the great State of Minnesota, Itaska Park. It is no wider than from here to the Presiding Officer, and but 12 inches deep. I have taken my children there nearly every summer, and now have started with my grandchildren to show them that phenomenon and let them wade across the great Mississippi River. Then I have sought to describe to them its course as it finds its way through lakes and valleys in that great State of the North, how it receives contributions from the waters of the Red River of the North, how as it moves on south the waters of the Illinois and its tributaries pour into it, and then how the "Big Muddy," with its surging, rolling volumes of water, enters the channel of the Mississippi and goes on down to where the old Ohio comes in, with its volume, after having accumulated the waters of a great basin, now the "Ruhr" of our Nation, the greatest industrial workshop on this earth.

Then the clear waters of the Tennessee, and on down to where the Arkansas enters, and then the turbid waters of the old Red River of the South, until the Mississippi becomes the Father of Waters.

Why talk about pollution not being interstate in character? Why talk about the Mississippi not being interstate in character? It represents the union of all the waters between the two great ranges of mountains; and if there is pollution at the source, it comes on down with it.

This program was designed for a growing nation, to dramatize the problem and provide the incentive for each community to meet its problem of abating pollution, in order that it may not become interstate in character.

Senators talk about matching. The Federal Government does not put up 70 percent of this money and the local community 30 percent. The Federal Government puts up not to exceed 30 percent, and the local community puts up 70 percent. That is what the situation is.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I have been waiting to hear that point made. The situation is perfectly clear from the committee report. We hear much talk about "Why do not the municipalities pay for this program?" It is called a grant-in-aid program. It is one under which the local communities put up 70 percent and the Federal Government 30 percent.

For the reasons which the Senator from Oklahoma is pointing out, and for a few I shall mention later, I believe this is a sound Federal program, dealing with a Federal interest in clean water in the United States.

Mr. KERR. The authorities in the Census Bureau tell us that the population of our country will double in 40 years. They tell us that by the year 2050 there will be a billion people in the United States. If that mighty host of people are to develop an industrial economy that will support that kind of population, it will have to be on the basis of a complete conservation of our water supplies; and the most important element of overall conservation is in the abatement of pollution.

If a nation in its right mind had to choose between having an industrial economy with constantly increasing pollution, or live without the industrial economy and have no pollution, for the sake of the health and welfare of the people they would have to choose the latter. If we are to move into an age in which there will be 350 million people in this country in the lifetime of some of those now in this Chamber, it must be on the basis of that degree of conservation of water which will result in the abatement of pollution. It is to encourage such a program and such an end, as the Senator from Oregon has said, that it is sought to increase this authorization. Applications are coming in at a rate far in excess of the $80 million a year; and it is the hope of the committee that the bill may be approved.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall not speak more than 5 minutes.

I completely share the views of my colleague, as expressed in his supplemental views added to the committee report.

I think it needs to be recapitulated that we are not dealing with a local problem alone. We are dealing with a problem which involves a Federal interest. The purity of the water of this country is a matter of great concern to to the people all over the country.

It has been said by someone that a civilization rises and falls with the level of its water table. It is also true that we cannot pollute the streams of the Nation and not find the Nation as a whole suffering irreparable damage.

As the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma has said, we are dealing with the great river systems of the country, much of which is already polluted. We could almost throw a stone into the filthiest river in the world, from the standpoint of size. This river, the Potomac, flowing through the Capital of the United States, contains about 12 feet of sludge at some points.

There is no excuse for permitting that kind of destruction to one of the great resource values in this country. One of the great riches in this country is in our streams. My colleague is right when he points out the importance of keeping the streams pure for the benefit of the people of the country as a whole. As has been brought out by the Senator from Oklahoma, this is a program under which the local municipalities put up about 70 percent and the Federal Government about 30 percent.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. KERR. The Federal Government puts up not to exceed 30 percent; and if the over-all project is of sufficient stature, the Federal Government does not contribute anywhere near 30 percent.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator is correct.

There is a problem that has not been mentioned in this discussion, and that is the existing water rights under water-right laws in the various States. Those rights cannot be destroyed.

Unfortunately, in some instances those rights give a vested interest in pollution. What we must do is to obtain the cooperation of municipalities in a program in which those rights would be waived. I do not believe we have done a very good job of persuading municipalities—small municipalities in particular—to see that they have a public duty to stop pollution. They have some pretty important vested legal rights, if we go into the question of water-right law; and in my judgment we shall need a program such as this to encourage municipalities to waive those rights and to develop an antipollution program such as is needed. I make a plea from the standpoint of the national interest. The taxpayers of the entire country have a responsibility, too, and ought to be willing to contribute the small percentage share which the program calls for.

Before I close, I point out—and I am for it—the millions of dollars we spend for sewage disposal under our foreign aid program; and we should. I think it is one of the best ways to help build the economic power of the people we are trying to win over to the cause of freedom.

I asked for pertinent information from the staff of the Foreign Relations Committee. I find, to give one specific example, that the American taxpayers are paying practically all the cost of an entire sewage disposal system in Saigon and Vietnam. I am not opposing it. But if we can build an entire sewage disposal works for Saigon, we can certainly appropriate the relatively small amount of money for which this bill calls, to help some of our own communities develop adequate sewage disposal plants.

I think it would be unfortunate in the course of this debate if a word were not spoken in tribute to a great Representative from Minnesota, Representative JOHN A. BLATNIK, who in recent years has done such great work in connection with the whole pollution control program, and who, so far as the House is concerned, is entitled to be singled out as one whose leadership in this field has been noteworthy.

I remember 3 years ago, I think it was, I was invited to a conference of municipalities of the Southern States which was held at Raleigh, N.C., to discuss the Blatnik law and to discuss with the municipal officials who had come to that conference problems which confronted them with respect to effectuating and implementing the so-called Blatnik law.

It was very gratifying to me to see the interest which those municipal leaders from all over the South showed at the conference at Raleigh, N.C. It was very inspiring to listen to the tributes they paid to Representative BLATNIK, of Minnesota, as the author of the first of the antipollution bills.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I had hoped to say a word about our friend from the Eighth Congressional District of Minnesota. JOHN BLATNIK has been a true leader in this effort for Federal legislation in the field of water pollution control.

Some 3 years ago I had the privilege of introducing in the Senate a bill on which the first action was taken in the House. In this particular instance, for the extension of the law, I was privileged again to introduce the bill in the Senate while Representative BLATNIK introduced a similar bill in the House.

I know of no man who has more wholeheartedly, enthusiastically, and constructively made proposals relating to water pollution control or stream pollution control than Representative BLATNIK. He knows this subject inside and out. He is respected throughout the Nation for it. I am delighted that his bill is now before the Senate and will be acted upon.

This is a subject which has been close to my heart, not only as a public official, but as a private citizen, as well. I live in a State where water is very important, where we are very sensitive to stream and lake pollution. Having lived in Washington for better than 10 years, I am not only sensitive to it; I have become almost desensitized by the pollution in the Potomac River, a river which stands as a national disgrace and as an example to the whole world that somehow or other the Capital of the United States under the governing body which is Congress, cannot seem to cleanse its own river and its own streams.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, again I say that the $100 million increase for which my colleague [Mr. NEUBERGER] asked was reasonable. A strong case could have been made for an even larger sum. We ought to vote for this bill on the basis of what I think is the undeniable fact that there is a Federal interest in this problem, and that all the taxpayers of the country have a share of the responsibility of seeking to help solve the problem. The formula proposed by the bill is certainly a reasonable one, when the Federal Government is asked to contribute 30 percent or less of the cost of a particular project, as the Senator from Oklahoma has suggested. I note from the report on page 2 that the bill would authorize:

(1) Grants for projects in the amount of 30 percent of the reasonable cost thereof or $400,000, whichever is the smaller, with the provision that no grant of more than $250,000 shall be approved for a project in any State until all previously filed qualified applications from that State and political subdivisions thereof for grants not exceeding $250,000 have first been approved.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I shall not speak more than 3 minutes. I associate myself with the comments made in support of the bill by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], and the two Senators from Oregon [Mr. MORSE and Mr. NEUBERGER].

Ever since 1905, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has been trying to clean up its streams. For several years it has been making a substantial contribution out of State funds for that purpose. In each of the past 2 bienniums, State appropriations have been $3,200,000. In this biennium, Governor Lawrence has asked for $4,680,000.

Pennsylvania has led all other States during the past 5 years in total expenditures for sewage treatment. Of the total, $157 million spent in the Commonwealth, $5,204,902 came from Federal funds in the 3 fiscal years the program has been in effect.

In spite of the State and local efforts, 52 percent of the sewered communities have no treatment plants, and 30 percent of the waste-producing industries still do not treat their waste before dumping it into the rivers and streams.

The Federal Government has a role to play in preserving one of our most important natural resources. There is great danger that the program itself will be killed. That would make little sense at a time when more areas of the country are getting on the "clean streams" bandwagon and the Nation is beginning to make progress on its water pollution program.

Mr. President, the Harrisburg Evening News is one of the leading Republican newspapers of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that an editorial entitled "Clean-Stream Program Faces Crippling Blow in Congress," published in the Evening News of June 20, 1959, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

I hope the bill will pass.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLEAN-STREAM PROGRAM FACES CRIPPLING BLOW IN CONGRESS

House passage of a bill to double Federal grants to communities constructing sewage plants is setting the stage for a congressional showdown with President Eisenhower.

This water pollution control authorization bill would increase the total grants from $50 million to $100 million a year. Individual payments would stay at the 30 percent maximum contribution, but the cutoff point for aid to any one community would rise from $250,000 to $500,000. It also would up the overall 10-year program passed in 1956 from $500 million to $1 billion.

If the Senate goes along, the bill sent to the White House will be diametrically opposed to the President's proposal. He wants the Federal Government to get out of the act entirely, leaving it all to State and local governments. The administration program calls for a cut to $20 million this next fiscal year and nothing at all for 1961.

Even a defeated GOP effort to amend the House bill to provide a 25–25–50 percent matching fund deal for Federal, State and municipal governments wouldn't have meshed with the President's stated position.

Pennsylvania has more than a passing interest in this program, which could face a Presidential veto.

Ever since 1905, our State has been fighting to clean up its streams. In 1945 and 1953 the program was beefed up with State funds to help Commonwealth communities plan and operate sewage treatment facilities. In each of the past two biennia, State appropriations have been $3,200,000. This biennium, Governor Lawrence has asked for $4,680,000.

Harrisburg's own long-delayed sewage treatment plant, now nearing completion, received the maximum $250,000 in aid from Uncle Sam and $29,231.43 in State aid for planning. A $7 million sewage authority bond issue is financing the local project. Harrisburg may be eligible for additional State funds to help operate the plant, depending on our relative financial need and the number of other communities in the Commonwealth competing for a share of the appropriation.

What does the Federal program's continuation mean to Pennsylvania?

Our State has led all others during the past 5 years in total expenditures for sewage treatment. Of the total $157 million spent in the Commonwealth, $5,204,902.43 came from Federal funds in the 3 fiscal years the program has been in effect. That's 4.6 percent of all Federal funds available. Under the new House bill, Pennsylvania might receive as much as $4,200,000 a year to aid new treatment plant construction.

This boost to water purification in the Commonwealth still is needed. Despite our State effort, 52 percent of our sewered communities have no treatment plants and 30 percent of waste-producing industries still don't treat their waste before dumping it into our rivers and streams.

It has been one of Dr. Maurice K. Goddard's persistent themes that good water in Pennsylvania means not only better health but better industrial growth. The State secretary of forests and waters points at a map of the Commonwealth and makes his point by showing how the worst of our polluted streams coincide with our chronically depressed areas.

President Eisenhower need not take a Pennsylvania cabinet official's word for it. His own Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, warned only a month ago that America must stop wasting water or there won't be enough to meet our needs. Water usage will double in the next 25 years, experts predict. The worst form of water waste is the careless pollution of existing supplies.

The Federal Government has a role to play in preserving one of our most important natural resources. Certainly, the States should play a financial part in maintaining the health and future economic welfare of its people, as Pennsylvania has. And the localities can be expected to continue shouldering the main burden of the costs.

But, in arguing over a formula or a philosophy, there is great danger the program itself will be killed. That would make little sense at a time when more areas of the country are getting on the "clean streams" bandwagon and the Nation is beginning to make progress on its water pollution problem.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, in my discussion with the able minority leader, I referred to the position taken by the Governor of Oregon, the Honorable Mark O. Hatfield. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD two messages I received from Governor Hatfield, of Oregon, dated, respectively, April 22, 1959, and July 22, 1959, urging the full amount authorized in the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Salem, Oreg., April 22, 1959.

Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR NEUBERGER: I am sincerely concerned over the proposed reduction in appropriations for Federal grants for the construction of sewage treatment works during the 1959–60 fiscal year. Funds authorized under the provisions of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act have proven most helpful to the stream purification program in Oregon by providing an incentive for many communities to undertake the construction of remedial works needs to abate pollution of public waters. A number of these communities such as Cannon Beach, Drain, Fairview, Government Camp, Pilot Rock, Rainier, Tigard, and Weston would have found it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to finance their sewerage projects without the assistance of a Federal grant.

During the 3 fiscal years (1957–59) that funds have been available for construction grants in Oregon, 23 projects have been undertaken at a total cost of approximately $7,700,000; the Federal share of this cost was approximately $1,400,000. Awaiting to be allocated is an additional $560,000 for projects estimated to cost $4,900,000.

Our needs for the next 3 fiscal years beginning with 1960 are for 48 projects having a total cost of over $14 million, with the Federal share being approximately $3 million. This matter was discussed at the last meeting of the Committee on Natural Resources on April 16, and that committee recommended the continuation of Federal grants for the construction of sewage treatment works with the full amount of appropriations authorized under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

I urge you to take such measures as you may deem appropriate to assure that appropriations are made to the full extent authorized by law so that the construction grant program can be continued and the backlog of needed sewage treatment work projects can be reduced.

Sincerely,

MARK O. HATFIELD, Governor.

SALEM, OREG., July 22, 1959.

Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Urge you support favorable action on H.R. 3610, scheduled for hearing. Passage of this bill would greatly aid Oregon in its program for cleaning up streams. Cy Everts reports large backlog of applications for grants for vitally needed sewage plant construction. H.R. 3610 can be the instrument whereby sewage pollution in our State and elsewhere can be virtually eliminated within 10 years.

MARK O. HATFIELD, Governor.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Illinois was critical of the supplemental views which I submitted as a member of the Senate Committee on Public Works, I think it only fair that my views should appear in full at this point in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

There being no objection, the supplemental views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

I voted for an increase to $100 million of the annual appropriation authorization for Federal water pollution control grants. This is the figure voted by the House of Representatives. While the $80 million yearly ceiling approved by the majority of the Senate Public Works Committee is a substantial rise, I do not consider it adequate, in view of existing need.

Water is a vital resource. Population growth and industrial expansion are creating new demands for water. Pollution decreases the usable supply.

Pollution of water destroys fish and wildlife resources. Polluted streams, rivers, ponds, and lakes ruin sport and commercial fishing. Recreational activities are eliminated by contaminated waterways. Health hazards are created by the existence of water pollution. Property values are threatened.

Results achieved by water pollution control legislation approved by Congress in 1956 are impressive. Operation of the program has proved effective. But more funds are needed.

Today there exists a backlog of 1,267 projects, with a total estimated cost of $800 million, including a Federal share of $123 million under present law. Availability of funds would stimulate additional applications. Government officials in my own State of Oregon estimate that for the next 3 fiscal years requirements for 48 projects will total over $14 million, with the Federal share amounting to about $3 million. Twenty-three projects have already been undertaken in Oregon. It is expected that this high level of demand for construction of sewage-treatment plants will continue for a number of years.

For these reasons, I believe that the annual authorization figure should be increased to $100 million.

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Alaska [Mr. BARTLETT] on his feet. The Senator from Alaska is chairman of the Subcommittee on Fisheries of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He and his able colleague [Mr. GRUENING], and the two Senators from Oregon share somewhat the same responsibility—namely, to help protect the streams which contain really the last truly great fish runs that have survived civilization's encroachment in the United States.

I cannot speak for the senior Senator from Alaska, and I do not know what he is about to say. But the grants in aid for water pollution control are, in my opinion, absolutely necesary to the survival of the fisheries in Alaska and in the other States of the Pacific Northwest, especially Oregon, Washington, and Idaho.

I regretted that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] made light and made jest of our references to the protection of these natural resources. It is very easy to ridicule or to poke fun at anything. I think one of the real responsibilities of the U.S. Government is to help States and local communities to protect the Nation's natural resources. Foremost among those resources are our rivers and streams and our fisheries and our wildlife.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I concur wholeheartedly in the statement made by the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon. I express appreciation now for his supplemental views. I hope that the enactment of the proposed legislation will not only stimulate additional applications from affected communities, but will also create a situation in which funds will be made available for the treatment of water pollution.

What the junior Senator from Oregon has said about the need for keeping the streams of the Nation clean and clear for fish is ever so true.

I should like to add a word of commendation to what has been said by other Senators concerning the effective pioneering work performed in this important area by Representative BLATNIK, of Minnesota. For myself, in addition to a multitude of other reasons, I may say that ever since I went sailing on the Potomac a few days ago at the invitation of a friend, I have waited impatiently to cast an affirmative vote for this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from the Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business, attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 27, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 3610) was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. KERR, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. COOPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER FOR CALL OF CERTAIN MEASURES ON CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be a call of the calendar tomorrow, starting with order No. 939, H.R. 47, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to announce, for the information of Senators, that we shall call up by motion the following measures:

Calendar No. 581, S. 2026, to establish an Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

Calendar No. 591, Senate Concurrent Resolution 11, a concurrent resolution to invite friendly and democratic nations to consult with India.

Calendar No. 710, S. 2449, to extend the International Wheat Agreement Act of 1949.

Calendar No. 761, H.R. 5067, to repeal section 217 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

Calendar No. 811, S. 2467, to authorize the development of plans and arrangements for the provision of emergency assistance, and the provision of such assistance, to repatriated American nationals without available resources, and for other purposes.

Calendar No. 840, S. 857, to authorize the Administrator of General Services to convey certain lands in the State of Wyoming to the city of Cheyenne, Wyo.

Calendar No. 849, S. 2612, to amend the Small Business Act.

Calendar 851, S. 2611, to amend the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, and for other purposes.

Calendar No. 852, S. 2481, to continue the application of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, to certain functions relating to fishing vessels transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

Calendar No. 854, S. 155, to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Service Act of 1949, so as to permit donations of surplus property to libraries which are tax supported or publicly owned and operated.

Calendar No. 899, H.R. 1778, to amend section 17(b) of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939.

Mr. President, I do not anticipate there will be any great controversy about those measures.

Then we plan to call up by motion, when we shall have completed the measures I have just listed, the following bills, on which some debate is expected:

Calendar No. 596, S. 1697, the Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act of 1951.

Calendar No. 669, S. 2282, to amend the act of July 17, 1952.

Calendar No. 815, S. 2578, to provide a program of assistance to correct inequities in the construction of fishing vessels and to enable the fishing industry of the United States to regain a favorable economic status, and for other purposes.

Calendar No. 819, S. 694, to provide Federal assistance for projects which will demonstrate or develop techniques and practices leading to a solution of the Nation's juvenile delinquency control problems.

Calendar No. 820, H.R. 7244, to promote and preserve local management of savings and loan associations by protecting them against encroachment by holding companies.

Calendar No. 828, S. Res. 169, concerning the desirability of holding an international exposition in the United States.

Calendar No. 896, S. 2568, to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, with respect to cooperation with States.

Calendar No. 908, S. 1431, to provide for the establishment of a Commission on Metropolitan Problems.

Mr. President, we expect to meet at 9:30 a.m. and have a morning hour and a call of the calendar, and then proceed to the consideration of the bills I have just listed.

ADVISORY COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 581, Senate bill 2026.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2026) to establish an Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Government Operations with an amendment.

VETO OF CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I understand, from reports in the press, that the President has for the second time vetoed the civil functions appropriation bill. May I ask the distinguished majority leader, if the veto is overridden in the House, which I understand will vote on it tomorrow, what will the procedure be in this body?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It depends upon when the House acts. If the House should act and should override the veto——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the Senate. We will not proceed until the Senate is in order.

The Senator from Texas may proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I do not know what time the veto message is expected in the House. Of course, the House will have to act first. I should expect that the veto message will be received around 12 o'clock, and the House will act by about 1 o'clock. If that estimate is correct, we should have the veto message in the Senate sometime between 1 and 2 o'clock.

We have had a pretty thorough discussion of the civil functions appropriation bill this year, when we passed it and when we repassed it. We had a good deal of discussion last night.

I am not going to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement, but I am going to express the hope that the Members of the minority and of the majority can tentatively agree on about how much time they will need to discuss the veto message, so that all Members may know about what time to expect to vote, so that we will protect both sides.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to my friend and colleague.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Speaking only for the minority leader, it will require about 3 minutes for me to summarize what I said last night on this bill with respect to the veto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader is always effective. He rarely consumes very much time. I hope that the Democrats will emulate the minority leader and not speak very long themselves. If so, we should be able to have a vote by 3 or 4 o'clock.

I should like to be able to assure Senators that we will have a vote by that time, but due to the uncertainty as to the time the message will arrive at the House, due to the uncertainty as to the time of action in the House, due to the uncertainty as to when the matter will come to the Senate, and due to the uncertainty as to how long Senators will speak, I am unable to give any assurance. However, if Senators will cooperate with me, we will move to proceed to consider the veto message as soon as it arrives at the Senate. We will restrain ourselves as much as possible under the circumstances, and then proceed to a vote. I am very hopeful we can reach a vote before 3 o'clock.

Does that answer the Senator's inquiry?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, indeed. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to my friend from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I do not think I misunderstood the Senator from Texas. When the Senator was reading off the list of bills he was going to have considered tomorrow he named one, and he said, I think——

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, we cannot hear the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MORSE. I think the Senator referred to the Mutual Defense Security Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No. The mutual security bill cannot come before the Senate before Saturday morning, under the rule.

Mr. MORSE. I understand that. What bill was it the Senator mentioned?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The bill to establish an Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

The concurrent resolution to invite friendly and democratic nations to consult with India.

The bill to extend the International Wheat Agreement Act of 1949.

The bill to repeal section 217 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

The bill to authorize the development of plans and arrangements for the provision of the emergency assistance, and the provision of such assistance, to repatriated American nationals without available resources, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. I think the Senator referred to the Mutual Defense Alliance Control Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That is a bill to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act of 1951.

Mr. MORSE. I simply wanted to make sure I heard the Senator correctly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand the Senator is reviewing the hearings and the report on the mutual security bill.

Mr. MORSE. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We do not expect to consider that bill until Saturday. We expect to come in early Saturday and discuss the bill. I have been informed by some of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle that they expect to have a number of amendments to offer, and that there will be a rather extended discussion. I have said to all who have inquired that I doubt we can conclude the discussion on Saturday. I hope we can conclude it and perhaps adjourn sine die on Monday.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to my friend from New Hampshire.

Mr. COTTON. The distinguished majority leader knows that the junior Senator from New Hampshire rarely takes much time, and certainly does not want to add to the burdens and the difficulties of the leadership.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand that, and I appreciate it more than the Senator knows.

Mr. COTTON. I note that the distinguished majority leader mentioned S. 2282 as a bill which he anticipates might be involved in some controversy, which might be considered by the Senate. I think in fairness the junior Senator from New Hampshire should say the Senator's statement is an understatement. There may be considerable controversy, at some length, about the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Is that the freight car bill?

Mr. COTTON. No. That is the bill which encourages the Federal Government to participate in helping one State tax another State. It is a question of the big States against the little States, and though the discussion of the bill may not be as long as that with regard to Lake Michigan, it will take a little while.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Seantor yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I appreciate very much the information from the Senator from New Hampshire. I have great respect for the Senator's judgment. While the policy committees on both sides of the aisle have cleared the measure for discussion, I will bear in mind the Senators' admonition.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. I do not want to delay the Senate or the majority leader. I join with the Senator from New Hampshire. I am sure I join both Senators from New Hampshire in strong opposition to the bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I wish to say to the distinguished majority leader that while I differ with my distinguished friends from New Hampshire and New Jersey with regard to the particular bill, for the information of our leader, in order to give us all the proper guidance, I desire to inform him that Calendar No. 828 is a resolution concerning the desirability of holding an international exposition in the United States. It is a resolution reported by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It may require considerable and extended debate, because there are many cities in the United States which are interested in or which might be interested in this proposition.

I wish to say simply that it may be necessary, in the light of the interests of the city of New York, in the State which I have the honor to represent, to debate that resolution for an extended period of time. In order that the majority leader may be informed as to the program, I thought in fairness it would be a proper thing to tell him that at this point.

Is the majority leader able to tell us, for the guidance of the rest of us, the position of the distinguished Senator from Oregon on some of this proposed legislation?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KEATING. Does the Senator anticipate discussing some of these matters at length?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I realize perhaps more than any Member in this Chamber how effectively New York State is represented in this body by my friends the junior Senator and senior Senator from New York.

I have taken up Calendar No. 828 with the policy committee. We believe it should be scheduled for consideration. We anticipate that the New York Senators and any other Senators who desire will discuss it and offer any amendments they may care to offer. I have no deep prejudice in the matter one way or the other. If it is felt, after a reasonable amount of discussion, that no action should be taken, then I would be glad to abide by the will of the majority in the Senate.

Mr. President, I am not in a position to state the attitude of the Senator from Oregon on many of these bills. I can only say that, after consultation with the minority leader, both policy groups have cleared these bills as possible for consideration. We will consider them in due time. Some of them may never be brought before the Senate. If we have an opportunity we will make motions to have the Senate consider them. If the bills require extended discussion, we will have to be realists and act accordingly.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEATING. I wish to say to my distinguished friend, the majority leader, he has many friends in the city of New York, I assure him. The city of New York feels it is the best qualified city to hold the international exposition. I hope that we may be able in the debate to convince the Senator from Texas, our distinguished majority leader, that he should support the city of New York in the herculean efforts which it is making to obtain this fine international exposition. New York was previously a host to such an exposition, I believe with great success, to the great enjoyment of all peoples throughout the world.

I must say I am in quite violent disagreement with my dear and distinguished friend from Arkansas regarding the procedure which he is following.

I understand that in the other body there is a very great likelihood that tomorrow a resolution will be passed which will designate the city of New York, our greatest city, our metropolis, the cultural and financial center of the world, as the city where this exposition should be held, and I hope that we will have an opportunity to present our views with reference to it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is this a boost or a confession?

Mr. KEATING. This is a simple statement by the junior Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. First of all I wish to say to the junior Senator from New York that he is very generous and persuasive, and I shall await with interest the argument he advances. I reciprocate his friendship, and I shall be pleased to hear his proposal.

Mr. JAVITS. I had hoped that we could work out some solution to the problems raised by Senate Resolution 169. I am willing to try to do that by consideration of the matter on the floor. I do think, if an opportunity were afforded, it would be possible to do so. There seem to be very essential differences, not in intent but in language, between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] and myself.

I, too, look with some concern upon listing this resolution with many, many other resolutions on which it is expected there will be relatively little debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No, no; that resolution is listed among those on which we expect debate.

Mr. JAVITS. I do not want to use the naughty words "extended debate." Therefore I shall just say that thorough debate will be required on the resolution. We have some fundamental differences as to what the resolution means. I shall do my utmost in presenting my views, and I hope that my colleague from Arkansas will, in his usual open-minded way, consider the points which we make, in an effort to reconcile those differences. I hope they will be reconciled. I would much rather come to an agreement on the matter than engage in a long harangue on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I assure the Senator that I shall do all I can to approach the matter with an open mind and with no prejudices.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield so that I may reply to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. First I wish to reply.

Mr. MORSE. I thought the Senator from Texas had finished.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I shall follow with interest the arguments advanced tomorrow. First, I wish to say that the Senator from New York is a very persuasive advocate.

I hope the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from New York can get together and find some area of agreement. I have great respect and affection for the Senator from Arkansas, and I know that he will be glad to meet anyone halfway in the matter. I do not wish to pass judgment on this legislation tonight. I merely wish to give notice that when it is called up, we expect some extended debate on it, so that Members will be on notice.

Mr. MORSE. In view of the fact that the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] asked for my point of view, I wish to say that I consider the discussion of the last 10 minutes between the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON] and the two Senators from New York to be complete proof and unanswerable support of the position I have taken, that all these important matters should be considered very carefully, thoroughly, and fully. I wish to thank these Senators for the support they indirectly gave me in my argument that we need to stay in session until all these matters are fully discussed.

I have been asked what my part is going to be in this particular matter. For the most part, I shall sit and listen, but there are some measures the majority leader read off on which I shall speak at some length.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in view of all the talk about various cities, I should like to say a good word for Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

Mr. KEATING. And Erie.

Mr. SCOTT. And Erie. I should like to have the virtues of Pennsylvania cities considered as places of meeting, and places of friendship. The city of Philadelphia is the City of Brotherly Love. The city of Pittsburgh is the City of Amiability. The city of Erie is a city situated on a lake where men and women enjoy a happy life amid pleasant surroundings. I hope Pennsylvania communities will be considered in the course of the colloquy, and perhaps a compromise can be reached which will center, as other compromises have centered, upon a Pennsylvania community which is worthy of the honor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. He knows I have great affection and admiration for him.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I hesitate to use the term "compromise" because it is frequently looked upon as an unsavory term. I assure the Senate that if the term "compromise" is used in its most positive connotation, the place Senators are talking about is the Twin Cities.

MEDICAL EXCHANGES WITH IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, one of the most important ways of reaching the minds and hearts of the peoples of the world is through the medium of medical exchanges.

Medicine has always been international and must remain so.

Unfortunately, however, the Iron Curtain and the Bamboo Curtain have constituted high barriers against the free exchange of medical knowledge and specialists.

Over a period of time, I have been in contact with the Department of State toward helping to lower barriers on both sides.

I have not hesitated to point out, that, by and large, it is the Soviet Union and principally, Red China which are responsible for the barriers.

The United States has reacted and retaliated against Moscow's and Peking's policies. The Department of State has, in many instances, followed a severely restrictive visa policy. As a result of that policy, many international medical Congresses which might have been held within our borders have been held elsewhere.

PEKING'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR ITS MEDICAL ISOLATION

Meanwhile, the possibility of even minimal Western medical relations with mainland China has diminished because of Peiping's own cruel and reckless actions.

At the present time, we see that Peiping seems less concerned than ever with reactions from the conscience of mankind.

Its actions in Tibet, at India's northern borders and now, its possible involvement with Vietminh forces in the aggression on Laos constitutes a self-indictment in the eyes of mankind.

Thus, Peiping intensifies its moral and legal isolation from the rest of the world. The Bamboo Curtain becomes thicker and higher by Peiping's own choice. But the Bamboo Curtain does not stop germs or viruses from crossing to and fro.

Two years ago, the Asian flu epidemic started in mainland China. Eighty million Americans were struck by it. No one knows how many members of our Armed Forces stationed in the Far East, alone, may have been struck by virus-borne diseases which may have started on the mainland.

No man can now foresee the amount of illness which may occur in the future anywhere in the world because the Bamboo Curtain restricts medical knowledge. At present it prevents contact with one-fourth of the human race living in an area the size of the United States.

This area is now almost a medical vacuum, so far as the rest of the world is concerned.

DR. SHANNON'S FORTHRIGHT TESTIMONY

All over the world, medical scientists are distressed over this vacuum. The foremost single authority in the U.S. Government on medical research problems, Dr. James Shannon, able Director of the National Institutes of Health, testified briefly on this subject before the International Health Subcommittee on July 16, 1959. He spoke as a man of science with honesty, with clarity, with objectivity in one of the finest scientific presentations which I have been privileged to hear.

Let it be clearly noted that Dr. Shannon addressed himself solely to the medical-scientific phases of the problem. He noted with great care:

> There are grave foreign policy issues involved here which cannot be treated lightly.

Those foreign policy issues are basically the concern of the President and of the Department of State. That is why I have repeatedly contacted the Department.

This is not a new problem.

Our Senate International Health Study has now been proceeding in its fact-finding efforts for a year. And, I may say, it has done so with dispatch and with the broadest possible coverage.

From all over the United States and from international quarters as well, we have received medical suggestions on behalf of at least the start of an effort to try to penetrate the Bamboo Curtain through the medium of the healing arts.

This is the sentiment which I present today.

MY OPPOSITION TO RECOGNITION OF RED CHINA

But let there be no misinterpretation of my position.

I have denounced with all the strength at my command Peking's repeated violations of international law. I do not believe that those violations can be ignored by mankind or that her aggression can be rewarded.

I believe, in particular, that the situation which has been allowed to develop in Laos may prove fraught with danger to the cause of collective security against aggression.

LONG-RANGE ISSUE OF UNIVERSALITY OF SCIENCE

But this Laos issue of great urgency and gravity does not eliminate a longer range issue.

This latter issue is, whether or not medical science will become truly universal or whether that concept will merely be an empty platitude, so far as one-fourth of the human race is concerned.

Unfortunately, the Department of State by its restrictive visa policies has failed to seize the initiative on this issue and has merely sat back in a policy of retaliation.

DO NOT PUT ISSUES UNDER THE RUG

To change that policy especially at the present critical time, is obviously a matter of greatest difficulty.

Yet, I believe, that the day must eventually come when the healing arts are separated to the greatest possible extent from the politics and policies of the cold war.

I do not believe that the question of medical contacts should therefore be "shoved under the rug," even in the face of a problem such as the crisis in Laos, as some people might urge.

PROPOSED WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION VISIT TO CHINA

How can the present medical impasse be broken? One way, it seems to me, is by having the World Health Organization, representing 90 nations of the world proposed to the Peiping government that an International World Health Organization team be allowed to enter the Chinese mainland on a preliminary visit. Such a team could consist of Americans in part. But it should have ample representation of scientists of other nations. A team of virus experts would probably represent as good a specialty to begin with, under present circumstances. If the Peiping government accepted, and if the visit were thereafter made, there might be additional dicussions in Peiping as to the possibility of further two-way visits.

This should not be an American program, however. It should be an international program. I am convinced that other nations are ready, willing and eager to see such a program attempted, if the United States signifies that it has no objection.

The effort should be made on a step by step basis, exercising great caution, and discretion to help prevent Red China's misuse of humanitarian interest in the Western World for Peking's own propaganda purposes.

Whether this suggestion is or is not adopted, it at least signifies America's sincere interest in the universality of science.

EXCHANGE OF LETTERS AND EXCERPTS OF JULY 16 HEARING

So as to provide the fullest possible clarity on this subject, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my exchange of correspondence with the Department of State be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point, to be followed by excerpts from the July 16 hearing before the Senate Government Operations Subcommittee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 20, 1959.

Hon. CHRISTIAN A. HERTER,
Secretary of State,
Department of State,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I would appreciate receiving a report, bearing upon present U.S. Government policy in the granting of temporary visas for medical scientists from the Soviet Union and Soviet orbit countries, including Mainland China.

As you know, I serve as chairman of an international health study. Over a period of many months, reports have come to this subcommittee's attention to the effect that U.S. policy concerning visas has been to some extent limiting fruitful scientific exchange between our own and other countries.

The reports may be summarized as follows:

1. Bona fide medical scientists seeking to come over on exchange programs or otherwise in research visits have, on occasion, been denied visas.

2. Partially as a result, certain international medical congresses have not been held in the United States, but have been shifted to other locations abroad.

As regards individual cases, I cite a report as to Prof. Nicholas Blochin, director, Institute of Experimental Pathology and Therapy of Cancer, Moscow. When I visited Moscow, he told me of visa difficulties he had previously experienced. I would appreciate a report specifically on the record of visa actions with regard to Professor Blochin.

Overall reports indicate, I may say, that present U.S. policies fortunately represent a considerable improvement over the visa-granting situation years ago.

In any event, I, for one, believe that, to the greatest possible extent, medical teamwork throughout the world should be divorced from policy matters involved in the cold war. The fullest possible exchange of (a) qualified medical scientists, (b) medical literature, (c) medical instrumentation, (d) supplies and materials, and (e) exhibits, should take place.

For the good of mankind and for maintenance of the United States' position in world science, the United States should eagerly seek, in my judgment, an optimum number of International Medical Congresses and foreign nationals' attendance at those Congresses within the United States itself.

I should like now to hear from the Department as to its present position on these matters, specifically affecting the USSR, all other countries of Eastern Europe and other Soviet orbit countries, including Mainland China.

You will recall a note from me, forwarding an inquiry from a Minnesota medical publication, regarding possible exchange of medical literature with Mainland China. My present inquiry is much broader, however.

I ask, for example, specifically what the Department's position is and would be as regards (a) possible American medical scientists' visits to Mainland China (assuming they were able to secure visas from Peking), and (b) reciprocal visits of scientists, representing the Peking Government.

Strongly opposed as I am to recognition of the Peking Government, I nevertheless believe that the overall health of the world should not be sacrificed, if only in part, because of a deplorable vacuum existing as to medical information in that vast area of the world.

Let me conclude by stating that, of course, I do not believe that responsibility for relative lack of exchange and information should be assumed by anyone as resting basically with the United States. On the contrary, the policy of the Soviet Union and orbit countries themselves, particularly Peking, appears, by and large, to have been restrictive and arbitrary in an extreme and contrary to the international traditions of the life and other sciences. Fortunately, the Soviet Union has been relatively easing restrictions in recent times, as you know.

I shall be looking forward to the pleasure of hearing from you.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely,

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Subcommittee Chairman.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., August 18, 1959.

The Honorable HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
U.S. Senate

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: On August 5, 1959, I acknowledged the receipt of your letter of July 20 requesting a report on U.S. visa policy regarding medical scientists from Soviet-bloc countries. I am now in a position to answer the questions raised in your letter.

You asked for a report on visa action with regard to Prof. Nicholas Blokhin (Blochin). The Visa Office of the Department has informed me that their records do not indicate that he was ever denied a visa. The records do, however, show that Professor Blokhin was issued a visa on September 19, 1957, to permit him to tour the United States as a member of a Soviet public health mission. Another visa was recently issued to him so that he could come to the United States as a member of a Soviet tourist group. I note in the New York Times of August 7 (p. C–7) that Professor Blokhin gave a press conference at New York on August 6 in connection with the Soviet exhibition.

The Department has no information indicating that international medical congresses have been moved from the United States to other countries because of U.S. visa policies. The Department can cite several international medical conferences which have been held in the United States in 1958–59. As you know, in May 1958, the World Health Organization met at Minneapolis and all countries belonging to the WHO were represented. Also in May, 1958, a World Conference on Gastroenterology was held in Washington, with medical scientists from Hungary, Poland, Rumania and the Soviet Union in attendance. An international conference on live polio vaccine was held in Washington this past June. Several other international medical conferences are scheduled to be held in the United States in the near future, including one in Washington on nutrition and one in Chicago on medical education.

With regard to a general statement of the Department's visa policy concerning medical scientists coming from Soviet-orbit countries, it is best to consider the case of scientists coming from countries like the Soviet Union with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations separately from persons coming from unrecognized countries or regimes. The fundamental policy of the Department in handling visa applications is of course contained in the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended. While it is likely that the majority of professional persons applying for visas in countries such as the Soviet Union or Czechoslovakia will be found to be ineligible for visas under section 212(a)(28) of the act, it is the policy of the Department to promote increased contacts between American scientists and their counterparts from the Soviet-bloc countries of Eastern Europe with which we have relations. The Department takes this policy into account in recommending to the Attorney General that a waiver of the excluding provision of law be granted under section 212(d)(3), if it appears that the internal security of the United States would not be jeopardized thereby.

As you know, the Department of State in the case of the Soviet Union in particular wishes to see a two-way exchange of scientists and scientific information and this policy, of course, applies to the medical profession. Soviet medical scientists attended not only the several international medical congresses cited above, but also the Macy Conference on the Central Nervous System at Princeton, N.J., in February 1959, and a conference on Inhibition in the Central Nervous System in Duarte, Calif., in May 1959. Furthermore, one Soviet and several Polish, Czech, and Rumanian specialists have come to the United States as WHO Fellows. No American has applied to go to countries of the Soviet bloc as a WHO fellow.

I believe that the record indicates that the United States has not been remiss in issuing visas to medical scientists from Soviet-bloc countries with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations.

During the last 8 years, 12 symposia on medical or related subjects have been held in the Soviet Union and U.S. scientists attended most of them. Since 1957, 41 medical meetings have been held in the Soviet Union. Two of them were sponsored by international organizations and four American scientists attended these two meetings. In 1961, a biochemical meeting will be held there and in 1962 a cancer meeting is scheduled. It is expected that U.S. scientists will attend both of these meetings. In addition to these meetings, at least 90 American medical men have traveled in the Soviet Union either in groups or singly.

You may be interested to know that the eight medical exchanges provided for in the U.S.-U.S.S.R. exchange agreement will be completed by the end of the year. The current American draft for the extension of the exchange agreement suggests that in furthering the fight against diseases the Soviet medical authorities conclude a comprehensive subagreement with the U.S. Public Health Service to facilitate cooperation in many fields of medical research.

However, any exchange of visits of medical scientists between the United States and Communist China must be evaluated in the light of basic U.S. policy objectives. A fundamental aspect of U.S. policy is a decision not to authorize travel of American citizens to the China mainland, even in cases like this where, if normal conditions existed, worthwhile results might be achieved. Obviously normal conditions do not exist. An important factor is that in the absence of diplomatic relations with Communist China, it is not possible for the Government to provide the normal and customary protection to Americans traveling on the China mainland. In addition, the Chinese Communists have consistently maltreated Americans and continue to hold American citizens in jail as political hostages, despite their pledge of September 10, 1955, to release them expeditiously.

Our policy prohibiting travel to the China mainland is also made necessary by the attempts of the Chinese Communists to use the establishment of cultural relations with the United States as a means of gaining respectability and acceptance in the family of nations. Travel of certain U.S. citizens to mainland China has been zealously promoted by the Communists as a step in this direction. Nevertheless, Peiping in any case would probably not issue visas to these American scientists. The Chinese Communist practice has been to grant entry permits only to those Americans who directly or indirectly serve their political and propaganda interests. While they have admitted only 1 of the designated representatives of 31 accredited American news-gathering organizations, they have welcomed without hesitation many Americans who traveled there in violation of passport restrictions: for example, Anna Louise Strong, Virginius Frank Coe, and the 42 "students."

As for visits to the United States by medical scientists from Communist China, the immigration laws governing the ineligibility of persons applying from the Soviet bloc would also apply. It should be emphasized that the law, embodying the intent of the Congress, requires that whenever the exception of a waiver is made, each individual case must be examined at the time of the visa application in the light of the national interest and the prevailing circumstances. However, no Chinese Communist has applied for an American visa since Peiping sent a deputation to the United Nations in November 1950 in connection with charges of aggression.

In the matter of the exchange of medical information with Communist China, there exists considerable scope within the framework of present Government regulations. With the appropriate licenses American individuals and institutions can import from Hong Kong and other places such as London a wide variety of Chinese Communist medical publications for bona fide research purposes. In particular, the National Library of Medicine (and its predecessor, the Armed Forces Medical Library) has for several years imported a substantial volume of Chinese Communist medical journals, books, and monographs which are available to the public.

I hope this information will be helpful to the International Health Study.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM B. MACOMBER, Jr.,
Assistant Secretary.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1959.

Hon. WILLIAM MACOMBER,
Assistant Secretary of State,
Department of State,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. MACOMBER: With regard to the Department's detailed response of August 18 to my letter of July 20, I would like to make these points:

There are many able health-minded and other officials in the Department of State. In the August 18 letter, they have, understandably tried to make the best presentation out of what is, in my judgment, the Department's past unsatisfactory record on visas for foreign scientists.

Fortunately, that record, has greatly improved recently. But in the record remain a series of incontrovertible mistakes in the form of the previous slamming of the door on certain eminent foreign physicians. This regrettable "closed door" pattern again manifested itself in the case which I cited in the Senate on August 21. This pattern has harmed the cause of medical science. It has undermined the prestige of the United States.

In the letter, the Department basically chooses to ignore obvious facts which are familiar to every serious student of international medical congresses. If the Department blandly asserts "it has no information * * * that international medical congresses have been moved from the United States * * *" it is simply because it chooses to be blind and deaf to widespread information to the contrary which is readily available.

Here is an analysis of the location of major international medical meetings in the 1954-59 period. This analysis which I had asked the subcommittee staff to make shows this: Although the United States possesses the greatest medical profession and research effort in the world, it has been host to but 19 out of 163 international medical congresses within its borders in the past 5 years. Many of these have been comparatively small meetings of modest-size organizations.

In fairness to the Department, let it be noted that wholly aside from U.S. visa policy, many other factors have been responsible for most of the big medical congresses taking place in Europe. But one factor, according to almost all reports which have reached me, has definitely been our past restrictive visa policy. A single embarrassing case, much less a multitude, has irritated countless foreign scientists and has made them wary of applying for a U.S. visa.

With regard to the case of Professor Blochin, I would like now to secure from the Department a brief summary of the record of visa actions concerning him—i.e., exact dates of application and approval and a summary of the principal circumstances involving any delay. I am well aware, of course, that he recently attended the Soviet exposition in New York.

Finally, let me affirm that the Department makes a very sound case that Communist China is basically responsible for its own isolation from the world. Peiping's brutal violations of international law, its own misuse of visitors' entry for purposes of misleading propaganda, its latest outrages in Asia repel all thinking men everywhere.

The result is that not even minimal medical relations exist with Mainland China. That means lack of medical contact with diseases affecting one-fourth of the human race, living on 3.2 million square miles, diseases capable of being transmitted elsewhere—to India, south Asia, across the Pacific and around the world.

We must never forget that for 2 precious months, because of lack of communication, the world was utterly ignorant of the outbreak in mainland China of a new virus causing what came to be known as Asian flu. The lack of warning during those 2 months delayed preparation of our vaccine. The result was that tens of millions of people were perhaps needlessly struck by Asian flu despite Herculean efforts in the vaccines' speedy preparation and innoculation. The next time, a virus or other epidemic originating on the mainland may not be as mild. The result could be infinitely more serious to the world. This judgment has been confirmed to the International Health Subcommittee by executive branch, WHO and other specialists.

Now, in response, perhaps to my own and other suggestions, mainland China medical publications are being imported and translated here, at long last.

In this connection, let me quote from the August 17, 1959, issue of Time in an article on an important new British discovery on trachoma. This disease, together with infectious conjunctivitis, affects 400 million people throughout the world, as stated in our own Senate Report No. 161, 86th Congress. Time reports:

"Surprisingly, it was in the Chinese Medical Journal (which prints a lot of unscientific Communist quackery) that major progress was reported. T'ang Fei'Fan and colleagues in Peiping described scrupulously conducted experiments in which they grew generations of the virus in fertilized eggs, gave it to monkeys, which got something like trachoma."

This is simply an illustration of how medical discoveries can and should leap ideological boundaries. But mere exchange of publications is not enough.

There is no substitute for direct visits inside the mainland by competent American and other foreign medical scientists, any more than there is a substitute for mainland China physicians seeing for themselves the situation of medical science elsewhere in the world.

The Department of State chooses to tie up (a) the medical relations problem with Peiping with (b) the overall political problems of the United States and Red China. Red China is responsible for tying these up, too.

Indeed, it is Red China which carries the overwhelming blame. It alone is guilty of literally subordinating everything to its cruel, military-political policies. We, with a clean record against aggression, have retaliated through our restrictive, passport-visa policy.

But, is there no way out of this stalemate—which results in mainland China remaining almost a medical vacuum, so far as the rest of international science is concerned?

Can the Department suggest no imaginative means by which the medical needs of humanity can somehow be dissociated from political disputes. Cannot the healing arts be divorced from cold war tactics, at least on America's part?

Certainly, the American medical profession takes a broader view in principle than does the State Department. Let me quote from Dr. Gunnar Gundersen, now past president of the American Medical Association. In testifying before Chairman LISTER HILL and the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on February 25, 1959, Mr. Gundersen stated:

"Worldwide progress in medicine can continue in the future only through the free exchange of ideas between medical scientists in all countries.

"Last June at the presidential inaugural ceremony of the American Medical Association, at which time I was inaugurated I titled my address 'Physicians to the World.' If you will permit me, I would like to quote a few of the concluding lines from that address:

" 'In medical science there are no secrets, no Iron Curtains, no cold war. * * * Medicine exists to save life, not destroy it.' "

Dr. Gundersen rightly believes in the principle that medicine should penetrate the Iron and Bamboo Curtains. Does the Department propose to delay indefinitely in seeking to penetrate the latter curtain?

Apparently, the Department chooses to rely on the excuse of Red China's overall obnoxious tactics. The Department might, however, recall these words of the President of the United States. In his message on the state of the Union, January 9, 1958, President Eisenhower asked all peoples to join in the war against disease. His speech included with these passages:

"WORKS OF PEACE

"My last call for action is not primarily addressed to the Congress and people of the United States. Rather, it is a message from the people of the United States to all other peoples especially those of the Soviet Union.

"This is the spirit of what we Americans would like to say:

" 'In the last analysis, there is only one solution to the grim problems that lie ahead. The world must stop the present plunge toward more and more destructive weapons of war, and turn the corner that will start our steps firmly on the path toward lasting peace.

" 'Our greatest hope for success lies in a universal fact: The people of the world, as people, have always wanted peace and want peace now.

" 'The problem, then, is to find a way of translating this universal desire into action.

" 'This will require more than words of peace. It requires works of peace.'

"Now, may I try to give you some concrete examples of the kind of works of peace that might make a beginning in the direction.

"Another kind of work of peace is cooperation on projects of human welfare. For example, we now have it within our power to eradicate from the face of the earth that age-old scourge of mankind—malaria. We are embarking with other nations in an all-out, 5-year campaign to blot out this curse forever. We invite the Soviets to join with us in this great work of humanity.

"Indeed, we would be willing to pool our efforts with the Soviets in other campaigns against the diseases that are the common enemy of all mortals—such as cancer and heart disease.

"If people can get together on such projects, is it not possible that we could then go on to a full-scale cooperative program of science for peace?"

Does or does this not apply to 625 million mainland Chinese?

Of course, the United States cannot afford to ignore the overall past and future policies of the Peiping Government. Peiping has thrown every conceivable roadblock in the way of even minimal exchanges. These roadblocks have been piled still higher through its recent foul actions in Tibet and its violations of India's borders, grave matters which can hardly be ignored.

Let it be known, in no uncertain terms that I continue to oppose recognition of Red China or any action which might be construed as reward for her infamy.

Normal relations with Red China may, therefore, be years or decades away. But, cannot we, in the interim, through perhaps, contacts by the World Health Organization at least try to find some new approach for medical science's own relations with the China mainland? That does not imply that Peiping would be receptive to any suggestions.

On the contrary, Peiping seems absorbed in a policy of reckless troublemaking which deliberately outrages the conscience of the world. But that is no reason for us to abandon the concept of penetrating the Bamboo Curtain. It is, instead, reason for us being especially firm and careful in this, as in other respects, in dealing with Peking.

What I am in effect pleading for is bold U.S. initiative—action, not more talk—in making medical science truly international, truly universal. It seems to me we have much to gain and little to lose from seizing the initiative, by at least making specific offers of medical visits, assuming certain strict conditions are met, instead of sulking and sitting back, as we are now doing.

So, the question remains whether the United States will continue to follow a policy of retaliation as regards passports and visas, and thereby help, in this instance, to preserve Red China as a medical vacuum, so far as the rest of the world is concerned.

With kindest wishes, I am,

Sincerely,

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY.

EXCERPTS OF TRANSCRIPT OF HEARING ON JULY 16, 1959, BEFORE SUBCOMMITTEE OF SENATE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS INTERNATIONAL HEALTH STUDY—TESTIMONY OF DR. JAMES SHANNON

* * * * *

4. I must repeat what has been frequently said, that a basic condition of progress in science is free and unrestricted interchange amongst scientists and in their communication. Fortunately in the medical sciences we have been singularly free of overriding security issues which have imposed their troublesome restraints in other scientific areas. Nevertheless, we are now faced with the desirability of enlarging our scientific relationships with Iron Curtain countries and we are at the present moment denied any insight into the state of research in the health sciences in the other nonrecognized regimes. In fact, we face the prospect, if these problems are not solved, of the loss of the present U.S. position as the primary center of world progress in the medical sciences. I realize there are grave foreign policy issues involved here which cannot be treated lightly. Nevertheless, we are approaching the situation where the only neutral ground upon which a complete cross section of the world's scientists can meet to discuss their scientific endeavors is Moscow. This, to me, is close to the ultimate in absurdity.

A resolution of many of these policy problems will be difficult and troublesome because, as I have indicated, international scientific activity will inevitably expand and scientific interchange, collaboration in research, will become more extensive and more complex.

As I have mentioned, the United States and its governmental and nongovernmental scientific programs in the health sciences will occupy an important role in this development.

Generally speaking we have arrived, that is, we in the United States have arrived at a position in respect to world science where we have acquired a grave responsibility as a result of our achievements and our scientific capability. This responsibility is, as I have mentioned, to utilize our skills and resources in advancing the progress of science and the cause of human health both in our own interests and the interests of all people.

* * * * *

Senator GRUENING. I have listened to Dr. Shannon's very excellent presentation, and I have just one question.

On page 14 you say "we are approaching the situation where the only neutral ground upon which a complete cross section of the world's scientists can meet and discuss their scientific endeavors is Moscow." You say this would be the "ultimate in absurdity."

Why is that the only place where a complete cross section of the world scientists can meet?

Dr. SHANNON. It is primarily over the problem of visa trouble. There is a developing science in Red China at the present time. We would like to know what that is. A Red Chinese scientist can't obtain a visa to attend a scientific meeting in the United States, at least not very simply. We in turn can't obtain visas to roam around the laboratories in Red China to find out what is going on there.

To a lesser extent, this involves the Iron Curtain countries. True, the Russians can come, but there are restrictions upon their entering this country and what they can do after they arrive. This, as I say, obtains in the Iron Curtain countries.

They come under a feeling of not being wanted, of not belonging, if you will, to a scientific community that has developed in response to the immediate environment, because of the restrictions imposed upon them.

Quite contrary to that, as a world center, Moscow will accept any scientist from any part of the world with relatively little, if any, restrictions on his attendance, or entrance.

In other words, as long as there exist restrictions of this sort, all of Western science is available to the Russians. Very little of Eastern science is available in the United States. It amounts to that, sir.

The only place—I shouldn't say that, because many of the countries will allow the Red Chinese, the Russians or the Iron Curtain countries to convene. But I am talking now about the developing centers of gravity in world science, one around the Russian sphere, one around the U.S. sphere; one permitting free congregation of scientists, the other not.

Senator GRUENING. Wouldn't the Chinese scientists be able to come to London?

Dr. SHANNON. Yes, but London is not developing as one of the centers of gravity in this sphere of science.

Senator GRUENING. That is a very depressing presentation, I would say, if our policies prevent the spread and interchange of scientific knowledge. I think that is something we ought to think very seriously about and see if we can't get a change of policy in this field.

Senator HUMPHREY. Senator GRUENING, when Mr. Cahn and I were at the World Health Organization, we heard a story there about the Asian flu epidemic. It was really very revealing as to how policy decisions in the field of foreign policy affect medical and other scientific knowledge.

We alluded to that in the report on the World Health Organization trip. That committee print has been published as a result of our notes and discussions. I think, as I recall it, that there was a lag of several weeks of knowledge in the world outside of Red China as to the development of the flu epidemic on the mainland. That lag prevented us from developing the vaccine as soon as we could have. Thereby, of course, the lag in time made possible much more illness, death, and, of course, considerable economic loss.

I recall that the way the epidemic was finally discovered was through reports via commerce. And there was a doctor, if memory serves me correctly, who had been educated in an American medical school, and who had friends outside the Communist bloc, one of those friends being in the World Health Organization, who sent information from Red China, to the outside, about the flu epidemic taking place in Red China. That epidemic was already spreading all over the world. But nobody knew from whence it emanated, where its central point was. Only by the good fortune of friendship did they overcome the road blocks of diplomatic policy. And we were able to track it down and to get at it and to develop a strain of vaccine that would do something about it.

You may recall we discussed this.

Dr. SHANNON. This was generally the way we were able to get strains and have specific knowledge of the disease, its characteristics, and its potential hazard, when it spilled out of Red China to Hong Kong and then into Manila. Those were our primary contacts with the disease.

If you take the geographical masses on half a sphere and paint over in red the so-called Red countries, you will realize that we have a tremendous area. Geopoliticians call this the central land mass. This is as important for an understanding of the genesis and spread of disease as it is for the genesis and spread of political philosophies and their impressions on other countries.

We are in relative ignorance of the happenings in this total area at the present time. This, I think, is bad.

Senator GRUENING. Nevertheless, the Asian flu came to our shores without passports or visas.

Dr. SHANNON. As a matter of fact, sir, we helped, because it came back with some of our own forces, too.

Senator GRUENING. I have no further questions.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask at that point, Dr. Shannon: You speak about our ignorance of the genesis and spread of disease in this great land mass. Are you referring only to Red China, or also to Russia?

Dr. SHANNON. I am referring to Russia, too, and I can give you an example.

Senator MUSKIE. Recognition, then, is not the whole answer?

Dr. SHANNON. No; it is not only recognition of disease, but knowledge of what is being done with disease.

Let me give you a devastating example of this. The most serious epidemic disease in the early years of Korea was a disease, hemorrhagic fever, which was a completely new disease. Our physicians knew nothing about it. They had never seen it. Yet this was the one serious epidemic disease that carried a mortality rate of 20 to 30 percent.

In the early days, it was killing more people than were being killed by the Reds. The Army did a superb job in getting investigative teams into the field, pulling out civilians and developing combined units, and brought the mortality rate down rather quickly to 3 or 5 percent—I can furnish the figure for the record—and developed a concept on how the disease was transmitted. It was obviously some sort of insect-borne host. After much toil and trouble, I think they had the disease very well under control by the time the Korean conflict ended.

It turned up after the war with the first Russian visitor we had a professor from Moscow and some of his colleagues, that they had been studying and had definite information back as far as 1942 and 1943—1941 to 1943. They had recognized the disease in the late 1930's. The Russians don't publish vital statistics on disease. They don't give the mortality rate, they don't know what goes on.

Had we the knowledge of this disease as an important infectious disease, had we knowledge of its mode of transmission, we could have protected for that area. We could have looked for it and known it was there before we went in there and we would not have had the attack rate we had, nor would we have had the great mortality rate.

So when we say that you can't cut off a large segment of the world from the standpoint of medical knowledge and produce the type of protection that is essential to us as citizens within this country and to our nationals when they go outside, whether civilians or armed forces, this is not an expression of opinion, this is a fact.

Senator MUSKIE. When I listened to your prepared statement on this point, immediately the suggestion came to mind that perhaps political recognition is the answer to this problem, and that is what I was referring to earlier, and it is not.

Dr. SHANNON. I don't think that is it. I think that our greatest hope is through very strong support of the World Health Organization as a neutral body wholly outside the political sphere, which brings into its orbit some of the countries that have opposing political views. They can work faster in this area than can we as an individual government in a bilateral way. I think for this reason, if no other, we should support the activities of the World Health Organization to the hilt.

I think that when it comes to communications, exchange of scientists, the ability of scientists to move and exchange ideas, then I think this is something we have to do bilaterally. We can't get outside help for that, although even here the World Health Organization would be helpful.

Now, in the several conferences I have had in Geneva, called to discuss serious disease on a worldwide basis, the Russians have attended. They are as free and open in their discussions around the conference table as are our own scientists in this country. This constitutes a new ground for the purpose of discussion that has no substitute. That is why I say we have a strong responsibility to support this organization to the hilt, not only in its service programs but as it goes forward into a broadening research program.

Again I would say there are certain things we can do at home, too.

Senator MUSKIE. Are the Soviets inclined to cooperate in the program of the World Health Organization?

Dr. SHANNON. I think they are. They have given every indication that they are. In the executive committee last February, I believe, when the concept of broadening the World Health Organization program on research was first discussed, the strongest proponent was the Soviet—when I say "strongest," as strong as any proponent was the Soviet member. I think they, as we, can't move as rapidly, perhaps, as they would like. The Soviet representative at the World Health Assembly that discussed this did not have instructions, nor did many countries have instructions for their delegates, because the proposed program of research reached the countries too late, just before the people took off, so that the delegate came wholly uninstructed.

But I think on the basis of the comments of the Soviet representative at the executive committee, World Health Conference, we have every reason to believe that they are fully behind it.

Senator MUSKIE. To the extent that they will allow free entry to field research teams?

Dr. SHANNON. This remains to be seen. I think this will have to be on an individual case basis. I hope that within a year we will be able to come back and tell you, and say "yes."

Senator MUSKIE. You haven't had occasion to face that question yet?

Dr. SHANNON. No, sir; we have not.

Senator HUMPHREY. It is true, however, that there has been active participation by Iron Curtain countries in these conferences; has there not?

Dr. SHANNON. There has.

DAV SERVES KANSANS

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, another distinction has recently been conferred upon my home State of Kansas by the election of a longtime personal friend of mine, Bill H. Fribley, to the eminent position of national commander of the DAV—Disabled American Veterans—the only congressionally chartered association composed exclusively of America's disabled defenders dedicated to the program of extending much needed rehabilitation services to, by, and for our country's veterans and for their survivors and dependents.

Bill Fribley has been a member of the Kansas Legislature during the last 11 years, and is its able speaker pro tempore. He has long been active in the American Legion. As an overseas veteran of World War II, he is also a member of the VFW. Severely wounded by shell fragments, which resulted in the complete removal of his left arm and shoulder, he spent 25 months in U.S. Army hospitals in Europe and in this country.

Bill Fribley—his first name is actually Bill, not William—is the third Kansan to have become the national commander of a congressionally chartered veterans' organization. He was preceded by our good mutual friend, Harry Colmery, who, in 1936, was elected as national commander of the American Legion, and by Wayne Richards, who, in 1953, was elected as commander in chief of the VFW. They were all "doers."

Before being elected national commander of the DAV, at its national convention in Miami Beach, Fla., August 17–21, 1959, Bill Fribley had served during the previous year as its national senior vice commander, and before that as a DAV national committeeman, first having gained much experience in various capacities in his own Sunflower chapter as Kansas DAV department legislative chairman and department commander.

Bill Fribley's leadership of the DAV nationally, will, I feel confident, be accompanied by continued DAV growth in membership and in constructive legislative and rehabilitation activities, with particular emphasis upon suitable useful employment of all disabled veterans—as well as of other employable handicapped Americans—utilizing their remaining abilities toward their own self-sustainment to convert them into assets in their own communities, and as willing taxpayers for the continued development of our country.

First things first, for America's war wounded and disabled veterans, and for their dependents and survivors, will be advocated throughout America, by Bill Fribley as national commander of the DAV.

Commander Fribley has revealed some very interesting facts to me about an exceptional record of vital rehabilitation services freely extended to thousands of Kansas citizens, which have not been sufficiently appreciated by those who have benefited thereby, directly, and indirectly.

DAV SETUP

Formed in 1920, under the leadership of Judge Robert S. Marx, DAV legislative activities have since then benefited every compensated disabled veteran. Presently, the DAV national adjutant is John E. Feighner in Cincinnati, Ohio; the national legislative director is Elmer M. Freudenberger; the national director of claims is Cicero F. Hogan; and the national director of employment relations is John W. Burris, all of whom are located at the DAV National Service Headquarters, 1701 18th Street NW., Washington, D.C.

Inasmuch as less than 10 percent of our country's war veterans are receiving monthly disability compensation payments for service-connected disabilities—some 2 million—the DAV can never aspire to become the largest of the several veterans' organizations. Nevertheless, since shortly after its formation in 1920, the DAV National Headquarters, located at 5555 Ridge Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio, has maintained a full-time, trained, national service officers staff to assist veterans with their problems. They are located in the 63 regional and 3 district offices of the U.S. Veterans' Administration, and in its central office in Washington, D.C.

They have ready access to the official claim records of those claimants who have given them their powers of attorney. All of them being war-handicapped veterans themselves, these service officers are sympathetic and alert to the problems of other less informed claimants.

DAV SERVICES IN KANSAS

The DAV national service officer in Kansas is Mr. Floyd R. Mauk, located at the VA Center, 5500 East Kellogg, Wichita. The department commander is Mr. Oscar S. McMinn, of Independence, and the department adjutant is Mr. George P. Bartley, of Topeka.

There are three Veterans' Administration hospitals maintained in Kansas in which the DAV has nationally authorized representatives on the voluntary service advisory committee: Mr. Robert H. Dawson, 1901 South Elizabeth, Wichita, Kans., at the 252-bed GM hospital in Wichita, and Mr. John L. Strand, 305 West 13th Street, Topeka, Kans., at the 1,250-bed NP hospital at Topeka. There is also a 791-bed GM hospital at Wadsworth.

During the last fiscal year, the VA paid out $73,084,000 for its veteran program in Kansas, including $16,629,211 in disability compensation—about 20 percent of all VA expenditures—to its 15,741 service-disabled veterans, thereby furnishing substantial purchasing power in all Kansas communities.

DAV SERVICE ACCOMPLISHMENTS IN KANSAS

An outstanding record of personalized service activities and accomplishments of the DAV national service officer, in behalf of Kansas veterans and dependents during the last 10 fiscal years, is revealed by the following statistics:

Claimants contacted	20,290
Claim folders reviewed	16,908
Appearances before rating boards	5,020
Compensation increases obtained	1,040
Service connections obtained	445
Nonservice pensions	332
Death benefits obtained	245
Total monetary benefits obtained	$596,473.59

Bill Fribley points out that these figures do not include the accomplishments of other DAV national service officers on duty in the central office of the Veterans' Administration, handling appeals and reviews, and in its three district offices, handling death and insurance cases.

During the last 10 years, they reported 83,611 claims handled in such district offices, resulting in monetary benefits of $20,850,335.32; and in central office, they handled 58,282 reviews and appeals, resulting in monetary benefits of $5,337,389.05. Proportionate additional benefits were thereby obtained for Kansas veterans, their dependents, and their survivors.

SERVICE BEYOND STATISTICS

These figures fail properly to paint the picture of the extent and value of the individualized advice, counsel, and assistance extended to all of the claimants who have contacted DAV service officers in person, by telephone, and by letter.

Pertinent advice was furnished by them to all disabled veterans—only about 10 percent of whom are DAV members—their dependents, their survivors and others, in response to varied claims for service connection, disability, compensation, medical treatment, hospitalization, prosthetic appliances, vocational training, insurance, death compensation or pension, VA guaranty loans for homes, farms and businesses, and so forth. Helpful advice was also given as to counseling and placement into suitable useful employment, to utilize their remaining abilities, civil service examinations, appointments, retentions, retirement benefits, and multifarious other problems.

Every claim presents a different problem. Too few Americans fully realize that governmental benefits are not automatically awarded to disabled veterans—not given on a silver platter. Frequently, because of lack of official records, death or disappearance of former buddies and associates, lapse of memory with the passage of time, lack of information and experience, proof of the legal service connection of a disability becomes extremely difficult—too many times impossible.

A VA Claims and Rating Board can obviously not grant favorable action merely based on the opinions, impressions, or conclusions of persons who submit notarized affidavits. Specific, detailed, pertinent facts are essential.

Acting as judge and jury, the VA cannot also prosecute claims against itself. As the defendant, in effect, the U.S. Veterans' Administration must award benefits, provided for under the laws administered by it, only under certain conditions.

Every expert national service officer can and does advise a claimant precisely why his claim may previously have been denied and then specifies what additional, factual evidence is essential. The claimant must necessarily bear the burden of obtaining such fact-giving affidavit evidence.

The experienced national service officer will, of course, advise him as to its possible improvement, before presenting same to the adjudication agency, in the light of all of the circumstances and facts, and of the pertinent laws, precedents, regulations, and schedule of disability ratings.

No national service officer of any veterans' organization, I feel certain, ever uses his skill, except in behalf of worthy claimants with justifiable claims.

More claims have been denied than have been allowed—because most claims are not properly prepared. As pointed out by the DAV assistant national director of claims, Chester A. Cash, a much higher percentage of those claims which have been prepared and presented with the aid of a DAV national service officer are eventually favorably acted upon, than is the case of those claimants who have not given their powers of attorney to any such special advocate.

RESULT IN LOSSES

Another fact not generally known is that, under the overall review of claims inaugurated by the VA some 4 years ago, the disability compensation payments of about 37,200 veterans have been discontinued, and reduced as to about 27,300 others at an aggregate loss to them of more than $28 million per year.

Most of these unfortunate claimants were not represented by the Disabled American Veterans or by any other veterans' organization. Judging by the past, such unfavorable adjudications will occur as to an additional equal number or more during the next 3 years, before such review is completed. Every disabled veteran in Kansas is urged, therefore, to give his power of attorney to the national service officer of the DAV—or of some other veterans' organization, or of the American Red Cross—just as a protective measure.

COSTS OF EXTENDING SERVICE

The average claimant who receives helpful advice probably does not realize the background of training and experience of a competent expert national service officer.

Measured by the DAV's overall costs of about $12,197,600 during a 10-year period, one would find that it has expended about $3.50 for each claim folder reviewed, or about $8.80 for each rating board appearance, or, again, about $22.70 for each favorable award obtained, or about $123 for each service connection obtained, or about $54 for each compensation increase obtained, and has obtained about $14.10 of direct monetary benefits for claimants for each dollar expended by the DAV for its national service officer setup. Moreover, such benefits will generally continue for many years.

METHODS OF PROVIDING SERVICE

Evidently, most claimants are not aware of the fact that the DAV receives no Government subsidy whatsoever. The DAV is enabled to maintain its nationwide staff of expert national service officers primarily because of income from membership dues collected by its local chapters and from the net income on its Idento-Tag—miniature automobile license tags—project, owned by the DAV and operated by its employees, most of whom are disabled veterans, their wives, or their widows, or other handicapped Americans—a rehabilitation project in thus furnishing them with useful, gainful employment.

Incidentally, without checking as to whether they had previously sent in a donation, more than 1,400,000 owners of sets of lost keys have received them back from the DAV's Idento-Tag department, 4,256 of whom during the last 8 years were Kansas residents.

Every American can help to make our Government more representative by being a supporting member of at least one organization which reflects his interests and viewpoints—labor unions, trade associations, and various religious, fraternal, and civic associations. All of America's veterans ought to be members of one or more of the patriotic, service-giving veteran organizations—the United Spanish War Veterans, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the AMVETS, the Military Order of the Purple Heart, and the Disabled American Veterans. All of America's disabled defenders, who are receiving disability compensation, have greatly benefited by their own official voice—the DAV. If eligible, I would certainly be proud to be a life member of the service-giving Disabled American Veterans—the DAV.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal for September 5, 7, and 8, be approved without reading.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, what was the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I asked unanimous consent that the Journals of the previous days be approved without reading.

Mr. MORSE. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator objects?

Mr. MORSE. I object.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT ENTITLED "RIO GRANDE INTERNATIONAL STORAGE DAMS PROJECT—REPORT ON PROPOSED DIABLO DAM AND RESERVOIR"

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution for the printing as a Senate document of 1,500 additional copies of the report entitled "Rio Grande International Storage Dams Project—Report on Proposed Diablo Dam and Reservoir."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 189) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report entitled "Rio Grande International Storage Dams Project—Report on Proposed Diablo Dam and Reservoir", prepared by the United States section of the International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, dated September 1958, be printed with illustrations as a Senate document.

SEC. 2. There shall be printed one thousand five hundred additional copies of such Senate document for use of the Members of the Senate.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS ACT OF 1959

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, the growth of our Federal Government into giant size in these recent years has resulted in a curious mixture of benefits and detriments.

There are those who constantly and persistently work for enlarged scope of Federal activities, and even larger appropriations and jurisdiction for existing activities. They do so on the belief that governmental activities are better executed on a national rather than on a State or local basis. There are those who adhere to the time-tested principle that the Federal Government should be resorted to only in such cases where it is demonstrated that any given problem cannot be properly administered on a State or local level. These folk believe that the harms of increased size and activity of the national Government outbalance those things which might be considered good therein.

Whatever the merits of this basic conflict may be, there is one aspect in which we find great harm flowing from the ever-increasing activities of the Federal Government. This is in those instances where the National Government acquires a great deal of property in any given location. The immediate result of such action is to remove that property from the local tax rolls. Often this means a great burden and hardship upon all of the local taxing authorities, such as: cities, school districts, county government, special assessment districts of local nature, and the like.

For years, the fact of such burden and hardship has been recognized. Its impact is painful and the reaction of those who are hurt is vocal and direct. In recent years, such property acquisitions are greater and greater, so that the consciousness of the bad result has increased considerably.

Many organizations and individuals have protested and proposed remedies, the National Association of County Officials being one of the most persistent, and one of the most competent champions of seeking proper corrective measures.

Lack of progress is attributed somewhat to the difficulty of arriving at a formula which will be practical, and which will be within reasonable limitations insofar as avoiding undue restriction on Federal Government activities and functions. For example, it should be clear that any property acquired for purposes which have been historically considered normal governmental activities should not be included in any bill providing for payment in sums in lieu of taxes. Thus, any land acquired for post offices, penitentiaries, hospitals, Government offices, and so on are generally regarded as exempt from efforts to pass laws in this field.

On the other hand, real estate of industrial or commercial character falls in a different class. Usually it is found to be used in connection with some national defense or armament activity, but not always. But even if it were possible to classify such property in a practical way, the fixing of a date after which such real estate would be acquired and subjected to payments in lieu arises as a difficult problem.

Earlier this session, the Senator from Nebraska entered his name as a cosponsor of S. 910, the so-called Payments to Local Governments Act of 1959. Admittedly it is a bill of experimental nature and with very limited purview.

In brief, the authorization will provide for three categories under which payments may be made in lieu of taxes. The first relates to special assessments under certain specified conditions; the second relates to real property in the custody or control of taxable persons pursuant to a lease, contract, or permit executed by a Federal agency, if such property were owned by a taxable person; and the third relates to real property first acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950, and which is devoted to or held for predominantly commercial or industrial use. Applications are filed with a bipartisan Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments, which Board will pass upon the merits of the claim and will determine the amount to be paid.

In addition to that, the Board would be required to conduct a comprehensive study of the problems arising out of Federal immunity from local real and personal property taxes. Within 2 years it would be required to submit recommendations for the future treatment of the Government's real and personal properties in respect to local tax laws.

The bill is moderate in its reaches. While it is experimental, it is headed in the right direction toward a mature and sound program for payments in lieu of taxes.

Mr. President, the bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Government Operations to which it has been referred.

The U.S. Treasury Department responded to the request of the chairman of that committee, the Honorable JOHN L. MCCLELLAN, for that Department's views on the bill.

In its letter reply, the Department points out that only last year there were four separate decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court bearing upon the requirement of the Government's contractors and leaseholders to pay local taxes on the possession or use of Federal real or personal property in their custody. In at least some of these situations, it is stated that the economic burden of the local taxes is on the Federal Government.

These decisions have changed the constitutional and fiscal relationships existing between the Federal Government and the States. Congressional legislation may be required for the purpose of defining the status of the Government's properties under State and local tax laws. It is reported that this field is currently under study by the Federal agencies concerned. Until that study is completed, it will not be clear what additional laws will be required.

In his letter of reply, David A. Lindsay, then Assistant to the Secretary of Treasury states, in this regard:

> Nonetheless, since the bill, S. 910, embodies principles the Department regards sound for a temporary program of payments in lieu of taxes on real properties in the possession of the Government, and would provide machinery for the ultimate development of permanent legislation in an area of vital interest to local governments, the Department does not counsel that its enactment be further delayed. It therefore supports enactment of S. 910, reserving the right to recommend such additional legislation as is deemed necessary with respect to the tax status of the Government's properties in the hands of contractors and leasees.

Mr. President, this favorable report from the Department of Treasury is good news. Mr. B. F. Hillenbrand, executive director of the National Association of County Officials, hails it as a major breakthrough.

It is a milestone and a vast step forward toward an equitable and practical solution of a vexatious and difficult problem.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is aware that the workload of the Senate is heavy and that individual Members are greatly burdened with many tasks, particularly in the closing days of a congressional session.

Nevertheless, it is my earnest hope that the Senate will be afforded an early opportunity to consider the bill, S. 910, which has been favorably reported by the Government Operations Committee.

The enactment of a law along these lines is long overdue. In large measure the faith in local Government's ability to retain its virility and strength will be demonstrated by the promptness with which we as a Congress will respond to the need for action.

CENTENNIAL OBSERVANCE OF ATTACK BY JOHN BROWN AND HIS RAIDERS ON HARPERS FERRY, W. VA.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, in a few weeks, the eyes of history-conscious Americans are going to be turned toward my State, as a city in the eastern panhandle marks the 100th anniversary of an event that shook our Nation in the turbulent days prior to the Civil War.

I am speaking of the famous attack on Harpers Ferry by John Brown and his raiders, which occurred on the 16th of October in the year 1859.

In commemoration of this occasion, the people of Harpers Ferry and Jefferson County, W. Va., have set aside 4 days of next month—the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th—as a period for a centennial observance. Under the sponsorship of an organization known as the Harpers Ferry Area Foundation, an elaborate 4-day program has been arranged to emphasize the historical significance of this period. An impressive historical drama has been written for the observance, and many other activities have been planned to commemorate the raid which often has been credited with "lighting the fuse" of the War Between the States.

I take this opportunity, Mr. President, to offer an invitation to all Washingtonians and other interested Americans to visit nearby Harpers Ferry during the 4-day observance. I think it will be a very rewarding experience, one which will demonstrate the colorful historical heritage of this area of our Nation.

Mr. President, I desire to recall a bit of the drama of that flamboyant occurrence which is to be commemorated. Much has been written, over the years, of the story of the fiery-eyed abolitionist, John Brown, and of his wild career of slave freeing, which was brought to an end at Harpers Ferry. Thousands have called him a redeemer and a prophet of God; thousands have called him a madman. I am not capable of judging him, but I know that this much is certain: His attack on Harpers Ferry, W. Va., was a highly significant event that served to crystallize much of the intense feeling that existed in our country at that time.

A brief summary of the occurrence is contained in these sentences from an advertisement by the Baltimore & Ohio Railway:

> Harpers Ferry, W. Va., the town at the junction of the Potomac and Shenandoah Rivers, and where three States—Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia—meet. It was a key railroad and canal center; and in 1859 it possessed a U.S. arsenal and rifle factory. This town presented an ideal setting for the dramatic and historical happenings of John Brown's stormy career as a rabid abolitionist. John Brown's raid occurred on the night of October 16, 1859, and, in the skirmish at Harpers Ferry, the B. & O. right-of-way was the scene of the first fighting, and two railroad employees were the first casualties. To quell the uprising, a detachment of 90 marines, under Col. Robert E. Lee, was sent to the scene. The abolitionist leader and his followers were captured after a pitched battle, and John Brown was tried and executed in nearby Charles Town, W. Va., on December 2, 1859. While the insurrection was a failure and was promptly suppressed, it was, no doubt, one of the chief factors that hastened the outbreak of the Civil War.

Mr. President, that is a brief, factual account of the John Brown raid. But a more elaborate telling of the story is necessary to fully convey the intense drama which unfolded as the event took place.

I am sure that the Senate is familiar, by now, with my penchant for prose and poetry. So I ask indulgence as I recite a few random lines from one of the greatest Civil War poems, "John Brown's Body," by Stephen Vincent Benét. In the 33d page of the epic, it begins—

They reached the Maryland bridge of Harpers Ferry
That Sunday night. There were twenty-two in all,
Nineteen were under thirty, three not twenty-one. * * *
These were some of the band. For better or worse
They were all strong men. * * *
They tied up the watchmen and took the rifle-works.
Then John Brown sent a raiding party away
To fetch in Colonel Washington from his farm.
The Colonel was George Washington's great-grand-nephew,
Slave-owner, gentleman-farmer, but, more than these,
Possessor of a certain fabulous sword
Given to Washington by Frederick the Great.
They captured him and his sword and brought them along Processionally.
The act has a touch of drama,
Half costume-romance, half unmerited farce.
On the way, they told the Washington slaves they were free,
Or free to fight for their freedom.
The slaves heard the news
With the dazed, scared eyes of cattle before a storm.
A few came back with the band and were given pikes,
And, when John Brown was watching, pretended to mount
A slipshod guard over the prisoners.
But, when he had walked away, they put down their pikes
And huddled together, talking in mourning voices.
It didn't seem right to play at guarding the Colonel
But they were afraid of the bearded patriarch
With the Old Testament eyes. * * *
Meanwhile, there was casual firing.

A townsman named Boerley was killed, Meanwhile, the train
Passed over the bridge to carry its wild news
Of abolition-devils sprung from the ground
A hundred and fifty, three hundred, a thousand strong
To pillage Harpers Ferry, with fire and sword.
Meanwhile the whole countryside was springing to arms.
The alarm-bell in Charles Town clanged "Nat Turner has come!
Nat Turner has come again, all smoky from Hell,
Setting the slave to murder and massacre!"
The Jefferson Guards fell in. There were boys and men.
They had no uniforms but they had weapons.
Old squirrel-rifles, taken down from the wall,
Shotguns loaded with spikes and scraps of iron.
A boy dragged a blunderbuss as big as himself.
They started for the Ferry. * * *
Of course they were cut off. The whole attempt
Was fated from the first.
Just about noon
The Jefferson Guards took the Potomac Bridge
And drove away the men Brown posted there.
There were three doors of possible escape
Open to Brown. With this, the first slammed shut.
The second followed it a little later
With the recapture of the other bridge
That cut Brown off from Kagi and the arsenal
And penned the larger body of the raiders
In the armory. * * *
When the drunken day
Reeled into night, there were left in the engine-house
Five men, alive and unwounded, of all the raiders. * * *
There was no light, there. It was bitterly cold.
A cold chain of lightless hours that slowly fell
In leaden beads between two fingers of stone.
Outside, the fools and the drunkards yelled in the streets,
And, now and then, there were shots. The prisoners talked
And tried to sleep. * * *
Outside the blackened East
Began to tarnish with a faint, grey stain
That caught on the fixed bayonets of the Marines.
Lee of Virginia, Light Horse Harry's son,
Observed it broaden, thinking of many things,
But chiefly wanting to get his business done,
A curious, wry, distasteful piece of work
For regular soldiers. * * *
Brown watched them come. One hand was on his carbine.
The other felt the pulse of his dying son.
"Sell your lives dear," he said. The rifle-shots
Rattled within the bricked-in engine-room
Like firecrackers set off in a stone jug,
And there was a harsh stink of sweat and powder.
There was a moment when the door held firm.
Then it was cracked with sun.
Brown fired and missed.
A shadow with a sword leaped through the sun.
"That's Ossawattomie," said the tired voice
Of Colonel Washington.
The shadow lunged
And Brown fell to his knees.
The sword bent double,
A light sword, better for parades than fighting,
The shadow had to take it in both hands
And fairly rain his blows with it on Brown
Before he sank.
Now two Marines were down,
The rest rushed in over their comrades' bodies,
Pinning one man of Brown's against the wall
With bayonets, another to the floor.
Lee, on his rise of ground, shut up his watch.
It had been just a quarter of an hour
Since Stuart gave the signal for the storm,
And now it was over.
All but the long dying.

Mr. President, that terrible drama, which took place at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., a century ago, has long since assumed its place in the colorful historical heritage of America. That day is gone forever—October 16, 1859. The fierce passions that burned like lumps of coal in the breasts of men; the fiery words that galvanized those passions into bold and reckless action; the clash of steel on steel, the terrifying din of battle, and the awful, tomblike silence which followed, as the day the night—all these are gone. John Brown's men and the men of Lee—vanquished and victor—all have gone.

The dead are silent. Passionless and still
They lie in dreamless slumber, robed in peace.
They will not stir though raging armies fill
The air with frightful clamor. The sweet release
Of death has soothed their anguish. They have found Within that timeless land the secrets men
Have sought since time begun. They are not bound
By fetters forged or race or creed * * * and when
The frantic living join the quiet dead
We, too, shall learn that in that gentle dust
All flesh is kin; within that narrow bed
There is no room for hate or fear or lust * * *
The living plague the gods with selfish cries;
The dead are silent—the dead are wise!

Mr. President, this is a part of our glorious heritage. And I believe that it is right that we should preserve this heritage and reflect upon it through observances such as that which is to take place in Harpers Ferry next month.

I repeat the invitation for all who wish to visit during this event. It is my understanding that special railway excursions are to be provided from several cities, during the 4 days of the centennial.

I wish to conclude my statement, Mr. President, by asking that three pertinent items be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as part of my remarks. The first is another portion of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway advertisement I mentioned previously, which tells of Harpers Ferry becoming a national monument. The second is a portion of a letter from the Honorable Cecil H. Underwood, Governor of West Virginia, to the people of Harpers Ferry. And the third is an account from a special centennial brochure which tells of the development of the Harpers Ferry National Monument. I ask unanimous consent that they be reprinted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Excerpt from advertisement]

Of the many places that were in a constant state of seige during the Civil War, Harpers Ferry suffered most heavily. The record of the Civil War disaster, from 1861 to 1865, was responsible for Harpers Ferry and the surrounding area becoming a historical landmark. * * * The thrilling history, of which it has been the scene, and the beauty of the surrounding Shenandoah Valley area add to the enjoyment and interest of the visitor today. It is located on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, 55 miles west of Washington, D.C. * * * The U.S. National Park Service established Harpers Ferry as a national monument in May 1955 and many historic landmarks are now in process of restoration.

[Excerpt from Governor's letter]

Just prior to the great civil conflict a century ago, the eyes of the world focused on Harpers Ferry. The legend of John Brown has lived with us for 100 years, and will linger into the years ahead. It is indeed fitting that an observance should be staged to recognize the centennial of such a historic event.

Even before the days of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, this region had been known for its scenic beauty and dignified culture. It enjoys this same reputation today, and I am sure your city will continue to be an important gateway to West Virginia.

History has left its imprint here too. Located in this vicinity are many of the historical points which draw thousands of visitors to our State each year. This vital area has helped to make tourism one of West Virginia's industries.

[Excerpt from centennial brochure]

HARPERS FERRY NATIONAL MONUMENT

The interest of the Nation centered for a few days on Harpers Ferry, W. Va., in 1859. This year, a hundred years later, there is again special national interest in this historic site.

Authorized by act of Congress in 1944 a unit of the National Park Service of the Department of the Interior is being developed here in part to reflect the national interest in and national significance of the historic 1859 event. John Brown by his bold, but abortive stroke against slavery widened the breach which had been developing for a number of years between the North and South.

The mission 66 program of the National Park Service is designed to meet the anticipated needs of the visitors to all the areas of the Park Service in 1966. As part of this program at Harpers Ferry National Monument two major objectives have been reached. Primary source materials relating to the life and activities of John Brown which had been collected will be of increasing value to an understanding and interpretation of that man. Also, a temporary branch museum has been activated to tell objectively the story of John Brown.

The facts concerning this controversial figure have been so clouded by biased accounts in the hundred years since his death that it was considered necessary to collect pertinent primary data. This information incorporated in the interpretive program of the monument provides a sound basis of historical accuracy in retelling the John Brown story.

Although there are numerous places where parts of it are told, it was felt that Harpers Ferry National Monument was a logical location in which to recount the broader story of Brown's whole life with special emphasis on the climatic chapters at Harpers Ferry and Charles Town. This is the basis for and nature of the John Brown Story Branch Museum at Harpers Ferry National Monument. Here you will find information on his early life, business activities, travels, and planning; the raid and subsequent trial and execution.

The John Brown raid is only one aspect of the planning and development of Harpers Ferry National Monument. The early history of the town, arms manufacturing, growth as a transportation center, and the Civil War are interesting segments of the town's history. A special research team has collected a vast quantity of primary source material on the physical history of the town. Based on the results of this work the pre-Civil War buildings will be authentically restored to their 1859–65 appearance. Although authorized primarily as a historical monument, there are scenic and natural history values that are not being overlooked.

The development of Harpers Ferry National Monument is based on a well-balanced approach to full visitor enjoyment. The research files are available to scholars, students of history, and casual visitors alike; the monument is available to any who may be interested in human or natural history. The monument as a national possession is available now and in the future will be more adequately prepared to provide for the needs and desires of all who wish to take time to enjoy an American heritage.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I gladly yield to my colleague and friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from West Virginia on the statement he has made as a member of the Civil War Bicentennial Commission.

I was very much pleased to note that—with his usual tact—at various times in his remarks he referred to the Civil War, and at other times to the War Between the States.

Not a word that he read from Stephen Vincent Benét is unfamiliar to me. In fact, in my perhaps uninformed approach to American literature, I believe that book comes more nearly to being the great American novel than any other book yet written. I have read it again and again, and I have listened over and over to the recordings of its words.

I believe—and I am sure the distinguished Senator from West Virginia will agree with me—that every day there is heard in this land and in this Senate Chamber the long, quavering, mournful sigh of the expiring life of John Brown, and the voice of that strange man, part fanatic, part religionist, part idealist; perhaps wrong, perhaps right, but a man who set a nation to self-examination which has not yet ended, by any means; a man whose voice was raised, and will not die. The sound of his voice sweeps across our land from boundary to boundary, from shore to shore, and challenges the conscience of America, and says to us that, somehow, some day, this good land, with its heritage, may yet find the solution to its problems—to the problem to which John Brown and his adherents gave their allegiance, and to all the other problems which affect the American kind.

Mr. President, I conclude by repeating my thanks to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for the splendid contribution he has made and for his references to the celebration which is to take place at Harpers Ferry.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and friend from my neighboring State of Pennsylvania, who has contributed in his usual eloquent and fine manner to this discussion.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, September 9, 1959, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 36. An act for the relief of Page A. Wilson;

S. 252. An act to authorize Col. Philip M. Whitney, U.S. Army, retired, to accept and wear the decoration tendered him by the Government of the Republic of France;

S. 825. An act to revise eligibility requirements for burial in national cemeteries, and for other purposes;

S. 1081. An act for the relief of Arshalouis Simeonian;

S. 1149. An act for the relief of Capt. Thomas J. McArdle;

S. 1164. An act to authorize the appointment of a commissioner for Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz.;

S. 1613. An act for the relief of Matilda Kolich;

S. 1891. An act for the relief of Donald G. Coplan;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1959

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

II Timothy 2: 3: Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

Almighty God, with a humble spirit and a contrite heart we are now earnestly beseeching Thee that daily we may have a vivid experience of Thy nearness unto us.

Help us to be more responsive to the influence and guidance of Thy Holy Spirit wherever we find ourselves confronted by hardships and heartaches.

Purge our souls from those aspirations which are alien to the mind and contrary to the will of our blessed Lord.

May nothing dull our capacities for whatever service Thou hast ordained and appointed us to render in our day and generation.

In Christ's name we offer our petition. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 9105. An act making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 9035. An act to permit the issuance of series E and H U.S. savings bonds at interest rates above the existing maximum, to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to designate certain exchanges of Government securities to be made without recognition of gain or loss, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists on its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BYRD of Virginia, Mr. KERR, Mr. FREAR, Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware, and Mr. CARLSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2219. An act to authorize appropriations for construction of facilities for the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, to increase the authorization of appropriations for the support thereof, and for other purposes.

INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

Mr. ANDERSON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that certain reporters such as Mr. Colegrove and Drew Pearson have selected a time such as this to attack our position in Laos and Vietnam. Their dreary and outdated dredging up of old criticisms serves the purposes of the Communists well, but makes no contribution toward a solution of our problems in that part of the world.

It seems to me that in view of the need for a unified position with our allies in southeast Asia, we would do better to listen to such reporters as Ernest K. Lindley, of Newsweek, and Mr. Joseph Alsop, whose columns are published in the Washington Post. Where some reporters have looked only for sensationalism, Mr. Lindley and Mr. Alsop have visited southeast Asia and viewed the situation there openmindedly and objectively. They have analyzed developments in the Communist aggression in Laos and attempted subversion in Vietnam.

They face up to realities as they point to the difficulties of meeting communism in the jungles and uncharted country that abound.

Most importantly, though, they acknowledge our obligation and responsibility—yes, and our opportunity, to help contain and repel the Communist aggression in southeast Asia.

I am today inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the analysis by Ernest K. Lindley which appears in the current Newsweek and the column by Mr. Joseph Alsop which appeared in yesterday's Washington Post.

I spent some little time in Laos, Vietnam, and other parts of southeast Asia last fall. I was tremendously impressed by the accomplishments of our mutual assistance program, by the dedicated and effective anticommunism of the governments of both Laos and Vietnam, and by the competence of our American representatives there.

In the light of my own on-the-ground observations, I feel that the presentations of Mr. Lindley and of Mr. Alsop are thoroughly sound. I hope all my colleagues will turn to the RECORD and read these two thoughtful and constructive articles.

NICHOLAS PETRULLI

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I believe it advisable to clarify certain errors which crept into the press reports relating to the renunciation of U.S. citizenship by one Nicholas Petrulli, of Valley Stream, N.Y., during his visit to Moscow.

Our nationality laws traditionally recognize the right to voluntary expatriation. Under the law presently in effect, section 349(a)(6) of the Walter-McCarran Act, a citizen of the United States, whether by birth or naturalization, loses his U.S. citizenship by "making a formal renunciation of nationality before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in a foreign state." It appears that Nicholas Petrulli has made such a formal renunciation at the U.S. Embassy at Moscow, in due form as prescribed by regulations promulgated by the Secretary of State. Under the law, his voluntary act of expatriation is final and there is nothing the Department of State has to do except to issue a written certificate of loss of U.S. nationality.

The press has raised the matter of Petrulli's return to the United States, pointing out that he apparently regrets his action and wants to return to the United States. Under the law, he may return to this country as an alien immigrant if eligible under all the applicable provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Pursuant to section 202(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Nicholas Petrulli, as an alien born in the United States, will be chargeable to the immigration quota of the country of which he is a citizen, or if he is not a citizen or subject of any country, then he will have to come under the quota of the country in which he resides—Soviet Russia in his case. If the press dispatches reporting that Petrulli is married to a citizen of the United States are true, then his wife could file in his behalf a petition requesting the Attorney General to grant him nonquota immigrant status on the ground that he is the spouse of a U.S. citizen.

THE STEEL STRIKE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the steel strike has extended such a long time that the AFL–CIO has given a million dollars to assist the strikers, and there is so much unemployment, especially in my State of Michigan, it would seem to be time that the President might well make a request of Mr. McDonald as to whether he is agreeable to hold a secret vote to determine whether the members of the steelworkers' organization would like the strike continued or would prefer to accept the last offer of the company.

There would seem to be no reason why the strike should continue and unemployment spread further than it has.

COMPETITION FROM JAPAN

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, under the so-called Reciprocal Trade Act, farm exports for the 12-month period preceding July 31 of this year fell below agricultural imports; in other words, foreigners are shipping more agricultural products into this country than are being exported. This has contributed to the $1 billion loss in net farm income in the first 6 months of this year.

I also learn in an article by Victor Riesel, newspaper columnist, that Japan is getting ready to import into the United States large quantities of $50 television sets, $19 transistor radios, and men's ready-to-wear suits at $15 to $20 f.o.b. ports of entry.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that Mr. James B. Carey, president of the AFL–CIO Electrical Workers' Union, instead of spending his time threatening Members of Congress with political extinction, might better devote his time and efforts to working for the members of his union in trying to protect them against Japan's 10-cent-an-hour labor.

AMENDING FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

"SEC. 104. PARKWAYS.

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 4(b) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 93), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of parkways, authorized by Acts of Congress, on lands to which title is vested in the United States, the additional sum of $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960."

"SEC. 105. NATIONAL SYSTEM OF INTERSTATE AND DEFENSE HIGHWAY MILEAGE STUDY FOR ALASKA AND HAWAII.

"The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to make a study of the need for the extension of the National System of Interstate Highways within the States of Alaska and Hawaii, and report the results of such study to the Congress within ten days subsequent to January 4, 1960. The report shall include recommendations as to the approximate routes and mileages thereof which should be included in such system within those States."

"SEC. 106. EXEMPTION FROM NATIONAL STANDARDS OF CERTAIN AREAS ADJACENT TO THE INTERSTATE SYSTEM.

"That subsection (b) of title 23, section 131 of the United States Code is amended by striking therefrom the following language: 'Upon application of the State, any such agreement may, within the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce consistent with the national policy, provide for excluding from application of the national standards segments of the Interstate System which traverse incorporated municipalities wherein the use of real property adjacent to the Interstate System is subject to municipal regulation or control, or which traverse other areas where the land use is clearly established by State law as industrial or commercial:' and substituting therefor the following language: 'Agreements entered into between the Secretary of Commerce and State highway departments under this section shall not apply to those segments of the Interstate System which traverse commercial or industrial zones within the presently existing boundaries of incorporated municipalities wherein the use of real property adjacent to the Interstate System is subject to municipal regulation or control, or which traverse other areas where the land use, as of the date of approval of this Act, is clearly established by State law as industrial or commercial:'."

"SEC. 107. EMERGENCY RELIEF.

"(a) That section 125 of title 23, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"'§ 125. Emergency relief

"'(a) An emergency fund is authorized for expenditure by the Secretary, subject to the provisions of this section and section 120, for the repair or reconstruction of highways, roads, and trails which he shall find have suffered serious damage as the result of disaster over a wide area, such as by floods, hurricanes, tidal waves, earthquakes, severe storms, landslides, or other catastrophes in any part of the United States. The appropriation of such moneys, not to exceed $30,000,000, as may be necessary for the initial establishment of this fund and for its replenishment on an annual basis is authorized. Pending such appropriation or replenishment the Secretary may expend from any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for expenditure in accordance with the provisions of this title, including existing Federal-aid appropriations, such sums as may be necessary for the immediate prosecution of the work herein authorized, such appropriations to be reimbursed from the appropriations herein authorized when made.

"'(b) The Secretary may expend funds from the emergency fund herein authorized for the repair or reconstruction of highways on the Federal-aid highway systems, including the Interstate System, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. Except as to highways, roads, and trails mentioned in subsection (c) of this section, no funds shall be so expended unless the Secretary has received an application therefor from the State highway department, and unless an emergency has been declared by the Governor of the State and concurred in by the Secretary.

"'(c) The Secretary may expend funds from the emergency fund herein authorized, either independently or in cooperation with any other branch of the Government, State agency, organization, or person, for the repair or reconstruction of forest highways, forest development roads and trails, park roads and trails, and Indian reservation roads, whether or not such highways, roads, or trails are on any of the Federal-aid highway systems.'"

"(b) Subsection (f) of section 120 of title 23, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"'(f) The Federal share payable on account of any repair or reconstruction provided for by funds made available under section 125 of this title shall not exceed 50 per centum of the cost thereof, except that the Federal share payable on account of any repair or reconstruction of forest highways, forest development roads and trails, park roads and trails, and Indian reservation roads may amount to 100 per centum of the cost thereof, whether or not such highways, roads, or trails are on any Federal-aid highway system. Any project agreement for which the final voucher has not been approved by the Secretary on or before the date of this Act may be modified to provide for the Federal share authorized herein.'"

Page 2, after line 15, insert:

"SEC. 108. INCREASE IN AMOUNT AUTHORIZED FOR BRIDGES OVER FEDERAL DAMS.

"That subsection (d) of section 320 of title 23, United States Code, entitled 'Highways', is amended by striking out '$10,000,000' and inserting in lieu thereof '$13,000,000'."

Page 3, line 2, strike out "September" and insert "October".

Page 3, line 10, strike out "September" and insert "October".

Page 4, line 5, strike out "September" and insert "October".

Page 4, line 16, strike out "November 30" and insert Dcember 31".

Page 5, line 4, strike out "1951" and insert "1961".

Page 7, line 17, after "distributor," insert "and a dealer selling gasoline exclusively to producers of gasoline,".

Page 8, line 3, strike out "is registered and bonded" and insert "elects to register and give a bond".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may extend their remarks in the RECORD at this point on the highway bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there are two aspects of the bill to raise gasoline taxes and apportion funds to the highway trust fund which I find particularly objectionable.

One aspect is failing to fulfill the obligation to the States. The States were promised certain funds for this program but after these States became obligated on road contracts they are now being told under this bill that the Federal Government will only forward 80 percent of the sum that was promised. This is the first time since 1916 that the Federal Government has refused to fulfill a grant-in-aid promise.

While refusing to give the States the amount that was promised, the bill then proceeds to absorb the source of funds the States would use to make up the shortage. Iowa and many States depend primarily upon gasoline taxes as a source of highway funds and, while leaving the States short of funds to pay their highway contracts, this bill raises the Federal gasoline tax and thus absorbs the very kind of revenue the States use to replenish such a shortage.

Under the House rules, alternatives could not be presented unless the House bill was defeated or the Senate amended the bill. The Senate, by a vote of 43 to 40, failed to amend the bill in such a manner that there would be no shortage in the funds due the States. I voted "no" on original passage in protest against failing in our obligation to the States and against absorbing the source of revenue States like Iowa use to make up such a shortage and to encourage and support the drive to amend the bill in the Senate.

The Federal Government is already receiving $1,483 million more in sales and excise taxes from automotive users than is going into the highway fund; yet an additional sales tax is relied upon as the sole source of additional revenue. It was well understood that enough "no" votes would produce an alternative bill.

Since the amendment failed in the Senate by a vote of 43 to 40, there is no need to carry the fight further at this time in connection with this particular bill; but I still protest the Federal Government ever failing to fulfill a promise to the States and hope something can still be done in another bill to correct this situation.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAIL TRANSIT CROSSING ACROSS THE BAY OF SAN FRANCISCO

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 8171) amending the act of February 20, 1931, as amended, with respect to a rail transit crossing across the bay of San Francisco.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill provide for any Federal expenditure, and if so, how much?

Mr. BLATNIK. This provides no Federal expenditure and there is no cost to the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (b) of section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act granting the consent of Congress to the State of California to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from the Rincon Hill district in San Francisco by way of Goat Island to Oakland", approved February 20, 1931, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The State of California is authorized to fix, charge, and collect tolls for the use of such bridge to pay the costs of engineering, planning, constructing, reconstructing, making alterations, additions, betterments, improvements, and extensions (including reasonable interest, financing, and refunding costs, and suitable reserves), and the costs of maintaining, repairing, and operating of not to exceed two additional highway crossings and one rail transit crossing across the Bay of San Francisco and their approaches. The State of California is also authorized to fix, charge, and collect tolls for the use of such additional highway crossing or highway crossings. After a fund shall have been provided from the tolls collected for the use of the bridge referred to in the first section of this Act and from tolls charged for the use of such additional highway crossing or highway crossings sufficient to pay all costs referred to in clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (a) and also all costs of such additional highway crossing or highway crossings, such rail transit crossing, and their approaches (including the costs of all reconstruction, alterations, additions, betterments, improvements, and extensions thereof and all interest, financing, and refunding costs, and suitable reserves), such bridge and such additional highway crossing or highway crossings shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be adjusted so as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of such bridge and such additional highway crossing or highway crossings and their approaches, under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of such bridge, such highway crossing or highway crossings, such rail transit crossing, and their approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating such bridge and such additional highway crossing or highway crossings and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. Nothing herein shall impair or limit the full power and authority of the State of California or any public body in such State to provide for the use of such rail transit crossing and the fixing, charging, and collection of fares and charges in connection with the transportation of goods or passengers by means of such rail transit crossing."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE WAUKEGAN PORT DISTRICT

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 5738) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to transfer to the Waukegan Port District the commitment of the city of Waukegan, Ill., to maintain a public wharf in Waukegan Harbor on land conveyed to the city in 1914, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this one cost any money?

Mr. BLATNIK. There is no expenditure involved.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Does the gentleman have any more that will not cost anything, any other bills that do not cost anything?

Mr. BLATNIK. For the moment I do not have any.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, this is a simple bill, and I am very grateful to the gentleman from Minnesota for bringing it up at this time. H.R. 5738 would merely authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, or his designee, to accept the reconveyance from the city of Waukegan, Ill., of certain property which was transferred to the city by deed on August 17, 1914, from the then Secretary of War; and at the same time convey said property to the Waukegan Port District without payment of monetary consideration therefor, but subject to those conditions under which the original conveyance in 1914 was made to the city of Waukegan. These conditions involve commitment by the port district, its successors and assigns, to assume the city's obligation under the August 17, 1914, deed to maintain a public wharf and continuing right-of-way in connection therewith.

It is further provided that in the event that the property is not used for the above-mentioned purpose, title thereto shall, at the option of the Secretary of the Army, revert to the United States of America for immediate entry thereon.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this measure involves reconveyance of land from the city of Waukegan to the U.S. Government and further conveyance from the U.S. Government to the Waukegan Port District.

May I briefly point out that under the 1914 deed, the Secretary of War, under authority of an act of Congress of June 13, 1902, conveyed to the city of Waukegan 4.6 acres of land comprised of a portion of the area previously donated by the city and partially of accreted lands. At the present time, a port district, authorized by the State of Illinois, has been formed in Waukegan and has taken over the responsibility previously carried out by the city for the harbor. It is anticipated that development of this important natural harbor will permit the city and the surrounding area to take advantage of the great opportunities for expansion of traffic and industry resulting from the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the deepening of connecting channels in the Great Lakes. The city of Waukegan, which recently enjoyed its centennial celebration, is growing rapidly in population, commerce, and industry—involving rapidly expanding use of the harbor. In order to permit the new port district to function properly and effectively, the city of Waukegan has already transferred to it certain properties and lands, including land immediately adjacent to that property previously conveyed to the city by the United States. However, the city could not convey, without this authorization, that land to the port district because of the restriction in the original deed from the United States.

The Committee on Public Works agrees that the transfer of this land, as provided by this present legislation, would be in the interest of good management, inasmuch as otherwise the port district will be deprived of complete control over all of the land and facilities needed in its future operations. Such complete control, in the words of the committee "will facilitate and enhance the use of Waukegan Harbor."

Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the measure carries no cost to the Federal Government; and that it has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of the Army.

I express the hope that this measure, H.R. 5738, will be passed unanimously.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Army, or his designee, is hereby authorized and directed to (1) accept a reconveyance from the city of Waukegan, Illinois, of that property transferred to the city by deed from the Secretary of War dated August 17, 1914, and (2) simultaneously convey said property to the Waukegan Port District without payment of monetary consideration therefor, but subject to those conditions the Secretary deems necessary in the public interest, including the assumption by the port district, its successors and assigns, of the city's obligation under the August 17, 1914, deed to maintain a public wharf on the property described therein: Provided, That in the event the property is not used for the aforementioned purpose, title thereto shall, at the option of the Secretary of the Army, revert to the United States of America which shall have the right of immediate entry thereon.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NARCOTICS MANUFACTURING ACT OF 1960

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 529) to discharge more effectively obligations of the United States under certain conventions and protocols relating to the institution of controls over the manufacture of narcotic drugs, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that the gentleman has a series of bills, all of them coming out of the Ways and Means Committee unanimously?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; each and every one of them came from the committee unanimously. They were listed in the RECORD a few days ago. The majority leader stated at that time that we would at this time call up a number of bills, and he gave the number, the author, and the purpose of each bill. It developed with respect to one of them at least that there was objection, so that particular bill will not be called up. So far as the others are concerned, we have heard of no objection.

Mr. GROSS. They do not involve any substantial spending?

Mr. MILLS. No. Our committee is not on that side of the ledger. It is on the other side, and our proposals are on the other side.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman's committee is just on the side of additional taxation?

Mr. MILLS. We are trying to do something to reduce taxes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am sure that would be popular.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Narcotics Manufacturing Act of 1959."

NECESSITY FOR LEGISLATION

SEC. 2. The enactment of this Act is necessary for the following reasons:

(1) The Congress has long recognized that the manufacture, distribution, and use of narcotic drugs for nonmedical and nonscientific purposes endangers the health of the American people and threatens the general welfare. The Congress has enacted laws and the Senate has approved international conventions designed to establish effective control over domestic and international traffic in narcotic drugs.

(2) Until recently, most narcotic drugs were made from natural raw materials such as the opium poppy and the coca leaf, produced in limited areas of the world. In practice, control over the production of narcotic drugs could therefore be achieved by national and international restrictions over the production and shipment of these raw materials and their use to manufacture narcotic drugs.

(3) In recent years, however, technological advances have resulted in the development of new types of narcotic drugs, produced synthetically from a variety of generally available raw materials. As a result, controls over the production of narcotic drugs can no longer be maintained solely by controls relating to the opium poppy and the coca leaf.

(4) The United States has joined with other nations in executing international conventions intended to establish suitable controls over production, shipment, and use of all narcotic drugs. These conventions are not self-executing, and the obligations of the United States thereunder must be performed pursuant to appropriate legislation.

(5) In order (a) to discharge more effectively the international obligations of the United States, (b) to promote the public health, safety, and welfare, (c) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in narcotic drugs, and (d) to safeguard the revenue derived from taxation of narcotic drugs, the Congress finds it necessary to enact a statute for the licensing and control of the manufacture of all narcotic drugs.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act—

(a) The term "1931 convention" means the Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, concluded at Geneva, July 13, 1931, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America, July 9, 1933, as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946.

(b) The term "1948 protocol" means the protocol bringing under international control drugs outside the scope of the convention of July 13, 1931, for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs (as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946), signed at Paris, November 19, 1948, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America, September 11, 1950.

(c) The term "Secretary or his delegate" means the Secretary of the Treasury, or any officer, employee, or agency of the Treasury Department duly authorized by the Secretary (directly or indirectly by one or more redelegations of authority) to perform the function mentioned or described in the context.

(d) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, corporation, association, trust, or other institution or entity.

(e) The term "narcotic drug" means narcotic drug as defined in section 4731(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act.

(f) The term "manufacture" means the production of a narcotic drug, either directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of vegetable origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis.

(g) The term "basic class of narcotic drug" means any one of the following classes of narcotic drugs and any additional class or classes of narcotic drugs (other than crude opium or coca leaves), by whatever trade name designated, as may be defined from time to time by the Secretary or his delegate in accordance with section 6 of this Act:

1. Opium, powdered, granulated, or deodorized, or tinctures or extracts of opium.
2. Mixed alkaloids of opium and their salts.
3. Morphine and its salts.
4. Codeine and its salts.
5. Thebaine and its salts.
6. Narcotine and its salts.
7. Papaverine and its salts.
8. Cotarnine and its salts.
9. Narceine and its salts.
10. Ethylmorphine and its salts.
11. Apomorphine and its salts.
12. Nalorprine (N-allylnormorphine) and its salts.
13. Hydromorphone (dihydromorphinone) and its salts.
14. Metopon (methyldihydromorphinone) and its salts.
15. Dihydrocodeine and its salts.
16. Hydrocodone (dihydrocodeinone) and its salts.
17. Oxycodone (dihydrohydroxycodeinone) and its salts.
18. Cocaine and its salts.
19. Ecgonine and its salts.
20. Pethidine (meperidine, isonipecaine) (1-methyl-4-phenylpiperidine- 4 - carboxylic acid ethyl ester) and its salts.
21. Alphaprodine (alpha-1, 3-dimethyl-4-phenyl-4-propionoxypiperidine) and its salts.
22. Methadone (amidone) (6-dimethylamino-4, 4-diphenyl-3-heptanone) and its salts.
23. Isomethadone (isoamidone) (6-dimethylamino-5-methyl-4, 4-diphenyl-3-hexanone) and its salts.
24. Levorphan and racemorphan (3-hydroxy-N-methylmorphinan) and their salts.
25. Levomethorphan and racemethorphan, (3-methoxy-N-methylmorphinan) and their salts.
26. Anileridine (Ethyl 1-[2-(p-amino phenyl(-ethyl]-4-phenyl piperidine-4-carboxylate) and its salts.

(h) The term "net disposal" means the quantity of a basic class of narcotic drug, sold, exchanged, given away, used in the production of another basic class of narcotic drug for which the manufacturer is licensed, or otherwise disposed of (as such or contained in or combined with other drugs compounded by the manufacturer of such basic class) by the manufacturer during a stated period, less the quantity of any such basic class of narcotic drug returned to the manufacturer by a customer and any quantity sold or transferred to another licensed manufacturer of the same basic class of narcotic drug.

(i) The term "narcotic precursor" means a substance other than a narcotic drug which the Secretary or his delegate has found, after due notice and opportunity for public hearing—

(1) is an immediate chemical precursor of a narcotic drug;

(2) is produced primarily for use in the manufacture of a narcotic drug; and

(3) is used, or is likely to be used, in the manufacture of a narcotic drug by persons other than persons licensed to manufacture such narcotic drug.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (a) of section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) NARCOTIC DRUGS.—The words 'narcotic drugs' as used in this part shall mean any of the following, whether produced directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of vegetable origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis:

"(1) Opium, isonipecaine, coca leaves, and opiate;

"(2) Any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation of opium, isonipecaine, coca leaves, or opiate;

"(3) Any substance (and any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof) which is chemically identical with any of the substances referred to in clauses (1) and (2); except that the words 'narcotic drugs' as used in this part shall not include decocainized coca leaves or extracts of coca leaves, which extracts do not contain cocaine or ecgonine."

(b) Subsection (g) of section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(g) OPIATE.—The word 'opiate' as used in this part shall mean any drug (as defined in the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (52 Stat. 1041, sec. 201(g); 21 U.S.C. 321)) or other substance found by the Secretary or his delegate and proclaimed by the Secretary or his delegate to have been so found in the Federal Register, after due notice and opportunity for public hearing, to have an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability similar to morphine or cocaine or to be capable of conversion into a drug having such addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability, where in the judgment of the Secretary or his delegate, the relative technical simplicity and degree of yield of such conversion create a risk of improper use of the drug. The Secretary or his delegate is authorized to issue necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subsection, and to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the Treasury Department whom he shall designate or appoint, the duty of conducting any hearing authorized hereunder. The Secretary or his delegate is authorized to withdraw any previous finding that a drug or other substance is an 'opiate' whenever he determines that such previous finding was erroneous, and upon publication of such determination in the Federal Register, the particular drug or other substance shall cease to be an opiate. For purposes of the foregoing provision the Secretary or his delegate may consider any action taken pursuant to article 3 of the 1948 protocol."

NOTIFICATIONS, FINDINGS, AND DECISIONS UNDER THE 1948 PROTOCOL

SEC. 5. (a) Before a notification may be sent on behalf of the United States to the Secretary General of the United Nations, under article 1 of the 1948 protocol, that a drug is considered liable to the same kind of abuse and productive of the same kind of harmful effects as the drugs specified in article 1, paragraph 2, of the 1931 convention, such drug shall have been found by the Secretary or his delegate to be an "opiate," as defined in section 4731(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4(b) of this Act, and so proclaimed in accordance with the procedure prescribed by section 4731(g) as amended.

(b) Upon receipt by the United States of a finding or decision made pursuant to article 1 or article 2 of the 1948 protocol that a certain drug is capable of producing addiction or conversion into a drug capable of producing addiction and that the appropriate provisions of the 1931 convention shall apply to such drug, such finding or decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary or his delegate. The Secretary or his delegate shall cause such finding or decision to be published in the Federal Register unless such drug has already been determined to be an opiate under the procedure prescribed by section 4731(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act. From the time of such publication, such drug shall be an opiate to the same extent as if the procedure prescribed by section 4731(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act, had been followed with respect to such drug.

(c) If the finding or decision so received and published in the Federal Register relates to a drug which has not previously been determined to be an opiate under the procedure prescribed by section 4731(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act, any person in the United States interested in the domestic manufacture and distribution of such drug for medical and scientific purposes may submit to the Secretary or his delegate written data, views, and argument opposed to such finding or decision. Such written data, views, and argument shall be transmitted to the Secretary General of the United Nations for consideration by the World Health Organization or the Commission on Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations, as the case may be, under article 3 of the 1948 protocol. If thereafter the United States receives a revised finding or decision, under article 3 of the 1948 protocol, that such a drug is not capable of producing addiction or conversion into a drug capable of producing addiction and that the provisions of the 1931 convention shall not apply to such drug, such revised finding or decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary or his delegate, who shall cause such revised finding or decision to be published in the Federal Register within ninety days of receipt thereof by the Secretary or his delegate. From the time of such publication, such drug shall cease to be an opiate, unless the Secretary or his delegate has theretofore initiated an opiate procedure under section 4731(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act.

(d) Upon receipt by the United States of a revised finding or decision under article 3 of the 1948 protocol (except a revised finding or decision to which subsection (c) applies) that a drug (theretofore subject to the Federal narcotic laws as an opiate) is not capable of producing addition or conversion into a drug capable of producing addiction and that the provisions of the 1931 convention shall not apply to such drug, the revised finding or decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary or his delegate. The Secretary or his delegate may, in his discretion, publish the revised finding or decision in the Federal Register and, from the time of such publication, such drug shall cease to be an opiate. If the revised finding or decision is not so published in the Federal Register, the said drug shall continue to be an opiate.

MODIFICATION OF LIST OF BASIC NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 6. The Secretary or his delegate, upon his initiative or upon the petition of any interested person shall have the power by rule made on the record after opportunity for hearing, to alter classifications set forth in section 3(g) by adding to, subtracting from, or further defining such classifications or any one or more of them, on the basis of their chemical structure and content and addiction liability or convertibility into an addicting drug. No new basic class shall be added unless with respect to any drug or drugs falling within such class the Secretary or his delegate shall have determined that such drug is a narcotic drug as defined by section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act, or has caused a finding or decision to be published in the Federal Register pursuant to section 5 of this Act. For purposes of this subsecton, the Secretary or his delegate may consider changes in classification established by the World Health Organization or its successor in function.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE MANUFACTURE OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 7. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, it shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture any narcotic drug unless—

(1) such narcotic drug falls within a basic class of narcotic drugs established by or pursuant to this Act, and

(2) such person holds a currently effective license and manufacturing quota with respect to such basic class of narcotic drug issued pursuant to section 8 of this Act.

(b) The omission of a narcotic drug from the classification established pursuant to section 3(g) shall not be construed to permit the manufacture of such narcotic drug, the intent of this Act being to limit the manufacture of narcotic drugs in the United States to those narcotic drugs established under this Act as a basic class of narcotic drugs or as a member of a basic class of narcotic drugs. The fact that the Secretary or his delegate shall have—

(A) determined that a drug is a narcotic drug as defined by section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this Act, or

(B) caused a finding or decision with respect to any drug or other substance to be published in the Federal Register pursuant to section 5 of this Act, shall not require the Secretary or his delegate to add such narcotic drug to the classifications set forth in section 3(g) or to grant a manufacturing quota for such narcotic drug, if the Secretary or his delegate shall determine that it is contrary to the public health and safety to permit the manufacture of such drug within the United States.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person (1) to manufacture or attempt to manufacture any narcotic drug, or (2) to knowingly permit the manufacture of any narcotic drug, in or upon any place owned, leased, occupied, used or controlled by him unless he (or the lessee, tenant, or other occupant as the case may be) is the holder of a license and quota for the manufacture during the period in question of such narcotic drug in accordance with the provisions of sections 3(g), 8, and 11 of this Act; and it shall be unlawful for the holder of any such quota to manufacture during the period for which the quota is applicable any quantity of such narcotic drug in excess of the amount authorized by such quota.

LICENSES TO MANUFACTURE NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 8. (a) Every person who manufactures a basic class or classes of narcotic drug shall, on or before January 1, 1958, if then already engaged in such manufacture, or otherwise before engaging in such manufacture, obtain from the Secretary or his delegate a license or licenses for the appropriate basic class or classes of narcotic drug. There shall be a separate license for the manufacture of each basic class of narcotic drug. In determining whether to issue a license for a particular basic class of narcotic drug to a particular applicant, the Secretary or his delegate shall be governed by the following factors—

(1) maintenance of effective controls against the diversion of the particular basic class or narcotic drug and of narcotic drugs compounded therefrom into other than legitimate medical and scientific channels through limitation of manufacture of the particular basic class of narcotic drug to the smallest number of establishments which will produce an adequate and uninterrupted supply of narcotic drugs of or derived from such basic class of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes, consistent with the public interest; and

(2) compliance with the obligations undertaken by the United States pursuant to the 1931 convention and the 1948 protocol; and

(3) promotion of technical advances in the art of manufacturing narcotic drugs and the development of new narcotic drug products; and

(4) the applicant's education moral character and reputation, the applicant's past drug manufacturing experience and the quality of his products, his technical competence, the existence in the applicant's establishment of adequate safeguards against diversion of narcotic drugs into other than legitimate medical and scientific channels; and

(5) such other factors as may be relevant to and consistent with the public interest.

(b) Registration pursuant to section 4722 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall be a prerequisite to the issuance of any license under this section. Licenses shall be in such form as the Secretary or his delegate shall prescribe and shall continue in effect subject only to annual renewal of registration unless revoked pursuant to section 9 of this Act or voluntarily surrendered. Issuance of a license pursuant to this section shall not entitle the licensee to perform any act with respect to narcotic drugs as to which the consent or approval of the Secretary or his delegate is required by the provisions of this or any other Act.

(c) Issuance of a license for the manufacture of any one basic class of narcotic drug shall not entitle the holder thereof to manufacture for sale, distribution, or other use any other basic class of narcotic drug.

(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Secretary or his delegate shall authorize any person registered as a manufacturer or as a person engaged in research under section 4722 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, who meets the standards for licensing under subsection (a)(4) of this section 8, whether or not such person actually holds a license under subsection (a), to produce such limited quantities as the Secretary or his delegate may specify of any narcotic drug, except crude opium or coca leaves, whether or not a basic class for such drug has been established under section 3(g) of this Act, exclusively for research in the development of manufacturing processes for the drug, or for chemical, pharmacological or medical testing of such drugs, for fitness for medical or scientific use and for determination of its suitability for general manufacture and distribution for medical or scientific use. Such person shall make such reports as the Secretary or his delegate may require relating to the quantities of narcotic drug manufactured and to use and disposal of such quantities of such narcotic drug. Such quantities of such narcotic drug may be disposed of only in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary or his delegate. Any authorization made under this subsection (d) shall be subject to revocation or suspension in accordance with the procedure set forth in section 9 of this Act.

(e) In issuing or refusing to issue manufacturing licenses pursuant to this section, the Secretary or his delegate shall act in conformity with the procedure prescribed by section 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Secretary or his delegate shall be deemed to constitute "the agency" for purposes of compliance with sections 7 and 8 of such Act. Each licensee of the basic class of narcotic drug with respect to which a license is sought to be obtained shall be deemed a person entitled to notice within the meaning of section 5(a) of the Administrative Procedure Act.

REVOCATION OR SUSPENSION OF LICENSES

SEC. 9. (a) Any license issued pursuant to section 8 of this Act may be revoked by the Secretary or his delegate in the licensee—

(1) has been convicted of violating or conspiring to violate any laws of the United States or of any State where the offense involves any activity or transaction with respect to narcotic drugs; or

(2) has violated or failed to comply with any duly promulgated regulation of the Secretary or his delegate relating to narcotic drugs, and such violation or failure to comply reflects adversely on the licensee's reliability and integrity with respect to narcotic drugs.

In the case of a licensee holding more than one license issued pursuant to section 8 of this Act, revocation may be in the discretion of the Secretary or his delegate extended to all licenses held by such licensee.

(b) Before revoking any license pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary or his delegate shall serve upon the licensee an order to show cause why an order of revocation should not be issued. Any such order to show cause shall contain a statement of the basis thereof, and shall call upon such licensee to appear before the Secretary or his delegate at a time and place stated in the order, but in no event less than thirty days after the date of receipt of such order, and give evidence upon the matter specified therein. The Secretary or his delegate may in his discretion suspend any license simultaneously with the issuance of an order to show cause, in cases where he finds that the public health, safety, or interest require such suspension. Such suspension shall continue in effect until the conclusion of any revocation proceeding, including judicial review thereof, unless sooner withdrawn by the Secretary or his delegate, or dissolved by a court of competent jurisdiction. Every hearing held pursuant to this section shall be conducted in accordance with section 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Secretary or his delegate shall be deemed to constitute "the agency" for purposes of compliance with sections 7 and 8 of such Act. If after hearing, default, or waiver thereof by the licensee, the Secretary or his delegate determines that an order of revocation should issue, he shall issue such order, which shall include a statement of his findings and the grounds and reasons therefor and shall specify the effective date of the order, and he shall cause such order to be served on the licensee. In any case where a hearing is conducted pursuant to the provisions of this section both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the Secretary or his delegate. Proceedings under this section shall be independent of, and not in lieu of, criminal prosecution or other proceedings under this Act or any other law of the United States.

AUTHORITY TO SEIZE NARCOTIC DRUGS, ORDER FORMS, AND TAX STAMPS

SEC. 10. In the event of the suspension or revocation of a license obtained under section 8, all narcotic drugs owned or possessed by such person at the time of suspension or at the effective date of the revocation order, as the case may be, whether or not taxes have been paid on such narcotic drugs, together with all unused order forms or narcotic tax stamps owned or possessed by such person, may at the discretion of the Secretary or his delegate be placed under seal and no disposition made until the time for taking an appeal has elapsed or until all appeals have been concluded. Upon a suspension or revocation order becoming final all narcotic drugs, tax stamps, and order forms shall be forfeited to the Government.

MANUFACTURING QUOTAS FOR BASIC CLASSES OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 11. (a) For the purpose of fixing manufacturing quotas under this section and in order to carry out the treaty obligations of the United States, the Secretary or his delgate shall make determinations of the total quantity of each basic class of narcotic drug necessary to be manufactured during each calendar year to provide for the estimated medical and scientific needs of the United States, for lawful export requirements, and for establishment and maintenance of reserve stocks.

(b) In fixing individual manufacturing quotas for any basic class of narcotic drug for a calendar year pursuant to this section, or at any time after fixing such individual quotas, the Secretary or his delegate shall limit or reduce such individual quotas to the extent necessary to prevent the aggregate of such individual quotas from exceeding the amount of the determination of the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (a). In any such limitation or reduction pursuant to this subsection the quota of each licensed manufacturer of such basic class of drug shall be limited or reduced in the same proportion as the limitation or reduction of the aggregate of such quotas. However, if any licensee, before the issuance of a limitation or reduction in quota, has manufactured in excess of his quota so limited or reduced, the amount of such excess shall be subtracted from such licensee's manufacturing quota for the following year.

(c) On or before June 1 of each year, upon application therefor by a person having a license to manufacture a basic class of narcotic drug, the Secretary or his delegate shall fix a manufacturing quota for such calendar year for such basic class of narcotic drug for such person. Subject to the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), such quota shall be sufficient to cover the applicant's estimated disposal, inventory, and other requirements for the calendar year as determined by the Secretary or his delegate, who shall take into account the applicant's current disposal rate, the trend of such disposal rate during the preceding calendar year, the applicant's production cycle and inventory position, the economic availability of raw materials, yield and stability problems, emergencies such as strikes and fires, and other factors. Subject to the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), such quota shall not be less than the sum of—

(1) such licensed manufacturer's net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug during the immediately preceding calendar year or the average of the three immediately preceding calendar years in which such manufacturer produced such basic class of narcotic drug, whichever is greater; and less such manufacturer's inventory of such basic class of narcotic drug on December 31 of the preceding calendar year.

(2) one-half of such manufacturer's net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug during the immediately preceding calendar year;

(d) During the period from January 1 until a manufacturing quota for such calendar year is fixed pursuant to subsection (c), any licensed manufacturer entitled to receive a quota for any basic class of narcotic drug under subsection (c) may manufacture a provisional quota of not more than 75 per centum of whichever of the following is greater—

(1) such manufacturer's net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug during the 12 months immediately preceding September 30 of the preceding calendar year; or

(2) twelve times such manufacturer's average monthly net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug for the 33 months immediately preceding September 30 of the preceding calendar year; or such higher or lower percentage as the Secretary or his delegate may from time to time for good cause direct. Any higher or lower percentage so directed shall apply to the provisional quotas of all licensed manufacturers for such basic class of narcotic drug.

(e) The Secretary or his delegate shall, on application therefor, and subject to the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), fix a quota for any licensed manufacturer of a basic class of narcotic drug who has not manufactured such basic class of narcotic drug during one or more of the three immediately preceding calendar years, in an amount adequate to cover such manufacturer's reasonably anticipated requirements for the current calendar year.

(f) At any time during the calendar year any licensed manufacturer who has applied for or received a manufacturing quota for a basic class of narcotic drug may apply for an increase in such quota, to meet his estimated disposal, inventory, and other requirements during the remainder of such calendar year. In passing upon such application the Secretary or his delegate shall take into consideration any occurrences since the filing of such manufacturer's initial quota application that may require an increased manufacturing rate by such manufacturer during the balance of such calendar year. In passing upon such application the Secretary or his delegate may also take into consideration the amount, if any, by which the determination of the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (a) exceeds the aggregate of the quotas of all manufacturers under this section, and the equitable distribution of such excess among other manufacturers.

EXCEPTION FROM APPLICABILITY OF LICENSE AND QUOTA PROVISIONS

SEC. 12. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act—

(1) no license or quota shall be required for the manufacture of such quantities of narcotic drugs as incidentally but necessarily result from the manufacturing process used for the manufacture of a basic class of narcotic drug duly licensed under this Act; and

(2) no license or quota shall be required for the manufacture of such quantities of narcotic drugs as incidentally but necessarily result from the manufacture of any substance which is not a narcotic drug.

Unless such incidentally but necessarily resulting narcotic drug shall have been determined to be nonaddicting by the Secretary or his delegate, it may (apart from being used in the process of producing a narcotic drug for which license and quota are held) be retained or disposed of only in such manner as may be prescribed or authorized by the Secretary or his delegate.

REGULATION WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WHO MANUFACTURE NARCOTIC PRECURSORS

SEC. 13. Persons who manufacture, compound, package, sell, deal in, or give away any narcotic precursor shall keep such records and make such reports with respect to such narcotic precursor as the Secretary or his delegate shall by regulation prescribe. The Secretary or his delegate may advise the Congress whether in his opinion the manufacture and distribution of narcotic precursors threaten to result in the diversion of narcotic drugs into other than legitimate medical and scientific channels and whether in his judgment further legislation with respect to narcotic precursors is necessary or desirable.

CERTAIN PROCEDURES FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 14. Every final decision of the Secretary or his delegate under sections 3(1), 6, 8, 9, 11(c), 11(e), 11(f) of this Act shall be subject to judicial review as provided by and in the manner prescribed in Public Law 901, Eighty-first Congress, approved December 29, 1950.

AMENDMENT TO LAW WITH RESPECT TO EXPORTATION OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 15. Section 6 of the Act entitled "An Act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes", approved February 9, 1909, as amended (21 U.S.C. 182), is amended to read as follows.

"SEC. 6. (a) No person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States Government shall export or cause to be exported from the United States, or from territory under its control or jurisdiction, any narcotic drug to any other country except—

"(1) to a country which has ratified and become a party to the International Opium Convention of 1912 for the Suppression of the Abuses of Opium, Morphine, Cocaine, and Derivative Drugs, or to the International Opium Convention signed at Geneva on February 19, 1925, any narcotic drugs derived directly or indirectly from crude opium or coca leaves; or

"(2) to a country which has ratified and become a party to the Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs concluded at Geneva July 13, 1931, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America July 9, 1933, as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946, and the protocol bringing under international control drugs outside the scope of the convention of July 13, 1931, for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs (as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946) signed at Paris November 19, 1948, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America September 11, 1950, any narcotic drugs not derived directly or indirectly from crude opium or coca leaves; and in the instance of (1) and (2) then only if—

"(1) such country has instituted and maintains in conformity with the respective conventions, a system which the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate deems adequate, for the control of imports of narcotic drugs;

"(2) the narcotic drug is consigned to a holder of such permits or licenses as may be required under the laws of the country of import; and

"(3) there is furnished to the Secretary or his delegate proof deemed adequate by him that the narcotic drug is to be applied exclusively to medical and scientific uses within the country to which exported, that it will not be reexported from such country, and that there is an actual need for the narcotic drug for medical and scientific uses within such country.

"(b) The exceptions contained in subsection (a) shall not apply to smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, the exportation of which is absolutely prohibited.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the Secretary or his delegate may authorize the exportation of any narcotic drug (including crude opium and coca leaves) to a country which has ratified and become a party either to the 1912 convention, the 1925 convention, or the 1931 convention and supplementing protocols of 1946 and 1948, if the particular drug is to be applied to a special scientific purpose in the country of destination and the authorities of such country will permit the importation of the particular drug for such purpose.

"(d) The Secretary of State shall request all foreign governments to communicate through the diplomatic channels copies of the laws and regulations promulgated in their respective countries which prohibit or regulate the importation and shipment in transit of any narcotic drug and, when received, shall advise the Secretary or his delegate thereof."

AUTHORIZING IMPORTATION OF NARCOTIC DRUGS AS TO CERTAIN PERSONS

SEC. 16. Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act or any other law, the Secretary or his delegate may in his discretion authorize the importation of any narcotic drug or drugs (including crude opium or coca leaves) for delivery to officials of the United Nations, of the Government of the United States, or of any of the several States, or to any person licensed or qualified to be licensed under section 8 of this Act, for scientific purposes only.

ENFORCEMENT AND AUTHORITY TO DELEGATE FUNCTIONS

SEC. 17. It shall be the duty of the Secretary or his delegate to enforce the provisions of this Act, and he is hereby authorized to make, prescribe, and publish all necessary rules and regulations for carrying out its provisions, including but not limited to rules and regulations for the prevention of unlawful diversion of narcotic drugs, and to confer or impose any of the rights, privileges, powers, and duties conferred or imposed upon him by this Act upon such officers or employees of the Treasury Department as he shall designate or appoint.

PENAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 18. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this Act shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) Any person who willfully makes, aids, or assists in the making of, or procures, counsels, or advises in the preparation or presentation of, a false or fraudulent statement in any application made pursuant to this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

PROCEDURE AND PRESUMPTIONS

SEC. 19. It shall not be necessary to negative any exemptions set forth in this Act in any complaint, information, indictment, or other writ or proceeding laid or brought under this Act and the burden of proof of any such exemption shall be upon the person claiming its benefit. In the absence of proof by such person that he is the duly authorized holder of an appropriate license or quota issued under this Act, he shall be presumed not to be the holder of such license or quota and the burden of proof shall be upon him to rebut such presumption.

APPLICABILITY OF ACT

SEC. 20. The provisions of this Act shall apply to the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, the Canal Zone, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the other insular territories and possessions of the United States.

SEPARABILITY OF INVALID PROVISIONS

SEC. 21. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any circumstances, shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act and the applicability of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"(g) OPIATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The word 'opiate' as used in this part shall mean any drug (as defined in the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (52 Stat. 1041, sec. 201(g); 21 U.S.C. 321)) or other substance found by the Secretary or his delegate and proclaimed by the Secretary or his delegate (after considering the technical advice of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, or his delegate, on the subject) to have been so found in the Federal Register, after due notice and opportunity for public hearing, to have an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability similar to morphine or cocaine or to be capable of conversion into a drug having such addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability, where, in the judgment of the Secretary or his delegate, the relative technical simplicity and degree of yield of such conversion create a risk of improper use of the drug or other substance.

"(2) TERMINATION.—The Secretary or his delegate is authorized to withdraw any previous finding that a drug or other substance is an 'opiate' whenever (after considering the technical advice of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, or his delegate, or the subject) he determines that such previous finding was erroneous, and upon publication of such determination in the Federal Register, the particular drug or other substance shall cease to be an opiate. For purposes of the foregoing provision the Secretary or his delegate may consider any action taken pursuant to article 3 of the 1948 protocol as defined in section 3(b) of the Narcotics Manufacturing Act of 1960.

"(3) REGULATIONS, ETC.—The Secretary or his delegate is authorized to issue necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subsection, and to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the Treasury Department whom he shall designate or appoint, the duty of conducting any hearing authorized hereunder.

"(4) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For treatment of certain drugs as being, or ceasing to be, opiates for purposes of this part, see section 5 of the Narcotics Manufacturing Act of 1960."

"(c) Subsection (a) of section 4702 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) EXCEPTIONS FROM CERTAIN PROVISIONS AUTHORIZED FOR PREPARATIONS OF NO ADDICTIVE QUALITY OR OF MINOR ADDICTIVE QUALITY.—

"'(1) If the Secretary or his delegate, either upon his own motion or upon the application of an interested party, after consideration of the report and recommendations of an advisory committee appointed under paragraph (4) of this subsection, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing, finds that a pharmaceutical preparation containing a narcotic drug combined with other active or inactive ingredients—

"'(A) either possesses no addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability, or does not possess an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability sufficient to warrant imposition of all of the requirements of this part, and

"'(B) does not permit the recovery of a narcotic drug having such an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability, with such relative technical simplicity and degree of yield as to create a risk of improper use;

the Secretary or his delegate may except such pharmaceutical preparation to the extent consistent with the obligations undertaken by the United States pursuant to the Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, concluded at Geneva, July 13, 1931, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America, July 9, 1933, as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946, and the protocol bringing under international control drugs outside the scope of the convention of July 13, 1931, for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs (as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946), signed at Paris, November 19, 1948, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America, September 11, 1950, and with the public health, safety, and welfare, from any or all of the requirements imposed by this part, other than those requirements imposed by sections 4721, 4722, 4724(a), and 4732, and from any or all of the requirements imposed by section 6 of the Act entitled "An Act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes", approved February 9, 1909, as amended by section 15 of the Narcotics Manufacturing Act of 1960.

"'(2) In excepting any pharmaceutical preparation under paragraph (1), the Secretary or his delegate may, in his discretion, apply any or all of the following requirements:

"'(A) Such pharmaceutical preparation shall be manufactured, sold, distributed, given away, dispensed, or possessed as a medicine and not for the purpose of evading the intentions and provisions of this subpart and subpart C;

"'(B) Any manufacturer, producer, compounder, or vendor (including dispensing physicians) of such pharmaceutical preparation, lawfully entitled to manufacture, produce, compound, or vend such pharmaceutical preparation, shall keep such records relating to such pharmaceutical preparation as the Secretary or his delegate shall deem necessary;

"'(C) Every person so possessing or disposing of such pharmaceutical preparation shall register as required in section 4722 and, if he is not paying a tax under section 4721 shall pay a special tax of $1 for each year, or fractional part thereof, in which he is engaged in such occupation, to the official in charge of the collection district in which he carries on such occupation as provided in subpart C.

"'(3) If the Secretary or his delegate shall subsequently determine, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, that a pharmaceutical preparation to which such exceptions have been made applicable possesses a degree of addiction liability, or permits recovery of a narcotic drug having a degree of addiction liability, that results in abusive use of such exceptions, he is authorized to withdraw and revoke such exceptions in whole or in part.

"'(4) Whenever the Secretary or his delegate shall, on his own motion, determine that there may exist reasonable evidence to support a finding in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, or whenever an interested party makes an application for such a finding, the Secretary or his delegate shall thereupon appoint an advisory committee of experts. At least one member of such an advisory committee shall be selected by the Secretary or his delegate, one by the interested party making the application, if any, one by the Surgeon General of the (United States) Public Health Service, and one by the Commissioner of the (United States) Food and Drug Administration. The Secretary or his delegate shall submit to such advisory committee the application of the interested party, if any, and any other available data. As soon as practicable thereafter, the advisory committee shall, after independent study of the material submitted to it by the Secretary or his delegate and other data available to it, certify a report and recommendations to the Secretary or his delegate with respect to the pharmaceutical preparation involved.

"'(5) After consideration of the report and recommendation of the advisory committee, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing, the Secretary or his delegate shall either make the finding provided for in paragraph (1) of this subsection and grant such exceptions as he deems appropriate, or determine that the evidence does not support such a finding and deny the application, if any.'"

"EFFECTIVE DATE

"SEC. 22. With the exception of section 8(a), this Act shall take effect on January 1 of the year following the date of its enactment. Section 8(a) shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 529, which was introduced by our colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the Honorable FRANK KARSTEN, is designed to give full effect to treaty obligations of the United States to limit exclusively to medical and scientific purposes the manufacture of narcotic drugs and to require that such manufacture be restricted to persons and premises that have been licensed for the purpose. It is also designed to amend the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 171–185) to bring the regulation of exports in conformity with current treaty obligations, and to permit the importation and exportation of certain narcotic drugs for scientific research purposes.

The Committee on Ways and Means is unanimous in urging the enactment of H.R. 529 as amended.

Favorable reports were received on this legislation from the Treasury Department and the Department of State.

As Members will recall, legislation similar to this bill was brought before the House on August 22, 1957 in the 1st session of the 85th Congress and passed the House unanimously. Certain problems developed in the Senate on that particular legislation. Since that time it is my understanding, and the Committee on Ways and Means was so advised, that the problems were all agreeably worked out, and the bill which is now before the House, H.R. 529, was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Speaker, this is important and meritorious legislation and I commend it to the House of Representatives. I have confidence that if this legislation is enacted it will be of further assistance to the agencies which are charged with administering our narcotic control laws and treaties, and will be beneficial to the citizens of our Nation.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the legislation which has just passed the House has as its meritorious purpose the more effective participation by the United States under certain conventions and protocols providing for controls over narcotic drugs.

The bill establishes a comprehensive system of licensing and control over the manufacture, distribution, and use of both natural and synthetic narcotic drugs. It is my understanding that the legislation has been considered by and received approval of the pharmaceutical industry and also has been approved by the executive departments concerned with this subject. The Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in reporting this legislation to the House.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, in order to conserve time, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the author of all of these bills except one that will be called up today, and I may be permitted to extend our remarks immediately following the passage of the bill; and in the case of the one exception that the gentleman from Missouri may have permission to extend his remarks following the passage of H.R. 529.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

TAX ON ISSUANCE OF SHARES BY INVESTMENT COMPANIES

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 6132) relating to the rate of tax on the issuance of shares or certificates of stock by regulated investment companies, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of section 4301 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to imposition of documentary stamp tax on original issue of shares or certificates of stock) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; except that such rate shall be 4 cents instead of 10 cents in the case of shares or certificates issued by a corporation to which subchapter M of chapter 1 applies for the taxable year during which such share or certificate is issued".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall apply with respect to shares and certificates issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 6132, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Under present law the documentary stamp tax on original issues of stock is levied at the rate of 10 cents per $100 of actual value. The documentary stamp tax on stock transfers, on the other hand, is levied at the rate of 4 cents per $100 of actual value.

Regulated investment companies which operate as open-end mutual investment companies, however, do not usually provide for the trading of their securities. Instead they issue new securities to those desiring to buy their stock, and redeem the stock of those desiring to sell. As a result they pay a 10-cents-per-$100 issuance tax on transactions which to others would result in a transfer tax of 4 cents per $100 of actual value.

H.R. 6132 provides that the issuance tax in the case of qualifying regulated investment companies is to be imposed at the rate of 4 cents per $100 of actual value, rather than the 10-cent rate otherwise applicable. This is to be effective for stock sold after the date of enactment of this bill.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this legislation was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. The bill relates to the rate of tax on the issuance of shares or certificates of stocks by regulated investment companies.

Under present law the stamp tax on original issues of stock is 10 cents per $100 of actual value. On the other hand the stamp transfer tax is levied at the rate of 4 cents per $100 of actual value. Regulated investment companies generally do not provide for the trading of their securities. Instead, they issue new securities to those persons who desire to buy their stock and redeem the stock of those desiring to sell. Because of the new issuance of stock to new purchasers—instead of transferring already issued stock—such transactions are subject to the stock issuance tax at the 10-cent rate.

H.R. 6132 would alleviate this problem by providing that the issuance tax in the case of qualified regulated investment companies would be imposed at the rate of 4 cents per $100 of actual value.

TAX ON CERTAIN LAMINATED TIRES

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 6785) to amend section 4071 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to fix a tax of 1 cent per pound of certain laminated tires produced from used tires, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 4071(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to tax on tires and tubes) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "other tires" in paragraph (2) the following "(other than laminated tires to which paragraph (5) applies)"; and

(2) by adding after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) Laminated tires (not of the type used on highway vehicles) which consist wholly of scrap rubber from used tire casings with an internal metal fastening agent, 1 cent a pound."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to articles sold on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 10 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, after line 7, insert:

"(c) Section 209(c)(1)(E) of the Highway Revenue Act of 1956 (relating to transfer to the Highway Trust Fund of amounts equivalent to certain taxes) is amended by striking out 'section 4071(a) (1), (2), and (3)' and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 4071(s) (1), (2), (3), and (5)'."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 6785, which was introduced by our colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the Honorable JAMES B. FRAZIER, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. The principal provisions of the bill may be briefly summarized as follows:

H.R. 6785 provides a tax of 1 cent a pound in the case of the sale of "laminated" tires not of the type used on highway vehicles if the tires consist wholly of scrap rubber from used tire casings and have an internal metal fastening agent. This is in lieu of the 5-cents-a-pound tax which otherwise would apply.

A "laminated" tire consists of a series of rubber pads—cut from scrap rubber tires—held together by a metal band on which the pads are threaded in a manner to form a complete circle. These tires are used for off-highway purposes where the terrain is rough or where there is the hazard of puncture in the case of pneumatic tires. They are used primarily on lifts, cranes, payloaders, weed cutters, and similar types of industrial and farm equipment.

This amendment is to be effective as of the beginning of the first month starting more than 10 days after the date of enactment of this bill.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under present law there is imposed a tax of 8 cents a pound in the case of tires of the type used on highway vehicles and a tax of 5 cents a pound in the case of other tires. It has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means that the existing tax provisions on tires impose a particular hardship on a relatively recent development in a tire product known as laminated tires. These tires are used essentially for off-highway purposes and because they are particularly heavyweight the tax becomes unusually burdensome.

To correct this inequity the bill which has just been approved by the House would provide a tax of 1 cent a pound in the case of the sale of laminated tires not of the type used on highway vehicles if the tire consists wholly of scrap rubber from used tire casings and has an internal metal fastening agent.

The Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in favorably reporting this legislation to the House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ROBERTS] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6785, to fix a 1-cent-per-pound tax on certain laminated tires produced from used tires.

I have for some time been interested in this matter and have supported all along the efforts of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] to correct an inequitable situation in which the current 5-cent-per-pound tax is imposed on laminated tires.

Members should understand what laminated tires are.

These tires are the type used off the highway in rough terrain, as in farm equipment or certain industrial equipment. They are not pneumatic tires and do not perform the same functions as pneumatic tires. They can only be used on slow-moving equipment traveling about 10 to 15 miles per hour.

Laminated tires are made of segments of scrap tires joined together by an internal metal band. The scrap tires used to make laminated tires have already been taxed at the rate of 5 cents a pound. To impose another 5 cents a pound tax on laminated tires is to impose double taxation. This puts those manufacturers who must pay the laminated tire tax at the present rate under a tremendous burden, particularly when it is realized that most of these manufacturers are small businessmen who have only a small profit margin.

These manufacturers are forced to pass this heavy tax burden on to their consumers. Many of these consumers are farmers, and this is one of the reasons why our farmers are laboring under disadvantageous conditions.

It is certainly not fair to continue to impose the same tax upon the extremely heavy laminated tires that is imposed on the relatively lighter pneumatic tires.

The tax rate provided under H.R. 6785 is, I believe, eminently fair and one with which the manufacturers can live.

I urge passage of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that this bill which I introduced, H.R. 6785, was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means and has passed the House of Representatives. The bill should be of assistance to young and growing small businesses. I am pleased to state that in my area there are those who engage in this business of manufacturing laminated tires, and I sincerely trust that this legislation, which has now passed the House of Representatives and which I hope will be speedily considered by the Senate, will relieve a hardship with respect to this matter, and should involve no cost to the Government.

COVERAGE FOR YEARS BEFORE 1951 UNDER SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 5920) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide that an individual who had maximum earnings for a year before 1951 shall be credited with four quarters of coverage for such year—with certain exceptions—in the same manner as is provided for years after 1950, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the second sentence of section 213(a)(2)(A) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows: "In the case of any individual who was paid, in a calendar year prior to 1951, $3,000 or more in wages, each quarter of such year (excepting any quarter after the quarter in which such individual died, and excepting any quarter any part of which was included in a period of disability (other than the initial quarter and the last quarter of such period)) shall be deemed a quarter of coverage."

SEC. 2. (a) The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall apply only with respect to monthly insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act for months after the month in which this Act is enacted, and with respect to lump-sum death payments under such title II in the case of deaths occurring after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, notwithstanding section 215(f)(1) of the Social Security Act, shall recompute the primary insurance amount of any individual who is entitled to monthly insurance benefits under title II of such Act for the month in which this Act is enacted (or whose survivors are entitled on the basis of his wages and self-employment income to monthly insurance benefits under title II of such Act for such month) and who in any calendar year before 1951 was paid the maximum wages includible (for that year) under title II of such Act as then in effect but was credited with less than four quarters of coverage, upon application filed by such individual or one of such survivors, taking into account in such recomputation the amendment made by the first section of this Act. No recomputation under this subsection shall be regarded as a recomputation under section 215(f) of the Social Security Act. Any such recomputation shall be effective for and after the twelfth month before the month in which such application is filed but in no case for any month before the month following the month in which this Act is enacted.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That section 213(a)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out all that precedes clause (iii) of subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'(2) The term "quarter of coverage" means a quarter in which the individual has been paid $50 or more in wages (except wages for agricultural labor paid after 1954) or for which he has been credited (as determined under section 212) with $100 or more of self-employment income, except that—

"'(i) no quarter after the quarter in which such individual died shall be a quarter of coverage, and no quarter any part of which was included in a period of disability (other than the initial quarter and the last quarter of such period) shall be a quarter of coverage;

"'(ii) if the wages paid to any individual in any calendar year equal $3,000 or more in the case of a calendar year before 1951, or $3,600 in the case of a calendar year after 1950 and before 1955, or $4,200 in the case of a calendar year after 1954 and before 1959, or $4,800 in the case of a calendar year after 1958, each quarter of such year shall (subject to clause (i)) to be a quarter of coverage;'.

"SEC. 2. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendment made by the first section of this Act shall apply only in the case of monthly benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, and the lump-sum death payment under section 202 of such Act, based on the wages and self-employment income of an individual—

"(1) who becomes entitled to benefits under section 202(a) or 223 of such Act on the basis of an application filed after the month in which this Act is enacted; or

"(2) who is (or would, but for the provisions of subsection (f)(6) of section 215 of the Social Security Act, be) entitled to a recomputation of his primary insurance amount under subsection (f)(2)(A) of such section 215 on the basis of an application filed after the month in which this Act is enacted; or

"(3) who dies without becoming entitled to benefits under subsection (a) of such section 202 or under such section 223, and (unless he dies a currently insured individual but not a fully insured individual (as those terms are defined under section 214 of the Social Security Act)) without leaving any individual entitled (on the basis of his wages and self-employment income) to survivor's benefits or a lump-sum death payment under such section 202 on the basis of an application filed prior to the month following the month in which this Act is enacted; or

"(4) who dies after the month in which this Act is enacted and whose survivors are (or would, but for the provisions of subsection (f)(6) of such section 215, be) entitled to a recomputation of his primary insurance amount under subsection (f)(4)(A) of such section 215; or

"(5) who dies prior to the month following the month in which this Act is enacted and (A) whose survivors are (or would, but for the provisions of subsection (f)(6) of such section 215, be) entitled to a recomputation of his primary insurance amount under subsection (f)(4)(A) of such section 215, and (B) on the basis of whose wages and self-employment income no individual was entitled to survivor's benefits or a lump-sum death payment under such section 202 on the basis of an application filed prior to the month following the month in which this Act is enacted (and no individual was entitled to such a benefit, without the filing of an application, for the month in which this Act is enacted or any month prior thereto); or

(6) who files an application for a recomputation under subparagraph (B) of section 102(f)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1954 after the month in which this Act is enacted and is (or would, but for the fact that such recomputation would not result in a higher primary insurance amount, be) entitled to have his primary insurance amount recomputed under such subparagraph; or

"(7) who dies and whose survivors are (or would, but for the fact that such recomputation would not result in a higher primary insurance amount for such individual, be) entitled, on the basis of an application filed after the month in which this Act is enacted, to have his primary insurance amount recomputed under the provisions of subparagraph (B) of section 102(f)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1954.

(b) The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall also be applicable in the case of applications for disability determinations under section 216(i) of the Social Security Act filed after the month in which this Act is enacted.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, in the case of any individual who would not be a fully insured individual under section 214(a) of the Social Security Act except for the enactment of this Act, no benefits shall be payable on the basis of his wages and self-employment income for any month prior to the month following the month in which this Act is enacted."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the bill H.R. 5920 which was introduced by my colleague, Hon. ALBERT H. BOSCH, amends title II of the Social Security Act to change the rule for crediting quarters of coverage on the basis of maximum creditable wages paid in years before 1951 to conform to the rule applied in the case of maximum creditable earnings in years after 1950. Under present law, generally, a person who was paid the maximum amount of creditable wages in a calendar year before 1951 is deemed to have a quarter of coverage in each quarter following his first quarter of coverage of such year. Under the bill, a person who was paid the maximum amount of creditable wages in a calendar year before 1951 would be deemed to have a quarter of coverage in each quarter of such year without regard to when he received his first quarter of coverage. In general, the change would be effective in the case of applications for benefits or specified benefit recomputations filed after the month in which the bill is enacted, and in the case of applications for determinations of disability filed after such month of enactment.

The committee report which accompanied the bill discusses the effect of the bill and comments as to the possible number of cases involved.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under present law an individual who receives the maximum creditable wages for OASI coverage is given credit for four quarters of coverage regardless of when in the year the wages were earned. However, present law contains a discrimination with respect to wages earned in a calendar year before 1951 in that an individual earning the maximum creditable amount is only given credit for those quarters of coverage which include the period of his first income in the calendar year and the quarters subsequent thereto. Thus, for example, an individual who earned the maximum creditable amount after June 1949 and had no creditable earnings in that calendar year prior to that period would receive credit for only two quarters of coverage.

This discrimination has served to preclude some individuals from qualifying for old-age and survivors insurance coverage.

The bill, H.R. 5920, would correct this discrimination by permitting such an individual to obtain four quarters of coverage under circumstances such as I have just described. This legislation was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BOSCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill amends title II of the Social Security Act to provide that an individual who had maximum earnings for a year before 1951 shall be credited with 4 quarters of coverage for such year in the same manner as is provided for years after 1950.

The bill would change the rule in the present Social Security Act for crediting quarters of coverage on the basis of maximum creditable wages paid in years before 1951 to conform to the rule for maximum creditable earnings in years after 1950. Under present law, a person who was paid the maximum amount of creditable wages in a calendar year before 1951 is deemed to have a quarter of coverage in each quarter following his first quarter of coverage of such year. Under this bill, a person who was paid the maximum amount of creditable wages in a calendar year before 1951 would be deemed to have a quarter of coverage in each quarter of such year without regard to when he received his first quarter of coverage. The change would be effective for months after the month in which the bill is enacted and would be applicable both to people who were then already on the benefit roles and to future beneficiaries, on the basis of applications filed at any time after enactment.

If this bill is enacted, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare reports that a small number of people who do not have enough quarters of coverage to be fully insured under the present provisions of law would be credited with enough additional quarters of coverage to become insured for benefits. In other words the law is simplified because the same rules for crediting quarters of coverage would apply to all years in which a person had maximum creditable earnings, whether those years occurred before 1951 or after 1950.

A relatively small number of present beneficiaries who had earned the maximum creditable amount of wages in one or more years before 1951 might have their benefits increased somewhat by enactment of the bill. These generally would be people who were not fully insured at age 65 or 62 years for women but who worked beyond that age and earned enough quarters of coverage to become insured at a later date. In a small number of these cases such a person may be credited with enough additional quarters of coverage before 1951 to be insured at an earlier date than under present law.

The people most likely to be helped by enactment of the bill would be people who would otherwise be uninsured.

INCOME TAX TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DEALERS' RESERVES

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 8684) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for deferral of taxation of amounts withheld by a bank or finance company from a dealer in personal property to secure obligations of the dealer, until such time as such amounts are paid to or made available to the dealer, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, (a) subpart B of part II of subchapter E of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to taxable year for which items are included in gross income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 456. AMOUNTS CREDITED TO DEALER'S RESERVES

"(a) EXCLUSION OF AMOUNTS CREDITED TO DEALER'S RESERVES. A taxpayer engaged in the trade or business of holding tangible personal property for sale to customers who—

"(1) computes taxable income on the accrual method of accounting;

"(2) in the ordinary course of his trade or business, sells articles on credit and receives as the whole or part payment of the purchase price, the customer's conditional sales contract, note, or other evidence of indebtedness; and

"(3) then in the ordinary course of his trade or business sells or otherwise disposes of such conditional sales contracts, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness to a bank or a finance company, may elect, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate, to exclude from gross income that part of the consideration derived from the sale of other disposition of customer's conditional sales contracts, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness which is credited to the taxpayer's account by the bank or finance company, during the taxable year, and which is held by the bank or finance company to secure any obligation of the taxpayer to the bank or finance company.

"(b) LIMITATION.—The amount excluded by reason of subsection (a) shall not exceed, in the aggregate, in any taxable year, the lower of $30,000 or 5 percent of the total value of the customer's conditional sales contracts, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness with respect to which the bank or finance company has a right to withhold an amount to secure the obligations of the taxpayer to the bank or finance company.

"(c) REFERRED AMOUNTS TO BE TAKEN INTO INCOME.—Amounts excluded from gross income by reason of subsection (a) shall be included in gross income in the taxable year in which such amounts are paid to, or otherwise made available for withdrawal by the bank or finance company to the taxpayer."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart B of part II of subchapter E of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Sec. 456. Amounts credited to dealers."

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1956.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

"This Act may be cited as the 'Dealer Reserve Income Adjustment Act of 1959'.

SEC. 2. PERSONS TO WHOM THIS ACT APPLIES.

"This Act shall apply to any person who, for his most recent taxable year ending on or before June 22, 1959—

"(1) computed taxable income under an accrual method of accounting.

"(2) treated any dealer reserve income, which should have been taken into account (under the accrual method of accounting) for such taxable year, as accruable for a subsequent taxable year, and

"(3) before July 1, 1960, makes an election under section 3(a) or 4(a) of this Act.

"SEC. 3. ELECTION TO HAVE SECTION 481 APPLY.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If—

"(1) for the year of the change (determined under subsection (b)), the treatment of dealer reserve income by any person to whom this Act applies is changed to a method proper under the accrual method of accounting (whether or not such person initiated the change),

"(2) such person makes an election under this subsection, and

"(3) such person does not make the election provided by section 4(a),

then, for purposes of section 481 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the change described in paragraph (1) shall be treated as a change in method of accounting not initiated by the taxpayer.

"(b) YEAR OF CHANGE, ETC.—In applying section 481 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for purposes of this section, the "year of the change" in the case of any person is—

"(1) except as provided in paragraph (2), the first taxable year ending after June 22, 1959, or

"(2) the earliest taxable year (whether the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 applies to such year) for which—

"(A) on or before June 22, 1959—

"(i) the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate issued a notice of deficiency, or a written notice of a proposed deficiency, with respect to dealer reserve income, or

"(ii) such person filed with the Secretary or his delegate a claim for refund or credit with respect to dealer reserve income, and

"(B) the assessment of any deficiency, or the refund or credit of any overpayment, whichever is applicable, is not prevented by the operation of any law or rule of law.

For purposes of this section, section 481 of such Code shall be treated as applying to any year of the change to which the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 applies.

"SEC. 4. ELECTION TO HAVE SECTION 481 NOT APPLY; PAYMENT IN INSTALLMENTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If a person to whom this Act applies makes an election under this subsection, then for purposes of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (and the corresponding provisions of prior law) a change in the treatment of dealer reserve income to a method proper under the accrual method of accounting shall be treated as not a change in method of accounting in respect of which section 481 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 applies. Any election under this subsection shall apply to all taxable years ending on or before June 22, 1959 (whether the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or the corresponding provisions of prior law apply), for which the assessment of any deficiency, or for which refund or credit of any overpayment, whichever is applicable, is not prevented by the operation of any law or rule of law.

"(b) ELECTION TO PAY TAX IN INSTALLMENTS.—

"(1) ELIGIBILITY.—If the net increase in tax (as defined in paragraph (2)) which results solely from the effect of the election provided by subsection (a) exceeds $2,500, then the taxpayer may elect (at the time the election is made under subsection (a)) to pay in two or more (but not to exceed 10) equal annual installments any portion of such net increase which (on the date of such election) is unpaid.

"(2) NET INCREASE IN TAX DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'net increase in tax' means the amount (if any) by which—

"(A) the sum of the increases in tax (including interest) for all taxable years to which the election applies and which is attributable to the election, exceeds

"(B) the sum of the decreases in tax (including interest) for all taxable years to which the election applies and which is attributable to the election.

For purposes of this paragraph, interest for the period before the date of the election shall be computed as provided in chapter 67 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (or the corresponding provisions of prior revenue laws).

"(c) DUE DATE FOR INSTALLMENTS.—If an election is made under subsection (b), the first installment shall be paid on or before the date prescribed by section 6151(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for payment of the tax for the taxable year in which the election was made, and each succeeding installment shall be paid on or before the date which is one year after the date prescribed by this subsection for payment of the preceding installment.

"(d) EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT REDETERMINATION OF TAX.—

"(1) REDETERMINATION.—If—

"(A) the taxpayer makes an election under subsection (b), and

"(B) there is a redetermination of the taxpayer's tax for any taxable year to which the election provided by subsection (a) applies, then the net increase in tax (as defined in subsection (b)(2) shall be redetermined.

"(2) EFFECT OF INCREASE.—If the redetermination described in paragraph (1)(B) results in an increase in the net increase in tax (as defined in subsection (b)(2)), the resulting increase shall be prorated to all the installments. The part of such resulting increase so prorated to any installment the date for payment of which has not arrived shall be collected at the same time as, and as a part of, such installment. The part of such resulting increase so prorated to any installment the date for payment of which has arrived shall be paid upon notice and demand from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

"(3) EFFECT OF DECREASE.—

"For treatment of a decrease in the net increase in tax as the result of a redetermination described in paragraph (1)(B), see section 6403 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to overpayment of installment).

"(e) SUSPENSION OF INTEREST.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an election under subsection (a) applies and there is a net increase in tax (as defined in subsection (b)(2)), no interest shall be imposed on any underpayment (and no interest shall be paid on any overpayment) attributable to such election for the period beginning on the date of such election and ending on the date prescribed by section 6151(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for payment of the tax for the taxable year in which the election was made.

"(2) NO INTEREST DURING INSTALLMENT PERIOD.—If an election under subsection (b) applies, no interest shall be imposed for the period on or after the date fixed for payment of the first installment unless payment of unpaid installments is accelerated under subsection (f) or (g).

"(3) INTEREST WHERE PAYMENT IS ACCELERATED.—If payment is accelerated under subsection (f) or (g), interest determined in accordance with the provisions of section 6601 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 on the entire unpaid tax shall be payable—

"(A) if payment is accelerated under subsection (f), from the date of notice and demand provided by such subsection to the date such tax is paid, or

"(B) if payment is accelerated under subsection (g), from the date fixed for paying the unpaid installment to the date such tax is paid.

"(f) TERMINATION OF INSTALLMENT PAYMENT PRIVILEGE.—The extension of time provided by this section for payment of tax shall cease to apply, and any unpaid installments shall be paid upon notice and demand from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate, if—

"(1) in the case of a taxpayer who is an individual, he dies or ceases to engage in the trade or business in respect of which the election under subsection (b) applies,

"(2) in the case of a taxpayer who is a partner, the entire interest of such partner is transferred or liquidated or the partnership ceases to engage in the trade or business in respect of which the election under subsection (b) applies, or

"(3) in the case of a taxpayer which is a corporation, the taxpayer ceases to engage in the trade or business in respect of which the election under subsection (b) applies, unless the unpaid portion of the tax payable in installments is required to be taken into account by the acquiring corporation under section 5(d).

"(g) FAILURE TO PAY INSTALLMENT.—If any installment under this section is not paid on or before the date fixed for its payment by this section (including any extension of time for payment of such installment), the unpaid installments shall be paid upon notice and demand from the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

"(h) SUSPENSION OF RUNNING OF PERIODS OF LIMITATION.—The running of the periods of limitation provided by section 6502 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (or corresponding provision of prior law) for the collection of any amount of tax payable in installments under this section shall be suspended for the period of any extension of time for payment granted under this section.

"SEC. 5. DEFINITIONS; SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) DEALER RESERVE INCOME.—For purposes of this Act, the term 'dealer reserve income' means that part of the consideration derived by any person from the sale or other disposition of customers' sales contracts, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness (or derived from customers' finance charges connected with such sales or other dispositions) which is—

"(1) attributable to the sale by such person to such customers, in the ordinary course of his trade or business, of real property or tangible personal property, and

"(2) held in a reserve account, by the financial institution to which such person disposed of such evidences of indebtedness, for the purpose of securing obligations of such person, obligations under such evidences of indebtedness, or both.

"(b) FINANCIAL INSTITUTION.—For purposes of this Act, the term 'financial institution' means any person regularly engaged in the business of acquiring evidences of indebtedness of the kind described in subsection (a).

"(c) OTHER TERMS; APPLICATION OF OTHER LAWS.—Except where otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly intended, terms used in this Act shall have the same meaning as when used in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and all provisions of law shall apply with respect to this Act as if this Act were a part of such Code.

"(d) ACQUIRING CORPORATION.—In the case of the acquisition of assets of a corporation by another corporation in a distribution or transfer described in section 381(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the acquiring corporation shall, for purposes of this Act, be treated as if it were the distributor or transferor corporation.

"(e) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, including regulations relating to—

"(1) the application of the provisions of this Act in the case of partnerships, and

"(2) the manner in which the elections provided by this Act are to be made."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the bill which the House just passed was introduced by our colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the Honorable FRANK IKARD, and was unanimously reported by the committee. I may say here that I also had a bill pending before our committee on this subject.

As is more fully explained in the committee report on this bill, it deals with the time of reporting of dealer reserves. The usual dealers' reserve arises from the sale of customers' installment paper to finance companies. The way in which these reserves arise can be illustrated by an example of an automobile dealer, a business where dealer reserves have been used quite widely. Initially the dealer sells a car to a customer, accepting his note together with a cash downpayment and trade-in as the selling price of the car. The customer then executes a note, usually on forms supplied by a finance company, and the dealer then sells the installment paper to the finance company in return for a partial payment to him by the finance company of the face amount of the paper. The finance company, however, reserves, or holds back, a portion of the balance due the dealer and in addition may set aside a portion of the finance charge on the paper otherwise due the dealer. Losses incurred by the finance company may be charged against these dealers' reserves, either the portion sometimes referred to as the "holdback" or the amount attributable to a division of the finance charge between the finance company and the dealer. In addition, if a customer pays off his note ahead of time this also may be charged against these reserves, in this case usually against the finance charge portion.

In transactions of this general type the question is whether this reserve is income to the dealer in the year of the sale of the article and the sale of the installment paper to the finance company or, on the other hand, is income to the dealer only when he actually receives the reserved amount in cash from the finance company.

The Supreme Court on June 22, 1959, in Commissioner against Hansen, Commissioner against Glover, and Baird against Commissioner, held in these cases that the specific reserves involved were properly reportable as income when "the dealers acquired a fixed right to receive the amounts so retained by the finance companies." These cases held that dealer reserve income is to be reported at the time it is properly accruable, or in general at the time of the sale of the installment paper where this immediately follows the sale of the property. However, many dealers following any of the numerous circuit court decisions to the contrary, have not reported this income until the reserves were withdrawn by the dealers from the finance companies.

In view of this, H.R. 8684 provides two alternative methods for paying the tax due on the income which has not previously been reported. First, it provides that such amounts can be treated as required changes in methods of accounting. In general this means that the reserves built up prior to 1954 need not be reported for tax purposes, and that only the excess of the current balance over the 1954 balance in the reserve is to be reported. A second alternative provided permits the computation of the deficiencies—or overassessments—which would arise if the income had been reported in the proper years, and then the sum of these amounts—plus interest up to the time of selecting this alternative—may be paid in 10 annual installments, generally beginning in 1961.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, this legislation was unanimously reported by the committee. It is designed to relieve a hardship situation and thus is very meritorious legislation.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this legislation pertains to the timing of reporting for tax purposes with respect to dealer reserves and provides transitional rules to bring the reporting of dealer reserve income into conformity with proper accounting methods.

A dealer reserve is a byproduct of installment sales methods of merchandising that arises from the scale of customers' installment paper to finance companies. The finance company holds back a reserve of the balance due from the customer to the dealer. This reserve is to provide indemnification of the finance company for bad credit risks with the dealer eligible to receive the reserve or a portion thereof at the time the obligation is discharged. The Supreme Court has held that these reserves constitute income to the dealer when he acquired a fixed right to receive the amounts so retained by the finance company. The actual fact is that because of diversity of court holdings on this subject there has been great uncertainty in the business community as to the proper way in which dealer reserves should be treated for tax purposes.

The Committee on Ways and Means in acting on this legislation has approved the concept that dealer reserve income should be reported on a proper accrual accounting basis. Recognizing that undue taxpayer hardship might result from requiring a transition to be made in one year, the bill as amended by the Committee on Ways and Means provides two alternative methods for paying the tax due on the income which has not been previously reported. The bill provides as one alternative that amounts that have not been previously reported can be treated as required changes in accounting method with the result that reserves built up prior to 1954 need not be reported and that only the excess of the current balance over the 1954 balance is to be reported. The second alternative provided under H.R. 8684 would allow the computation of the deficiencies or overassessments which would arise if the income had been reported in the proper years and then the total of these amounts with interest up to the time of selecting the alternative may be paid in 10 annual installments beginning in 1961.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation which has just passed the House was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

CREDITS AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT TAX—MERGED CORPORATIONS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 6482) relating to the credits against the unemployment tax in the case of merged corporations, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 3302 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) SUCCESSOR EMPLOYER. If a corporation (hereinafter referred to as successor employer) acquires substantially all of the properties of another corporation (hereinafter referred to as the predecessor) in connection with a statutory merger or consolidation of the two corporations, and if the predecessor during the calendar year in which such merger or consolidation occurs does not qualify as an employer (as defined in section 3306(a)) but is required to pay contributions with respect to such year into the unemployment fund of any State, then, for the purpose of determining for the successor employer the credits against tax allowed under subsections (a) and (b) for the calendar year in which such merger or consolidation took place, the predecessor and the successor employer shall be considered as one person for such year."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be effective as if it were a part of such Code on the date of its enactment. Such amendment shall also be applicable for the purposes of section 1601 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, in the same manner as if a corresponding amendment to the provisions of such section 1601 had been a part of section 201(a) of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That (a) section 3302 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to credits against tax imposed by Federal Unemployment Tax Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(d) SUCCESSOR EMPLOYER.—Subject to the limits provided by subsection (c), if—

"'(1) a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the successor) acquires properties of one or more other corporations (each of which is hereinafter referred to as the predecessor) in connection with a statutory merger or consolidation of the corporations (within the meaning of section 368(a)(1)(A)), and

"'(2) the predecessor is not an employer for the calendar year in which such merger or consolidation took place, then, for the calendar year in which such merger or consolidation took place, in addition to the credits allowed under subsections (a) and (b), the successor may credit against the tax imposed by section 3301 for such year the credits which (without regard to subsection (c)) would have been allowable to the predecessor under subsections (a) and (b) and this subsection for such year if the predecessor had been an employer.'

"(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to the calendar year 1955 and each calendar year thereafter. Provisions having the same effect as the provisions added to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by such amendment shall be deemed to be included in the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 and shall apply with respect to the tax imposed by section 1600 of such Code for the calendar years 1951 through 1954."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 6482, which was introduced by our colleague on the committee, the Honorable JAMES B. UTT, amends the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code relating to the unemployemnt tax. The bill may be summarized as follows: At present a corporation, which within the first 20 weeks of the year is merged or consolidated in a second corporation, is not treated as an employer for purposes of the Federal unemployment tax but generally is so considered for most State unemployment compensation taxes. As a result, the first corporation usually must pay the State tax in such cases, and then the second corporation must pay the full Federal tax but cannot obtain the credit usually available for the State tax paid by the first. This faulty operation of the credit for State taxes is overcome in the bill by permitting the same credit to the second corporation in such cases for the State taxes paid by the first as if this first corporation had been the employer.

The amendment which is made by H.R. 6482 applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1950.

This bill was reported unanimously by your committee.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have joined with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in urging House support of the legislation which has just passed the House relating to the unemployment tax. Under existing law a corporation which is merged or consolidated in a second corporation within the first 20 weeks of the year is not treated as an employer for purposes of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act but is generally so considered for most State unemployment compensation taxes. As a consequence the first corporation usually must pay the State tax and the second corporation is required to pay the Federal tax but cannot avail itself of the tax credit available with respect to State taxes paid by the first corporation. The bill, H.R 6482 would correct this deficiency by allowing to the second corporation the same credit for the State taxes paid by the first corporation as if the latter had been the employer.

FREE IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN SEAWEEDS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 5887) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place ground, powdered, or granulated seaweeds on the free list, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That paragraph 1722 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. sec. 1201, par. 1722) is amended by adding after "not specially provided for" a semicolon and the following: "but including ground, powdered, or granulated seaweeds, no matter what the degree of fineness".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall apply in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, after the date of enactment of this Act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That (a) paragraph 1722 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1722) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; and seaweeds not further manufactured than ground, powered, or granulated".

"(b) Paragraph 1540 of such Act (19 U.S.C., sec. 1001, par. 1540) is amended by inserting immediately after 'if manufactured or dyed' the following: '(except as provided in paragraph 1722)'.

"SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after thirty days after the date of the enactment of this Act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 5887, which was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable HASTINGS KEITH, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. The bill provides for an amendment to the Tariff Act of 1930 to place ground, powdered, or granulated seaweeds on the free list. At present, ground, powered, or granulated seaweeds are dutiable under paragraph 1540 of the Tariff Act of 1930 at a rate of 5 percent ad valorem. Such seaweeds are used by domestic processors to produce an end product in the form of a powdered extractive used in foods and other products. The ground, powdered, or granulated seaweeds constitute raw materials for such domestic processes. Duty-free treatment, as provided for in H.R. 5887, would reduce the raw materials' costs for these domestic processors.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the legislation that has just passed the House would place ground, powdered, or granulated seaweeds on the free list for tariff purposes. The seaweed that is covered by this legislation is used primarily by domestic processors in producing certain thickening ingredients for food preparations. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in reporting this legislation to the House.

INTERNAL REVENUE CODE—RELATING TO POSSESSIONS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 5547) to amend certain provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to possessions of the United States, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 932(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the Virgin Islands) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Tax liability incurred to the Virgin Islands pursuant to this title, as made applicable in the Virgin Islands by such Act, or pursuant to section 28(a) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, approved July 22, 1954 (48 U.S.C. 1642), shall not be reduced or remitted in any way, directly or indirectly, whether by grant, subsidy, or other similar payment, by any law enacted in the Virgin Islands."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That (a) subpart D of part III of subchapter N of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to possessions of the United States) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 934. LIMITATION ON REDUCTION IN INCOME TAX LIABILITY INCURRED TO THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

"'(a) GENERAL RULE.—Tax liability incurred to the Virgin Islands pursuant to this subtitle, as made applicable in the Virgin Islands by the Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes", approved July 12, 1921 (48 U.S.C. 1397), or pursuant to section 28(a) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, approved July 22, 1954 (48 U.S.C. 1642), shall not be reduced or remitted in any way, directly or indirectly, whether by grant, subsidy, or other similar payment, by any law enacted in the Virgin Islands, except to the extent provided in subsection (b) or (c).

"'(b) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN DOMESTIC AND VIRGIN ISLANDS CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a domestic corporation or a Virgin Islands corporation, subsection (a) shall not apply (if the information required by subsection (d) is supplied) to the extent such corporation derived its income from sources without the United States if the conditions of both paragraph (1) and paragraph (2) are satisfied:

"'(1) THREE-YEAR PERIOD.—If 80 percent or more of the gross income of such corporation (computed without the benefit of section 931) for the 3-year period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of such taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources within the Virgin Islands; and

"'(2) TRADE OR BUSINESS.—If 50 percent or more of the gross income of such corporation (computed without the benefit of section 931) for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a trade or business within the Virgin Islands.

For the purposes of this subsection, all amounts received by such corporation within the United States, whether derived from sources within or without the United States, shall be considered as being derived from sources within the United States.

"'(c) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN RESIDENTS OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply in the case of an individual citizen of the United States who is a bona fide resident of the Virgin Islands during the entire taxable year (if the information required by subsection (d) is supplied), to the extent his income is derived from sources within the Virgin Islands (except that subsection (a) shall apply in the case of amounts received for services performed as an employee of the United States or any agency thereof).

"'(d) REQUIREMENT TO SUPPLY INFORMATION.—Subsections (b) and (c) shall apply only in the case of persons who supply (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate may by regulations prescribe) such information as the Secretary or his delegate may by regulations prescribe for purposes of determining the applicability of such subsections.

"(b) The table of sections for such subpart D is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'Sec. 934. Limitation in reduction in income tax liability incurred to the Virgin Islands.'"

"SEC. 2. (a) Subchapter C of chapter 11 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to miscellaneous estate tax provisions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 2209. CERTAIN RESIDENTS OF POSSESSIONS CONSIDERED NONRESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

"'A decedent who was a citizen of the United States and a resident of a possession thereof at the time of his death shall, for purposes of the tax imposed by this chapter, be considered a "nonresident not a citizen of the United States" within the meaning of that term wherever used in this title, but only if such person acquired his United States citizenship solely by reason of (1) his being a citizen of such possession of the United States, or (2) his birth or residence within such possession of the United States.'

"(b) The table of sections for subchapter C of chapter 11 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'Sec. 2209. Certain residents of possessions considered nonresidents not citizens of the United States.'

"SEC. 3. Section 2106(a)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to exemption in determining taxable estate of nonresidents not citizens) is amended to read as follows:

"'(3) EXEMPTION.—

"'(A) GENERAL RULE.—An exemption of $2,000.

"'(B) RESIDENTS OF POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.—In the case of a decedent who is considered to be a "nonresident not a citizen of the United States" under the provisions of section 2209, the exemption shall be the greater of (i) $2,000, or (ii) that proportion of the exemption authorized by section 2052 which the value of that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States bears to the value of his entire gross estate wherever situated.'

"SEC. 4. (a) Section 2501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to imposition of gift tax) is amended by redesignating subsection (c) to be subsection (d) and by adding after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"'(c) CERTAIN RESIDENTS OF POSSESSIONS CONSIDERED NONRESIDENTS NOT CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES.—A donor who is a citizen of the United States and a resident of a possession thereof shall, for purposes of the tax imposed by this chapter, be considered a "nonresident not a citizen of the United States" within the meaning of that term wherever used in this title, but only if such donor acquired his United States citizenship solely by reason of (1) his being a citizen of such possession of the United States, or (2) his birth or residence within such possession of the United States.'

"(b) Section 2501(a) of such Code is amended by striking out 'nonresident who is not a citizen of the United States and' and inserting in lieu thereof 'resident not a citizen of the United States'.

"SEC. 5. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall apply to tax liability incurred with respect to taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1959.

"(b) The amendments made by sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall apply with respect to estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this Act.

"(c) The amendment made by section 4 of this Act shall apply with respect to gifts made after the date of the enactment of this Act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5547 which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means deals with two basic subjects. The first is concerned with the extent to which income tax liability incurred to the Virgin Islands can be reduced by grants, subsidies, or other similar payments. The second is concerned with the application of U.S. estate and gift taxes to residents of U.S. possessions who are also citizens of the United States by reason of citizenship in the possession.

First, the bill provides that income tax liability incurred to the Virgin Islands may be reduced by grants, subsidies, or similar payments in the case of corporations only if they are United States or Virgin Islands corporations, and in general only if in the past 3 years they have derived 80 percent of their income from sources within the Virgin Islands and 50 percent from the active conduct of a trade or business. Where such conditions are met the income tax liability of the corporations may be reduced only with respect to their income from sources without the United States. In the case of individuals, the bill provides that tax liability may be reduced only in the case of citizens of the United States—whether or not also citizens of the Virgin Islands—only if they are bona fide residents of the Virgin Islands for the entire year. Where these conditions are met the tax liability of the individuals may be reduced only with respect to income from sources within the Virgin Islands. These amendments are to apply to tax liability for taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1959.

Second, the bill provides that the estate and gift taxes are to apply to those who are U.S. citizens only by reason of citizenship in a U.S. possession and who are residents of a U.S. possession at the time they die or make a gift, in the same manner as in the case of those who are nonresidents not citizens of the United States. In general this means that they are to be subject to estate or gift tax only with respect to property situated in the United States—but not in the case of property situated in the possessions or elsewhere. The estate and gift tax amendments are to apply to estates of decedents dying after, or gifts made after, the date of enactment of this bill.

As I indicated, this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means and is supported by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this legislation amends certain provisions of the Internal Revenue Code pertaining to possessions of the United States and specifically relates to income taxation and estate and gift taxes affecting residents of the Virgin Islands.

The bill provides that income tax liability due to the Virgin Islands may be offset by grants, subsidies, or similar payments in the case of corporations only if they are U.S. or Virgin Islands corporations. To qualify for this treatment the bill requires that such corporation must for the past 3 years have derived 80 percent of its income from Virgin Island sources and 50 percent from the act of conduct for trade or business. A limitation is provided that where such conditions are met, the corporate tax liability may be reduced only with respect to income from sources without the United States.

In the case of individual taxpayers the bill would allow tax liability to be reduced in the case of citizens of the United States only if they are bona fide residents of the Virgin Islands for the entire year and then only with respect to income from sources within the Virgin Islands.

The bill also provides that estate and gift taxes are to apply to those U.S. citizens who have attained citizenship only by reason of their citizenship in a possession and who reside in a U.S. possession at the time of their death or at the time they make a gift in the same manner as in the case of those who are nonresidents not citizens of the United States. This change will have the effect of subjecting such persons to estate and gift taxes only with respect to property situated in the United States.

The Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in favorably reporting this legislation to the House.

SUPPLEMENTAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT TRUSTS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 8229) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from income tax for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to exemption from tax on corporations, certain organizations, etc.) is amended by adding after paragraph (16) the following new paragraph:

"(17) Trusts under plans providing exclusively for the payment of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits, including related termination benefits, if any, to a designated class or classes of employees, if no part of the net earnings of such trust inures (other than through such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this act shall apply only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1953, and ending after August 16, 1954.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to exemption from tax on corporations, certain organizations, etc.) is amended by adding after paragraph (16) the following new paragraph:

"'(17) (A) A trust or trusts forming part of a plan providing for the payment of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits, if—

"'(i) under the plan, it is impossible, at any time prior to the satisfaction of all liabilities with respect to employees under the plan, for any part of the corpus or income to be (within the taxable year or thereafter) used for, or diverted to, any purpose other than the providing of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits,

"'(ii) such benefits are payable to employees under a classification which is set forth in the plan and which is found by the Secretary or his delegate not to be discriminatory in favor of employees who are officers, shareholders, persons whose principal duties consist of supervising the work of other employees, or highly compensated employees, and

"'(iii) such benefits do not discriminate in favor of employees who are officers, shareholders, persons whose principal duties consist of supervising the work of other employees, or highly compensated employees. A plan shall not be considered discriminatory within the meaning of this clause merely because the benefits received under the plan bear a uniform relationship to the total compensation, or the basic or regular rate of compensation, of the employees covered by the plan.

"'(B) In determining whether a plan meets the requirements of subparagraph (A), any benefits provided under any other plan shall not be taken into consideration, except that a plan shall not be considered discriminatory—

"'(i) merely because the benefits under the plan which are first determined in a nondiscriminatory manner within the meaning of subparagraph (A) are then reduced by any sick, accident, or unemployment compensation benefits received under State or Federal law (or reduced by a portion of such benefits if determined in a nondiscriminatory man-manner), or

"'(ii) merely because the plan provides only for employees who are not eligible to receive sick, accident, or unemployment compensation benefits under State or Federal law the same benefits (or a portion of such benefits if determined in a nondiscriminatory manner) which such employees would receive under such laws if such employees were eligible for such benefits, or

"'(iii) merely because the plan provides only for employees who are not eligible under another plan (which meets the requirements of subparagraph (A)) of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits provided wholly by the employer the same benefits (or a portion of such benefits if determined in a nondiscriminatory manner) which such employees would receive under such other plan if such employees were eligible under such other plan, but only if the employees eligible under both plans would make a classification which would be nondiscriminatory within the meaning of subparagraph (A).

"'(C) A plan shall be considered to meet the requirements of subparagraph (A) during the whole of any year of the plan if on one day in each quarter it satisfies such requirements.

"'(D) The term "supplemental unemployment compensation benefits" means only—

"'(i) benefits which are paid to an employee because of his involuntary unemployment (whether or not temporary) resulting directly from a reduction in force, the discontinuance of a plant or operation, or other similar conditions, and

"'(ii) sick and accident benefits subordinate to the benefits described in clause (i).'

"SEC. 2. (a) Subsection (a) of section 503 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to denial of exemption to organizations engaged in prohibited transactions) is amended—

"(1) by revising paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"'(1) GENERAL RULE.—

"'(A) An organization described in section 501(c)(3) which is subject to the provisions of this section shall not be exempt from taxation under section 501(a) if it has engaged in a prohibited transaction after July 1, 1950.

"'(B) An organization described in section 501(c)(17) which is subject to the provisions of this section shall not be exempt from taxation under section 501(a) if it has engaged in a prohibited transaction after September 4, 1959.

"'(C) An organization described in section 401(a) which is subject to the provisions of this section shall not be exempt from taxation under section 501(a) if it has engaged in a prohibited transaction after March 1, 1954.', and

"(2) by striking out 'section 501(c)(3)' in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof section 501(c)(3) or (17)'.

"(b) Subsection (b) of such section 503 is amended by striking out 'section 501(c)(3)' and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 501(c)(3) or (17)'.

"(c) Subsection (d) of such section 503 is amended by striking out 'section 501(c)(3)' and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 501(c)(3) or (17)'.

"(d) Subsection (h) of such section 503 is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'section 401(a)' in the heading and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 401(a) and section 501(c)(17)', and

"(2) by striking out 'section 401(a)' in such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 401(a) or section 501(c)(17)'.

"SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a)(2) of section 511 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to imposition of tax on unrelated business income of charitable, etc., organizations) is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'and (6)' in the heading of subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof '(6), and (17)', and

"(2) by striking out 'or (6)' in the first sentence of subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof '(6), or (17)'.

"(b) Subsection (b) of such section 511 is amended by striking out 'section 501(c)(3)' in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 501(c)(3) or (17)'.

"SEC. 4. Section 513(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the definition of unrelated trade or business) is amended by striking out 'section 401(a)' and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 401(a), or section 501(c)(17),'.

"SEC. 5. Section 514(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to business leases) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(8) TRUSTS DESCRIBED IN SECTION 501(c)(17).—

"'(A) In the case of a trust described in section 501(c)(17), or in the case of a corporation described in section 501(c)(2), all of the stock of which was acquired before September 5, 1959, by a trust described in section 501(c)(17), any indebtedness incurred by such trust or such corporation before September 5, 1959, in connection with real property which is leased before September 5, 1959, and any indebtedness incurred by such trust or such corporation on or after such date necessary to carry out the terms of such lease, shall not be considered as an indebtedness with respect to such trust or such corporation for purposes of this subsection.

"'(B) In the application of paragraph (1), if a trust described in section 501(c)(17) forming part of a supplemental unemployment compensation benefit plan lends any money to another trust described in section 501(c)(17) forming part of the same plan, such loan shall not be treated as an indebtedness of the borrowing trust, except to the extent that the loaning trust—

"'(i) incurs any indebtedness in order to make such loan,

"'(ii) incurred indebtedness before the making of such loan which would not have been incurred but for the making of such loan, or

"'(iii) incurred indebtedness after the making of such loan which would not have been incurred but for the making of such loan and which was reasonably foreseeable at the time of making such loan.'.

"SEC. 6. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendments made by this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958.

"(b) In the case of loans, the amendments made by section 2 of this Act shall apply only to loans made, renewed, or continued after September 4, 1959."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill which was introduced by our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, the Honorable VICTOR A. KNOX, provides a new exempt category for income tax purposes in the case of trusts providing for the payment of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits. These may be the only benefit payments made by the trusts, or may be payments made together with subordinate sick or accident benefits—but not retirement or death benefits. This exempt category differs from the category, already under existing law, under which some of these trusts obtain exemption, in that the new provision does not require the supplemental unemployment benefit trust to obtain at least 85 percent of their income from employers or employees—and not from investment income.

The so-called nondiscriminatory provisions of present law applying to qualified pension, profit-sharing, and stock-bonus plans are in general made applicable to the trusts qualifying under the new exemption category. In addition, the "prohibited transaction" provisions, and "unrelated business income" provisions—including the business lease provisions—of present law are made applicable to the new exemption category.

In general this new exemption is to apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958.

This bill, to which the Treasury Department does not object, is being reported unanimously by your committee.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this legislation which has just passed the House was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. In addition I believe it may be properly said that the Treasury Department recognizes the need for legislation in this area.

Supplemental unemployment benefit programs have become an important part of employee compensation and employee security in the United States. Generally speaking, the purpose of such plan is to provide in effect an employment related source of income to a worker during the time that he may be temporarily laid off or in the terminal phase of his employment. The plans are for the most part the result of collective bargaining negotiations and are financed by payments made by the employer to a trust.

The income which these trusts earn on employer contributions which is in excess of current trust expenditures has been generally regarded as being tax exempt. However, the provision of the Internal Revenue Code that conditions the tax-exempt status, section 501(c)(9), requires that 85 percent or more of the trust income in a year must consist of employer-employee contributions.

Experience with such trusts has progressed so that investment income of some of the trusts has grown to the point where it exceeds the 15-percent limitation on noncontribution income. The purpose of H.R. 8229 is to provide tax-exempt status for trusts providing unemployment-compensation benefits even though investment and other income may exceed the 15-percent limitation.

The Committee on Ways and Means in approving this legislation adopted certain restrictions for qualification as a supplemental unemployment benefit trust eligible for this special treatment. Among those restrictions is a requirement that the trust must be essentially established for the purpose of providing supplemental unemployment-compensation benefits with certain other types of benefit payments allowable but specifically excluding retirement or death benefits. It is to be noted that through the collective-bargaining processes certain of these supplemental unemployment benefit plans have been developed to include the retirement and death benefit payments. These plans have also been ruled on by the Internal Revenue Service as coming within the requirements of the Internal Revenue

Code for tax-exempt status. The fact that collective bargaining will be involved in any adjustments to make these plans conform to the new statute and the fact that existing plans have heretofore had the approva lof the Internal Revenue Service gives me cause to hope that time will be allowed for making any adjustments in plans having retirement or death benefits as a feature of their program and also that the Congress and the Treasury Department will give consideration to further appropriate liberalizations in this area. It should be realized that these plans have useful social and economic purposes that are accomplished by private enterprise thus avoiding any need for governmental action in this area.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, an important recent development in industrial labor relations that has given to the employed individual greater economic security in times of temporary layoff is the guaranteed annual wage. These guaranteed annual wage agreements generally arise through collective bargaining processes and provide what are known as supplemental unemployment benefits to a worker in addition to the unemployment compensation he receives under the Federal-State program.

The financing for the payment of supplemental unemployment benefits is usually arranged under a funded trust which is created by employer contributions at a specified amount per hour of work.

Under ruling by the Internal Revenue Service these supplemental unemployment benefit trusts have been held tax exempt under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code if they qualify for income tax exemption by the application of section 501(c)(9). One of the qualifications under this later Code reference is the requirement that 85 percent or more of the income of the trust consist of amounts collected from members and from the employer for the sole purpose of making supplemental unemployment benefit payments and meeting expenses. As these trusts have accumulated corpus, their earnings on investments have become an increasingly greater part of their total income. As a result it is becoming difficult for such trusts to meet the 85-percent limitation in that more than 15 percent of their income is represented by investment income.

H.R. 8229 would correct the impact of the 85-percent limitation by providing a new exempt category under the Internal Revenue Code for supplemental unemployment benefit trusts. Trusts qualifying under this new category will not be required to obtain a minimum of 85 percent of their income from employer-employee contributions. In addition to unemployment benefits, these trusts will be allowed to pay benefits with respect to sickness or accidents but will be precluded from paying retirement or death benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this legislation will be an important step in abetting these trusts in serving a useful social purpose. To the extent that our private enterprise economy is able to provide security for our citizens it lessens the demands on Government for governmental programs to accomplish these same objectives. As a consequence I believe this legislation has a very meritorious purpose. It is my intention to observe the operation of this proposed change in the law, and if we find that further liberalization in this important area is necessary, I will sponsor legislation to that end.

TAX TREATMENT OF NONREFUNDABLE CAPITAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO FNMA

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 7947) relating to the income tax treatment of nonrefundable capital contributions to Federal National Mortgage Association, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to trade or business expenses) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) NONREFUNDABLE CAPITAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION.—For purposes of this subtitle, whenever the fair market value of Federal National Mortgage Association stock issued pursuant to section 303(c) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act (12 U.S.C. 1716), on the date of issue, shall be less than the amount of the capital contributions evidencing such stock, the difference shall be treated by the initial holder of the stock as ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on a trade or business."

SEC. 2. (a) Part IV of subchapter O of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to special rules as to basis of property) is amended by redesignating section 1054 as 1055, and by inserting after section 1053 the following new section:

"SEC. 1054. CERTAIN STOCK OF FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION.

"The basis of stock to which section 162 (d) applies, which constitutes capital assets) shall be the amount of the capital contributions evidencing such stock or the fair market value of such stock on the date of issue, whichever is less."

(b) The table of sections for such part IV is amended by striking out the last line and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 1054. Certain stock of Federal National Mortgage Association.

"Sec. 1055. Cross references."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1953, and ending after August 16, 1954.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to trade or business expenses) is amended by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e), and by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"'(d) CAPITAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION.—For purposes of this subtitle, whenever the amount of capital contributions evidenced by a share of stock issued pursuant to section 303(c) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act (12 U.S.C., sec. 1718) exceeds the fair market value of the stock as of the issue date of such stock, the initial holder of the stock shall treat the excess as ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on a trade or business.'

"SEC. 2. (a) Part IV of subchapter O of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to special rules as to basis of property) is amended by redesignating section 1054 as 1055, and by inserting after section 1053 the following new section:

"'SEC. 1054. CERTAIN STOCK OF FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION.

"'In the case of a share of stock issued pursuant to section 303(c) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act (12 U.S.C., sec. 1716), the basis of such share in the hands of the initial holder shall be an amount equal to the capital contributions evidenced by such share reduced by the amount (if any) required by section 162(d) to be treated (with respect to share) as ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business.'

"(b) The table of sections for such part IV is amended by striking out the last line and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'Sec. 1054. Certain stock of Federal National Mortgage Association.

"'Sec. 1055. Cross references.'

"SEC. 3. The amendments made by the first section and section 2 of this Act shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 7947, which was introduced by our colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Texas, the Honorable FRANK IKARD, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. The principal provisions of the bill may be briefly summarized as follows:

Financial institutions selling mortgage paper to the Federal National Mortgage Association must subscribe to stock of the Association in an amount equal to 2 percent of the mortgages sold. This stock, however, has been selling on the market at substantially less than the issuance price.

H.R. 7947 provides that where Federal National Mortgage Association stock is purchased under these conditions, any excess of the issuance price over the fair market value on the date of issuance is to be treated as an ordinary and necessary business expense in the year of purchase rather than as a part of the cost of acquiring the stock. This treatment is to be available for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that in making the statutory change involved in the bill, it is not intended that any inferences shall be drawn as to the tax treatment accorded FNMA stock before the enactment of this provision.

The Treasury Department has interposed no objections to the enactment of this bill.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the Act rechartering the Federal National Mortgage Association in 1954 as an agency of the Housing and Home Finance Agency provided that the Association was to accumulate capital funds by requiring mortgage sellers to purchase nonrefundable capital contributions from the Association. Institutions selling mortgage paper to the FNMA are required to subscribe to stock of the Association in an amount equal to 2 percent of the mortgages sold to the Association. This stock has a market price considerably under the issuance price. This disparity has raised problems with respect to the tax treatment provided for the stock which must be purchased by the taxpayer when he sells mortgage paper to FNMA.

H.R. 7947 would provide that when FNMA stock is purchased under these conditions the excess of the issuance price over the fair market value on the date of issue is to be treated as an ordinary and necessary business expense in the year of purchase rather than as a part of the cost of acquiring the stock.

This legislation was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

LIMITATION ON DEDUCTION OF EXPLORATION EXPENDITURES

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 4251) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to remove the 4-year limitation on deduction of exploration expenditures, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 615 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to deduction of exploration expenditures) is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (c) thereof; and

(2) by redesignating subsection (d) thereof as subsection (c).

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That subsection (c) of section 615 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the deduction of exploration expenditures) is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) LIMITATION.—

"'(1) IN GENERAL.—This section shall not apply to any amount paid or incurred to the extent that it would, when added to the amounts which have been deducted under subsection (a) and the amounts which have been treated as deferred expenses under subsection (b), or the corresponding provisions of prior law, exceed $400,000.

"'(2) AMOUNTS TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), there shall be taken into account amounts deducted and amounts treated as deferred expenses by—

"'(A) the taxpayer, and

"'(B) any individual or corporation who has transferred to the taxpayer any mineral property.

"'(3) APPLICATION OF PARAGRAPH (2)(B).—Paragraph (2)(B) shall apply with respect to all amounts deducted and all amounts treated as deferred expenses which were paid or incurred before the latest such transfer from the individual or corporation to the taxpayer. Paragraph (2)(B) shall apply only if—

"'(A) the taxpayer acquired any mineral property from the individual or corporation under circumstances which make paragraph (7), (8), (11), (15), (17), (20), or (22) of section 113(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 apply to such transfer;

"'(B) the taxpayer would be entitled under section 381(c)(10) to deduct expenses deferred under this section had the distributor or transferor corporation elected to defer such expenses; or

"'(C) the taxpayer acquired any mineral property from the individual or corporation under circumstances which make section 334(b), 362 (a) and (b), 372(a), 373(b)(1), 1051, or 1082 apply to such transfer.'

"SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall apply only with respect to taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the limitation on the deduction of exploration expenditures."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4251, which removes the 4-year limitation on deduction of exploration expenditures and which substitutes an overall limitation of $400,000 while retaining the existing limitation of $100,000 per year, was introduced by our colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Tennessee, the Honorable HOWARD BAKER, and was reported unanimously by the committee.

As Members will recall, under present law an annual exploration expenditure deduction of up to $100,000 is allowed for no more than 4 years. This bill removes the 4-year limitation and substitutes an overall limitation of $400,000. However, the limitation of $100,000 per year remains.

Exploration expenditure deductions may be taken—currently or deferred and taken when the product is sold—for expenditures made in exploring for ore or mineral deposits—but not for oil or gas prior to the development stage of the mineral deposit.

This change is to be effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the legislation which has just passed the House, H.R. 4251, amends existing law to provide a more equitable application of the limitation on the deductibility of exploration expenses.

Under existing law, provision is made for an annual exploration expenditure deduction of up to $100,000 for not more than 4 years. This legislation, which was sponsored by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BAKER], would remove the 4-year limitation and substitute in lieu thereof an overall limitation of $400,000 with further provision that the deduction in no one year could exceed $100,000.

Existing law has tended to discriminate against smaller producers in that many such producers do not expend the anual amount of $100,000 and are precluded from taking the deduction for more than 4 years. The modification provided by H.R. 4251 would permit them an additional period of time in which to incur and deduct such exploration expenditures. The Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in ordering this legislation reported to the House.

CHIEF COUNSEL FOR THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 8685) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the Presidential appointment of a General Counsel for Internal Revenue, to provide for the appointment of other officers for the Internal Revenue Service, and for other purposes, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"SEC. 7801. AUTHORITY OF DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

"(a) Powers and Duties of Secretary. Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, the administration and enforcement of this title shall be performed by or under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(b) Office of General Counsel for the Department. (b) Section 107(a) of the Federal Executive Pay Act of 1956 (5 U.S.C., sec. 2206(a)) is amended by striking out paragraph (20) thereof.

(c) Section 7452 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to representation of parties) is amended by striking out "Assistant General Counsel of the Treasury Department serving as Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service, or the delegate of such Chief Counsel," and inserting in lieu thereof "General Counsel for Internal Revenue or his delegate".

(d) Section 8023 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to additional powers to obtain data) is amended as follows:

(1) By striking out "(including the Assistant General Counsel of the Treasury Department serving as the Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service)" in subsection (a) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "or the Office of the General Counsel for Internal Revenue".

(2) By striking out "(including the Assistant General Counsel of the Treasury Department serving as the Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service)" in subsection (b) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof ", the Office of the General Counsel for Internal Revenue".

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATES

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this act.

(b) The amendment made by section 3(a), and the increase in the compensation of the General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury pursuant to the amendment made by section 1, of this act shall take effect as of the first day of the first pay period which begins after the date of the enactment of this act.

(c) The amendment made by section 3(b) of this act shall take effect when the Deputy Commissioner first appointed pursuant to the amendment made by section 2 of this act qualifies and takes office.

(d) The amendments made by section 3 (c) and (d) of this act shall take effect when the General Counsel for Internal Revenue first appointed pursuant to the amendment made by section 1 of this act qualifies and takes office.

SEC. 5. SAVINGS PROVISIONS

(a) Each of the following offices and positions, and the powers and duties thereof, shall continue to exist until such time as the officer or employee first appointed to the corresponding office or position (as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury) established by the amendments made by this act qualifies and takes office:

(1) Assistant General Counsel of the Treasury Department serving as Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service;

(2) Each Assistant Chief Counsel;

(3) Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and

(4) Each Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

(b) Each office and position referred to in subsection (a) is hereby abolished effective as of the time the officer or employee first appointed to the corresponding office or position (as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury) qualifies and takes office.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (b), this Act shall not be construed as terminating the employment of any officer or employee of the Department of the Treasury employed on the day before this Act is enacted. For purposes of the last sentence of section 7803(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by this Act, references to the General Counsel for Internal Revenue shall be treated as references to the Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service until such time as the General Counsel for Internal Revenue first appointed pursuant to the amendment made by section 1 of this Act qualifies and takes office.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"SECTION 1. CHIEF COUNSEL FOR THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE ETC.

"Section 7801 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the authority of the Department of the Treasury) is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 7801. AUTHORITY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.

"'(a) POWERS AND DUTIES OF SECRETARY.—Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, the administration and enforcement of this title shall be performed by or under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"SEC. 4. SAVING PROVISIONS.

"(a) The position of the Assistant General Counsel serving as Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service shall continue to exist until such time as the Chief Counsel for the Internal Revenue Service first appointed pursuant to the amendment made by section 1 of this Act qualifies and takes office, and at such time such position is hereby abolished.

"(b) Except as provided in subsection (a), this Act shall not be construed to abolish, terminate, or otherwise change, any office or position, or the appointment or employment of any officer or employee, existing immediately preceding the enactment of this act, but the same shall continue unless and until changed by lawful authority.

"(c) Any delegation of authority made pursuant to Reorganization Plan Numbered 26 of 1950 or Reorganization Plan Numbered 1 of 1952, including any redelegation of authority made pursuant to any such delegation of authority, and in effect immediately preceding the enactment of this Act shall, notwithstanding the amendment made by section 1 of this Act, remain in effect unless distinctly inconsistent or manifestly incompatible with such amendment. The preceding sentence shall not be construed as limiting in any manner the power to amend, modify, or revoke any such delegation or redelegation of authority."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the Presidential appointment of a Chief Counsel for the Internal Revenue Service, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 8685, as amended by the Committee on Ways and Means, is to provide that the Assistant General Counsel for the Treasury Department who is to be the Chief Counsel for the Internal Revenue Service is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The present office which this new office replaces, Assistant General Counsel serving as Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service, is filled by an appointee of the Secretary of the Treasury. The basic compensation rate of the new officer is to be $19,000 per annum.

This legislation is favored by the Treasury Department, and the Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in recommending its enactment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is my personal view that one of the most important offices we have in the Federal Government is the Office of Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service. The occupant of that office is the principal legal officer in the Internal Revenue Service and is responsible for the activities of one of the most vital and largest legal operations in the country.

The manner in which this office is run has a very substantial influence on a taxpayer's relations with, and attitude toward our Federal Government generally and specifically the functioning of our voluntary system of taxpayer compliance as well as the collection of involuntary payments for tax liability. The Committee on Ways and Means in favorably reporting H.R. 8685 has taken what I regard as a significant step in giving proper recognition to the importance of this office by providing that the office shall be filled by an individual who is appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The bill would also provide a modest increase in compensation.

I have described this legislation as representing only a significant step in giving proper recognition to this office because I am personally convinced that other action must be taken by the Congress to provide more adequately for the important offices in the Internal Revenue Service both in the Commissioner's office and in the Chief Counsel's office. The value of such legislative changes would serve importantly to facilitate the administration of our tax laws. Such changes would, in my judgment, also give deserved recognition to outstanding career service people now selflessly and ably performing their great responsibilities. Such changes would also abet the recruitment of new personnel for training and the retention in the Service of trained personnel. It is significant to note that the Internal Revenue Service is one agency of our Government in which the so-called "expertise" must come from within the agency and cannot be employed on a consultant basis or through the awarding of contracts to private enterprise where higher paid personnel can do the job as is possible in many other undertakings by the Government.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I have supported this legislation on the basis of its representing this important first step and in doing so I also express the hope that we can accomplish further improvements in this area that I have discussed today in the not too distant future. I am confident that in seeking such objectives we will continue to have the cooperation of the responsible officials in the Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Service.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would pay tribute to an outstanding example of the type of public servant I have been referring to in these brief remarks. Arch M. Cantrall, Esq., was appointed Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service in January 1958. To accept this position he was required to make very substantial personal sacrifices and leave a thriving law practice in Clarksburg, W. Va. Mr. Cantrall resigned as Chief Counsel on August 31, 1959, "for personal and business reasons." During his tenure in office Mr. Cantrall served with great professional competence as a lawyer and proved himself to be an able administrator. Through his ability and all-around fitness for the position he gained the respect of all who associated with him as well as added to the stature of the position he filled. I know that I speak the unanimous view of the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means when I express regret that he has found it necessary to return to his home in Clarksburg. I wish him well as he resumes his private practice in his home community.

AMENDING HOUSE RESOLUTION 56, 86TH CONGRESS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 360 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That House Resolution 56, Eighty-sixth Congress, is amended as follows: On page 4, in line 1, after the word "States" and before the comma insert the following: "(and any subcommittee thereof, consisting of not more than six members may sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places outside the United States)".

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ATTENDING INTERNATIONAL MEETINGS RELATING TO ROADS AND HIGHWAYS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. By direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 368 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the next to the last paragraph of H. Res. 91, Eighty-sixth Congress, as amended, is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "except that the committee may attend international meetings relating to roads and highways wherever held".

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "except that the committee" and insert "except that two subcommittees thereof, not exceeding six members each and not exceeding two staff members each".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISCRETIONARY FUNDS FOR ALASKA AND HAWAII

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2208) to provide that Alaska and Hawaii be eligible for participation in the distribution of discretionary funds under section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2208, with Mr. BLATNIK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill, which comes from the other body, was considered by the Subcommittee on Transportation and Aeronautics and after conducting hearings that subcommittee reported the bill to the full committee. The full Committee on Interstate Commerce considered the report of the subcommittee, and reported the bill which is now before the House for consideration.

This bill makes Alaska and Hawaii eligible for allocations from the discretionary fund provided for by section 6 (b) of the Federal Airport Act, which sets aside 25 percent of the funds made available annually to the States for distribution by the Administrator without regard to State boundaries.

The act makes $60 million a year available for Federal aid to airports in the 48 States in the Union on May 13, 1946, when the Federal Airport Act became law, so that we have $45 million distributed to these 48 States under a formula based on area and population, while $15 million goes into the Administrator's discretionary fund. Under terms of the amended act, only the 48 States in the Union on May 13, 1946, share in this discretionary fund.

Under the amendment passed in 1955, Alaska was given $1,350,000 a year and Hawaii $750,000. That allocation was continued in the stopgap airport legislation enacted earlier this year. The pending bill would not change that. It would not make any more Federal funds available for aid to airports. All this bill proposes is to permit Alaska and Hawaii to compete with the other 48 States when the Administrator makes allocations from the discretionary fund.

It was explained in the hearing that additional construction will be needed for jet operations at Anchorage, Fairbanks, and Honolulu. If this bill is passed the FAA can consider these needs along with the needs of other airports when allocations are made from the discretionary fund.

To transfer funds now available for Hawaii and Alaska to the State fund and treat Alaska and Hawaii as States in the allocation of funds would reduce the allocations to 41 other States. Under that arrangement, Alaska's share would be $3,720,949, while Hawaii's apportionment would be cut from $750,000 a year to $117,649.

To increase the amount available to the States to a point where no State would lose by treating Alaska and Hawaii as States would mean an increase of $11 million a year. This is opposed by the administration.

The House on March 19 passed legislation to expand the Federal airport program and treat Alaska and Hawaii as States in the allocation of funds. When the conferees were unable to reach an agreement on S. 1, the bill to increase Federal aid to airports, we extended the existing Federal airport program for 2 years at the rate of $63 million a year, with Alaska and Hawaii receiving $1,350,000 and $750,000 a year, respectively, rather than being treated as States under section 6(a) of the Federal Airport Act. This worked seriously to the disadvantage of Alaska from the standpoint of apportionment of funds.

The Bureau of the Budget and Federal Aviation Agency favor enactment of this legislation.

There should not be too much controversy regarding this very laudable proposed legislation. In order that it may be explained by the chairman of the subcommittee who heard the testimony and reported the bill, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, earlier this session the House passed legislation, as all of us know, to extend the Federal Airport Act and accord Alaska and Hawaii equal treatment with other States in the Union. When the conferees on S. 1, to extend the airport program, were unable to agree, legislation was enacted and approved to extend the Federal airport program for fiscal 1960 and 1961 at the rate of $63 million a year, with Alaska and Hawaii treated, as in the past, as special areas, receiving specific allocations rather than being given apportionments as States under the formula provided in section 6(a) of the Federal Airport Act, which would have resulted in a substantial increase in Federal funds available for projects in Alaska.

In signing legislation to extend the then Federal airport program—Public Law 86–72—on June 29, 1959, the President made the following statement:

> One other feature of the bill requires prompt corrective action by the Congress. Because Alaska is treated as a Territory under the bill it will be entitled to less than half the funds it would receive as a State.

The legislation herewith reported is an effort to correct this situation, in a partial way, without increasing the total obligational authority made available to the Administrator.

The purpose of this legislation is to make Alaska and Hawaii eligible to receive allocations from the discretionary funds provided for by the Airport Act. This is necessary because the stopgap legislation extending the Federal aid to airports program does not treat Alaska and Hawaii as States.

No additional Federal obligational authority is made available for airport construction in this legislation. Allocations of discretionary funds to Hawaii and Alaska, if any, would be made by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency out of obligational authority made available by existing law. That means, of course, Alaska and Hawaii—under this legislation—will be eligible to receive discretionary funds. However, in receiving such, they must compete with the other 48 States on a competitive basis.

The legislation you have before you is supported by the Federal Aviation Agency. It has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget. Not a single witness testified in opposition to the legislation.

Under existing law, the Administrator is authorized to incur contract obligations of $60 million during each of the fiscal years 1960 and 1961 for airport construction grants in the 48 States which were in the Union on May 13, 1946, the original date of the Federal Airport Act.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. The purpose of this legislation is to give Alaska as much money as it would have gotten had it been treated as a State under the Federal Airport Act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not altogether, no.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. What is the purpose of the legislation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If Alaska should be brought in under the State allocation formula, it would receive approximately twice as much as it will receive under the present setup. The purpose of this is to treat Alaska and Hawaii who are not now eligible to receive allocations under the discretionary fund, to permit them to participate in the same manner as if they were States which, of course, they are.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. In other words, Alaska being treated as a Territory under present law receives $1,350,000, and if Alaska were treated as a State, it would receive three-million-seven-hundred-and-some-odd-thousand dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right. Under the State allocation formula.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Why does the gentleman object or does he object to treating Alaska as a State for the purposes of this bill, for all purposes, and thereby give them all the money they need?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Personally, I would have no objection to treating Alaska as a State for all purposes except for the fact that if Alaska is treated as a State under the allocation formula, as I understand it according to the figures that were made available to the other body, it would be necessary to increase the appropriation by $11 million in order not to deprive any of the States of their present allocation.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I think the gentleman is in error about that because, if you use the present money that Congress made available, namely, $63 million for each of the next 2 years, you could treat Alaska as a State and use the discretionary money you want to give to make it a State, to offset the amount the other States might lose by treating Alaska as a State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. What this bill does is to provide that since Alaska only gets $1,350,000 under present law that the Administrator can take $2½ million of the discretionary money and give it to Alaska.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, the Administrator can do that, but there is nothing in this bill that would compel him to do so. It must be presumed that he will allocate these discretionary funds according to priority, in line with the intent of the basic legislation.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. If you take $2,500,000 of the discretionary money and give it to Alaska that means $2,500,000 less is available to the other 49 States, so the thing is about the same either way, moneywise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am sure all of that will be explained to the satisfaction of the House. I understand from the information given to the Senate committee that in order for the States not to have their present allocations reduced it would be necessary to increase the authorization for the next 2 years by $11 million. If Alaska were treated as a State under this legislation they would receive somewhere in the vicinity of twice as much money under the allocation formula.

By the same token, I am told that Hawaii will receive less than a quarter of what she would receive under the formula.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. The fact is that the original bill treated Alaska and Hawaii as Territories. It was amended in the committee to make States out of Alaska and Hawaii insofar as the airport bill was concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman means the original legislation?

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. The original legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. When we passed the House bill there were 50 States instead of 48. On the ground that the same amount of money had to be divided by 50 rather than 48, it would tend to cut the amount of money each of the States would get.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. That was the situation we got into in the Senate, was it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Quite right.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Let me say that it was my amendment that made States out of Alaska and Hawaii in this legislation. I think that after we study the situation and after the conferees have acted on it that we ought to go ahead, since this other bill passed, and let Alaska and Hawaii participate in this discretionary fund so they can meet their airport needs; and, as the gentleman well knows, I was not one who was here advocating statehood for either of these Territories.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman knows I, also, opposed statehood in both cases.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. That is right; but since we have taken them in and they are States I think it is our responsibility to see that they do have ample funds to operate their airport program.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to further clarify what the problem is here and bear out further what our colleague from Texas [Mr. ROGERS] has said.

In order that the membership may understand just what this legislation is, the fact is that the conferees of the two bodies could not agree on the extension of the airport program for the 4 years—originally a 5-year program—and the conferees broke up so far apart they could not agree on it. Then there was stopgap legislation extending the then present airport program for a period of 2 years.

That was approved by the other body; it was approved by this body, and it became law—just a mere extension of the program which had been in effect for the last 4 years, in order that it would not die completely. That 2-year program is now underway, and if there should be any further changes in the present law than the mere extension of the authority here to permit Alaska and Hawaii to participate in the discretionary fund it would disrupt the allocations which have already been made to the other 48 States of the Union. We are trying to correct the situation in this manner. Is that not the understanding of the gentleman as to what this legislation does and the reason for it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all this legislation does.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield briefly.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. It is true, as the chairman said, that to treat Alaska as a State would disrupt the allocation formula; but it is also true that this bill authorizes giving Alaska $2,500,000 discretionary money, which means that you have $2,500,000 less to give to the other 49 States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is merely an assumption that the gentleman has drawn.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Read the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This permits Alaska and Hawaii to compete for discretionary funds on the same basis as do the other 48 States of the Union.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. My understanding is——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I decline to yield further, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman will have time of his own in which to present his views.

Since legislation admitting Hawaii and Alaska as States became law after 1946 when this Act was originally passed, they are not eligible for discretionary funds under existing law. This contract obligational authority is distributed according to the provisions of section 6 of the Federal Airport Act, 75 percent, or $45 million being allocated to the 48 States which were in the Union on May 13, 1946, under a formula based on area and population, and 25 percent or $15 million going into a fund to be allocated among these 48 States at the discretion of the Administrator, without regard to State boundaries.

In addition to the $60 million fund available for distribution to the 48 States mentioned, the present law provides $3 million a year for fiscal 1960 and fiscal 1961 for projects in special areas, which include Alaska and Hawaii, which receive $1,350,000 and $750,000 per year respectively.

Hearings on this legislation were held on August 12, 1959, by the Subcommittee on Transportation and Aeronautics. A representative of the Federal Aviation Agency appeared in support of the legislation. Several other witnesses appeared, including representatives of the Air Transport Association, the Association of Local Transport Airlines, and several others. No one appeared in opposition.

In the hearings the committee was told that extensive airport improvements which cannot be provided with Federal funds available under present law are needed both in Alaska and in Hawaii. Enactment of this legislation will enable the Administrator to consider the need for aid to these projects from the discretionary fund made available to it.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I favor the objectives sought to be accomplished by this bill, but I am opposed to the means by which they are sought to be accomplished, because we have a makeshift arrangement which continues to treat as Territories, areas which are now States. There is no sound basis for treating Alaska and Hawaii as Territories in one part of the Federal Airport Act and as States in another part. They are States and they should be treated as such for all purposes.

I was one of those who voted against statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, but I am a firm believer in their right now that they are States to accept all of the advantages which accrue through statehood and be willing to accept any disadvantages which might accrue therefrom.

When the House committee dealt with this legislation, and we considered it for some months, we concluded that Alaska and Hawaii should be treated as States, and put them in the bill, which the House passed on that basis. It is true that the conferees could not agree and that we had to settle for a 2-year extension of the present law which treats Alaska and Hawaii as Territories.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the chairman of our committee explain why it is necessary to have these two States now treated partly as States and partly as Territories. I do not object to Alaska getting the full share that it deserves, the full share to which it is entitled, and the amendment which I shall offer is the amendment which was adopted by our committee when the original bill was passed. It will treat all States, including Alaska and Hawaii, on a fair and equal basis.

The chairman of our committee wants Alaska to get the $3,750,000 that she needs, but he does not want her to get it as a State. He wants her to get it partly as a Territory, and partly as a State.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. If what the gentleman suggests were to be agreed to, would it not, in fact, be failing to keep faith with the States when we agreed to the 2-year stopgap legislation earlier in the year?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Not at all.

Mr. HARRIS. If what the gentleman says were to be agreed to, would it not either make it necessary to increase the total annual authorization or else reduce the announced allocation to more than 40 States of the Union which have already been allocated to for this present year? Is that not true?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. No.

Mr. HARRIS. Well, I suggest that it is.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. The bill authorizes that $2.5 million be taken out of the discretionary fund and be given to Alaska. This reduces the discretionary funds available to other States if this measure were not passed. The additional which Alaska gets either as a State or Territory has to come from funds which would otherwise go to the other States.

Mr. HARRIS. Well, the gentleman made a statement that is not correct.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I decline to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill does not say that.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. If the gentleman will read the report, that is what the FAA testified. If it is not the basis of this bill to give Alaska discretionary money, then what is the purpose?

Mr. HARRIS. The purpose is to give the Administrator authority to determine whether he will use the discretionary fund. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Certainly the Administrator has said that they need some $2 million over and above what they will get as a territory to complete their airport program, and this is one way of giving it to them. You take $2.5 million out of the discretionary fund for Alaska and you take that much away from the other 49 States, and you come out at exactly the same point. I will illustrate. We are dealing here with $63 million. Three million dollars of that is in a fund for the territories. Fifteen million dollars is in a discretionary fund which the Administrator may spend in any State he sees fit. Forty-five million dollars is in a fund that is apportioned under a formula to all States. Now, what the gentleman from Arkansas is proposing is to treat Alaska as a Territory, which makes them eligible only to $1,375,000, and then treat them as a State for the purpose of giving them discretionary money, and he says in so doing that he will save money for the other 49 States. Now, that is absolutely not true. We only have $63 million, and the question is whether you give Alaska the money directly or whether you do it in a devious way; treating them in one paragraph as a Territory but in another as a State.

Mr. WIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WIER. As I understand your position with reference to this discretionary fund that the Administrator has, you said that this bill was set up for him to investigate, and if he found the need, he could allocate the amount of money involved here. Now, that to me means that it could be possible, if either Alaska or Hawaii would get what the bill calls for.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Technically, that is true. The bill does not require they should give Alaska any specific amount, but the intent of the bill—if you will read the hearings, and the Administrator having so testified is that the $1,350,000 Alaska gets as a Territory is not sufficient to meet her needs. This is admitted by the Federal Aviation Agency, and the reason this gimmick is put in here is to give the Administrator the right to make up the difference out of discretionary funds which would otherwise be divided among the other States.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. The amount they would get is $1,350,000.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. According to the figures I have from the FAA, the amount you would get as a State is $3,720,000.

Mr. WIER. That is the answer I wanted. Are you sure that this bill would make it mandatory on the Administrator to see that you got the funds?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. If the gentleman will permit, my amendment will give Alaska the amount she is entitled to as a State. It will give Hawaii the amount she is entitled to as a State, in all portions of the Federal Airport Act. There is no reason for saying that this is a makeshift operation. It can be handled fairly and equitably by giving them full statehood status for all purposes under the Airport Act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman said that under the present setup Alaska will receive $1,350,000. It does not participate in the discretionary fund.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If Alaska should be treated as a State, as the gentleman apparently intends, that would mean all the way across the board for the purpose of making them eligible as a State for an allocation under the formula and also making them eligible for participation in the discretionary fund. That means that Alaska will receive, instead of $1,350,000, $3 million and some. That means that you are going to have to redistribute the allocations among all the States, which will reduce 41 State allocations proportionately.

In addition to that, you are going to have Alaska participating in the discretionary fund, further making less money available to the other States in the Union. I do not know how the gentleman can figure that Alaska and Hawaii both can be brought in under the proposal without the other 48 States suffering thereby.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the truth of the matter is that they will not suffer if Alaska comes in as a State because she will get all the money that she needs for this program. The purpose of this is to give Alaska additional money out of the discretionary fund which means that there would be that much less discretionary fund for other States. The direct way to do this is to give them statehood. Suppose it does adversely affect some other State. Does that mean that you are not supposed to recognize the sovereignty of the States that have been admitted to the Union?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I see in the report on page 3, a letter from the Executive Office of the President indicating that the legislative program of the President approves this legislation. Is the administration taking a different position now?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. The administration approved this legislation as long as it did not require any additional money. They do not care whether it is allocated out of the discretionary fund or whether it is allocated otherwise. The administration appeared before our committee initially and asked that both Hawaii and Alaska be treated as States; the gentleman knows that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It seems to me that the administration approved the very language we have in the bill.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I do not know what page of the report the gentleman is reading from.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Page 4 of the committee report.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. The administration has no objection to this bill. They initially asked that Alaska and Hawaii be treated as States. They do not object to their being treated as States now and they do not object to my amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the administration approved the present language, what is the necessity of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. The purpose of my amendment is to treat Alaska and Hawaii as the other 48 States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Is that the idea of the gentleman from Michigan or the administration?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I am speaking for myself, not for the administration.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think we all are in agreement as to what should be done in this situation. I find myself in a very strange position because for 7 years I vigorously opposed statehood for both Alaska and Hawaii, but I was overruled and in the final analysis this House, made up of Representatives from all States of this Nation took Hawaii and Alaska in as States. I thought at that time that they should be treated as States. Whether I won or lost in the fight for statehood they were States on an equal basis with the other 48 States.

What we are saying to them if we do not pass this bill, is that, "You are States but you may not participate as a State in this airport fund." When the House passed the airport bill we had a provision in it that Alaska and Hawaii were to be treated as States. They shared in the fund. There would have been a reallocation of the fund. When the other body passed that bill they did not put them in. When the conferees had to fight this battle out, they brought the bill back with only the 48 States to participate in this fund. Why did they knock out Alaska and Hawaii? They did it because it would cut down on the amount of money available to the other States, that each of the other States would get. There was a failure, in my opinion, in responsibility in this whole picture. But that is exactly what happened, whether we like it or whether we do not like it. What we did at that time was to cut Alaska and Hawaii out of participation in 75 percent of this airport money even though they were States on an equal footing with the other 48 States.

Unless we include them in the discretionary fund by the passage of this bill, we are going to say to Alaska and Hawaii, even though you are States on equal footing in all respects, we are not going to let you participate in the other 25 percent of this fund—the discretionary part. The gentleman from Michigan pointed out he thought they ought to participate as States, and I think all of us do. The situation has come up like this. There was, I guess, a good faith commitment to the 48 States for this stopgap program over a 2-year period to pay this money. Some of the Representatives, and I am sure some of the Senators, thought that since this commitment had been made, it would not be fair to give the States less money than they had anticipated receiving. Hence Alaska and Hawaii were cut out, so that the States could divide the money in 48 parts rather than 50 parts. Now Alaska and Hawaii are merely asking, by this bill to be allowed to participate in the discretionary fund, which is one-third the size of the original fund. Mind you, we cannot undo what has already been done because we have to be practical about it. We are in the closing days of this session. There is no time to make changes that have already been passed upon. The fact of the matter is simply this. We cannot change what has already been done. Alaska and Hawaii have been cut out of the big fund. I say what we ought to do is to face this problem realistically and let them come in under the discretionary fund and leave it to the discretion of the administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration to distribute these funds. Pass this bill and be fair with the two new States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. YOUNGER].

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Chairman, I think the Members of the House ought to realize there is only one pie to be cut up. It does not make any difference how you cut this pie. Whether you take money out of the discretionary fund and give it to Alaska or take funds out of the 48 States and give it to Alaska, and then take money out of the discretionary fund and replenish the funds for the States, the results are exactly the same. I want to know if that is true. I would like to ask the chairman if that is not true.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNGER. I yield.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. I would like to endeavor to answer that question for the gentleman. I know a misunderstanding arises because you have said that the total amount of money for all of the States would remain the same. That is true when you add the discretionary fund to the regular funds for regular allotments. But what the committee chairman said is that the proposal of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENNETT] would cut down on the share of each State within the regular allotments, if Alaska and Hawaii were included in the $45 million fund. That is true enough as far as the regular allotments are concerned. It would cut down on each of the other States under the regular fund to make up the amounts that Alaska and Hawaii would get from that fund. Of course, in that case Alaska and Hawaii would not need any of the discretionary money, so the overall amount available to the States is the same.

The point is that certain States that would lose on the amount that is available for them under the present allocation system might not have priority projects, and the discretionary fund money can only be allotted on the priorities established by the Administrator bearing on national importance and other factors.

Mr. YOUNGER of California. Will the gentleman from Alaska agree to this? You have certain money. Fifteen million dollars in the discretionary fund; is that not true?

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. That is right.

Mr. YOUNGER of California. If you take, in round numbers, $2 million out of the discretionary fund and give it to Alaska, it would amount to exactly the same thing as if you took $2 million out of the discretionary fund and made it up to the shortage in the 48 States.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. Yes, but it would not be reapportioned back to the 48 States to exactly restore their respective losses which they would suffer under the pending amendment.

Mr. YOUNGER of California. The discretionary fund can be apportioned among the 48 States to make up what was taken out of the discretionary fund to give to Alaska and the total remains absolutely the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNGER of California. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have had a compilation made of State apportionments as they are now set up and as they would be set up if Alaska and Hawaii were brought in on the allocation as States.

The State of California would presently receive $2,734,099 and would lose $102,937 if Alaska and Hawaii were brought in as States for allocation purposes.

Mr. YOUNGER. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is impossible to determine whether they would receive one red penny of the discretionary money, as the gentleman well knows, because we do not know whether they would come in for any priority or not.

Let us take the State of Michigan, for instance.

Michigan received $1,654,594, but if the gentleman's amendment is adopted, if I understood it correctly, they would lose $63,133; and there is no way to know whether they will participate at all in the discretionary funds whether his amendment is adopted or not.

Mr. YOUNGER. And you have already stated to the House that there is no commitment on the part of the Administrator to give to Alaska any of the money out of the discretionary fund.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right. They must compete for this money along with the other States.

Mr. YOUNGER. What we are doing is to make sure that Alaska does have this money and not leave it to the judgment of the Administrator for Alaska to get the funds that she is entitled to as a State.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNGER. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the discretionary fund is 25 percent of the total authorized State program and lies within the discretion of the Administrator. He must administer it by giving priority to those preferential airports in accordance with the act.

Mr. YOUNGER. That is perfectly true, and in his discretion he has a perfect right to give to the 48 States any money that he has to take away from them to give to Alaska. The same amount of money is there; every State will get the amount of money it is entitled to, but we will be honest, we will be treating Alaska and Hawaii as States; I think we ought to reach a time pretty soon when we recognize that these two former Territories are no longer Territories. They are States and they should be treated as States.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNGER. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. The Senate refused to agree to that once this year in the other bill.

Mr. YOUNGER. It makes no difference what they agreed to. We are trying to write a correct bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. But what we have been doing is just what we did before. The Senate refused to agree to it then. What we are doing is simply saying to Alaska and Hawaii that they are not going to participate in the 75 percent and we are going to deny them the right to participate in the other 25 percent.

Mr. YOUNGER. We are not doing that at all. We have a discretionary fund there and they can have the funds they need.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, may I say in the beginning that I will not yield until I have made by statement. Then I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the gentleman yield to me that I may yield him additional time?

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall be very happy to yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to the House that both sides, the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from California, the gentleman from Arkansas, and the gentleman from Mississippi are all trying to be intellectually honest about this bill. I think this is one thing that has not been brought out clearly to the House. When Hawaii came in trying to get justice in this whole airport picture they tried to bring in a bill which would have some chance of passage in this Congress. The only way in which they could do it and get into the discretionary fund was not to insist that they were a State under the allotment plan because whatever they took for their regular allotment as a State would automatically reduce the other States.

It has been stated by the gentleman from California that it would be possible for the Administrator to make that up out of the discretionary fund. May I say to the gentleman from California that that is exactly true, but how many of the 48 States here today are going to vote for Alaska and Hawaii to be States and rely upon the Administrator to make that up out of the discretionary fund? I do not think there are many here who will be willing to vote for such a proportionate plan when their States are bound to lose dollars under it.

Alaska should come in under a practical program whereby each of the States would not get reduced under this regular allotment. And may I say to my colleagues it is the only way this bill can be passed. If you make Alaska and Hawaii States under this bill then the fund has to be divided by a greater number. As soon as the Members understand that their regular allotment is going to be reduced and they have no assurance that the regular allotment is going to be made up out of the discretionary fund by the Administrator, they will be against this bill.

When this thing comes up 2 years from now I will not support any bill, may I say to the Representatives from Alaska and Hawaii, and I am the ranking Republican on this Subcommittee on Transportation and Aeronautics, unless they are made a State. There can be no reason 2 years from now why they should not be considered as a State and share with everyone else proportionately in accordance with what it should have been back in February when we passed the first bill. I think that is the practical reason today why you have to support this kind of bill if you are going to bring Alaska and Hawaii into the discretionary fund.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. The point the gentleman is making is that the States are not going to be willing to give up something sure, that they already have nailed down, for something that they might or might not get, depending on the whims of the FAA Administrator?

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Administrator saw fit to do it, he could make up the difference. On the other hand, may I say that the law requires him to give priority to those projects which he believes have priority.

In listening to all the testimony, as I did, this bill was the only way I saw whereby we could have a bill for which every Member vote and know at the same time he was going to receive the money which is regularly allotted to him under the law.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. What will be the outcome if this bill is not enacted into law?

Mr. SPRINGER. If the bill is not enacted, it would mean Hawaii could not take from the discretionary fund, and the Administrator has made it very clear that he believes they ought to be able to share in the discretionary fund.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman has named one of the two States.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is true as to both Alaska and Hawaii.

Mr. GROSS. It is true as to both of them?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman has also stated, as we have heretofore, and I again want to emphasize to make it abundantly clear to the House, that when this Congress approved the bill extending the act for a 2-year period—we are already in the first year—we said to the States, all 48 States, you will receive for this 2-year period identically under the formula you have been getting the last 4 years. Is that true?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true.

Mr. HARRIS. This is an effort to permit the Administrator in his discretion to give relief if priority requires it to Alaska and Hawaii for projects in those two States?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true.

Mr. HARRIS. It keeps faith with what the Congress said it would do for the other 48 States?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the implication of what the chairman said is true. This should be added: Your committee did a good job back in February on this bill. It put Alaska and Hawaii in as States. It was only when we went to conference that the fundamental bill was changed. Our committee supported Alaska and Hawaii as States, and that applies to Members on both sides of the aisle, but when we came to this situation we are faced with now, I do not see how we can do justice to Alaska and Hawaii and at the same time keep the allotments that you are going to have for each one of the States except by this bill.

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. YOUNGER. The gentleman made the statement that there is no assurance on the part of the Administrator that he will pay to the States the amount of money from their allotment out of the discretionary fund. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has a pledge from the Administrator that he will give Alaska the difference between the $1,300,000 and the $3 million to which they are entitled?

Mr. SPRINGER. I certainly did not, and I would not expect the Administrator to give that to me. I may say the Administrator ought to give it where he believes the need is greatest, in accordance with the law, and if that is Alaska he should give it.

Mr. YOUNGER. So that the Administrator has the same discretion either way, whether he takes the money out of the discretionary fund and gives it to the States or to Alaska. He has that discretion?

Mr. SPRINGER. He does.

Mr. YOUNGER. Also, under this bill the gentleman is saying that the 48 States are pledged; that they are entitled to so much money.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not say "pledged." I think it was generally understood they were going to get this much money.

Mr. YOUNGER. The gentleman said something about a pledge.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not say "pledge." I do not think the Administrator pledged them, but I think it was generally understood he would go along with that.

Mr. YOUNGER. We also to that extent said there would be $15 million to be in the discretionary fund?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes. I think that is the way it is working out, too.

Mr. YOUNGER. No. It will be $2 million short.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think it will be short at all. The Administrator still retains full discretion as to the entire $15 million.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS].

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to add my words of praise to the chairman of the subcommittee, the chairman of the full committee, and to the ranking minority member of the subcommittee which heard the evidence in this case. I sat through all the hearings, and I think it was pretty unanimous that this was the logical way to correct the situation which developed through no fault of the Congress. If the original bill as passed by this House had been allowed to stand, Hawaii and Alaska would have been treated as States, would have received their allotments, and also been eligible for discretionary funds.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAGGERS. I will be glad to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am pleased that the gentleman mentioned that the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee were in accord on this legislation. I might say further that the subcommittee vote to report this to the full committee was unanimous. Not only were the chairman and the ranking member in favor of the legislation, but there was no opposition expressed to the legislation by any member of the subcommittee.

Mr. STAGGERS. The chairman of the subcommittee is correct in that.

This bill was passed by our committee unanimously and then reported to the full committee, which was so ably discussed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. So, in the light of the members who heard the testimony, I would say that the Congress should lend some weight to that and certainly should vote for the bill, because if we vote for the amendment, we are certainly taking a chance with what money might come into my own State of West Virginia and the other States of the Nation. We have an airport that needs extension and expansion at the university at Morgantown, a city into which today we do not have railroad service and not too good road service. Consequently, it is essential and necessary that the airport be expanded. There are many other airports throughout West Virginia and the country that need additional extension and expansion. So I say let this money come out of the discretionary funds.

CIVIL AIRLINES IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, the proper role of the Military Air Transport Service and of the Nation's airlines in meeting the transportation needs of the Department of Defense has been a matter of controversy for some time. The controversy has centered in the Appropriation Committees of both bodies, but has been a matter for consideration also in the Armed Services Committee, in the House Military Operations Subcommittee headed by our able colleague, Mr. HOLIFIELD, and it has also been a matter of concern to many of us on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

In view of the fact that the matter has been settled for this session of Congress at least insofar as the appropriations are concerned, it seems desirable to take a fresh look at the problem when we are not under pressure for immediate decisions in the light of appropriation requests.

Sadly there have been some implications that, to even discuss MATS, or to propose a review of any part of its activity and the adverse impact this may have on others, is in some way unpatriotic. It has been implied that, to raise such a question may be considered an attack on our national security. In this connection, I would like very much to associate myself with the thoughtful remarks made by Mr. MAHON, the distinguished chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, when he made his masterful presentation of the Defense appropriation bill and pointed out that—

> While the committee was concerned and interested in saving money, the primary consideration of the committee was saving civilization and the United States of America and lives of the people of this country.

He went on to say:

> I do not think there is anybody in this Congress who wants, in the name of economy or budget balancing, to impair the defense position of the United States.

Certainly that is a philosophy we all can and should subscribe to. I might point out that Mr. MAHON also pointed out in that same presentation:

> We tell the Air Force that we will deny the $50 million which it requested for cargo jets. We were aware that at this time in the Department of Defense efforts are being made to assign more of this cargo work to civil air carriers. So we made some reductions there.

Obviously, the committee pondered the MATS request very carefully, and concluded that it was in the national interest not to authorize this major capital investment. Later, when a second request was partially approved by the other body without having been considered further by our own Appropriations Committee, there has been some inference that those who questioned it were acting improperly.

Let us see what is involved here. First I would like to emphasize that I do not pretend to be as well informed on national defense matters as the members of the Appropriations Committees. I do believe that we can properly claim to have some experience and knowledge of international commerce, and the requirements, as well as the problems, faced by our great international air carriers that carry not only people and property but also our flag to all parts of the globe.

As to the military aspect, I do believe that we should seek to guarantee the largest possible airlift at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayer, that this requires a close working partnership between the military and the commercial carriers.

I have heard, and it makes sense to me, that MATS, because of its emphasis on a commercial-type airline operation, is not able and would not be able in time of national emergency to concentrate on meeting immediately the combat airlift requirements because its airplanes would be scattered all over the globe.

It seems clear that when MATS is so dedicated to conducting a regular airline operation that it must have 480 stewardesses, it can hardly be standing by ready for emergency response in the same fashion as the Strategic Air Command.

The House Military Operations Subcommittee headed by Mr. HOLIFIELD, has devoted many hours of study to this problem. The committee pointed out that—

> It becomes a proper subject of inquiry to ascertain how far MATS is departing from its defense role when it engages in commercial-type operations.

Then the subcommittee went on to conclude that—

> MATS has developed into a worldwide air transport system, moving military cargo and passengers on regularly scheduled routes and competing heavily with the civil carriers engaged in international air transportation.

And there is the question that has come to concern me in this matter and has led me to suggest that we must thoughtfully review this entire problem. For whatever reasons, the present operations of the Military Air Transport Service are adversely affecting the growth and progress of our international air carriers. It would be the same thing if the Army insisted on building raliroad tracks parallel to the right-of-ways of our existing commercially owned and operated railroads. Or if the Navy was not willing to depend so heavily, and I might add wisely, on the U.S. commercial shipping fleet.

There is no question but that MATS has a very definite role in providing hard core military airlift. It has a definite mission but it can and should perform that mission without strangling private enterprise and crippling civil aviation.

Our international civil air transport system is vital to our national interest in peace or war. These U.S.-flag airlines were certificated by the Civil Aeronautics Board with their value to national defense as one of the factors given important consideration. However, the airlines can only perform as we require them to perform if they are encouraged to improve, to develop, and to invest for constant progress. Certainly the decisions of the State Department in bilateral negotiations can well affect the economic health of these carriers and I regret to say that Government policy has not always been as responsible in this area as it has needed to be.

Although 7 out of 10 air passengers between the United States and foreign countries are U.S. citizens, the share of this traffic carried by U.S. airlines has fallen from 98 percent in 1941 to 75 percent in 1949, to 60 percent today. Shall we in Congress stand idly by while this percentage drops lower and lower every year—as happened to our merchant marine in the past?

In order to correct the situation which the merchant marine once faced—not only competition from foreign ships but also our own Navy—Congress found it necessary to take legislative action limiting the Navy's competition. Similar type legislation with respect to MATS has been proposed and bills to this effect are pending in our committee.

Another major reason for the reduction in traffic carried by our U.S.-flag carriers, of course, has been the fact that 40 foreign airlines now draw on the U.S. market compared to 22 in 1949.

Before I touch on some of these questions it might well be wondered just how important all this is—that is, just what is the impact on the commercial airlines of the MATS insistence on operating an airline of its own.

Of all the scheduled airline traffic moving between the continental United States and all international, oversea, Alaskan and Hawaiian points—85 percent of the cargo and mail and 40 percent of the passengers are handled by MATS. As you can see, MATS competition is extensive.

Taking the North Atlantic as an example, U.S.-flag certificated airlines carry about 17 percent of the cargo, MATS handles 62 percent, and foreign-flag carriers move about 21 percent.

As a further illustration of how the activities of MATS are impairing the growth of our civil air transport system I would like to call your attention to the difficulties that arise from the way in which the policy of competitive bidding is carried out.

Recently MATS let $24 million worth of domestic military support transportation by competitive bidding. This traffic was awarded for movement in World War II aircraft. In fact, and this is almost hard to believe, one of the contracts actually specified that post-World War II aircraft were not acceptable.

It is difficult for me to understand the value of this policy. In the first place it is clearly in the interest of the Defense Establishment to make certain that carriers are encouraged to develop ever more modern fleets to provide the best possible airlift reserve in case of national emergency. A contract policy such as I described above will hardly help to produce that. In addition the Department of Defense usually asks for competitive bids for commercial air transportation even though the traffic is going to move directly over the routes of air carriers certificated by the Civil Aeronautics Board and the President.

If, on the other hand, the Defense Department will implement a policy, and MATS will practice it, of encouraging the U.S.-flag airlines then we will not only be able to bolster the economic strength of these airlines but we will also guarantee that there is a growing quantity of the best and most modern air transports, for cargo and for passengers, available to the Nation in time of crisis.

These scheduled airlines have responded already to the need for increased cargo lift, a worthy effort that should be met by a sound policy on the part of the Government. It is interesting to note that Assistant Secretary of Defense Perkins McGuire has declared:

> Our study currently of the overall airlift situation indicates that continuity of the overseas logistic pipeline must be assured if we are to take recurring cold war crises in our stride. Such an assurance would be possible only if the airline industry possessed the capacity to perform an overseas air logistic support function and the continued availability of this capacity to the Department of Defense during periods of emergency were assured.
> The possibility of disruption can certainly be minimized through the development of an appropriate U.S. civil air cargo lift capacity and its use by military in peacetime for routine logistic support.

The airlines expect, during the next year and a half, to add 15 CL–44's, a Canadian-built freight airplane and 26 DC–7 airfreighters. A U.S. international airline has ordered 12 Lockheed 207 airfreighters ideally suited for maintenance of the overseas logistic pipeline that the Department of Defense has described as so important. Another carrier has ordered four turboprop Argosies for domestic operation. Without question this is an impressive response.

It must be remembered that these new airplanes, specially tailored for cargo, could be available for national defense purposes whether we face cold war, limited war, or total war. And I might add, without any capital investment on the part of the taxpayer and yet just as useful for the Nation as if the Government had to pay directly for them.

But more than airplanes, the airlines have been moving forward in a positive way, for which they should be commended, to provide administrative and economic answers to the problems posed by the national defense requirements.

The four U.S.-flag certificated international transatlantic and transpacific airlines responded to Defense Department requests and asked the Civil Aeronautics Board to permit them to work out detailed plans and arrangements with the Department of Defense to expand the peacetime commercial airlift of military cargo and personnel, establish reduced and reasonable rates for military air transportation, and provide airlift for any emergency.

I was pleased to note that the Civil Aeronautics Board just recently granted approval for the carriers under certain conditions, to go forward with their discussions looking toward development of an economical plan for the movement of Defense Department traffic. I feel confident that such a program will result in the movement of Government traffic at a lower cost to the taxpayers than the continuation of the MATS scheduled operations will permit, and at the same time, provide the Nation with a greater airlift capability.

I am confident that the study of the so-called MATS problem which the Appropriation Committees have determined to undertake will find an answer to the problem which will lead to adequate appropriations for MATS in the field of research and modernization for its strategic role.

In closing, let me again commend the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] for the very constructive contributions which his committee has made through its searching examination of this problem. His report, which has just been issued, contains many enlightening details about the MATS airline operation and the destructive effects of MATS competitive bidding practices in the procurement field.

As a result of these efforts, it is my hope that MATS will be given the opportunity to fulfill its proper hard-core military role and the airlines will be allowed to provide the day-in and day-out military airlift that is required. I am certain that if the Department of Defense will establish a firm policy along these lines, the airlines, the Air Force, and the Nation will gain.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK].

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, the proper operation of the Military Air Transport Service is of grave concern to all of us. Those problems in connection with the justifiable need and the provision for necessary and suitable equipment to be used by well-qualified personnel should be given careful study in the establishment of a comprehensive policy. Some reference and discussion of these matters, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, is inescapable in connection with the pending legislation having to do with the allocation of funds by the Federal Aviation Agency for assistance in airport construction in both Alaska and Hawaii.

There is little question in my own mind, Mr. Chairman, but that the existence and use of our Military Air Transport Service is completely essential as a vital part and important component of our Armed Forces. Thus I feel, Mr. Chairman, that MATS should be provided with the type of equipment necessary and staffed by well-trained personnel to move armed services personnel and equipment quickly and efficiently wherever and whenever necessary.

The need and reasons, Mr. Chairman, for a strong, well-trained, fully and adequately equipped National Defense Department of sufficient size and ability is fully recognized by everyone especially during times of worldwide tensions. Such Armed Forces must be prepared to move and operate by land, by sea, and through the air if we are to properly protect and defend our American way of life against all those counter forces that might seek to destroy us.

Thus proper preparation and the ability and the will to perform promptly are necessary functions of our Armed Forces. The recognition of our ability and determination by all other nations and the fact that we have never been an aggressor Nation gives the greatest assurance that we will not need to use our might.

It has always seemed to me, Mr. Chairman, that we can compare these needs to the needs of our local community fire departments. I think we each recognize and support the expenditure of public funds for a well equipped, adequately trained, and fully manned local fire department which is ready, willing, and able to respond in the event of any emergency. Each of us is better off, each is safer, and it is of little cost to us by comparison if our local fire departments never need to leave their engine houses. Yet when we need them, we really want them available and ready. Thus I have always felt, Mr. Chairman, that the various branches of our Armed Forces in our U.S. Department of Defense have a responsibility for our Nation's protection and safety somewhat comparable to the local responsibilities of our local fire departments. My comments, Mr. Chairman, are, therefore, in no way meant to minimize the importance of the components of our Defense Department but instead are intended to make some effort to draw a line of demarcation between the use of such facilities for their primary purpose and use as compared to using them in competition with private enterprise.

I am sure we all recognize, Mr. Chairman, that the taxes necessary to pay the cost of all of our governmental operations and projects at all levels, local, State, and national, can come from only one source—the people themselves. One of two systems must be used. In one, the Government owns everything, receives all the benefits of whatever natural resources it has, receives any and all profits, and doles back to its citizens in food, shelter, clothing, earnings, products and services, whatever the Government wants or decrees its people shall have. This is the exact opposite and extreme from our American way of life. Here in these United States we glorify the individual, protect the cherished freedoms that have been made so precious bacause they have been earned, and proudly boast of our American way of life and our free enterprise system. Yet we also endanger these very precious freedoms and opportunities when we make taxes confiscatory and perhaps even place the Government in competition with private enterprise. Competitive services and production taking legitimate opportunities away from private enterprise may well "kill the goose that lays the golden egg" because there will be no profits and earnings upon which taxes can be levied to support governmental operations. Great care, therefore, Mr. Chairman, must be used to keep public services in balance and not unduly interfere with and make unprofitable the continued development of our free enterprise system.

By way of comparison, it would seem wrong to me, Mr. Chairman, for any local fire department passenger car to be used to transport other local governmental officials from one place to another and thus take such a car away from its appointed use and purpose. It would be similarly wrong, Mr. Chairman, for a local fire department utility-type truck to haul materials of various kinds between sections of a city. Such a program would be hard to defend unless the cost of such transportation by other privately owned and operated cars and trucks is fantastically higher and out of line or is entirely unavailable. It would seem especially difficult, Mr. Chairman, to justify regularly scheduled trips by such publicly owned vehicles unless, of course, there is no other privately owned transportation system available or the cost of using such privately owned system is entirely out of line and beyond reason.

Some information and an editorial relating to transportation by air has recently come to my attention, Mr. Chairman. It is my understanding that there are four commercial U.S. airlines, and perhaps there are more, which have regularly scheduled flights from the United States to various other oversea airports and that these flights are in turn connected up with other flights to other points. It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that these four U.S. airlines do not receive any subsidy from our Federal Government for their operations and that they each do make a profit in spite of the fact that their rates are competitive. It would seem to be a mistake, Mr. Chairman, if the profitable and proper operation of these scheduled oversea airlines is interfered with by unwise use of MATS flights made entirely at the expense of all the taxpayers of our Nation. It would, therefore, seem most wise to me if this entire matter could be fully and completely reviewed by the representatives of the commercial airlines and the proper and appropriate officials of the U.S. Air Force in a conference sponsored and supervised by the Civil Aeronautics Board. The complete report of such a conference should then be referred to the Congress for appropriate action by it and its committees.

A comment in the Journal of Commerce dated September 2 is responsible in part, Mr. Chairman, for my comments on these matters at this time; and, under unanimous consent, I include this article in my remarks for the information and benefit of the Members:

BUSINESS IN THE AIR

Four years ago the Hoover Commission concluded a study of military air transport operations with the pointed comment that the Government could save itself considerable sums of money by shipping via commercial airlines a substantial volume of the international military traffic then being carried on planes of the Military Air Transport Service.

MATS was in no way discouraged. As traffic manager, forwarding agent and prime carrier for all oversea air transportation of the Department of Defense, it subsequently enjoyed a lusty growth. Today it operates more than 400 transport aircraft, employing stewardesses, publishing its own tariffs, collecting fares and shipping charges from the other three services and qualifying with no trouble at all as the biggest air service in the free world.

In fiscal 1960 it expects to run up 404 million passenger miles and over a billion ton miles of cargo. No airline can match that.

There would be nothing very wrong with this picture if the bulk of this brisk traffic were moving to and from distant bases not serviced by commercial airlines; or if it required special types of equipment airlines are in no position to provide; or if MATS were providing all this service a good deal more cheaply than anyone else could.

Unfortunately, however, the MATS operation meets none of these three conditions. The bulk of its service—nearly 90 percent—parallels existing scheduled air routes. The bulk of the equipment it uses in these services is more suitable for peacetime than wartime usage, especially as regards its passenger craft. And far from being cheaper than commercial services, MATS' operating costs and schedules are relatively high.

In the circumstances it is hardly surprising that the MATS operation is under fire. The American oversea airlines don't like it; they are getting 150 million passenger miles and 70.8 million ton miles of cargo from MATS, but consider that falls far short of what they should be getting. Federal Air Agency Administrator Quesada agrees; and so, in principle, anyway, does the Department of Defense itself. Why, then, does MATS still operate what amounts very largely to a huge commercial service?

One reason may be found in the effective lobbying conducted by the Air Force in behalf of MATS. But beyond this several other arresting reasons have been advanced.

One is that MATS aircrews need the training afforded them in flying these transport services, and that since they would be flying anyway, the savings possible through transferring this business to airlines would be illusory. This argument looks better on paper than it does in practice, as evidenced by figures which show a much heavier usage of aircraft flying these particular services than of other MATS aircraft which in no way compete with airlines.

Another is that in emergencies, such as that arising out of last year's crisis in Lebanon, MATS has found it necessary to pay high rates for the use of commercial aircraft, even when following its tradition of seeking bids for such services. This is doubtless true, but it does not take into account the fact that American airlines operating overseas have offered to enter into long-term contracts with MATS that would rule out a repetition of such experiences in the future.

We think it would be better for MATS, for the Defense Department, for airlines, for the aircraft industry, and for shippers if a good deal of the MATS traffic that could be handled by airlines were transferred to the commercial services. And there is a good deal more involved in such a transfer than the principle of keeping government out of competition with private business.

It would be better for MATS because it would permit this important service to concentrate on its real mission, the provision of a strategic transport to the armed services. This would mean a somewhat smaller MATS, but one stocked up with the kind of equipment most needed in emergencies rather than commercial equipment requiring conversion. It would also insure MATS of a reserve of efficient commercial planes far longer than the airlines can supply now.

The crucial consideration is that, given a firm assurance of a larger chunk of military business, the airlines could commit themselves to buy not only new passenger planes, but advanced types of cargo carriers equipped with rear loading devices and other new technological improvements that would ultimately cut down sharply on present handling costs. Three cargo carriers have already ordered such craft, but more are necessary to provide a really efficient and balanced air transport system.

Initially, the airlines may require some assistance in financing new equipment commitments on the order. But ultimately they, rather than the Government, would bear the cost, and the beneficial results of this more economical air transport system could be made available to everyone, including aircraft manufacturers, including shippers and including—in times of calm or in times of high emergency—the Department of Defense itself.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I do not want to belabor this matter, Mr. Chairman. I do want to call attention to the fact that if Alaska is to be treated as this bill intends she be treated, then $2½ million to $3 million must be taken out of the discretionary fund. That much less money will be available to the other 49 States. There is not any other mathematical way to fix this up. And if this is not the intent of the bill, if it is not the intent to assure Alaska the $3,700,000 instead of the $1,350,000 that is in the present law then what is the purpose of the legislation?

The Administrator said to the subcommittee that heard this testimony that if this bill was passed he would take care of their needs, and their needs are $3,700,000. Otherwise this bill is just an idle gesture and I am sure it is not intended to be that. You have only so much pie to cut, $63 million to be exact. You can give the money to Alaska as a State or you can give it to her as a Territory. But if she remains a Territory and the Administrator makes up what is intended to be made up to meet her needs, out of the discretionary fund, then there is that much less money available to the 49 States, and so you come out exactly the same way, so far as the distribution of funds is concerned.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. I was going to point out that Alaska's estimate of need in addition to the $1,350,000 would be about $1¼ million per year if we are successful in establishing priority for extending some runways for jet travel, and the $60 million that the gentleman speaks of or a total of $63 million is for each of 2 years, is it not, the extended life of the program. So Alaska would be getting each one of those 2 years, if successful in establishing a priority, double the $1¼ million.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Let me ask the gentleman this question. He represents the great State of Alaska. Would he rather have his State get $1,350,000 as a Territory or would he rather have it get $3,720,000 as a State?

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. I would rather have the original House bill which would include us for the full amount. I do not want to take the risk of getting nothing, in the interest of backing up the theory of being a State, at this particular point. I am in favor of a practical solution and I think this bill is the practical solution.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. YOUNGER].

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to correct the record, I think the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS], if I am not mistaken, made the statement that this bill came out of the full committee unanimously.

Mr. STAGGERS. If I said that, I was mistaken; I meant the subcommittee which heard all of the evidence, heard all the witnesses and who I thought were competent to judge.

Mr. YOUNGER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, all that I had outlined to say has already been said. Members have come and gone, some have not heard all of what has been said, some have heard part of it. Accordingly I will summarize.

Let us get back to the practical approach at this time and consider why it is not feasible to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BENNETT, which would enable Alaska and Hawaii to share in the principal airport fund, without appropriating more money. The original Senate bill and the original House version acted upon early in this session would have included Alaska and Hawaii for an amount of money equivalent to what they would have obtained as States under the regular formula. But as we know the original legislation did not become law because the conferees failed to agree, so at that point we were without an airport program. Then as a stopgap measure the Senate quickly acted to extend the 1956 Federal Airport Act for a 2-year period. That was concurred in by the House and became the law. In 1956 Alaska and Hawaii were both Territories, so by extending the 1956 act Alaska and Hawaii were carried forward as Territories, which cut in half the amounts to which they would have been entitled as States.

I might say at that point Alaska was a State and Hawaii was on the verge of becoming a State. Explaining the transition becomes a little involved. But inasmuch as those earlier airport bills designed to cover the coming 4-year period authorized a larger appropriation than is presently available, nobody was objecting to having Alaska included for the full amount or Hawaii included for the full amount to which they would have been entitled as States. But when we went back to the $60 million a year, plus $3 million which was allocated for Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, your two new States were back in the Territorial category as to the amount of money concerned.

We from Alaska and Hawaii have taken the position that we do not want to ask our colleagues in this Congress to divide with us under the regular allocation of funds at their expense. We do not want to ask any of the Members to put us under the formula at a decrease of the amounts to which each of them or each of their respective States would be entitled under the allocation formula. I think we would be foolish if we did. I could not expect a majority of the Members to vote for cutting down the amounts presently available, under existing law, for their respective States.

Alaska has what might be called a high priority program. That is, it is of importance to the Federal Government as well as to Alaska. Foreign airlines are coming over the polar route and over the great circle route, from Denmark, the Netherlands, Japan, and France, and they are refueling at Anchorage, Alaska. Northwest Airlines is flying to and from the Orient via Anchorage. Alaska is at the hub of this intercontinental air commerce. It will soon be at the hub of flights between the east coast of the United States and both Europe and the Orient.

The Federal Government wants Alaska to extend its runways for jet use because all of these airlines have scheduled bringing in full jet service by 1961, in the fall of that year. Alaska, which has recently taken over the 17 civil airports heretofore operated by the Federal Government in Alaska, which the Federal Government insisted should be done, has already started its preliminary work to get the runway extensions at Fairbanks and Anchorage constructed on schedule. The Federal Government wants us to get them through on schedule. So we have assumed our responsibility. I want to make it perfectly clear that we do not want to be retained in the twilight zone of territoriality under the Airport Aid Act or under any other act. But, as a practical proposition, and under the circumstances, and being reasonable men, we are willing to take something less than an equal footing at the present time, asking only to be made eligible to participate in the discretionary fund for this year and next year, and then with the risk and with the gamble that our priority will be high enough to obtain the money needed to complete the runway extension program in the interest of the National Government as well as in the interest of the State.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge the passage of the bill.

I certainly subscribe to the remarks of Mr. HARRIS, chairman of the committee, and of Mr. WILLIAMS, chairman of the subcommittee, and to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] said. In conclusion, we are not here as a State or Territory, but we are here insisting that when this legislation is brought up again, and the airport act will be up again in the next year and one-half or two, because the present setup expires in 2 years from the day that we renewed it, Alaska and Hawaii will be absolutely insisting on full participation. The complicated formula will have to be rewritten so that it will cover the entire 50 States and not just 48 States. To administer a change at this time such as would be brought about by the proposed amendment would, as the chairman, Mr. HARRIS, said, disrupt the present allocation and the formula for the older 48 States, in connection with which there is taken into account population, area, public lands, and so on.

So I urge, Mr. Chairman, that we turn down the amendment and pass the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That paragraph (2) of section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act (69 Stat. 442, 49 U.S.C. 1105) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Such discretionary fund shall be available for such approved projects in the several States, Alaska, and Hawaii as the Administrator may deem most appropriate for carrying out the national airport plan, regardless of the location of such projects. The Administrator shall give consideration, in determining the projects for which such fund is to be so used, to the existing airport facilities in the several States, Alaska, and Hawaii, and to the need for or lack of development of airport facilities in the several States, Alaska, and Hawaii."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That paragraph (2) of section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act (49 U.S.C., sec. 1105(b)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Such discretionary fund shall be available for such approved projects in the several States, Alaska, and Hawaii as the Administrator may deem most appropriate for carrying out the national airport plan, regardless of the location of such projects. The Administrator shall give consideration, in determining the projects for which such fund is to be so used, to the existing airport facilities in the several States, Alaska, and Hawaii, and to the need for or lack of development of airport facilities in the several States, Alaska, and Hawaii.'"

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNETT of Michigan as a substitute for the committee amendment: Page 2, strike out lines 6 through 18, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That section 2(a) of the Federal Airport Act, as amended (49 U.S.C., sec. 1101(a)), is amended as follows:

"(1) In paragraph (7), strike out 'Alaska, Hawaii, or Puerto Rico and' and insert in lieu thereof 'Puerto Rico, or'.

"(2) In paragraph (12), strike out 'on May 13, 1946' and insert in lieu thereof 'on August 22, 1959'.

"SEC. 2. The third sentence of section 3(a) of such Act, as amended (49 U.S.C., sec. 1102(a)), is amended by striking out 'Alaska, Hawaii,'.

"SEC. 3. Section 5 of such Act, as amended (49 U.S.C., sec. 1104), is amended as follows:

"(1) The first sentence of subsection (a) is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1959, June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961' and inserting in lieu thereof 'and June 30, 1959, and the sum of $62,100,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961'.

"(2) In subsection (b), insert '(1)' immediately after '(b)'.

"(3) In the first sentence of subsection (b), strike out 'June 30, 1959, June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961' and insert in lieu thereof 'and June 30, 1959'.

"(4) In the third sentence of subsection (b), strike out 'subsection' and insert 'paragraph'.

"(5) At the end of such subsection (b), add the following new paragraph:

"'(2) For the purpose of carrying out this Act with respect to projects in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, there are hereby authorized to be obligated by the execution of grant agreements pursuant to section 12 the sum of $900,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961. Each such authorized amount shall become available for obligation beginning July 1 of the fiscal year for which it is authorized and shall continue to be so available until so obligated. Of the sum of $900,000 authorized by this paragraph for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961, the sum of $600,000 shall be available for projects in Puerto Rico and the sum of $300,000 shall be available for projects in the Virgin Islands.'

"SEC. 4. Section 7 of such Act, as amended (49 U.S.C., sec. 1106), is amended as follows:

"(1) Strike out 'in Alaska, in Hawaii, or'.

"(2) Amend the section heading to read as follows:

"'AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR PROJECTS IN PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS'

"SEC. 5. Section 9(c) of such Act, as amended (49 U.S.C., sec. 1108(c)), is amended by striking out 'Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and' and inserting 'Puerto Rico or'.

"SEC. 6. Section 10(c) of such Act, as amended (49 U.S.C., sec. 1109(c)), is amended as follows:

"(1) Strike out 'Alaska and'.

"(2) Amend the subsection heading to read as follows:

"'Projects in the Virgin Islands'

"SEC. 7. (a) The amendments to the Federal Airport Act made by this Act shall take effect as of July 1, 1959."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proposed or alleged substitute for the committee amendment.

The committee amendment is applicable only to paragraph 2 of section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act affecting the discretionary fund only.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan which he alleges is a substitute amendment is not a substitute for this amendment; it is an amendment to the entire Airport Construction Act. The bill confines itself to the States. The alleged substitute goes far beyond what is intended under the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. The effect of this amendment is to treat the Territories as States under the act. The committee bill treats them as States for the purpose of getting them discretionary funds under the act, treating them as States on that basis.

The amendment was drawn after careful consideration by the legislative counsel. I maintain it is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill before the House deals with paragraph 2 of section 6(b). The substitute deals with other portions of the act and also deals with Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, which are not in the present act. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLATNIK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2208) to provide that Alaska and Hawaii be eligible for participation in the distribution of discretionary funds under section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act, pursuant to House Resolution 373, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 309, nays 75, not voting 51, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

THE ATLAS MISSILE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the defense of our country was again bolstered today with the announcement by the U.S. Air Force that the Atlas missile was successfully fired at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. The firing was accomplished by an Air Force team specially trained for this vital mission.

Today's Atlas firing gives the United States our first operational intercontinental ballistic missile. This is a demonstration of American ingenuity and ability to come from behind. It is a remarkable accomplishment in view of the fact that we lagged far behind Russia in this field a few years ago. Today's firing further justifies action by the Congress this year in expanding the number of Atlas squadrons from 9 to 17.

It is altogether significant that this successful flight of the Atlas comes shortly after the Mercury test of last evening. As you know, the Atlas will be one of the primary propulsion units for the "Man in Space" program, and although the second stage of the Mercury shot failed to fire, the reentry of the nose cone gave us much valuable information for future space experiments.

May I take this opportunity to extend congratulations to the Air Force and to Convair, the prime contractor who developed and built the Atlas missile.

INTEREST RATES ON SERIES E AND H U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 9035) to permit the issuance of series E and H U.S. savings bonds at interest rates above the existing maximum to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to designate certain exchanges of Government securities to be made without recognition of gain or loss, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MILLS, HORAN, KING of California, SIMPSON of Pennsylvania, and MASON.

AMENDING MINERAL LEASING ACT

Mr. ASPINALL submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2181) to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920.

THE 1964 WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds to make an announcement on behalf of the majority leader.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader asked me to advise the membership that the House joint resolution relating to the World's Fair in 1964 will be scheduled for consideration tomorrow under suspension of the rules.

EXTENSION OF REFINANCING LOAN AUTHORITY

Mr. GRANT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 7629) to make permanent the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans under section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the Managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1141)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7629) to make permanent the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans under section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, is amended (1) by striking out 'June 30, 1959' and inserting 'June 30, 1961' and (2) by striking out of the second sentence the words 'livestock and farm equipment' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'other assets'."

That the House recede from its disagreement from the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend the title so as to read: "An act to extend section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act for two years and for other purposes".

And the Senate agree to the same.

HAROLD D. COOLEY,
W. R. POAGE,
G. M. GRANT,

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
SPESSARD. L. HOLLAND,
HERMAN E. TALMADGE,
GEORGE D. AIKEN,
KARL E. MUNDT,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7629) to make permanent the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans under section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill as passed by the House struck out the termination date of section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act (authorizing the making of loans for refinancing of farm real estate mortgages) and made certain improvements in the language of the section to provide clearly that growing or recently harvested crops would be included in computing a farmer's assets under the provisions of the section.

The Senate amendment extended the effective date of section 17 from June 30, 1959, to June 30, 1961, and did not make the change in language which was included in the House bill.

The substitute agreed to by the conferees and herewith reported retains the improving language of the House bill relating to assets and agrees with the Senate amendment in extending the authority under the section for only two years.

HAROLD D. COOLEY,
W. R. POAGE,
GEORGE M. GRANT,
CHARLES B. HOEVEN,
PAUL B. DAGUE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, as authorized by law, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights has today made a final and comprehensive report to Congress on its activities, findings, and recommendations. As if concerned more with the publicity of its work than fulfilling its legal obligation to report to Congress its findings, advance information on this report was made available to the press a week ago and I have since been reading in the newspapers and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD excerpts of the report. My copy has been in my hands only a few hours during which time I have devoted considerable time to studying its findings and recommendations.

It was my hope that the Commission would present a fair and unbiased report, but I have found that its shocking recommendations are basically anti-South and are a throwback to the Reconstruction era. From a perusal of the 200-page abridged version of the report it is apparent that what the Commission recommends in a nutshell is a planned society—one regulated completely by the Federal Government. If followed, its suggestions would, in my opinion, create more discord in racial relations that have been strained to an explosive point as a result of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions. I hope my colleagues from areas outside the South will study this report carefully and see for themselves that the recommendations are not generally supported by facts but are the same proposals that have been advocated repeatedly over the years by the social do-gooders. At a time when we need to remain strong and united at home to meet the grave threats to us from abroad, I urge my colleagues from the North and West to consider the cleavage in our national ranks that could result from following the course set fourth by the Commission. The recommendations would require legislation extending far beyond the most intemperate court decisions. They call for Federal legislation in fields which are, by their very nature, best left to the individual States.

It is noteworthy at this point, I think, to emphasize that many of its recommendations call for new and broader powers of the Commission if its life is extended by this Congress. This is not surprising to me because it seems every time we create any new agency within the Federal Government it immediately adopts as its prime objective a justification of its perpetuation and growth.

The Commission's report contains findings and recommendations concerning civil rights in voting, education, and housing. Especially in the fields of voting and education, the report is in general a denouncement of our pattern of segregation in the Southern States. My own State of Georgia, by implication at least, is held up to the rest of the Nation and the world as a place where minorities are treated unfairly in these particular fields. Yet when the Commission presented its budget before a House Appropriations Subcommittee, on which I have the pleasure of serving, Chairman Hannah, in answers to my questions, testified to the good relations existing in Georgia between the whites and nonwhites in the fields of voting and housing. In fact, Chairman Hannah testified that on the date of the hearings, April 30, 1959, the Commission had received only 17 complaints of all kinds from Georgia while at the same time a total of 51 had been received from New York State. This statistic is not meant as any criticism of the State of New York but is used merely for a comparison.

Beginning on page 1204 of the hearings of the Subcommittee on Departments of State and Justice, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations appears the following testimony:

CONCLUSION ON HOUSING IN ATLANTA

Mr. PRESTON. Dr. Hannah, what conclusions did you reach in Atlanta about housing? (The Commission had held hearings in Atlanta.)

Mr. HANNAH. Well, sir, we concluded that there was a story in Atlanta that could well be told to the country. Of course, there is some pretty poor Negro housing in Atlanta, as there is poor housing for Negroes and white folks in other sections of the country, but the Atlanta story is a very interesting story and the progress that has been made in providing an opportunity for Negroes to acquire middle-class, and high-class housing—while it is true they are segregated in areas—they have some very fine communities. This has been a cooperative effort worked out voluntarily by the Negroes and the white people and the city leaders and the mayor and so on.

Frankly, I was surprised and pleased at what we found in the housing area in Atlanta, not because you happen to be a native of Georgia, but there is a better opportunity provided for middle-class and high-class housing for at least some of those Negroes in Atlanta than in many cities in my part of the country. (Dr. Hannah is from Michigan.)

GENERAL LACK OF REGISTERING AND VOTING PROBLEM IN GEORGIA

Mr. PRESTON. Have you found generally in the State of Georgia that the Negro population has no problem about registering and voting?

Mr. HANNAH. Well, from personal investigation, certainly in Atlanta and in many other areas that were brought into our discussions there, that is true.

I think there were some indications that perhaps there were some of the isolated rural areas where that might not be true, but I have no firsthand knowledge of that. It is my general impression the voting situation in Georgia is pretty good and getting much better.

Mr. PRESTON. In my own district there are one or two counties which have more Negro registered voters than white.

Mr. HANNAH. The Congressman recognizes that there are many counties in the South with large populations of Negroes where there is not even one registered.

Mr. PRESTON. You would not find that to be true in Georgia.

Mr. HANNAH. That is correct.

Mr. PRESTON. Georgia is one of the most progressive States in the Union, and one of the most liberal States in the Union.

Mr. HANNAH. I believe that is right. There is a good deal of discussion about this county-unit system in Georgia, but the complaining was done by whites, not by the Negroes.

Mr. PRESTON. We have a similar system in the electoral college.

Since my exchange with Dr. Hannah during the Appropriations Subcommittee hearings did not mention educational facilities in Georgia, I would like to mention here that Georgia has just completed a statewide school building program costing more than $200 million. Percentagewise the Negro children profited more from these new schools than the whites. Not only is every Negro child provided equal educational opportunities in Georgia but he generally acquires this education while in classrooms more modernistic in design, newer, and more comfortable than a white child. We hope that some day we can build schools equally as modern and comfortable for our white children.

I have briefed the Commission's major recommendations and followed them by my criticism as follows:

I. VOTING

1. Recommended that the Bureau of the Census be authorized and directed to undertake, in connection with the census of 1960 or at the earliest possible time thereafter, a nationwide and territorial compilation of registration and voting statistics which shall include a count of individuals by race, color, and national origin who are registered, and a determination of the extent to which such inviduals have voted since the prior decennial census.

Mr. Speaker, in the Commission's own words, this recommendation is based not on information but on a lack of information as to whether citizens are being denied the right to register and vote. Stating that there is a general deficiency of information pertinent to the phenomenon of nonvoting, the Commission makes this comment: "The lack of this kind of information presents real difficulties in any undertaking such as this Commission's." The Commission operated last fiscal year on a budget of $777,000 to gather the very type of information that it now wants the Census Bureau to gather for it. If, during its existence, it has not uncovered evidence that citizens generally are being denied the right to vote, then the Commission should be content. The recommendation can serve no useful purpose but would lead to harassing tactics by Federal authority over the State officials who are charged with supervising the voting machinery.

2. Recommended that the Congress require that all State and territorial registration and voting records shall be public records and must be preserved for a period of 5 years, during which time they shall be subject to public inspection, provided that all care be taken to preserve the secrecy of the ballot.

This recommendation is based on the Commission's alleged findings that lack of uniform provision for the preservation and public inspection of all records pertaining to registration and voting hampers and impedes investigation of alleged denials of the right to vote by reason of race, color, religion, or national origin.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that our election machinery is operated in accordance with State laws and our State legislatures did not write these statutes for the convenience of a Federal agency that wants to pry into our internal affairs. I do not see that it is a proper function of our voting officials to be required under color of Federal law to provide massive records prescribed by the Civil Rights Commission.

3. Recommended that the Civil Rights Act of 1957 be amended so that it shall be a prohibition for any person or group to be denied the opportunity to register, vote, and have that vote counted in an election of a national officeholder.

This recommendation is based on the assumption that boards of registrars deny persons the right to register to vote. While the Commission held hearings in two areas where it was alleged that this occurred, the Commission failed to show that boards of registrars in any part of the country make this a general practice. Furthermore, any person denied the right to register has a redress in court.

4. Recommended that the Civil Rights Commission itself be authorized to apply directly to an appropriate U.S. district court for an order enforcing a Commission subpena issued in cases of contumacy or refusal to obey same.

The Commission apparently is not satisfied with its advisory powers and now wants wide new authority so that it can go into court at the slightest provocation, thereby bypassing the Justice Department, which already has similar powers.

5. Recommended that the President of the United States may appoint a Federal registrar where nine or more individuals (by affidavit) allege they have been denied the right to register to vote on account of race, etc. (Special dissent by Commissioner Battle.)

I think Commissioner Battle, who dissented from the above recommendation, properly did so. He stated:

I concur in the proposition that all properly qualified American citizens should have the right to vote, but I believe the present laws are sufficient to protect that right, and I disagree with the proposal for the appointment of a Federal registrar which would place in the hands of the Federal Government a vital part of the election process so jealously guarded and carefully reserved to the States by the Founding Fathers.

II. EDUCATION

1. Recommended that Congress authorize the Commission to act as a clearinghouse on information for public-school desegregation.

Mr. Speaker, the Commission states that one of the reasons this recommendation is made is because many school districts "have been confused and frustrated by apparent inconsistencies in decisions of lower Federal courts" relating to school integration. I am glad to see the Commission admit that the court decisions have caused confusion and frustration in this field, because that is what some of us here in Congress have been trying to get across all along. This Commission was not created to implement the Court decision of May 17, 1954, but it now seeks to become an arm of the Supreme Court.

2. Recommended that the Office of Education of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, in cooperation with the Bureau of the Census and Department of Commerce, conduct an annual school census to show the number and race of all students enrolled in all public educational institutions in the United States. Such data would be compiled by States, by school districts, and by individual institutions of higher education within each State.

Mr. Speaker, the information which the Commission seeks with this recommendation already is available in every State educational office in the Nation.

III. HOUSING

1. Recommended that an appropriate biracial committee or commission on housing, with investigatory, mediatory, and conciliatory powers, be established in all cities and States with substantial nonwhite populations.

This recommendation is entirely unnecessary and is a further invasion of the right of local communities to make their own determinations consistent with local conditions and traditions.

2. Recommended that the President by Executive order state the constitutional objective of equal opportunity in housing. Also that the Civil Rights Commission be requested to continue to study and appraise the policies of Federal housing agencies, to prepare and propose plans to bring about the end of discrimination in all federally assisted housing and to make appropriate recommendations.

This recommendation is a clear duplication of activity already engaged in by the executive branch through its housing agencies. It would further enable one commission of the Government to superimpose its policies upon another executive agency of the Government. This recommendation illustrates how far afield the Commission has gone.

3, 4, 5, and 6. Four recommendations involve the Federal Housing Administration, the Veterans' Administration, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and the Public Housing Authority.

If all the Commission's recommendations in the field of housing are carried out, it would virtually deprive Southern States of the right to participate in any of the programs administered by the Federal housing agencies.

And, now, Mr. Speaker, the Commission wants to extend its life. For what good, may I ask?

What a pity that sectionalism has dulled the judgment of so many in high places.

MASSACHUSETTS DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the independent dairy farmers and the consumers of Massachusetts are threatened by a proposal that would make them captives of the 19 New England cooperative associations.

The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, under the impact of the depression, sought uniformity as a means of stabilizing the price of milk. The danger of monopoly control was implicit in the original act. The cooperatives and the big distributors have been inching toward absolute control over the production and price of milk ever since 1937.

You do not see many cows in the Massachusetts countryside today. The smaller dairy farms have been forced out of business by the big milk companies that want to concentrate production in Vermont, New Hamphire, and Maine, under conditions that will give them full control. The independent dairy farmers and the consumers are the victims of this growing monopoly.

The intent is hidden in the vague and disarming language of these proposals to be considered at a public hearing to be held in the Federal building, Boston, Mass., on September 9.

Proposal No. 11 appears innocent enough on the surface. It reads:

Amend the producer-handler definition in sections 904.2(i), 996.2(i), and 99.2(i) of the Greater Boston, Springfield, and Worcester orders, respectively, to limit its application to a person (1) whose own farm production does not exceed 1,075 pounds on a daily average during the month and whose only source of supply for fluid milk products is milk of his own farm production and packaged fluid milk products from pool plants, or (2) whose sole source of supply for fluid milk products is milk of his own farm production. (Proposed by the New England Milk Producers' Association; Northern Farms Cooperative, Inc., and Maine Dairymen's Association, Inc.)

Commenting on "sole source of supply" in the above definition, a leading dairy farmer in my district, whose family has been in this business for generations says:

There is no such animal. We all have to buy once in a while—cream, butter, milk, etc.

This deceptive definition limits the application of "producer-handler" under (2) to circumstances that do not exist.

Proposed amendment No. 11 will force producer-dealers—farmers who produce and process their own milk—to equalize with other producers in the Boston pool. This proposal says that any farmer who produces and sells over 500 quarts of milk daily will have to enter the pool.

If we are not recognized as a producer-handler, we are automatically in the pool—

Says the dairy farmer—and are assessed about 1½ cents per quart. We produce 3,000 quarts daily. Our bill, therefore, would be about $15,000 yearly. Who will be affected by Proposal No. 11? Every farmer who produces and sells his own milk, except those who handle less than 500 quarts and who do not buy any other milk, cream, or dairy products. Who is behind this proposal? The large dealers who seek to eliminate the smaller producer-dealers. This proposal would put many farmers out of business. It would also:

Discourage agriculture in Massachusetts.

Throw agricultural employees out of work.

Favor the Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine farmers.

Eliminate competition.

Discourage young farmers from entering the field.

Give more power to the monopolies who who have already driven thousands of small Massachusetts farmers out of business.

This dairyman speaks for the many small farmers in Massachusetts that we need to help supply our own milk needs without having all supplies eventually shipped in from other States. And I speak for the Massachusetts consumers in asking the Secretary of Agriculture not to approve of proposal No. 11 which encourages monopolistic control and higher prices that are detrimental to the public interest.

PLIGHT OF THE CLOTHING INDUSTRY IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, Japan is just about to completely destroy the clothing industry in the United States.

For the past 2 years I have been carefully checking her exports of ready-made clothing because of the steady decline of the clothing industry here in America. Production is at an alltime low and thousands of men and women are unemployed because domestic manufacturers are losing many of their contracts to foreign nations. This is a grave injustice to our working people in the industry and I appeal for your support in protecting them by expressing your opposition to the President.

In 1957 Japan, as a beginning, exported 55 readymade woolen men's suits and 24,598 pairs of ladies slacks and men's trousers to the States. The following year she increased her production and shipped 7,395 suits and 158,081 pairs of pants. During January and February of this current year, she exported to our shores 949 suits and 28,590 pairs of assorted trousers. As you can see, her production is increasing at such a rapid pace that I seriously doubt that we will be able to purchase American made union clothing within the next 10 years.

Today I received an up-to-date report on Japan's export of clothing to us and was amazed to learn that she shipped approximately 4,000 suits during the first 6 months of 1959. According to estimates, the Japanese expect to make 3,000 suits each month for the remainder of this year. In addition, she expects to send to the States between 2.4 and 3 million pairs of trousers.

Based on these facts, is it any wonder the American clothing industry is in a slump? We certainly cannot compete in a market where campetitive foreign prices are far below our minimum standards—and it would be grossly unfair to expect our men and women to work for a few pennies a day like the Japanese are doing.

Mr. Speaker, we are supposed to be living in the land of opportunity where everyone has the right to earn a living. It appears to me that we are giving this opportunity to everyone, except Americans.

WHAT WILL CONGRESS DO ABOUT "THE INVITATION TO KHRUSHCHEV?"

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, "Desecration Day" is now only a few days away, and the clock ticks on.

To the watchful and waiting world, the silence of Congress is interpreted as an endorsement of "the invitation to Khrushchev."

I do not believe that the Congress has been taken in by this psychological error of far-reaching consequences.

As representatives of the American people, I believe that we should speak up for them. The mail coming to our offices clearly shows their revulsion and their anger at the proposal that we should be courteous to this assassin of freedom right in our own homeland.

While we hesitate, time is running out.

If we fail to act before September 15, history will freeze the fact that we did not have the courage to speak up for freedom.

Someone has proposed that Congress should invite Khrushchev to address the Congress and advise us how to promote world peace.

This suggestion is an insult to our self-respect.

The American people will denounce and repudiate any person in public life who advocates moral surrender.

What then will Congress do about the invitation to Khrushchev?

Shall it adjourn in order to avoid embarrassment to itself?

That would be running away from its responsibilities.

Shall it stay in session to spread upon the record the life and crimes of Khrushchev and communism?

That would be defensive at best.

What we need is positive action, consistent with American principles, ideals, and courage. For too long have we been the victims of our own caution and timidity. We have forfeited initiative to the Communists, permitting them all the advantages of action, to which we have feebly responded by counteraction.

The invitation to Khrushchev is the latest and most painful illustration of the gear-slipping reaction of the United States to the wearing-down pressures of communism.

Retreat two steps, advance one step, retreat two steps.

By alternating the carrot with the stick over a period of 2 years, Khrushchev has finally forced an invitation from the White House.

The administration, concerned with the material costs of maintaining the security of the free world, becomes impatient. It thinks it can prevail upon Khrushchev to desist from aggression, both direct and indirect, and to agree to mutual disarmament that will "enable the Russan people, like ourselves, to enjoy more of the fruits of their labor."

Khrushchev smiles, as he detects a weakening of our will and our stamina.

"The Americans are not aware of it, but we are conditioning them to make those concessions that, under the guise of promoting peace, will be exploited by us for the advantage of communism."

The resolution by the Congress designating the third week of July as Captive Nations Week was contradicted, less than a month later, by the invitation to Khrushchev.

How is Congress going to correct this impression of moral surrender?

Khrushchev believes that our silence means consent.

Again I stress the imperative need for action by the Congress.

We have the opportunity through the resolution which I have introduced, stating our unyielding opposition to any recognition, actual or implied, of Communist enslavement of the captive nations. The language of the July resolution only expressed sympathy. The present one commits us to work for the peaceful liberation of the satellite states.

Where does Congress stand on this declaration of freedom for all?

By voting for this firm resolution we can recover the world respect and the self-respect that was lost through the invitation to Khrushchev.

PLAN NOW FOR THE EXPLOSION IN COLLEGE ENROLLMENTS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year I introduced H.R. 5467 to authorize the appropriation of $2½ million to enable States to inventory their higher education facilities, projects, future enrollments, and plan methods of meeting these expanding needs.

I introduced a similar bill in the last Congress and hope the Congress will enact a measure of this type because the benefits will be enormous relative to the cost which is minor.

The first benefit is that it will stimulate study and then action by the States to meet their own college needs. This will keep the financing and control of our State institutions primarily in the hands of the States. On the other hand, if we allow the explosion of college enrollments to arrive without adequate planning, the pressures for Federal aid as a primary solution will be enormous.

The second advantage is that advance planning can help us preserve a democratic higher education system. It has been estimated that if we don't step up the construction of college buildings by 1970 college gates will be closed to one out of three young people who want to attend. As an indication of the magnitude of the enrollment explosion, during this past year we had something over 3 million students enrolled in colleges. Yet an almost unbelievable 7,254,176 will be enrolled by 1975, assuming that the percentage of college-age people attending college continues to grow at the same rate it has over the past 20 years—the College Blue Book, 1959, page 919.

In my own State of Utah, for example, there are 31,544 people enrolled in college. This is 64 percent of the population of the State between the ages of 18 and 21—far and away the highest percentage of any State in the Union. If this percentage increases at only one-sixth the rate of its annual increase over the past decade, it will give us a college enrollment in 1975 of 67,646, considerable more than twice our present enrollment.

It is entirely possible that these enrollment projections for the Nation could be conservative. For example, about one-half of the top quarter of America's high school graduates now attend college. Consider this fact in comparison with the growing recognition of the value of a college education combined with the increasing ease of financing a college education. It becomes evident that the percentage of people attending college could expand even faster in the future than it has in the past.

The third major benefit which comes from promoting immediate planning by the States is the fact that necessity is the mother of invention, and early public discussion of striking future needs for our colleges will create a climate favoring beneficial innovations in college teaching and administration. Naturally immediate advanced planning will allow the States time to experiment with novel methods of greatly increasing the productivity of teachers and facilities.

The fourth major benefit which would result from this early planning would be the fact that there would be time for the coordination and exchange of plans and ideas among the States. This would multiply the effectiveness and benefits received from these new ideas.

Some examples of the areas where changes must be explored are:

First. Making better use of present facilities. There can be no justification for continuing the luxury of holding nearly all classes in the morning hours. There are universities where any time after 2 o'clock in the afternoon you could shoot a gun in virtually any direction from the center of the campus with little prospect of hitting anyone. Some studies indicate that on a 45-hour week basis existing classrooms are utilized not more than 50 percent of the time. I would like to illustrate that this poor utilization can be changed. The Brigham Young University in Utah has increased its enrollment from 5,000 to approximately 12,000 students in 8 years. They have spent $30 million on new building, but at the same time they have started scheduling full class loads from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. It is revolutionary to see almost every classroom on the campus filled at 7 by early rising students, yet their scheduling has been so effective that now 95 percent of all of their classrooms are utilized between the hours of 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Second. Low interest classes will have to be reevaluated. Some studies indicate that some one-third to one-half of all classes total in enrollment about 10 students or less. In some colleges there is a tendency for curriculum to be based more on the particular interests of the teachers than student demands. While there will be some small classes, obviously, to fill specific needs, many classes with only 3, 4, or 5 students can easily be dropped and the teacher shifted to classes which are in greater demand and where he is more productive.

Third. Plans to expand and use our college facilities over the summer. Some professional schools have succeeded in developing full year-round utilization of their classroom space.

Fourth. We must expand the productivity of our educators through the assistance of technological devices. For example, Weber High School in my home county in Utah has established a television circuit which enables them to utilize a large auditorium which is saving them from building 10 additional classrooms. They are confident that by selecting outstanding teachers they can give the benefits of high quality teaching to many more students through the TV circuit.

Several parts of the country are now experimenting with teaching machines of different types wherein a student is tested after each major segment of the lecture, and if he cannot show by answering correctly multiple choice question that he understood that portion of the lecture, it is repeated for him. This has enormous advantage over a classroom lecture which may leave behind many confused students. At the same time, of course, the warmth and personal contact of the teacher can never be entirely replaced by machines. However, some striking preliminary results are emerging. For example, because of the ability of a machine to insist that a point be thoroughly understood before it moves on, 14 fifth graders who took arithmetic instruction by machine averaged twice as high on their scores as 14 comparable fifth graders who were taught by normal methods.

Alexander Schure, the president of the New York Institute of Technology, has suggested "a good college teacher should be worth $15,000 a year—present national average $6,630—and he would be if his productivity were increased, with the routine clerical drudgery of testing absorbed, and with basic content taught by these machines."

Fifth. In addition to all of the technological devices and improved utilization of present facilities new facilities will also have to be built. By advanced planning States can develop the best arrangements for new junior colleges, new branches of existing universities, adding 13th and 14th grades to high schools, creating new technological institutes, and expanding existing campuses.

The States can surely best meet their needs by advanced research and planning rather than by trying to meet the problem of the college enrollment explosion as it takes place. Passage of my bill, H.R. 5467, will help insure this advance preparation.

POST OFFICE DRIVERS OF LYNN, MASS.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, an example of good citizenship, responsible behavior and real devotion to duty was given in a most practical manner by the drivers of post office vehicles in Lynn, Mass.

The post office drivers of Lynn proved that safety on the highways is possible of attainment and set a goal for all drivers to attain.

These careful and considerate drivers, exposed to daily traffic hazards, menace of poor and reckless drivers, inclement weather, treacherous roads and an exacting schedule of operations, received from the National Safety Council first place award for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and placed 24th in rank for all of the United States for safe and accident-free driving.

Most of us know that postal employees generally constitute an efficient, earnest, and capable corps of Government employees. The award, of which I am justifiably proud, also illustrates that they are responsible and exemplary.

Postmaster Thomas A. Wilkinson and his safety officer, Augustus A. Rossi, are to be complimented as well as the 16 vehicle drivers, recipients of the safe driver awards, who made this distinguished record possible by at least 36 months of vehicle operation without a preventable accident. Due acclaim must be given to the drivers, Alfred C. Hill, Harold C. Kingman, Carl G. Olson, Franklin M. Hathaway, Leonard J. Warren, Joseph Martel, David K. Willson, William C. Taylor, Lawrence Greene, Vincent Regan, Earl E. Shaw, Albert H. Drake, John R. Pasquale, Roderick P. Roberts, Joseph H. Hallissey, Zygmunt W. Skranda, and for safe driver awards for less than 36 months to Charles G. Tournas, Edward A. Nadeau, and John J. Gronin.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS AND TARIFF NEWS COVERAGE

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, on July 30 of this year I made some remarks on freedom of the press on the floor here and I was joined by a number of colleagues who felt as I did about the failure of the metropolitan press to give proper coverage to the so-called protectionist side of the tariff and trade question over the years.

In the course of the discussion there was inserted in the RECORD correspondence relating to this subject between Mr. O. R. Strackbein, chairman of the Nation-Wide Committee on Import-Export Policy and Mr. J. Russell Wiggins, president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and executive editor of the Washington Post.

The Strackbein letter was in the nature of a strong complaint about press bias in reporting the news arising from the great controversy over the tariff and trade agreements. He charged that the case of the protectionist forces had been given to the country through the newspapers in fragmentary and wholly inadequate fashion in contrast to the full coverage given the freer trade side.

He asked that his complaint be placed before a committee of the Society of Newspaper Editors. This was denied by Mr. Wiggins on the grounds that there was no provision for a committee that was authorized to hear such complaints.

Having failed to gain satisfaction in that direction Mr. Strackbein has now offered a cash payment of $2,000 to Mr. Wiggins or the society if they can answer a list of questions in relation to the tariff and trade question, with citation of newspaper sources for their information. The questions are designed, not to test the level of information possessed by those to whom they were submitted, but rather to probe the newspaper coverage. No answer would be valid without citation of a newspaper, date, page, and column in which the information could be found.

The usual way of checking news coverage includes measuring the number of column inches of space devoted to a subject and this has considerable merit. The question, however, is sometimes raised whether news can be tested by quantity. The test here devised gets at the substance of the news and should be a more thorough probe than that provided by merely counting the space.

The questions formulated by Mr. Strackbein relate to the various subjects that have developed during the course of the tariff controversy under the trade agreements program, such as extent of tariff reductions by the United States compared with other countries; the origin and status of GATT—General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; the ITO—International Trade Organization; OTC—the Organization for Trade Cooperation; CRI—Committee for Reciprocity Information; import quotas; the escape clause; the peril point; State Department domination of our foreign trade; loss of power by Congress over the regulation of foreign commerce; and similar aspects that should have been as newsworthy on the one side as the other.

The inquiry seeks to establish to what extent the news of the day as carried in the newspapers reflected the two sides of the debate, and how well the public could have been informed on the protectionist side of the subject had it read the newspapers.

The allegation is that the newspapers fell far short of their function of informing the public without fear or favor in this controversy, so that the readers could have reached a sound conclusion by exercising their judgment on the merits of the issue.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include the proposal made by Mr. Strackbein in the RECORD at this point. This will include his covering letter to Mr. Wiggins and the list of questions submitted for answer.

I also offer for the RECORD immediately following the foregoing the reply of Mr. Wiggins and Mr. Strackbein's reply to him.

THE NATIONWIDE COMMITTEE ON IMPORT-EXPORT POLICY,
Washington, D.C., August 26, 1959.

Mr. J. RUSSELL WIGGINS,
President, American Society of Newspaper Editors, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. WIGGINS: Although you expressed yourself in your last letter (July 15) to me as being bored with my correspondence and as considering me a nuisance I feel compelled to write you again since you are the only president of ASNE. In ordinary circumstances pride would perhaps prevent my further imposition on you; but these are not ordinary circumstances; and personal feelings, I think, should be left to one side.

You will recall making much of the fact that I had not submitted to you evidence in support of my complaint against the failure of the metropolitan press to present adequately the protectionist point of view in the tariff and trade news over a period of years.

My first letter, dated June 18 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 30) made certain charges. It was not intended as offering evidence. I sought to ascertain what would be the reception accorded such charges before detailing them; and as it turned out I was soon enlightened. You said you disagreed with my allegations and that there was therefore nothing to discuss. Thereafter you wondered why I did not submit evidence to you. I thought you had prejudged the case and asked you for the names of members of any committee that might receive evidence. You said there was no such committee.

There is a committee of ASNE known as the Freedom of Information Committee; and I have been in touch with them.

The purpose of this letter is, however, somewhat different. Its purpose will reveal itself as it unfolds.

You have said that you disagree with my charges. I am fully convinced that my complaint was fully justified and that the facts will sustain the allegations.

How then go about verifying my charges?

One method would be to count the relative amount of space devoted by leading newspapers to each side of the tariff and trade issue over the past 10 or 12 years. This can be done; and I have not a shadow of a doubt of the showing. However, the question would quickly be raised whether news can properly be judged quantitatively. Also, the failure of the press would not thus be related to the substance of the complaint.

I have considered this problem from various angles and have come to the conclusion that one of the best methods of resolving the question of news coverage of the tariff and trade problem during the postwar period is to run a test of what should have been in the news, if the news was to be unbiased, and then to ascertain whether the newspapers actually carried balanced reports on the question You will recall that my charge was not that the newspapers had devoted too little space to the tariff and trade controversy as a whole, but that the protectionist side had been badly slighted.

In order to cover the various vital parts of the controversy the general subject has been broken down into its principal elements for more ready identification and tracing through the news columns. It will thus be much easier to determine whether the issues as they have arisen on various vital aspects of the question have been covered by the newspapers.

The answers to some of the questions set forth will be obvious. Some of the answers, moreover, cannot go far astray where a choice of numbers is supplied.

The following proposal is offered to yourself and to the members of the Freedom of Information Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors:

1. A cash payment of $2,000 will be made by me to anyone of the group just mentioned if he himself or in combination with other members of the group supplies a correct answer to the attached list of questions, provided that newspaper citations are given in support of each answer. These citations must give the name of the newspaper or newspapers, the date of the issue, the page number and the column in which the news item is found. At least three metropolitan newspapers, not necessarily the same in successive answers, must be cited for each answer.

2. The passing grade for entitlement to the payment of the $2,000 will be 75 percent. Only one payment will be made. It will be drawn on my personal account.

3. The judge will be a referee, not of a newspaper profession or occupation, but mutually agreed to by yourself or the Freedom of Information Committee and the undersigned.

4. Correct answers that are not supported by newspaper citations as set forth above will count as zero.

5. No restriction is placed on the help that may be enlisted to obtain answers and citations from newspaper files. I shall be glad to supply dates for many of the events covered by the questions so that the newspaper search may be greatly reduced.

6. Trade journals, magazines, or newsletters do not qualify as newspapers. Only daily newspapers publishing a minimum of 6 days a week will be considered.

7. The closing date of this offer is October 15, 1959. All submittals must be in my hands on or before that date.

Since the test of this inquiry is newspaper coverage of the subject the easily answerable character of some of the questions is immaterial since credit for the answer depends upon verification from newspaper files. This is not a test of knowledge.

Sincerely yours,

O. R. STRACKBEIN,
Chairman.

QUESTIONS DESIGNED TO TEST NEWS COVERAGE OF THE TARIFF AND TRADE ISSUE

1. THE TARIFF AND OTHER TRADE BARRIERS

(a) Was the average protective effect of our tariff in 1958 less than its average level during the period from 1931–35 by 70 percent, 75 percent, 80 percent? What was the principal cause of this great reduction?

(b) Do other leading trading nations rely principally on tariffs for the regulation of their foreign trade? If not, what other devices are principally used?

(c) Have the practices of other countries in the widespread use of nontariff restrictions been denounced in this country? In Congress? When? By whom?

(d) Is the use of quotas, exchange controls, import licensing systems and similar restrictions employed by other countries permitted under the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade?

(e) Is the United States as free as other countries today to employ import quotas, import licenses, or other nontariff devices to restrict imports? If not, why not?

(f) Is the United States in violation of the general agreement as a result of quotas imposed on imports of certain agricultural products?

(g) Has the United States been granted a waiver on these quotas by GATT? If so, by what authority does GATT permit the United States to regulate its imports?

2. IMPORT QUOTAS

(a) Are import quotas a means of regulating foreign commerce? If so, what restraints have been placed on our use of them?

(b) Under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) are we free to impose import quotas without violating the terms of the agreement? To what extent?

(c) What percentage of our imports may we regulate by quotas without violating GATT? Fifteen percent, 20 percent, 25 percent? (Select the nearest percentage.)

(d) How did GATT gain its authority to grant the United States a waiver, permitting us to use import quotas?

(e) Has this question been raised in Congress? If so, on what grounds? By whom?

(f) Has any general import quota legislation been proposed in Congress within the past 5 years? If so, who introduced the legislation? What has been the general character of such proposals? What is the present status of such legislation?

(g) Would such legislation restore to Congress its right to legislate import quotas without violating international commitments made by the Department of State?

(h) Has Congress lost its power to regulate foreign commerce without at the same time violating our trade agreements? If not, explain how Congress might act to preserve its right and power to act freely.

(i) May the Tariff Commission recommend the imposition of import quotas? How often has it done so? Were its recommendations in violation of GATT?

(j) What was the result of these recommendations of the Commission?

3. ITO, GATT, OTC

(a) The charter of the International Trade Organization (ITO) was sent to Congress by President Truman as (1) a treaty, (2) an executive agreement, (3) other, in 1950?

(b) What progress toward approval of the ITO was made in Congress?

(c) Why did the President withdraw the charter from Congress?

(d) Was the ITO to be a specialized agency of the United Nations?

(e) The United States, which does about 20 percent of the world's trade, would have had how many votes in the ITO: 1, 5, 10, 20?

(f) What congressional committee made a detailed examination of the ITO charter?

(g) What was to be the relationship of the ITO to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)?

(h) Was the general agreement, signed in 1947, submitted to Congress, as (1) an executive agreement, (2) a treaty, or (3) what other disposition was made of it?

(i) Was the question of relationship between the ITO and GATT raised as a serious question under a thorough, prolonged and searching examination in Congress? By whom? What was the principal concern?

(j) In what position did the demise of the ITO leave GATT? If ITO was to administer GATT but the ITO failed to gain the approval of Congress, where did this leave GATT in point of legitimacy?

(k) In what respect did the Organization for Trade Cooperation (OTC), the articles of which were signed by the United States in 1955, duplicate the ITO charter that failed before Congress?

(l) In what respects could the OTC have converted itself into a veritable replica of the ITO and the OTC been approved?

(m) In what manner were the articles of agreement of the OTC amended by the Ways and Means Committee to overcome the strong objections to them? Did the committee succeed in its amendments in overcoming the objections that the OTC could through its relationship to GATT come into a position of depriving Congress of its power to regulate our foreign commerce?

(n) In 1956 the Ways and Means Committee reported the OTC resolution; but the legislation did not reach the floor. Why in the succeding Congress did the committee fail to report the resolution at all?

(o) What were the principal objections urged against approval of the OTC?

(p) Why has the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade never been sent to Congress for approval, even though it now exercises many of the functions proposed for the ill-fated ITO and OTC?

(q) Has this question been raised in Congress? When? What was the resolution that called for submission of GATT to Congress? What was the reply of the Department of State?

(r) Has the general agreement been approved by Congress indirectly?

4. REGULATION OF FOREIGN COMMERCE

(a) Under the Constitution what branch of the Government is empowered to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States: (1) the executive branch, (2) the judicial branch, or (3) the legislative branch?

(b) What are the constitutional means of regulating foreign commerce: (1) tariffs, (2) import quotas, (3) import licenses, (4) exchange controls, (5) bills of lading, (6) quarantines, (7) executive orders? (Select five.)

(c) Does Congress today have full and untrammeled power to regulate our foreign commerce? If not, what restrictions hamper its freedom?

(d) Has the State Department participated in the regulation of our foreign commerce during the past 15 years? If so, how?

(e) Does State Department participation in this function interfere with or curtail the power and responsibility of Congress?

(f) Does the Department of Commerce regulate our foreign commerce? If so, how?

(g) Has the Department of Commerce arranged for foreign restrictions on exports to the United States? If so, with what countries? In what manner? By what authority? Was Congress consulted?

(h) Has any widespread dissatisfaction been expressed over the part played by the executive branch in the regulation of foreign commerce? What have been the principal grounds of objection? Where and how have these objections been expressed? By whom?

5. EXECUTIVE ASSURANCES

(a) Name the three Presidents who have given solemn assurances since 1934 that no American industry would be jeopardized or seriously injured by the trade agreements program. What did each one say on this subject at various times?

(b) To whom were these assurances made: (1) Congress, (2) House Ways and Means Committee, (3) Senate Finance Committee, (4) the public; or all four?

(c) Did the several Secretaries of State, Assistant or Under Secretaries of State, and sundry other Cabinet officials also make such promises to the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee in public hearings? If so, were these assurances made only in passing or were they made under prolonged and detailed questioning by members of both committees during successive hearings on the extension of the trade agreements program?

(d) To what extent was the escape clause referred to as a dependable safeguard against injury by these executive witnesses when they appeared before the congressional committees: (1) extensively, (2) very extensively, (3) most extensively?

6. THE ESCAPE CLAUSE

(a) What was the origin of the escape clause of the trade agreements program: (1) administrative, (2) executive, or (3) legislative? Or a combination of these?

(b) By whom is it administered: (1) an independent agency, (2) the President? Or both?

(c) Has there been widespread dissatisfaction over its administration? If so, what has been the nature of the complaint? By whom and where expressed?

(d) Has the administration of the escape clause fulfilled the numerous executive assurances to domestic industry?

(e) How many cases have come before the Tariff Commission under the escape clause: 90, 95, 100?

(f) In how many of these cases has the Tariff Commission recommended a remedy against injury to the President: 25, 30, 32?

(g) In how many of these cases did the President grant relief: 9, 10, 11?

(h) In how many of the latter did the President dilute the Tariff Commission's recommendation: 7, 8, 9? Has this record been regarded as failing to honor the Presidential assurances? By whom?

(i) Has Congress at any time amended the escape clause to strengthen its provisions in behalf of domestic industry in keeping with the executive assurances? How many times: 3, 4, 5?

(j) Have these amendments produced any visible or recognizable difference in the Presidential rejection of Tariff Commission recommendations? Has public attention been called to the virtual nullification of such legislation by the Executive?

(k) How many unanimous Commission recommendations have been rejected or set aside by the White House: 6, 8, 9?

(l) Is there any bill before Congress today relating to the escape clause? If so, what does it propose? What is its status?

7. PERIL POINT

(a) What is the "peril point" in trade agreements terminology? To what peril does it relate and how was the peril point concept given form?

(b) What is its relation to the escape clause? To GATT? Is it recognized by GATT?

(c) Who makes peril point findings? Have such findings been honored?

(d) Has any attempt been made to repeal the peril point legislation? Did it succeed? Was the legislation subsequently reenacted? Has it since been challenged in the Senate? What was the vote?

(e) Is the peril point regarded as giving effect to the numerous executive assurances that domestic industry was not to be seriously injured? If so, by whom?

8. CRI

(a) What is the Committee for Reciprocity Information?

(b) What is its functions?

(c) Does it have statutory standing? Does it speak for Congress?

(d) Have numerous and bitter complaints been expressed over its methods? If so, where have these complaints been lodged? Have the procedures of the committee been altered as a result of these complaints?

(e) Is there any connection between Congress and the CRI? Or do its reports go only to the trade agreement negotiating teams? Does it represent only executive departments?

(f) May the recommendations of the CRI override the peril point findings of the Tariff Commission, which is an agency of Congress?

9. GENERAL

(a) In the disposition made of congressional authority over the tariff and the regulation of foreign commerce since 1934, has the separation of governmental powers been violated? Has this question been seriously raised and debated? When? Where?

(b) What branch of the Government in actual practice regulates the foreign commerce of the United States today? Has this issue been raised seriously? When? Where?

(c) Is the responsiveness of Congress to the electorate in the matter of injury from import competition destroyed if Congress has lost its function of regulating foreign commerce? Has this allegation been raised as a serious objection in Congress and elsewhere?

(d) Has it been charged that State Department influence, exerted through the presidency, has raised foreign policy considerations above the welfare of domestic industry? Where? When? Seldom or frequently?

(e) Has the State Department abridged the power of Congress to legislate freely toward the regulation of foreign commerce:

(1) Through provisions inserted in trade agreements:

(a) By agreeing in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to renounce the use of import quotas?

(b) By binding tariff rates at agreed levels?

(c) By agreeing not to put a tariff on items on the free list?

(d) By threatening trade reprisals?

(Select 3.)

(2) Through congressional abdication?

(3) Through usurpation of power?

Have objections been leveled against these practices? When? Where? How frequently?

BROOKLINE, MASS., September 1, 1959.

O. R. STRACKBEIN,
Committee on Import-Export Policy, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. STRACKBEIN: Your recent letters were forwarded to me here where I have been on vacation.

Thank you for your comments on the Washington Post. I am glad you finally are persuaded that there is no ASNE committee created to sit in judgment on newspapers, but I am sorry that you felt obliged to infer that I lied when I said no such committee existed. The Freedom of Information Committee, of course, has no such function.

I will lay before the board of the ASNE when it meets in October your proposal of August 26. It seems to me most doubtful that the ASNE would engage in such an operation, involving staff and facilities that we do not possess but I shall lay the matter before them.

Sincerely,

J. R. WIGGINS.

SEPTEMBER 3, 1959.

Mr. J. RUSSELL WIGGINS,
President, American Society of Newspaper Editors, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. WIGGINS: I am happy to have your letter of September 1 in response to mine of August 26 in which I made a proposal to you as president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Let me say that I had no intent to infer that you were lying when you said the ASNE had no committee before which a complaint such as that contained in my letter of June 18 could be laid. I simply was amazed and said in effect "There must be such a committee." This was an expression of incredulity, not over your veracity but over the absence of such a committee. I added that, "Perhaps this is what is wrong." To that I will say "Amen."

My understanding is that your Freedom of Information Committee is supposed to see to it that the government, Federal, State or local, does not suppress information that the public is entitled to. This is a commendable office. You, I believe will agree, on reflection, that we the readers have an equal right to try to see to it that the newspapers themselves do not suppress or distort what we are entitled to know.

In any case, I note with satisfaction that you will lay my proposal before the ASNE board in October. For this action I thank you.

Sincerely yours,

O. R. STRACKBEIN,
Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, it is heartening to know that Mr. Wiggins has now agreed to submit the proposal to the board of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. I am sure that they will give the matter the serious attention and consideration to which it is entitled.

I am sure that many of us will be greatly interested in the disposition made of the complaint.

GEN. LEMUEL C. SHEPHERD, JR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in a few days a distinguished soldier will be retired from the active service of the U.S. Armed Forces for a second time. He is Gen. Lemuel C. Shepherd, Jr., former Commandant of the U.S. Marine Corps, and presently Chairman of the Inter-American Defense Board. I find with great interest that it is not only those of us who have served in the Marines with General Shepherd who appreciate his qualities. I have just read the views of Father Joseph F. Thorning, associate editor of World Affairs, concerning the general. He expresses so well my own sentiments that I can do no better on this occasion than to read into the RECORD Father Thorning's article. The Father and I join in wishing General Shepherd well in his new retirement. We are consoled by the thought that his leadership, military acumen, and wise counsel will continue to be available to the American people on a moment's notice. The article follows:

GEN. LEMUEL C. SHEPHERD, JR., U.S. MARINE CORPS, RETIRES AS CHAIRMAN OF THE INTER-AMERICAN DEFENSE BOARD AFTER 3½ YEARS AT THE HELM OF THIS INTERNATIONAL HEMISPHERIC ORGANIZATION

After having completed a long and distinguished career in which he already had attained the highest position within his profession, that of Commandant of the U.S. Marine Corps, Gen. Lemuel C. Shepherd, Jr., USMC, was recalled to active duty by President Eisenhower in 1956 to assume the chairmanship of the Inter-American Defense Board, a position he has held continuously during the last 3½ years and which he now relinquishes as of September 15, 1959. General Shepherd has discharged these duties with singular merit and distinction, not only to the advantage of the member nations accredited to this international hemispheric defense organization but also to the advantage of our own defense posture within the hemisphere, thus reflecting great credit upon the leadership of the United States and its Armed Forces in this delicate military-diplomatic field.

The Inter-American Defense Board was formed in 1942 during the third meeting of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics in Rio de Janeiro as a temporary World War II defense measurement. Subsequently, in 1948, as a result of the IX Inter-American Conference at Bogotá, the Board was given permanent status with the mission of preparing for the collective self-defense of the hemisphere against aggression.

While the composition of this organization is international in character and consists of high-ranking military representatives of the 21 American Republics of the hemisphere, the chairmanship, in accordance with the regulations of this international organization, must be provided by that nation, which the member nations have decided should be the headquarters for this organization. Since its activation in 1942, the headquarters for the Inter-American Defense Board has been in Washington, D.C., by desire of the member nations and it is for this reason that the chairmanship must be held by an officer of the U.S. Armed Forces. The U.S. Armed Forces, in turn, rotate this chairmanship within the Services. General Shepherd was recalled to active duty in 1956 to fill out the Navy's term, and will now return to retirement on September 15.

During the 3½ years in which the chairmanship of this important international military organization has been under the stewardship of General Shepherd it can be said that significant progress in the inter-American defense field has been accomplished. Within the period of his stewardship an increased awareness by the 21 American Republics of the mission of the IADB has been attained, which in turn is reflected by a considerable increase of Board activities and recommendations on defense matters to member nations. This increased awareness and emphasis placed on IADB activities by the Latin American member nations can be attributed in great part to General Shepherd's personal approach to the highest ranking defense officials of the member nations comprising the IADB.

It can be said without contradiction that he has personally visited most if not all of the key defense personalities of the hemisphere. His sincere approach, dynamic nature, and personal empathy for Latin American defense problems as well as his personal fame as a soldier are such that he has been granted personal interviews by most of the Latin American Presidents during his term of office. During all of these visits General Shepherd has been tireless in expounding the values of Latin American solidarity and the need for hemisphere defense against agression and against the Communist international conspiracy. He has reiterated the merits of the democratic ideals which have been the heritage of this hemisphere since the days of Simon Bolivar, San Martin, Artigas, and our own George Washington. This personal approach (presenting hemisphere defense matters directly to the member nations of the hemisphere by personal visits and personal briefings) has indeed paid off in the fostering of mutual understandings. As a result the highest caliber professional military men of our sister Republics comprise the roster of the Inter-American Defense Board. In many instances these military representatives have been recalled to their nations from duty with the IADB to assume the highest positions in the military organizations or governmental structure of our sister American Republics, thus attesting to the stature of the military representatives which our Latin American neighbors send to this organization. Much of this can be attributed to General Shepherd's unceasing work.

In the military and technical field, General Shepherd has reorganized the general staff of the IADB at present under the very able directorship of Brig. Gen. William K. Skaer, of the U.S. Air Force. As an example of the considerable increase in the tempo of IADB activities hereunder listed some of the Board's accomplishments during the last work year:

(a) Over and above the permanent-time work schedule of this organization, there were a total of 42 sessions of the Council of Delegates in which far-reaching defense recommendations were concluded to include:

A revised estimate of the situation.

Resolutions for standardization of procedures.

A standard terminology manual.

A plan for the interchange of classified military information between the member nations.

Plans for the defense of inter-American shipping.

A general outline for the establishment of an inter-American defense college.

(b) In support of this basic program of the Board, the following activities were held:

A series of 27 presentations of a political and technical nature.

Twenty-four intelligence and special briefings were presented by the staff.

A total of 12 visits were made to installations within the United States with the purpose of orienting Board members on modern procedures of defense.

The IADB also visited Ecuador and Colombia as guests of the respective governments during this last year.

General Shepherd and his staff have just concluded a trip to South American nations and to Mexico with the purpose of briefing these Latin American governments on the accomplishments of the IADB and to obtain their support for future projects.

The IADB received many distinguished Latin American visitors on official visits to the United States.

In summary, it can be said with all modesty that the program carried out by the Inter-American Defense Board during this past year is one for which General Shepherd can be justly proud.

It is, therefore, with a sense of regret that another chapter in the outstanding career of a great soldier comes to an end. This sense of loss was ably expressed by the Council of Delegates of the IADB when, in a unanimous resolution, they requested of the U.S. Armed Forces that General Shepherd remain on as Chairman. It is regrettable that the exigencies of the services were such that this was not possible.

PUBLIC WORKS BILL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce to the Members of the House that in the event the President should veto the public works bill, and if that message comes up this afternoon or tomorrow morning, it will be the first order of business tomorrow.

HEALTH OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KING of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I am greatly concerned over America's health, and this concern now prompts me to take the floor of this great legislative body, to say what I think needs to be said. America's health is in danger, and if the warning signals apparent to all are not heeded, we risk physical and mental deterioration, and inevitable capitulation to the virile and more rugged peoples of the world.

It is true that life expectancy from birth in America has increased from a span of 47 years in 1900 to 65 years for males and 72 years for females, in 1959. In other words, if we could designate such a thing as an average boy baby, that baby could expect to live some 18 years longer if he were born in 1959 than he could have expected, had he been born in 1900. It is also true that this average boy baby will probably grow to be 2 or 3 inches taller than his grandfather, and perhaps a little heavier. These statistics, which are generally known, lead to the false impression that we are a more healthy, robust, and virile generation of people than were our ancestors. This increase in longevity, however, results from the impressive advances made in obstetrics and pediatrics, which have considerably reduced the rate of infant mortality. We have also made phenomenal progress in controlling the spread of contagious diseases, through a better understanding and elimination of their causes.

However, it should be noted that the set of statistics which shows that our life expectancy has jumped from 47 years to 65 years, also shows that once a man has reached the age of 63, the chances of his life being substantially prolonged are no better now than they were 50 years ago, and the chance of his life being cut short by one of the well-known chronic degenerative diseases is substantially higher than it was 50 years ago.

In May 1955, Dr. Paul White and Dr. Norman Jolliffe, eminent scholars in their field, reported to Congress that the United States was one of the most unhealthy countries in the world in regard to coronary heart disease. The incidence of heart disease among men from 45 to 65 years, they said, was two to three times higher in the United States than in England, France, Germany, Italy, or Spain.

In a paper in the New York State Medical Journal, dated September 15, 1955, Dr. Jolliffe continued his report by stating that "although in America today, life expectancy at birth is near the best of any civilized country in the world, at the age of 40, life expectancy is near the bottom."

On July 24, 1957, Dr. W. Coda Martin, president of the American Academy of Nutrition, appeared, and testified before the Subcommittee on Health and Science, of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. During the course of his testimony, Dr. Martin submitted a copy of his report on the "Health of the Nation," for incorporation into the record. This report showed that according to the Cancer Institute, the incidence of cancer in the United States is growing alarmingly every year. Today one person out of every three in this country will probably develop cancer in some form before he dies. In 1940, the estimate was only one out of four. It was noted that there has been a sharp upturn in the number of occurrences of cancer among children. In 1923, cancer among children was a rarity. Today, cancer in children and babies, at birth, is a frequent occurrence. Recently, Boston opened the first hospital in the United States exclusively for the treatment of children with cancer. It is estimated that there are 500,000 new cases each year at all ages.

The fact of the progressive deterioration of the condition of our health has been confirmed, according to the above report, by various scientifically conducted health surveys on groups of apparently healthy people. A checkup of 500 business executives, for example, whose average age was 48 years, at the University Hospital at Ann Arbor, Mich., revealed that 41 percent of them suffered from physical diseases of which they were not aware, and 77 percent of these healthy men had some form of physical abnormality. Only 23 percent were in good physical health.

Dr. Martin, in his testimony before the above subcommittee, made the further statement:

This health problem is not confined to the older age group. In 1953, Draft Director Lewis B. Hershey stated that the Nation may be "out of manpower" in the next 2 to 3 years, if the present physical standards are not lowered.

At that time, 1,700,000 men out of 4 million examined were rejected as unfit for service. Since then, rejections have reached to approximately 52 percent.

If I were to continue to itemize and tabulate the dreary statistics covering allergic diseases, nervous disorders, arteriosclerosis and degenerative heart diseases, arthritis, epilepsy, and all of the other gloomy categories of human woes and ailments, I would come to the conclusion that well over half of our entire population is afflicted with some type of a chronic disease.

I must acknowledge that I lay no claim to special insight into the answers to this frightening problem. There are many gifted scientists who have spent their entire adult lives in exploring the fields of pathology, and who avoid dogmatism on the matter of causation.

Nevertheless, from what study I have done, and basing my opinion solely upon the conclusions of dedicated men of science who do qualify as experts, I am convinced that the contaminatives, additives, and toxic chemical compounds taken into the human body in connection with our regular food and drink, are in large measure responsible for the deplorable deterioration of our national health.

I have neither the ability, nor the space, to brief the abundance of technical literature available on this subject. Perhaps I may quote again, however, from the above-referred-to report of Dr. Martin, as reported in the subcommittee hearings of July 24, 1957.

There are many approaches to the prevention and treatment of such complex diseases, but there appears to be one common denominator as the basic cause of degenerative diseases. That one factor is malnutrition.

Referring specifically to the chemicals which are added to the foods we eat, Dr. Martin said:

I also believe that the absorption of these toxic chemicals—and there are 704 different chemical compounds used in foods, and 150 of them have never been adequately checked for their toxic effects on humans—over a long period of time can cause serious tissue damage, which inevitably terminates in a degenerative disease. Many of these chemicals, although apparently nontoxic, have no nutritional value and do not serve a useful purpose for the consuming public. Their continued use, therefore, constitutes a calculated risk to human health, if not life itself. The first line of defense must be to protect the health of the consumer; otherwise, the long-range calculated risk is that this country will become a Nation of invalids, weak in body and mind. * * *

The human body can utilize only natural foods as nourishment and survive. Chemicals are not food elements. Therefore, they can produce only negative or harmful results, even though they are by scientific analysis nontoxic. It is then only a question of how much harm they will produce, when used to replace essential food elements in our diets.

When the American housewife wheels her cart around the supermarket, she is only dimly aware, if at all, that it is almost impossible for her to purchase any article of food that has not had chemicals, bleaches, preservatives, additives, dyes, adulteratives, and other foreign substances added to it. She very likely does not know that many of those chemicals, whose function it is to increase eye-appeal, have never been tested by the Food and Drug Administration, and that although the latter lists many of them as "probably safe," there also are many additives about which it knows absolutely nothing, and that it will not be able, at the present rate of investigation to adequately test these additives for many years to come. By that time, there will likely be a brand-new crop of chemical compounds to take their place. Until last year, the law was so worded that any new chemical compound which was not a known poison, could be added to any food for consumption, and the burden then fell upon the Food and Drug Administration to prove that these foreign substances were deleterious to human health. This proof was difficult to adduce, from a legal point of view, even when immediate toxicity could be demonstrated. But it was almost impossible to do when the toxicity of the chemical compound was of such a nature that it could not be detected until after the expiration of many years. Because of the outstanding work of the Delaney Commission, the food additive amendment was passed last year which requires food processors to submit to the FDA the results of their tests on new chemical compounds. But the law is still filled with loopholes.

It seems to me that it takes only a slight leap of the imagination on the part of the American housewife to grasp the proposition that where the incidence of degenerative diseases such as cancer, arteriosclerosis, and degenerative heart disease suddenly increases, and apparently for no known reason, and where it is shown that contemporaneously with such increase there occurs a phenomenal increase in the total amount of chemical compounds consumed, then there may well exist a causal connection between these two phenomena. I am quite aware of the fallacy of oversimplification, and I fully recognize the probability of a multiplicity of causes in any phenomenon as complex as disease. What I do say, however, is that the ever-increasing scientific evidence renders it highly probable that the invariable concurrence of disease and body contamination by the consumption of toxic chemicals is more than coincidental.

It is apparent that this entire subject requires a thorough investigation. The health, and maybe even the very survival, of the American Nation is at stake. Our laws on nutrition are loose and inadequately drawn. Public knowledge is fragmentary, and riddled with misinformation and discarded dogmas. The means of disseminating information on this subject are inadequate.

My illustrious colleague from New York, the Honorable JAMES J. DELANEY, has pioneered in this field for many years, and has uttered many strong words on this vital subject. I commend this distinguished gentleman for his well-known work, and offer to join hands with him in his efforts. The American people owe him a debt of gratitude. The work of his outstanding Commission in 1952 made a significant contribution on the basis of which subsequent legislation has been enacted.

Since 1952, when the Delaney Commission concluded its investigation, a flood of new chemical combinations have come on the market.

I feel that a further investigation is urgent. I am convinced that the whole field of chemical additives should be made a subject of continuing investigation.

A bill has just been signed into law to investigate the effect of chemical sprays on fish and wildlife, and yet we spend almost nothing to investigate the effect of chemicals on human beings.

Mr. Speaker, on September 8, I introduced a bill, H.R. 9150, designed to create a nonpartisan commission to further investigate the entire subject of food and beverage contamination. I have recommended that this Commission be appointed strictly on a nonpartisan basis; that it be patterned after the Hoover Commission, composed of nine experts in the field of toxicology, nutrition and biochemistry. Three of these men will be appointed by the President of the United States, three of them by the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, and three by the Speaker and minority leader of the House. It will be the function of these men, assisted by their staff, to thoroughly investigate this matter of food chemicals and additives. There are many legitimate points of view in the world, and all points of view on this subject should have full opportunity to be heard. Their findings should represent the combined wisdom of all of the great minds in this and other countries, in the field of nutrition. This should therefore be the most authentic and authoritative voice on the subject in all the world. The report will carry with it such recommendations as the Commission feels impelled to make, and Congress would do well to give careful consideration thereto.

There has been much said about the matter of fluoridation of drinking water. As in the case of food additives, there is a plenitude of controversial literature on the subject. I, personally, feel strongly that because of the great controversy which accompanies the use of fluorides in drinking water, it would behoove this Nation to await a thorough investigation of the entire matter before further promoting this practice. It is my desire that the Commission of which I speak should also investigate the scientific concept of fluoridation of water. It is true that there have been other bodies and commissions which have investigated this question before, but many of them have been motivated by a desire to prove, either that fluoridation is good or that it is bad. Too often the investigation has been conducted in a spirit of partisanship. I propose that the investigation be made by a commission that has not prejudged the issues in any way, but that is interested only in ascertaining the true facts. It seems to me that the findings of such a commission will be authoritative throughout the country, and will help to guide the thinking of the many municipalities who are confronted by the problem of fluoridation.

And so, the American Nation has come a long way from the days when it was content to sit down and eat humble fare, transmitted to the kitchen direct from the hand of its Creator, touched only by the magic of nature's inscrutable chemistry—simple food, unpampered, and undevitalized. The rugged life and simple diet of the American pioneer have gone. We have replaced them with the unwholesome living of the modern sophisticate. America would do well to reread the admonition of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are"—I Corinthians 3: 16, 17.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING of Utah. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Iowa.

Mr. WOLF. The gentleman from Utah again is to be congratulated. I am pleased that he is introducing legislation in this particular field—the question of food additives. I think the gentleman has delved now into one of the very important, very basic fields. I wish it were possible to have a far larger audience than just this body of Congress.

As one who represents a farm State and naturally is concerned with the production of food, we want folks to get the best food possible and so I am glad the gentleman has gone into this subject.

May I ask this question? How many chemicals are being used today that have not been thoroughly tested by any agency as to their poisonous effects in the diet, when used as food? Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. KING of Utah. Yes. The figures brought out before the subcommittee investigating health and food additives were, according to the evidence, some 704 chemical compound additives are being used and that at least 150 of these have not yet received the unqualified approval of the Food and Drug Administration. Some of these the Food and Drug Administration has indicated are probably acceptable, but many of them definitely have not received the seal of approval in any way. They are one big question mark.

Mr. WOLF. Will the gentleman tell me, if he can, how involved is the procedure of testing various additives?

Mr. KING of Utah. The procedure, of course, becomes very complex and sometimes requires a great amount of time. It is not a matter of going into the laboratory and coming out a day or two later with the answer. These tests must be carried on over a period of many years and even many generations. That, of course, is the heart of the real problem. You cannot tell for a certainty after 1 year or 5 years or 10 years that a particular food is or is not toxic in its effect.

Mr. WOLF. If the gentleman will yield further. In my opinion the immediate consideration many times is taken and discussed, but beyond the immediate consideration, the long-term heredity effect is one that, it would seem, most often, is overlooked.

Mr. KING of Utah. That is correct.

Mr. WOLF. This is one thing that worries me. Just yesterday—and I was horrified to learn this—I discovered that they are using formaldehyde, a poison, in milk that is being served on the tables of many of our families in America. It is being used as a preservative for milk. This really shocked me. I had always thought of formaldehyde being used to preserve museum pieces and laboratory specimens. I did not realize that we were preserving our foods, the foods that we are putting into our stomachs to enhance our own body health, by the use of formaldehyde.

Speaking more generally, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the problem of food additives and food preservatives and other chemicals of this kind are indicative of much that is wrong with American society today. Americans buy things today, not necessarily because they are needed, but rather because they are pressured into buying by high-powered advertising and other forms of huckstering. One of the tricks that is used by the advertisers is the use of coloring to make products attractive to the prospective buyer. Many times the coloring that is used can do actual harm to the product, and consequently, to the consumer.

We are fast becoming a society that cares more about packaging and show than usefulness and value. I believe that, when it is the case that our citizens are being endangered physically by this state of affairs, it is the duty of our Government to do all in its power to call to the attention of the American people this problem and to seek means to guard against it.

Mr. KING of Utah. I believe the average housewife would be amazed, as she pushed her little cart around the giant shopping center, the grocery store, or food market, if she knew the extent of chemical compounds which had been added to foods which she buys.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, again I should like to congratulate the gentleman on the work he is doing in this field. I hope he will be given support by other Members of Congress. I know that several of us have expressed an interest in this field. My wife has done quite a little work with the Pure Food and Drug Administration here in our office, gathering information together. I am happy to see the gentleman delving into this field. I hope we can seriously get on with this work and, for this reason, with the gentleman's permission, I would like to cosponsor this needed legislation.

Mr. KING of Utah. I appreciate the comments of my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Iowa. May I say I would be happy to have his help by sponsoring and supporting my two bills.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING of Utah. I am glad to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MEYER. I have been very interested for quite a few years in the subject that the gentleman has so ably been discussing. I would like to inquire if his bill would also take into account different methods by which these chemicals can enter into our food supplies other than by the direct addition of the chemicals to the water supply or to the food that we eat. For instance, we know that a tomato is not always a tomato; that is, it is not always the same, but varies according to the various soils on which the tomato may be grown and with the chemicals that are added to those soils either by way of fertilizers or poisons. If we take tomatoes from different areas and analyze them in the laboratory, we find their chemical composition vastly different.

I just wonder if the gentleman's bill would take this matter into account, because some of the problems we may be having may also be coming from this direction.

Mr. KING of Utah. I appreciate the contribution of my colleague from Vermont. I agree that the work of this Commission should be broad enough to include the subject matter the gentleman has suggested, also the matter of the effect of the use of insecticides upon food. There is a vast amount of controversial literature on that subject. I believe this Commission should also come forth with findings on that so we can have some sort of authoritative statement on what is the evidence for it and what is not; and to my knowledge at this time there is no such authoritative statement available that we can turn to with any degree of confidence. For that reason we have so much confusion on this general subject.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KING of Utah. I yield.

Mr. MEYER. This does not mean to condemn the use of chemical fertilizers or insecticides. What we want to do is separate what is good from what is bad and, therefore, it does require the research in which the gentleman is interested.

Mr. KING of Utah. Very definitely.

TRIBUTE TO DR. KIRK PORTER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCHWENGEL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in honor of a man who has devoted his life to the study and teaching of the institutions and principles of the Government which we represent today. For more than 40 years, Dr. Kirk H. Porter, of the State University of Iowa, has been known as a leading professor and author in the field of political science. He has taught thousands of our young people the importance of knowing well the responsibility of citizenship. Now, at the age of 68, it is my understanding, he is retiring from an active role as head of the department of political science of that great university which is in my district.

While I am sure that many of us here today are aware of at least some of Professor Porter's contributions in the field of education and political science, I feel that they are of such extent and worth as to merit the attention of the Congress and all who subscribe to and chance to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. While it will be impossible, in a single speech, to do justice to such a distinguished career, it affords me great pleasure to briefly review that career with you, Mr. Speaker, and with our colleagues.

Kirk Porter was born April 7, 1891, in Waukegan, Ill. He is the son of Jeremiah and Alice Porter. He grew up to become a brilliant student at the University of Michigan, and received his bachelor of arts degree from that institution in 1914, and his master's degree in political science in 1916. In 1918, but 2 years later, Professor Porter received his doctorate in political science from the University of Chicago. He then embarked upon the long and notable career with which we are concerned today. It is interesting to note that at this early age, his doctorate thesis "A History of Suffrage in the United States," was considered of such significance that it was published as a textbook in 1918.

In that same year, Dr. Porter joined the faculty of Kansas State Teachers College at Emporia, Kans., as an associate professor of political science, where he served ably until being called to the State University of Iowa as an assistant professor in 1919. On June 12, 1923, he married Irene Gray, and they have two children, Carolyn Alice, and Marjorie Jean.

In 1925, Dr. Porter was elevated to the position of associate professor of political science at the State University of Iowa, and during this time he was the author of two textbooks, "County and Township Government in the United States," published in 1922, which may be said to be the first definitive work in that area, and "National Party Platforms," published 2 years later, in 1924.

In 1928, only 3 years after his elevation to the position of associate professor, he was made a full professor of political science. In 1934, he was the author of yet another textbook "State Administration." In 1940 Dr. Porter was called to head the department of political science at the State University of Iowa, and has served in that capacity for 19 years.

In addition to his widely used textbooks, Dr. Porter has been frequently called to write articles and editorials for newspapers throughout the Midwest and has been widely quoted as an authority in State, county, and municipal government, constitutional law and history, and political parties. Further, he has been a frequent and avidly sought after contributor to professional and technical journals such as the National Municipal Review, the American Political Science Review, and the Bulletin of the American Association of University Professors. Of particular note, it seems to me, as an indication of the importance attached to this man's views, is the fact that he has been invited, and has, on several occasions, contributed monographs for the Iowa Law Review, an honor usually accorded only to distinguished members of the bench and bar, and to professors of law.

During his days as a student he was an active member of Alpha Tau Omega fraternity and has, while a professor, served that organization as a trusted and respected adviser. In addition, he has been an active member of the National Municipal League, American Political Science Association, American Association of University Professors, American Association of International Law, American Academy of Political and Social Sciences, the American Society for Public Administration, and Professors of Midwest Political Science Association.

In order that the academic nature of his life might not lead him too far from the paths of practicality and reality, Dr. Porter has maintained his contacts with both political parties and has regularly attended their meetings on both the State and National levels. At the same time, because he considered it necessary to enable him to analyze and assess our political institutions with academic detachment, he has refrained from active participation in the political arena, yet from the thousands of Professor Porter's students, have come Governors of States, Congressmen, State legislators, and public officials of almost every designation. It is, Mr. Speaker, impossible for us to assess adequately the impact of this brilliant and learned scholar and teacher. His textbooks and many articles are but one indication of his contribution to this most important aspect of our Nation; the lives and services of his students are by far the greatest indication, and certainly a far greater tribute to his genius than we can ever pay.

For four decades Dr. Porter has taught, counseled, and inspired our young people to seek more than that which is merely patently obvious. He has taught them to look beyond the political bickerings and seeming absurdities of our governmental institutions to the true and meaningful goals of our way of life, and to analyze critically the means we adopt to attain those goals. He has taught them, by example, to ignore the obvious and the trivial, and to look deeper. In a word, sir, he has inspired them to always seek truth. The end products of this man are his former students, who stand in living testimony to his own example.

The words of Dewey B. Stuit, dean of the College of Liberal Arts at the State University of Iowa, are perhaps relevant here; he states:

> Professor Porter has always stressed excellence in teaching, and has himself been a prime example to his contemporaries of that philosophy. In addition to his teaching and administrative activities, he has taken an interest in, and contributed greatly to, the affairs of the liberal arts college and the university as a whole, as demonstrated by his membership and service on many committees; for example, the executive and curriculum committees of the college of liberal arts, and the board of student publications. During the 40 years of his association with the State University of Iowa, and in large part through the vision and energy of Professor Porter, the department of political science has grown from a small unit to a major department in the college of liberal arts, with its influence being felt not only on the campus, but throughout the State and beyond.

Dr. Virgil Hancher, president of the State University of Iowa, has this to say about Dr. Porter:

> Prof. Kirk Porter has been a distinguished and respected member of our political science faculty for 40 years and has served as its head since 1940.
>
> His course on political parties has been held in high regard by many generations of students at the State University of Iowa and he has imparted to them his own deep faith and conviction that good citizenship involves a knowledge of and interest in the affairs of government.
> Professor Porter is an astute observer of the American political scene and has taught and written on this subject in a colorful, interesting, and unbiased manner.

Humble in philosophy and demeanor, yet forceful in analysis and presentation; independent of mind, but always able to cooperate with his colleagues and associates; brilliant and erudite, yet ever willing to take time with even the most discouraging student, Dr. Kirk H. Porter stands as an example of a great modern educator. Mr. Speaker, long ago, in the early and formative stages of our great Republic, Thomas Jefferson said that the greatest safeguard of a democracy is an enlightened populace. I submit, sir, that in this day when we are engaged in a life struggle with an enormous and hostile power, that these words ring out with more truth and clarity than ever before in our history, and that not only we of the State of Iowa, but every one of us here today owes a great debt to this scholarly and brilliant professor, and to his colleagues. They who instruct our youth in the ways and traditions of our Government have not provided us with a faster missile nor a more powerful bomb; their efforts have, rather, been directed toward that science dedicated to the basic premise that mankind can find a better way; a way, through government and by laws, to avoid the dreadful holocaust that would surely follow the use of these awesome weapons of modern warfare.

In truth, we cannot even begin to analyze the extent or assess the worth of this man's devotion to a lifetime of study and teaching, for if the product of a genius such as Dr. Kirk H. Porter is his students, it must follow that any analysis thereof must be predicated upon the contributions of those students. Ultimately then, I suppose we can only say that Professor Porter's contributions are very great, and that our debt to him is of corresponding magnitude. I know how inadequate these words must be, and yet no matter how we refine and enlarge upon that simple statement, we cannot today come any nearer to a more accurate evaluation.

Mr. Speaker, the following are just a few of the people who have come under the influence of this great teacher at the University of Iowa to whom it is my pleasure to pay tribute today. The contributions and influence of these people are in themselves an eloquent testimony to the greatness and to the important contributions of this man.

Jay J. Sherman, past head of Department of Political Science, Wayne University.

Carl H. Erbe, professor, political science, Iowa State Teachers College.

Herbert C. Cook, professor, political science, Iowa State University.

Herman H. Trachsell, head, Department of Political Science, University of Wyoming.

Harry W. Voltner, head, Political Science Department, De Paul University.

Roy V. Sherman, head, Political Science Department, University of Akron.

David W. Knepper, head, Political Science Department, University of Houston.

Waldo Webber, head, Political Science Department, Western Michigan University.

Dorothy Schaffter, Library of Congress.

Ethan P. Allen, head, Political Science Department, University of Kansas.

Sam M. Houston, head, extension division, UCLA.

Francis Wilcox, Assistant Secretary of State in charge of U.N. affairs.

Erma Plaehn, professor, political science, Iowa State Teachers College.

Orville B. Alexander, head, Political Science Department, Southern Illinois University.

Jack T. Johnson, vice president, Hofstra College.

John Haefner, professor, social science, State University of Iowa.

H. E. Kelso, professor, political science, State University of Iowa.

Russell Ross, professor, political science, State University of Iowa.

Ross C. Bieler, professor, political science, Miami University.

David C. Scott, professor, political science, Southwest Missouri State College.

Max W. Turner, professor, political science, Southern Illinois University.

Roger Hargrave, former administrative assistant to Congressman JOHN A. BLATNIK.

James C. Lien, professor, political science, Long Beach State College.

Michael D. Zenor, director, research, Institute Public Affairs, State University of Iowa.

Karl Swanson, professor, political science, Washington State University.

Ivan Richardson, professor, political science, Kansas State College.

Christian Christiansen, professor, political science, Colorado State University.

Robert Goostree, professor, political science, George Washington University.

Leo Hoegh, former Governor of Iowa and now Director, Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization.

BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER, former governor of Iowa and now U.S. Senator.

Melvin Synhorst, secretary of state for the State of Iowa.

Norman Erbe, attorney general for the State of Iowa.

Mr. Speaker, my consideration of the contribution which this one great educator has made leads me to discuss, in more general terms, my concern over the place which political science and the other social sciences occupy in our current affairs. In no way would I depreciate or minimize the contributions which the physical scientists are making—my purpose is rather to point out that we must extend to the social scientists the same kind of appreciation and support that we are lavishing on the physical sciences.

It is becoming clearer every day that our national program of advancing research and development in nuclear physics—to choose the most striking example—is producing so many and such serious problems in the field of human relations that actual survival of the race has come to depend, not on producing more inventions, but on immediately devising some means of using those we have for the salvation and not the destruction of mankind. That puts a special responsibility or challenge to the politicians and the political scientists—that the nuclear physicists do not have and cannot accept. It is of course going too far to say that physical science has got us into this precarious state, and that it is up to social science to get us out of it, but such an overstatement is occasionally heard and there is at least a germ of truth in it. I think that there is ample justification for the belief that the basic difficulties in our troubled world today have been produced by our failure to solve certain problems in human relations rather than from lack of progress in the physical sciences, and for the belief that the tremendous advances in the latter field have intensified, if not actually produced, many of the difficulties in the former. Scientific discoveries and their applications are increasing much more rapidly than is our invention of methods of political, social and economic control to meet the new situations, both domestic and worldwide, produced by this scientific revolution.

There is, however, some evidence that we are developing a better appreciation of the need to encourage a rapid advance in political science, economics, and other social sciences. May I cite a few examples that have come to my attention, without my having made any thorough search for them. I think that they are encouraging but unfortunately, that they do not indicate anything like the necessary action under the circumstances.

On May 24, 1959, the President's Science Advisory Committee—which incidentally does not contain a single social scientist—released a statement entitled "Education for the Age of Science." In many parts of this excellent report there are sections which clearly show that these top scientists are well aware of the imperative need for general education—not merely scientific education—in the present era which they call an age of science. May I quote a few paragraphs:

A modern educational system should not only sharpen the intellectual capacities and curiosities of each new generation, should not only extract the essential core from ever-accumulating stores of knowledge, should not only find ways to produce new leaders equipped to add to these stores and to create all the new tools that the civilization requires; it must also produce citizens and leaders who will know how to use the knowledge and tools to advance social and cultural life.

We ought not to speak of our educational tasks solely in terms of buildings or budgets or even of curricula. These, indeed, are necessary means to the end. But we must think of the end itself. The end is clear: to introduce the growing child, the youth and the adult to the best and most essential elements of the intellectual and cultural experience of previous generations; to do this in such a way that we stimulate curiosity and encourage each individual to look forward, not backward, to develop his own talents to their maximum, and to continue this development throughout his life.

Alfred North Whitehead said in 1916:

"In the conditions of modern life the rule is absolute: The race which does not value trained intelligence is doomed. Not all your heroism, not all your social charm, not all your wit, not all your victories on land or at sea, can move back the finger of fate. Today we maintain ourselves. Tomorrow science will have moved forward yet one more step, and there will be no appeal from the judgment which will then be pronounced on the uneducated."

This is even more forcibly apparent in 1959 than it was in 1916. It follows that we must educate more, and especially we must educate better, scientists and engineers. But this is not enough. We must have trained specialists, in many fields. Even then we would not be successful if, having such specialists, the American people were merely to applaud and reward them for their contributions while still thinking of them as useful strangers, dimly understood and more feared than admired. Hence, we must also cultivate a widespread dedication to, and respect for, learning in all fields, and a deep understanding between the public and the experts.

This is a most reassuring statement coming, as it does, from an officially established committee of eminent scientists with the express concurrence of the President of the United States. But it is not a new concept, induced by the unheralded appearance of a Soviet satellite in the sky. The University of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa, whose constituency I have the honor of representing, has always been dedicated to the philosophy of producing "citizens and leaders who will know how to use the knowledge and tools to advance social and cultural life"—it has always aimed to "cultivate a widespread dedication to and respect for learning in all fields and a deep understanding between the public and the experts."

In the early 1900's, Dr. Benjamin Franklin Shambaugh established at the University of Iowa one of the earliest departments of political science in the United States, and he dedicated his life to teaching government to the young people of Iowa, with precisely the purposes in view that the President's committee now states so well. One of Dr. Shambaugh's students was Dr. Virgil Hancher, now president of the university—another was Dr. Kirk H. Porter. To use only these two political scientists as examples is to pass over hundreds of other students of political science who have gone out from the university imbued with the same spirit. They are to be found in all parts of Iowa; they have gone to other States; many of them are in Washington in Congress, on congressional staffs, and in the executive branch of the Government; and in all parts of the world are university of Iowa graduates who had the benefit of studying the government of their country under Dr. Porter and his predecessors and present colleagues.

The magnitude of the influence of such a department of political science and of such a teacher as Dr. Porter can never be measured—not even by his students, nor in my judgment would it be possible to overestimate it. The force of a new hydrogen bomb can be measured accurately—but what is the measure of force of a lifetime of teaching government? That question cannot be answered, but the effort to seek its answer results in establishing a sound perspective and the highest respect for the university professor of political science.

I mentioned a few minutes ago that I had noticed several evidences of an increasing appreciation of the need for strengthening the study of government and for putting to practical use the results of such study, and I have cited one of the most important of these examples. May I call your attention to a few more?

Philip Stoddard Brown in an article discussing the Center for Advanced Studies which the Brookings Institution is establishing in Washington—Washington Post, November 10, 1958—wrote, in part, as follows:

> Even though Washington has far more economists and political scientists than any other city in the world, it has no adequate meeting places for conferences, lectures, and the informal exchange of ideas. Even though Congress, the Supreme Court, and the many regulatory agencies and lending institutions are in Washington, most of the social-science research groups formed in recent years have been set up elsewhere. Even the Social Science Research Council, that has been located here, has moved to New York.
>
> No Government institute for social studies, no transcendently great university, no dominant private organization, such as the National Bureau of Economic Research, that might serve as a host for smaller groups, has developed here.
>
> What Washington has long been needing is a public-affairs institute of distinguished scholars, operating on a broad front and possessing a fine library (that other organizations could share), dining and conference rooms, offices for visiting professors and a place where advanced students and young Government employees could study and get guidance.
>
> The Brookings Institution, to be sure, has served as a central meeting place, but only to a limited extent. It has always had to maneuver and improvise every few years to keep a small staff together. Even so, under Dr. Harold G. Moulton's presidency, that bridged the long depression and war years, Brookings did bring students of public affairs together on many occasions and did turn out many first-rate studies.
>
> Now, after much advance planning by Dr. Robert D. Calkins, president since 1952, Brookings has undertaken a $13 million expansion program. Of this, $6.2 million has been received from the Ford Foundation and $1.2 million will help finance a $4 million, eight-story building on Massachusetts Avenue, to be completed by mid-1960. The balance will be expended over a 10-year period and cover about half the million-dollar-a-year budget that Brookings hopes to enjoy.
>
> The new Center for Advanced Studies that Brookings has in view will offer 30 fellowships a year and a number of 1- and 2-year research professorships. It will bring together public officials, businessmen, and professional people for public conferences and off-the-record meetings "when the occasion is right"; it will arrange lectures, seminars, and study groups. For these purposes, the building will provide 10 conference rooms, 7 dining rooms, a cafeteria, a big library and 75 or so small offices for fellows and visiting scholars.
> By its own greatly expanded program of studies and by making its facilities available to others, there is a possibility that Brookings might become an intellectual center for all students of public affairs in Washington. By affecting a sort of loose federation of many local organizations in this field, it might even become a university (in the European sense) for social studies. By encouraging new relationships with legislators and Government officials on the one hand, and businessmen on the other, it might in time become very influential.

Another new venture was undertaken about 4 years ago in Palo Alto, Calif., known as the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences. The Ford Foundation by an original grant of $3½ million and later grants of $5 million has supported the center. In 1958 and 1959 it paid the salaries and traveling expenses of 49 fellows who were to spend the year dealing with general and specific problems, in seminars and individual research and thought. The 49 scholars, 3 of whom were doctors of medicine and the remainder doctors of philosophy, were chosen from almost 4,500 nominations made by research centers and universities. There is no faculty for the center and the scholars pursue their own research projects independently. Dr. Ralph W. Tyler, the president and executive director, is quoted as saying that it would be safe to conclude that some of the findings of scholars in the first 4 years had been used by Government agencies, including the Department of State. He cited the work of one group representing Germany, Israel, England, Sweden, and the United States which had agreed that international conflict could not be eliminated but that it could be regulated. Other subjects under consideration dealt with factors in the mental health field and with problems of underdeveloped countries. Dr. Tyler said that the primary influence of the experience of each fellow at the center will be reflected in his future research and the training of other researchers as he resumes his regular activities in his home institution, and that 184 of the scholars who have completed fellowships at the center have added substantially to their lists of scholarly publications.

As a third example, Harvard University received in 1959 a grant of $285,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation to continue support of a research and training program in science and public policy which had been started in 1958. This program, which will extend through 1962 and 1963, includes research into the broad range of studies involved in the financing and administration of scientific research, and—of particular interest in the present connection—in the interrelations of science and public policy. The students admitted to the program will be selected primarily from among candidates who have had a number of years of experience in Government or in research positions, and who seek to prepare themselves to deal with public policy issues at a higher level of responsibility.

In conclusion I want to give some attention to the National Science Foundation and its support of the social sciences—a subject which has been under discussion since the time when the establishment of the Foundation was first considered. Without taking time for full explanation of the reasons for the decision, it may be said that until recent years the Foundation furnished very little support for the social sciences during a period when its grants for the physical and life sciences have steadily increased. Many have been highly critical of the Foundation because its support of social sciences has constituted such a small part of its program. Since 1953 there has been an Advisory Panel for Social Sciences, and in August 1954, the Foundation approved a limited program of support of the social sciences, but did not establish a new administrative division to carry out the limited program which was being developed on an exploratory basis. The Foundation's annual report for 1955 described the new program and contained this statement:

> The study of the role of the Foundation, and of the Federal Government generally, with respect to social science research is continuing. In pursuing its responsibilities with respect to national science policy, scientific and technical manpower, assessment of the status of science, study of the impact of science on social welfare, promotion of international relations in science and the improvement of the exchange of scientific information, the Foundation has necessarily had to exploit the techniques, methods, and concepts of the social sciences.

In addition to staff surveys, the Foundation had utilized the facilities and technical skills of many research agencies, both public and private:

It is not surprising, therefore, although it is little realized, that the National Science Foundation is, among Federal agencies, one of the major supporters of extramural social science research.

In the annual reports for 1956, 1957, and 1958 the Foundation included statistics indicating that only a very few grants for research in the social sciences had been made and that little of its funds had been expended on them. On August 1, 1957, a unified social science research program was established as an outgrowth of the 4-year study of the Foundation's responsibilities in this area. It replaced the program designated as convergent fields of natural and social sciences previously conducted by other research divisions. The only fields covered by the new program were anthropological sciences, sociological sciences, economic sciences, and the history and philosophy of science. Political science was conspicuous by its absence. In fiscal 1958 the Foundation made a total of 1,120 grants of which 49 were in the fields just named. The total grants for the latter were for about $726,000 out of a total of about $19,115,000.

In March 1959 a further step was taken in the Foundation's support of basic social science research. The Office of Social Sciences was established with Dr. Henry Riecken as its head and an Advisory Committee for the Social Sciences composed of eight distinguished social scientists. No statement was made indicating a strengthening of the existing program either in terms of financial support or of broadening the area of research beyond the four fields named above. It should also be noted that the National Science Board contains no members representing the social sciences.

As I have said, there is continual objection to this very slight support of social sciences by the Foundation. Nearly every year when its appropriations are under consideration in the Congress these objections are voiced, but to date they have not been particularly effective. This fact is demonstrated by the statistics of financial obligations by all departments and agencies of the Federal Government for research in the various fields. The estimates for fiscal 1959 indicated a total of $1,107,000,000. More than $700 million was used for physical sciences—$346 million for life sciences—$46 million for social sciences. During the past 3 fiscal years no shift in the relative importance of support for social science was shown—that is, about 4 percent of total funds have been obligated for them.

A recent report of the National Science Foundation, from which these financial facts were taken, contains a definition of "social sciences" which indicates a broadening of viewpoint as to the fields which it is appropriate for the Foundation to assist. I quote the definition:

Social sciences are those sciences directed toward an understanding of the behavior of individuals as members of a group. These include such sciences as cultural anthropology, economics, history, political science [please note this addition], social psychology, sociology, etc. In addition to work done in disciplines or subjects traditionally considered as being social sciences, there is also included work done in other disciplines or subjects where the work is undertaken primarily for the purpose of understanding human behavior.

Now that the National Science Foundation has established the Office of Social Sciences and has accepted a comprehensive definition of its scope, can we hope for increased financial support for this type of research? That will depend on many factors. For example, will Congress undertake to increase its present small appropriations? Will the public, including the social scientists, demand such congressional action? Would the agencies of the Federal Government use the results of the research thus supported? I strongly urge that these questions be given serious attention. The great foundations are endowing advanced schools and institutes and centers of research into the social sciences, including political science, as I have shown. This is a hopeful sign, but the Federal Government seems to be lagging and, in my opinion, we are so desperately in need of research in this area that immediate steps should be taken to meet the need. The colleges and universities, even with aid from individuals and foundations and other nongovernmental sources, have not been, and are not now, able to conduct the necessary basic research in the physical sciences and thus require Federal assistance, and it seems very clear to me that the social sciences are in exactly the same condition, that their present support is inadequate, and that Congress must come to the rescue on behalf of the national welfare.

Research and teaching the science of government must be put in a position of equality with research and teaching of the physical sciences, as apparently is not the case today. The two sciences are complementary—neither is the more important, neither must be given priority. No university would be willing to make the choice of weakening its department of chemistry or its department of government, at the expense of the other. We need both kinds of scientists in research, in teaching, and in public and private employment. We need to have citizens who can understand the problems of today's civilization, a civilization in which rapidly advancing technology is accompanied by rapidly changing political policies, demanding that the citizen be competent to understand both kinds of problems involved in this intricate interrelationship. It will do little good to be the first on the moon if we cannot solve the pressing human problems arising out of international tensions—science cannot be substituted for sound policy.

THE CAROLINA ISRAELITE

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, one of the brilliant essayists of our time is Harry Golden, who publishes a most unlikely paper called the Carolina Israelite.

This wonderful monthly contains a marvelous mixture of recollections of days past, insight into the habits and foibles of the human race, whimsy, and other humor, scintillating analytical reporting, and keen editorial comment.

In the current issue Harry Golden's penetrating comments with respect to the election of 1960 ought to be must reading for every Democrat. Under unanimous consent I extend my remarks to include Harry Golden's editorial:

THE ELECTION OF 1960

For the Democrats: If the candidate is not an out-and-out Liberal, the Republicans will knock our brains out.

If Senators Olin Johnston and Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, and former Gov. Marvin Griffin, of Georgia, and Senator James Eastland, of Mississippi, vote for the adoption of the civil rights plank in the Democratic Party platform of 1960, RICHARD NIXON or Nelson Rockefeller will beat our brains out. The Democratic candidate won't know he is running; that is how bad it will be.

The 8 years of the Eisenhower administration have proved to be a digestive period for the legislation enacted during the Roosevelt and Truman New and Fair Deals. The two Republican administrations have not touched a hair on the New Deal head; in fact they have actually expanded and improved some of the Rooseveltian social legislation. And by 1960 the American people will be ready for new social legislation. This legislation will encompass (1) civil rights, (2) health, (3) education, (4) housing.

In the past there have been some exceptions, but in the main, the American people voted for the authentic man. If a Conservative Democrat runs against a Republican, the people will take the Republican. If a Liberal Republican runs against a Democrat, the people will take the Democrat; viz, John W. Davis versus Calvin Coolidge; Wendell Willkie versus Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The American people as a whole are becoming more mature about civil rights, which is why more injustices appear in the newspapers. There is a growing desire to provide guards against, and redress for, injustice. If you spit on a Negro high school student in Tennessee or North Carolina her picture is on page 1 of every newspaper in the world, with week-long special features in the Communist press of Russia, the Far East, and satellite countries, as well as in the entire "neutralist" press of the world. The American people are learning: We need more than military bases and missiles. Read the editorials out of India, Ghana, Kenya, Ceylon, and Jakarta, and you will not find a sentence about foreign aid, military bases or electrical appliances. The editorials are about first-class citizenship and human dignity. Civil rights have become important to the world and to America. Thus people have begun to worry about the rights of the Mexican wetbacks, hounded and exploited in the Southwest; about the rights of millions of Negroes who cannot vote and are not allowed to compete for employment on a fair basis; about the rights of all Americans to move about as free men and participate in the public facilities of our society. These are the things watched by the uncommitted nations—and we must gain the confidence and trust of these uncommitted nations or lose the world. It is as simple as that.

There is a growing concern about health and its cost. The average family can pay off the refrigerator and the car (which keeps the economy's head above water) and in some cases the average family pays off the mortgage—but it never pays off an operation. One major operation and they are in debt for life. It is a bottomless pit.

As for Federal aid to education, Admiral Rickover and Mr. Conant have stated the case brilliantly in their recent publications. Listen to them, for they are not only patriots but experts. The United States needs now an additional 150,000 classrooms, and this is only an emergency measure. Our crash program must attract thousands of intelligent teachers from the new generation of men and women. We cannot simply ask them to become teachers by saying we need them, we must persuade them not to enter private industry but instead the teaching professions. We do this by raising salaries. The only way we can accomplish this is by a vast program of Federal aid to education.

Since the time of King Solomon housing has been the key to the happiness of a country. Good housing lends stability to the state. But in each of our large cities thousands of people wander the streets looking for a place to live. In New York City they use subterfuges: "Let's tell the renting agent we are Spanish," says the wife, "not Puerto Rican." In hundreds of other cases the wife, who has a lighter skin sees the agent to obtain the lease while her darker colored husband hangs back. If we instituted a program of one million housing units in the next 10 years, it would take care only of the newlyweds living with their parents and others who live doubled up; it would not begin to take care of the million new citizens born each year.

The best thing the Democrats could hope for in 1960 is the prospect of nationwide employment. God forbid that we should win because of the human misery of millions. The hope for full employment levels a focus upon these other problems: the Democrats must not win out of desperation on the part of the public, nor to point up the need for a crisis government, but rather to strengthen the democratic way of life and help us win the world.

Only a liberal candidate and a liberal platform can capture and win the imagination of America and the world in 1960. If we get less than an out-and-out liberal candidate on the Democratic ticket, the highly resourceful Mr. NIXON, or Mr. Rockefeller will show us that one of them is indeed the man of destiny.

STUDENT OF MISSOURI RIVER DEVELOPMENT PRAISES SLACK-WATER NAVIGATION SURVEY

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MCGOVERN] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, the editor of the Huron Plainsman, a longtime student of Missouri River problems, has given strong endorsement to the slack water navigation survey which was recently approved by the House Committee on Public Works. Mr. Robert Lusk, editor of the Huron paper, has properly recognized such a survey as a breakthrough for a more effective use of Missouri River water. The people of South Dakota are especially concerned about water use problems this year because we are experiencing a severe drought that makes us particularly aware of the vital importance of water in our economy.

I include at this point in the RECORD the Huron Plainsman editorial of September 8.

MCGOVERN PROPOSAL IS A GOOD ONE

Representative GEORGE MCGOVERN'S proposal calling for slack water navigation on the Missouri River between Yankton and St. Louis is a good one for several reasons.

The House Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors, by voting favorably on Representative MCGOVERN'S resolution calling for a survey of the possibilities for such slack water navigation, showed it thinks the idea has merit.

The South Dakota Legislator, pleased with the committee's action, said: "I regard the committee's approval of my proposal a most significant breakthrough in better utilization of Missouri River water."

South Dakotans will agree with that conclusion.

Under the slack water plan, a system of dams and locks would be built along the river to slow its flow and to trap water in relatively small stretches of river to form a continuous chain of navigable lakes.

This would allow barge navigation without the huge releases of water necessary to maintain a navigable, free-flowing channel.

It would be advantageous to the barge operators, providing them with a relatively current-free and extremely stable channel.

Power generation would be improved, too.

Under present conditions, water is held back during the winter months, when it is most needed for power generation, so that it will be available for release during the summer months when the needs for navigation are the greatest while the need for power generation lessens.

The slack water plan would stop the wasteful releases of water that work against maximum power generation and, at the same time, imperil the future of irrigation.

When irrigation is developed to the fullest, the water which has been rushing down river to float barges will be even more sorely needed in the upper basin.

The development of the Oahe irrigation project will be accompanied by increased domestic uses as the irrigation canals make water available to cities and villages as well as to farms.

There are other slack water benefits, too, such as improved management of sediment and bank erosion, major problems in the Missouri basin project.

Down-river interests would find they would benefit because of the diminution of the existing possibility that downstream navigation ultimately will be curtailed because of increased consumptive uses of water upstream.

It isn't difficult to see the wisdom of Representative MCGOVERN'S proposal not only as an economic measure but as a water conservation measure as well.

There isn't much sense in shooting a lot of water down the river to float barges when, by exercising a litle horsesense and ingenuity, the water can be used for power generation, irrigation, and domestic purposes as well as for navigation.

SUGGESTION FOR A MORE SENSIBLE FARM PROGRAM

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MCGOVERN] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I took the floor to discuss some of the problems which beset our farm families. On the following day I pointed out what I believe to be the weaknesses in the farm program which we are now following under the administration of Secretary Benson. Today, I want to discuss what I believe might constitute the rough outline for a more rational Federal farm program.

Anyone who searches for a satisfactory solution to the problems of agriculture is made keenly aware of the fact that there is widespread disagreement among farm organizations as to the proper remedy. This disagreement coupled with the sharp differences of opinion between the present administration and the Congress has delayed any acceptable solution to our agricultural problem.

Any major problem will produce differences of opinion, however, and we have not let such differences stand in the way of progress in the past. Indeed, we cannot afford as a Nation to delay much longer the establishment of an improved farm program. How can a great Nation ignore a condition which depresses the income of our food producers to a level only half that enjoyed by city dwellers? How can we ignore the pile-up of farm surpluses to the tune of $9 billion at an annual cost of $1 billion in storage and handling charges? How can we turn our backs on the outstretched hands of hungry millions overseas and our own undernourished here in the United States when vast quantities of food are deteriorating in Government bins? How can we close our eyes to the cost-price squeeze that is forcing farm families to sell out to corporation farm operators and integrated agriculture? How, for example, can my business constituents in South Dakota regard their future with security knowing that farm families are leaving the farms in South Dakota at the rate of one thousand per year for the past 5 years, many of them looking for work in the large cities where unemployment is already a problem. I feel a special concern for the young farmers who began farming after the Korean War when prices were high and their hopes for the future were even higher. These families were hit the hardest by the price depressing policies of Mr. Benson, tight money, and rising costs of operation. They did not have sufficient reserves to survive the squeeze between falling farm prices and rising costs of operation. What is our suggestion to these farmers?

To raise these questions is to recognize that the crisis in agriculture is more than an economic crisis; it is a moral crisis, as well.

GUIDELINES TO A BETTER AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

More than a year and a half ago, the gentleman from California, Congressman ROOSEVELT, and I sent a letter to the Members of Congress in which we suggested four major factors which we believed any new farm program must recognize. I believe that those four guidelines are even more apparent today as criteria for an improved agricultural program. In setting forth the conditions of an acceptable new program, we said:

First. It must be of maximum benefit to the family-size farmers who makes up the great bulk of our rural population.

Second. It must not raise food costs to city consumers.

Third. It must not be unreasonably costly to the Federal Treasury as is the case with our present disorganized and poorly planned program.

Fourth. In view of our position as a leading world power, a Federal farm policy should be related to our opportunities and responsibilities abroad.

Mr. Speaker, it has seemed to me for years that the No. 1 weakness in our national farm policy has been our slowness in recognizing that agricultural abundance if properly used can be a great asset both at home and abroad. The amazing efficiency of the American farmer which is the envy of the world can be a mighty instrument in strengthening our economy at home and building good will and peace abroad.

I cannot believe that an all wise Providence intended America to let her abundant agricultural production become a curse that depresses the income of the hard-working men and women who make that abundance possible. To do so is to ignore the parable of the slothful servant who was condemned by his master because he hid his talent in the ground.

We all know that in a world where most of the people are hungry, our chief adversary, Mr. Khrushchev would love to have control of America's food surpluses to use in his international operations. Why then have we been so slow to recognize the potentiality of our amazing farm production?

Early in this session of the Congress I introduced a resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 60—entitled the "Food for Peace Resolution," calling upon the Congress to make vastly greater use of our food reserves as an instrument of peace and freedom. We have made some progress in that direction under Public Law 480, but much more can be done in the months ahead. The following is the text of my food-for-peace resolution which I include at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 60

Whereas the abundance of food and fiber produced by the American farmer is the marvel of the world; and

Whereas most of the people of the world are undernourished; and

Whereas the American people historically have been concerned with the well-being of other peoples; and

Whereas in many nations of the free world vital economic development programs are retarded and political stability is threatened by an inadequate supply of food; and

Whereas the remarkable bounty of the free American farmer has resulted in accumulations of farm commodities for which there is insufficient domestic demand; and

Whereas the Congress seeks to reduce unnecessary expenditures, including, where possible, those for commodity storage and for foreign assistance; and

Whereas the Soviet bloc has publicly challenged the United States and her allies to economic competition in demonstrating before the world the viability of their respective economic system: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that an agricultural abundance is one of America's greatest assets for raising living standards and promoting peace and stability in the free world; and that Congress favors action to resolve the paradox of American agricultural surpluses and world food needs by more fully utilizing the resources of the American farmer as an integral part of the United States foreign assistance program.

SEC. 2. This concurrent resolution may be cited as the "Food for Peace Resolution".

There is also an urgent need for greater use of our farm surpluses here at home. Two-thirds of our schoolchildren are not included in the school lunch program and there are still 17 million Americans who are undernourished. One reason for the inadequacy of our domestic food use program is the fact that it is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture which is already under fire for its heavy budget. Actually our domestic food distribution program should be under the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. This Department is not only better suited to carry on a humanitarian food distribution program, but it would eliminate some of the budgetary criticisms of the Department of Agriculture that are now hurting the farmer's chances for a stronger program.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, and I are the cosponsors of legislation—H.R. 7473 and S. 1884—that would transfer the food distribution program to the Welfare Department and expand the use of farm-produced foods among needy American families.

To accomplish the purposes of a comprehensive agricultural program designed to meet the needs of farm families and the Nation as a whole, the gentleman from Minnesota, Senator HUMPHREY, and I have cosponsored a challenging program—H.R. 8597 and S. 2502—which we believe is entitled to the thoughtful consideration of every American. Both Senator HUMPHREY and I were born in small South Dakota towns in the rural heartland of America. We have devoted a large share of our time and energy in public life studying the farm problem and talking with farmers in our home States and across the country. We believe that our legislation should be given full-scale hearings when the Congress returns next January and that it may point the way to a better agricultural economy in the best interest of farmers and city dwellers alike.

There follows the full text of our bill which I strongly urge every Member of Congress and every citizen to study. I am most anxious to receive suggestions from my colleagues and from my fellow South Dakotans as to possible improvements in this legislation before we begin hearings next year.

Under unanimous consent to extend my remarks, I include the text of the bill at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

H.R. 8597

A bill to provide for the development of a comprehensive family farm program, to bring the production of agricultural commodities into balance with demand therefor, to enable farmers to secure fair prices, to better utilize agricultural abundance in the Nation's interest at home and abroad, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Family Farm Program Development Act".

TITLE I—POLICY OBJECTIVE

SEC. 101. The objective of this Act is to provide for the orderly development of a comprehensive family farm income and supply stabilization program that will (1) assure consumers in the United States an adequate, varied, and nutritious supply of food, fiber, and timber in the immediate future and in years to come, (2) bring the supply of farm products into balance with requirements for domestic use and export, (3) enable farmers who are willing to participate in and cooperate with orderly marketing and production adjustment programs for agricultural commodities to secure fair prices that will enable them to secure returns on their labor and invested capital comparable to earnings in comparable nonfarm occupations, and (4) better utilize the Nation's abundance of food and fiber products in support of United States international policies by assisting people in underdeveloped countries of the world to develop their economies, to modernize and expand their training and educational systems, and to avoid famine and malnutrition.

TITLE II—DOMESTIC FOOD AND NUTRITION PROGRAM

SEC. 201. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter called the Secretary) is authorized and directed to formulate annually and submit to the Congress on or before February 1 of each year a domestic food and fiber program for the United States, both immediate and long range, together with budgetary estimates for carrying out such program in the first year and in subsequent years of operation.

(b) Any food and fiber program submitted by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a) shall include provisions for—

(1) expanding and liberalizing the national school lunch program (carried out under the National School Lunch Act) and the special milk program for children (carried out under the Act of July 1, 1958 (72 Stat. 276));

(2) a food allotment program under which the nutritional needs of low income persons, the unemployed, the aged, and the handicapped will be more adequately fulfilled; and

(3) a national security reserve of food and fiber products designed to protect people of the United States against charges of such products in the event of war or other national emergency.

TITLE III—INTERNATIONAL FOOD AND FIBER PROGRAM

SEC. 301. (a) The Secretary is authorized and directed to cause a study to be made for the purpose of determining the annual fiber, food, and nutritional deficiency in the world and submit a report of such study to the Congress annually on or before February 1 of each year. He shall include in such report—

(1) recommendations as to the fair and feasible share of that deficiency which should be met from food products produced in the United States;

(2) recommendations for making food and fiber products produced in the United States available to aid in meeting such deficiency; and

(3) estimates of the annual cost of carrying out such program.

(b) The program specified in subsection (a) shall be planned as a long-term program in order to facilitate the effective use of food products made available in the recipient countries. Such program shall be planned in such a manner as to be consistent with the international objectives of the United States and so as not to interfere with the commercial trading activities of friendly exporting countries; but planned so as to afford maximum economic benefit to the recipient countries.

TITLE IV—ADJUSTING SUPPLY AND DEMAND

SEC. 401. (a) Whenever the Secretary determines that the supply of any agricultural commodity exceeds effective demand at a fair price, he shall establish for each such farm commodity a farm commodity program development committee to be composed of representative producers of such commodity. Each such committee shall be composed of members elected from their own number by the producers of such commodity and shall be established and operated in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(b) Whenever any such farm commodity program development committee recommends it, the Secretary is authorized to conduct a referendum of the producers of such commodity to determine whether they favor a national marketing quota for such commodity as outlined by the Secretary after the consultation and guidance of the commodity committee. If two-thirds or more of the producers voting in any such referendum vote in favor of such a program, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a national marketing program for the commodity concerned in conformity with principles hereafter outlined in this title, together with estimates of the annual costs of each such program.

(c) The national marketing quota for any marketing year in the case of any farm commodity for which a marketing program is effectuated pursuant to subsection (b) shall be an amount of such commodity which will move in domestic and foreign markets in such marketing year, as determined by the Secretary, at a fair price for such commodity, taking into account the amount of such commodity to be utilized pursuant to any program effected under title II and III of this Act.

(d) With respect to any national marketing quota program submitted to the Congress under subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

(1) establish the necessary production adjustment and orderly marketing control procedures for the commodities concerned, including the necessary incentives or penalties to effect compliance with the program;

(2) establish procedures for transferring sales quotas among producers in the same area, and among different areas; and

(3) utilize, as may be necessary for the effective administration of such program, any alternative income stabilization methods, individually or in combination, including but not limited to crop loans, marketing premium payments, marketing agreements, marketing orders, surplus diversion purchases, purchase agreements, export incentive payments, export equalization payments, stabilization pools, or income deficiency or compensatory payments direct to farmers, in order to achieve the fair price objectives of this legislation at the lowest possible cost to consumers and taxpayers: Provided, however, That in no instance shall any individual farm operator receive total Government payments of more than $5,000 for such purposes in any one marketing year, or more than $25,000 in crop loans.

(e) The term "fair price" as used in this section means, with respect to any commodity, the price which will yield returns on capital and labor (on representative family farms) comparable to nonfarm earnings, as determined by the Secretary on the basis of costs and returns collected and published annually by the United States Department of Agriculture for typical family-operated commercial farms.

(f) If the Secretary determines that the fair price for any commodity encourages competition from synthetics or tends to otherwise significantly reduce domestic consumption or export of such commodity, or in the case of oilseeds the products thereof, he may allow the commodity to move through the market at a competitive price and pay the difference between the competitive price and the fair price as a compensatory payment directly to the producer.

(g) Unless any such marketing program submitted to the Congress under provisions of this title is disapproved by joint resolution of the Congress after sixty days after submission by the Secretary, it shall be placed into operation; and all other previously existing price support provisions for such commodity shall be suspended for the period for which such program is in effect.

(h) The Secretary shall use funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the purposes of implementing this title.

TITLE V—LONG-TERM AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

SEC. 501. (a) In order to facilitate the adjustment of the supply of agricultural commodities to the demand therefor and to effect a healthy and balanced growth in agriculture, the Secretary is authorized and directed to formulate and submit to the Congress, within six months after the enactment of this Act, a comprehensive program dealing with long-term adjustments in agriculture in the United States, together with a long-term budget setting out the estimated costs of carrying out such program.

(b) Any program submitted by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a) shall include, but not be limited to—

(1) plans for an expanded agricultural resources conservation program, including incentives to encourage land-use adjustment and temporary retirement of land not needed for production;

(2) plans for a review and appraisal of the total research effort, public and private, in the field of agriculture with a view to determining the need for increased research in the production patterns, marketing, and uses of agricultural production.

TITLE VI—LOW PRODUCTION FARMS

SEC. 601. (a) The Secretary is authorized and directed (1) to review and report to the Congress the progress of the rural development program in solving the production and income problems of low production and low income family farms, and (2) to submit to the Congress, within six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, further recommendations for dealing more effectively and more rapidly with these problems, and (3) to submit estimates of the costs of carrying out such recommendations.

(b) The Secretary shall, with respect to any recommendation submitted pursuant to subsection (a), consider, but not be limited by—

(1) the use of increased supervised credit to help speed farm reorganization and to help achieve more efficient sized and better organized farm units;

(2) the establishment of special services, including individual farm and home management guidance;

(3) the feasibility of payment of special grants to assist families with poor economic futures in agriculture who may desire to seek more gainful opportunities; and

(4) better protection for the benefit of families or persons who gain their living primarily as hired farm workers; and

(5) stimulation of further industrial development in underdeveloped rural areas; and

(6) the desirability of extending the United States Employment Service to rural areas and providing counseling service to people living in rural areas.

COMMUNIST AGGRESSION IN THE FAR EAST

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to current Communist aggressions in the Far East. Fighting is going on in Laos. India is being threatened all along her borders. Formosa is still smoldering. Is our friend and true ally Pakistan next?

Let us focus for the moment on Laos. The invasion of Laos is clearly indicative of the Communist intentions to continue their piecemeal assault on the free world. They are content apparently to spread their control over free peoples in small bite-sized pieces that will not generate enough interest or resentment in the rest of the free world to start a general war. This most recent act of aggression is designed to take over some 91,000 square miles of territory and to impose the Communist will on some 1,650,000 people.

This is not an isolated example of the Communist plan for gaining control of the world; this is just another Lebanon, Hungary, Tibet, or Formosa set in another locale. In all of these recent attempts to subjugate small nations, or to keep them under subjugation, the only failures that the Communists have suffered have been in those instances where they were met with organized force. This was the case in Lebanon and in Formosa. In Hungary and in Tibet, where forces were not capable of resisting, the people lost their freedom, their identity, and their very lives.

This obvious pattern of aggression should point out very clearly to us the necessity for maintaining a strong Army and Marine Corps. Only by being prepared to meet the Communists on the ground and by clearly indicating to them our willingness to meet them will this piece by piece attrition of the free world be halted.

The question arises, are we ready for Laos? On the 26th of August one of our distinguished Representatives from the State of New York [Mr. STRATTON] stated in this assembly that we should send the Marines to Laos as we did to Lebanon to stop this Communist nibbling. I agree with him, in principle, but I question our ability to actually accomplish such a feat. In the case of the Marines, who are charged with establishing beachheads and with short range operations in the proximity of those beachhead areas, they would be hard put to it to sustain themselves for any period of time in Laos which could only be supplied by air. The fact that Laos is literally surrounded by Vietnam, China, Burma, Thailand, and Cambodia immediately indicates that any force employed in that area must be capable of waging sustained land combat and that any resupply or reinforcement must be through the air. The Army, of course, is charged with providing this type of force. However, even if the Army were sent to Laos, it would be necessary to transport them there by air and to resupply and reinforce them by air during the time that they remained in the area.

This opens another problem area: The problem of finding sufficient numbers and sufficient types of troop carrying and cargo carrying aircraft to transport and support any considerable force that might be sent to Laos. The fact remains that the Air Force is not, as presently organized and equipped, prepared to provide the necessary transportation and resupply aircraft to maintain a force large enough to accomplish anything in Laos or any other area that lies some 6,000 to 7,000 miles away. This fact becomes all the more alarming when you consider the very possible situation that could develop if we went into Laos and then had to send other forces to other threatened spots. Quite frankly, we could not, without extensive mobilization, support these widespread forces.

To me, the answer to our dilemma is obvious and simple. First, we must strengthen our ground forces, the Army and the Marines, and thus provide the necessary armed strength to effectively counter these repeated Communist encroachments. The Army should be increased in size to a minimum of 925,000 men; the Marines should be increased in size to a minimum of 200,000 men. Both of these forces should be provided with modern arms and equipment so that the manpower odds against them could be reduced by the use of more effective weapons. Then our Military Air Transport Service must be strengthened and modernized. The Air Force, which has the responsibility of transporting and resupplying by air those elements of our strategic reserve who must be rapidly deployed in the event of war, must be given the means to provide this service. And finally, and probably most important, the Department of Defense must be enjoined to utilize any funds authorized to provide the stronger Army, the stronger Marine Corps, and the more effective Air Transport Service we know is required.

To do otherwise is to stand idly by and watch our friends in the free world swallowed up by creeping communism. Our only other alternative as presently organized might well be at some future date, general war. This we must avoid.

STRENGTH AND MODERNIZATION OF THE ARMY

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, daily I become more and more concerned with the ability of our Armed Forces to defend the Nation. Throughout the current session of Congress we have had a steady parade of our best military experts appear before us and sound the warning. I have watched the world situation steadily worsen with threats being directed at Europe and the Middle and Far East. And with all this, I fail to see where we have taken the dynamic action required to prepare our Armed Forces for the tasks they must ultimately face.

I have no doubt that our Strategic Air Force is being maintained at a level of readiness that will deter all-out nuclear war. This I recognize as a must. But what is happening to our ground combat forces—the Army and Marines. From where I stand I see nothing but a steady deterioration in strength and modernization. This is in the face of constant limited war threats all over the globe.

Since June 30, 1953, the strength of the Army has dropped from 1,500,000 officers and men and 20 divisions to 861,964 officers and men and only 15 divisions. I am told that one more division will be dropped from the roles in 1960. For the life of me I cannot see why this is allowed to happen when the very existence of our Nation and of our friends in the free world is under constant attack.

What about our enemy. What has he been doing during this same period. It must be abundantly clear that the Soviet Union and Red China are maintaining tremendous ground armies capable of initiating wars all along the perimeter of the free world. As these armies steadily increase their effectiveness and ours declines, Communist power relative to ours must certainly grow. Moscow is bound to become more adventuresome and more difficult to deal with. I am convinced that the Soviets understand diplomacy based on power and power alone. They will not fail to take advantage of any and all weaknesses that we might develop.

With our ground combat strength steadily declining—what are we doing to offset the overwhelming numerical superiority now facing us? Time after time General Taylor clearly informed us of the requirements for modernization of the Army. I am afraid we have become mesmerized by the glamor of great bombers, ballistic missiles, and missile-launching submarines which tend to overshadow the very real and hard fact that the Communists have pursued a continuous buildup and modernization of forces. So we learn that our Army and Marines are equipped with rifles adopted 23 years ago and automatic rifles and machineguns of World War I vintage.

Now the Army has not been standing still. Its vigorous research and development program has produced the most modern and efficient small arms and other ground and air equipment. However, the rate of production for these badly needed items is a mere trickle. If the present production rate is maintained it will be well into the middle of the 1970's before our troops can be reequipped. The Army has gone on record, stating very clearly, that $15 billion is needed over a period of 5 years to modernize our present forces. This requires a start of $2.8 billion in 1960 of which $1.4 is required just for replacement of wornout equipment. Despite this, the Army has been given slightly over $1 billion for procurement in 1960. I fail to see progress here. We only find ourselves in the predicament of not having the clear conventional ground capability either to keep a local crisis from spreading into general war, or to handle more than one crisis at any given time.

Gentlemen, I feel I must sound the warning. Unless we take immediate and positive steps to build up the numerical strength of our ground combat forces and furnish them modern equipment, we can expect to face Communist inspired crises one after the other. Each will leave the free world weaker than before until we are faced with no alternative but all-out war with its attendant annihilation.

COMMUNIST TRIPLE THREAT: CIA FINDINGS

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, over a period of many months, I have endeavored, by means of addresses and statements to the House, to present to the Nation an adequate picture of the turmoil to the south of us, especially in the strategic Caribbean area and with particular emphasis on the security of the Panama Canal.

The preparation of these addresses inevitably involved studies of the operations of the international Communist conspiracy, which has long had for one of its prime objectives the wresting of control of the Panama Canal from the United States.

Thus, I read with the keenest interest in the September 7, 1959, issue of the U.S. News & World Report an extremely able address on the workings of the extensive Communist organization by Gen. C. P. Cabell, Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, which he gave on August 21, 1959, before the National Security Commission of the American Legion in Minneapolis, Minn.

To make General Cabell's informative address more generally available, especially to State and Federal security agencies of the United States and to those of other nations of the Western Hemisphere, I quote the full text:

WHAT THE CIA HAS LEARNED ABOUT THE COMMUNIST THREAT

(By Gen. C. P. Cabell, Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency)

My purpose is to discuss the nature of the Communist threat. The threat of communism is long-term and many-sided. There must be no blinders on us when we are looking at the nature and magnitude of this threat.

The objective of communism is abundantly clear. The Communists want to rule the world. They want to abolish free society. They have, in fact, announced their intent of world domination. And let me solemnly assure you that they are determined to carry out their intention. They have an integrated offensive directed from Moscow which combines military, political, psychological, economic, cultural, and subversive forces. Their strategy is to infiltrate and absorb; undermine and replace; subvert and take over—all, if possible, without war.

We hear much about Soviet power and progress. The Soviets seek to make themselves appear as the star of the future. They seek to maintain the offensive and to place the free peoples of the world on the defensive.

Now, there is no doubt that the Soviet Union has made a significant advance in its economic base. The Soviets have also moved forward in scientific and technical fields by concentrating their resources on selected high-priority programs. Soviet advances in the scientific and technical fields are likely to continue and with greater frequency. We recognize these things. We hope that the standard of living of the peoples of the Soviet Union, and of other countries presently under Communist domination, can be materially improved as a result of this natural economic and scientific development. But it is hard to understand why the Soviets use their increasing future capability in the form of a presently existing threat to the peoples of the free world and, at the same time, mouth the words of peace. The inconsistency in this propaganda tactic makes it clear that they seek to intimidate the West into accepting their one-sided position of hands off their spheres of influence, with Communist open house in our back yard.

They rattle their future missiles in an effort to scare off any unwelcome intruder. Their spokesman has promised to "bury us"; later, when called on this, he added, "in peaceful competition."

You and I know that, in the thinking of the Communists, there is no condition. Their strategy is to boast of scientific, economic, and military strength in such a way as to make it appear that they have tomorrow's capability today. While the Communists speak of peace, their strategy clearly calls for them to continue those actions which keep the cold-war conflict alive and worldwide. At the same time, they would like, if possible, to minimize Western strength in any given area. Thus, in considering the threat of communism, we must take into account this strategy of mass psychological conditioning—the Soviet attempt to monopolize the initiative—the Soviet desire to place free peoples on the defensive—and the Soviet-zone concept of hands off.

ON THE WEST, A THREE-PRONGED ATTACK

The Communists are currently involved in a triple-threat attack on the West. The first wing of this attack is the direct, overt, official action by the Soviet Government. Here we see military, political, diplomatic, and economic weapons employed.

One of the most menacing techniques of this approach—and one which will be with us for a long, long time—is seen in the Communist economic offensive. In this field we find the handmaiden of Communist subversion. Here the target of the Communists is primarily the newly developing nations of the world. These countries offer fertile fields for Communist economic coercion.

Today there are around 2 billion people living in poor, undeveloped areas of Asia, Africa, the Near East, and some of the Americas. Life is at a low economic level. These people have every right to improve their status. They have every right to live in freedom. In their human aspirations they are not different from us. Therefore, there is a terrific pressure for tangible results quickly. The Soviets—and, in fact, the entire Sino-Soviet bloc—are attempting to pass themselves off as the foremost examples of crash economic progress. They are out to get the credit for filling the immediate desires of these newly developing areas.

But—and this is the big hooker—while they are at it, the Communists not only try to assume control of the resources of these countries but also attempt to control the minds and souls of the peoples in the areas. The Communists want nations to become increasingly dependent economically upon the Communist bloc. The stage is then set for ultimate Communist takeover. As it is developing, Afghanistan is one case in point, Finland is another.

After World War II the Soviet Union firmly tied the Finish economy to its own. In 1958, when the Finns began efforts to move closer to the West, the Soviet Union reacted swiftly by canceling orders, cutting off needed petroleum and wheat supplies, and refusing to negotiate further trade agreements.

This economic pressure was buttressed with internal subversion by Finnish Communists. Communist-inspired propaganda, press and radio took hold. As a result, the democratic coalition in Finland was forced to fall. It was replaced by a Government less opposed to Moscow's goals. Just recently, Pravda has begun to denounce Finnish plans for association with the little free-trade area. Also, the Communist Party of Finland, directed from Moscow, has begun to make accusations against the Government, charging President Kekkonen with being involved in a conspiracy aimed at securing membership in an association which would be dominated by the Western Powers.

It will be interesting to see whether further pressure from the Soviet Union will take place to discourage little Finland's agrarian Government from making progress by economic association with areas which are non-bloc-controlled.

This kind of Communist economic machination is clearly representative of the nature of the Communist threat with its ultimate objective of what the Soviets call a world socialist system. This term "socialism" is only a sugar-coated word the Bolsheviks use to describe communism when they do not want to alarm the unwary. In this connection, we find them using recently a new phrase, "the socialist commonwealth of nations." I predict that we are going to see a lot more use of their term "commonwealth." By subtle analogy with the British Commonwealth, the Communists wish to convey that same image of unfettered association, free from any domination. The peoples who may be tempted to participate in the "Soviet Commonwealth" are given the promise of true national independence. But Hungary, Tibet, and others give the lie to this hope.

On the bright side, many of the countries in the Middle East and southeast Asia have begun to appreciate the traplike character of Communist economic and political friendship. Their leaders have begun to speak out and identify communism for what it really is. The Communists have for years been trying to avoid this kind of judgment, justifying and fuzzing up their machinations by offering promises of Utopia—but the question, "For whose benefit?" is increasingly being asked by an awakening world.

We have a recent example of this awakening in the so-called neutralist country of India. In April 1956, the people of the large state of Kerala, in India, elected a Communist state government. But what happened? Less than a month ago the people of this same state demonstrated so violently against the Communist malfeasances, and particularly their efforts to move in and control the free school system, that the Indian Government, already startled by what it had seen in Tibet, found it the better part of wisdom to move in on the Communists.

The central Government dismissed their administration and took over the running of the Kerala state government pending new elections. The ousting of the Communist government has given a serious setback to the Communist Party's prestige throughout India. Most segments of Indian public opinion have applauded the Government's move.

ATTACK NO. 2: UNDERCOVER OPERATIONS

The second wing of the Communist triple-threat attack is seen in their subversive programs. Here I refer to the covert, or undercover, operations of the Communist Party in all countries. This subversive activity is being undertaken on such a wide scale that today it is at least as dangerous as the military threat.

The Communists have developed a network of subversive bases in all major countries of the world. From these bases they are now operating an offensive designed to cut down and overthrow the democratic institutions and governments of the host and neighboring countries. They are operating from these subversive bases without permission of the host country. In spite of this fact, the Communists clamor about American military bases abroad. Our bases are defensive. They are there with the permission of the duly constituted governments of the areas.

Their presence, in many cases, strengthens the economy of the countries in which they are located and certainly strengthens the defenses of these countries. But, by contrast, the subversive bases of communism represent an inherent part of the Communist scheme and, let me reiterate, are on the attack with every means at their disposal. Lest you think this is an overstatement, a hard look at Communist behavior in the countries of our neighbors to the south provides interesting documentation.

The Communists have long interfered in the internal affairs of the Latin American Republics. They have consistently abused diplomatic privileges. In Mexico and Argentina, the Soviet Union has interfered in trade-union activities to a point of offending the national sovereignty of these countries. In these countries the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, through representatives in certain Soviet Embassies, has given guidance and financial support in clandestine manner to the Communist Parties in a host of surrounding countries.

On a regional scale the Communist Party of the Soviet Union has been guiding Latin American Communists in their preparation of a "Congress of Latin American Peoples." The guidance calls for complete concealment of the Communist instigation and initiation of the congress. It provides for the deception of the peoples of Latin America and for the deception of specific patriotic, progressive, non-Communist public figures whom the Communists are seeking to trick into sponsoring the congress. The Communists' aim is to undermine the amity and cooperation of the member-peoples of the Organization of American States, thus weakening the defense of their freedom. This aim of that congress is to be disguised under the wholesome purpose of defending the internal resources of the Latin American countries.

Latin American Communists, in ever-increasing numbers, are being trained in the Soviet Union in the techniques of gaining state power, leading to the establishment of Communist dictatorships. Their training is clandestine from beginning to end. The trainees are aided in obtaining illegal travel documents in defiance of their own and other governments in order to travel to the training sites within the Soviet Union. They are being taught to exploit the honest and legitimate national aspirations of genuine political parties, labor movements, and other democratic institutions.

The Communist Party of the Soviet Union also gives specific direction on what Latin-American Communist Party action should be. For example, the Communist Party of Cuba, called "the Popular Socialist Party," has been given guidance on how to penetrate and exploit the government of Fidel Castro. Primary targets for Communist penetration in Cuba are the agrarian reforms, trade-unions, and the army. These targets of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union are so important that, back in May of this year, they sent under alias to Cuba a Soviet intelligence officer, Vadim Kotchergin, as a member of a Soviet trade-union delegation. His assignment was to give guidance to Cuban Communists. Kotchergin has since returned to Moscow.

MAKING A TOOL OF LABOR

One of the Soviet's primary instruments in Latin America is the Confederation of Workers of Latin America, with headquarters in Mexico. This confederation is the regional liaison bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU), which has headquarters in Prague, but is controlled from Moscow.

Soviet financial aid is given regularly to the Confederation of Workers of Latin America via the World Federation of Trade Unions. The union's officials maintain both open and secret contact with the Soviet Embassy in Mexico City. The union provides trade-union cover—an appearance of legality and legitimacy—for Latin-American Communists in obtaining illegal documentation for travel to Moscow for consultation. The head of the Confederation of Workers of Latin America, Vicente Lombardo Toledano, abuses his diplomatic passport by placing its immunity and privileges at the service of the international Communist movement for clandestine purposes.

While this kind of subversive activity takes place, we find the Soviets piously making overtures of peace toward the legitimate free trade-unions, not only in Latin America but all over the free world. They seek more fraternal exchange between the Communist labor bodies and the organized free trade-unions—all in the interest of peace. But, in responding, consideration must be given to the kind of continuing subversive activity that I have just referred to as taking place in Latin America.

Free men subscribe to the fundamental human rights specified in the United Nations Charter. The Communists do not. In the trade-union field, free unions permit their workers the right of freedom of association and organization, the right of genuine collective bargaining, and the right to strike. The Communists do not. Indeed, their subversive apparatus is diametrically opposed to those freedoms. In the free world, individuals and organizations are permitted to advocate and develop democratic institutions. In the Communist world, this permission is missing.

The Chinese Communists are also showing an increasing interest in Latin-American matters. The Chinese Communists are spreading the concept that China should be the model for social and economic revolution in Latin America. They point out the alleged similarities between the two areas. They are seeking trade and cultural relationships with various Latin-American countries. They are interested in establishing diplomatic relations where possible.

In support of their general programs, the Chinese Communists are engaged in various specific activities in Latin America. They are disseminating propaganda both by mail and by Spanish-language radio programs directed at the area. They are establishing a newspaper in Cuba under the direction of personnel of the New China News Agency sent from China. Other representatives of the New China News Agency, which is an arm of the Chinese Communist Party's propaganda department, have toured various Latin-American countries. Activities in the cultural field are carried on by societies to promote Chinese culture, and these societies are particularly active in Chile, Cuba, Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, and Uruguay.

For leaders of Latin-American Communist parties, the Chinese also have begun offering training courses. If, indeed, the Communists seek the peace they talk about, why is the training of a free-world Communist cadre at the highest party schools in the Soviet Union and in China permitted, encouraged, and subsidized? Why are they planning to expand their already considerable and expensive training programs to embrace every existing Communist Party?

Communist efforts at subversion of lawfully established governments reach out to all countries. They employ a host of methods timed to suit their purpose. Let me select a few examples of going Communist activities which are today sufficiently aggravated to have bubbled to the surface.

In Laos, a small free country in what was formerly known as Indochina, we find Communist subversion, propaganda, penetration, and force. In Iraq, we find Communist subversion, propaganda, penetration, and at least an incitement to murder. In Iran, we find the most vehement of Communist propaganda supporting their subversive campaigns.

Communist propaganda from the Soviet Union has heaped abuse and vilification upon the Government of Iran collectively and upon the Shah of Iran, the Prime Minister, and other Iranian officials. They seek to force Iran into a change of policy. They seek to split Iran away from other nations of the free world with which she has voluntarily alined herself. Iran, on her part, has firmly pointed out that, while desiring to be friendly with the Soviet Union, she has no intention of modifying her association with other free and like-minded nations.

If time permitted I could go on and cite you many other going examples of Communist subversive activities.

ATTACK NO. 3: FRONT ORGANIZATIONS

In addition to the diplomatic, economic, political, and military actions of the Soviet Union and Communist China and the subversive activities of the Communists directed from Moscow and Peiping, there is a third aspect of the Communists' triple-threat attack. This third aspect involves the use of a host of Communist-front organizations.

These fronts are part of the Communist international propaganda and subversive apparatus. They have appealing and irreproachable names, such as the World Peace Council and the World Federation of Trade Unions. Right here in the United States, our own Attorney General's list of subversive organizations contains the names of hundreds of Communist-front organizations. In nearly all other countries of the world, there are comparable organizations which exist to serve the goals of international communism. Soviet leaders are spending, directly or indirectly, hundreds of millions of dollars annually on these Communist-front activities. The technique is to grasp some popular cause and set up a mass public organization ostensibly to promote that cause. Actually, the purpose is to develop political subversion. These fronts are used as a way of recruiting unwitting people of good will and harnessing their idealistic feelings to serve Communist objectives.

WHEN COMMUNISTS RAN INTO TROUBLE

Communist efforts through international front groups to soften up the free world by portraying the Soviets as paragons of peace and friendship do not go unchallenged. Here I am talking about challenging deeds as well as words. A recent example of this is the Seventh World Youth Festival held in Vienna from July 26 through August 4. I am sure that many of you have read about this event.

This was the first time that the Communists have dared to hold their world youth festival outside of the Iron Curtain. They hoped by so doing to establish respectability for the festival. They wanted to demonstrate that they could operate in the free world as readily as behind the Iron Curtain, and they might well have got away with it except for some resolute and clear-eyed persons who exposed the fraudulence of Soviet claims.

Reports show that the Vienna festival was marked by dissension and violence. Many who had come accepting the word of the festival sponsors that this would be opportunity for youth from all over the world to exchange views and improve understanding among people had their eyes opened for them. Free world groups had arranged to distribute books and other literature which are not available behind the Iron Curtain. When they attempted to do so, they were beaten up and their literature was seized and, in one case, even burned. The Communists had to take strenuous, and often crude, measures to see that dissenting views were not permitted expression at the various seminars.

Delegations from the Soviet Union, Communist China, and the satellite countries were subjected to rigid discipline and were closely guarded from free contact with free-world delegates. In fact, they were herded in and out of buses and shuttled from one place to another in most obvious fashion. These things tended to show up the ugliness of the Communists. Certainly the implications of this cannot have been lost on the many persons attending from Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

The people of Austria, and of Vienna itself, were not taken in by the propaganda of the festival organizers. All Austrian youth and student groups other than the Communists protested from the beginning against the holding of the festival in Vienna, and boycotted it. The populace was cool and indifferent to the "circus" taking place in their city, and the newspapers of Vienna gave the festival very little coverage.

The Communists tried to deceive the delegates and the world in many ways. But such tactics backfired. For example, in one case a high official of the ruling party of the Government of Ghana protested vigorously against the use of the flag of his country at the festival. He said that Ghana was not represented as a participant or observer and that the so-called Ghana delegation which marched in the opening parade consisted in fact of Nigerians.

Not the least of the headaches of the festival organizers came from Americans. Throughout the 10-day event, the American delegation of about 350 persons was split. A majority of them protested the rigging under which festival officials refused to accept the results of a democratic vote in the delegation.

The Communists refused to give proper credentials to the duly elected majority. Apparently the festival officials were well aware that this majority was anti-Communist and that it would remain critical of the undemocratic management of the festival. At the end, the suppressed majority issued a statement denouncing the festival "as a tool for the advancement of world communism." According to the New York Times of August 5, the work of this majority rebel faction proved to be a "minor disaster" for the Communist organizers.

A Communist leader has piously said: "It is very good for youth from different countries and of different political convictions to come together. * * * The desire of the youth to meet as often as possible to exchange opinions so as to know and to understand one another better must be welcomed and encouraged in every way." But what happened when people did attempt "to exchange opinions" and to "understand one another better?" The Communist steamroller and goon squads went into operation. In the process the Communist organizers were forced to show their true colors—which are hardly those of peace and friendship.

I could give you many examples of the ways in which the Communists operate. It is clear that their strategy is designed to spread communism throughout the world by any means—moral or immoral, legitimate or illegitimate, overt or covert. They have long-range programs which are tied directly to the Kremlin. The resources they have to work with—political, economic, military, and subversive—are increasingly significant. They do not want hot war with the United States if it is possible to avoid it. Their primary emphasis for the future is in their economic and political subversive activities.

These activities are continuous—regardless of whether we get smiling faces from the Kremlin or ugly scowls, or veiled threats, or missile rattling. Their merry-go-round has made a complete circle. There is always the brass ring for those who want to grab it and get the free ride, but the ride turns out to be costly.

HOW UNITED STATES CAN DEFEND ITSELF

It has not been my purpose—nor has there been time—to include a look at the other side of the coin, that is, what we might and should be doing to overcome this Communist threat. Just let me say that there is another side to the coin, as exemplified by the Vienna festival episode. In the paraphrased words of my chief, Mr. Allen Dulles, who is Director of Central Intelligence:

"Our defense lies not in compromise but in understanding and firmness, in a strong and ready deterrent military power, in the marshaling of our economic assets with those of other free countries of the world to meet Communist methods of economic penetration, and finally, in the unmasking of Communist subversion.

"If they succeed and we fail, it will only be because of our complacency and because they have devoted a far greater share of their power, skill, and resources to our destruction than we have been willing to dedicate to our own preservation."

CENTRAL AMERICAN UNION

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, in an address to the House of Representatives on August 12, 1959, I gave a brief summary of the history of a Central American Federation from its beginning on July 1, 1823 to the present.

It is indeed gratifying that among the communications received about that short statement is a moving letter dated August 20, 1959, from President M. Ydígoras Fuentes of the Republic of Guatemala.

I am sure that all thoughtful Americans, South as well as North, who read the President's letter will appreciate the evident dedication of President Ydígoras Fuentes and other statesmen of Central America for the establishment of their long cherished union.

The letter follows:

GUATEMALA, August 20, 1959.

Congressman D. J. FLOOD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C., U.S.A.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FLOOD: Indeed, the idea of the Central American Federation whose history you so concisely and brilliantly pictured for your fellow Congressmen has never died among our peoples and statesmen and it is only our economic conditions which have been mostly, the unsurpassable barriers to the realization of that great desire ever alive in the heart of true Central American citizens.

That is why, we who are unionists in mind and soul and in a position to contribute with our grain of sand, have fervently advocated to the establishment and development of a common market system among our countries—and farther if possible—in order to reconstruct our broken Federation and to secure the bonds of lasting friendships with other nations.

Through these lines I wish to convey to you my sincerest thanks for mentioning my endeavors in the Congress of the United States of America, and for the courtesy of sending me the clipping of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with your very interesting talk.

Once more, accept my compliments and very cordial regards.

Sincerely,

M. YDÍGORAS FUENTES,
President of the Republic.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SCHERER (at the request of Mr. ROBISON), for today on account of illness in family.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. PORTER, for 30 minutes, tomorrow.

Mr. CURTIN (at the request of Mr. ROBISON) for 10 minutes, on tomorrow, September 10, 1959.

Mr. FLOOD (at the request of Mr. MACK of Illinois), for 10 minutes, on each of four subjects today; to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to extend remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or to revise and extend remarks, was granted to:

Mr. OLIVER and include extraneous matter.

Mr. HECHLER and include extraneous material.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan in two instances and to include certain relevant material.

Mr. BETTS.

Mr. SCHENCK, to revise and extend his remarks on the airport bill and to include extraneous matter and an editorial.

Mr. HÉBERT and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. WRIGHT in three instances and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. DORN of New York (at the request of Mr. ROBISON) and to include extraneous matter.

(At the request of Mr. ASPINALL, and to include extraneous matter, the following:)

Mr. BRADEMAS.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. BURLESON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 9105. An act making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

S. 2081. An act for the relief of Yadwiga Boczar;

S. 2102. An act for the relief of Irene Wladyslawa Burda; and

S. 2238. An act for the relief of Kenzo Hachtmann, a minor.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BURLESON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 9105. An act making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 51 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, September 10, 1959, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1364. A letter from the Administrator, Small Business Administration, transmitting a report reflecting estimated obligations by principal activities of the Small Business Administration for the period January 1 through June 30, 1959, pursuant to the Small Business Act of 1958; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1365. A letter from the Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, U.S. Department of Justice, relative to the cases of Gloria E. Wendling de Bado Herran A-10583005 and Carlos Kenneth Bado A-10583014 and requesting that they be withdrawn from those before the Congress and returned to the jurisdiction of this Service; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. ASPINALL: Committee of conference. S. 2181. An act to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (Rept. No. 1174). Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARING:

H.R. 9156. A bill to establish the Great Basin National Park, in Nevada, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. HIESTAND:

H.R. 9157. A bill to amend title 13 of the United States Code to provide for the collection and publication of foreign commerce and trade statistics and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. RIVERS of Alaska:

H.R. 9158. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to provide for participation of Federal-aid highway funds in the construction of approach roads to ferry facilities on the Federal-aid systems; to the Committee on Public Works.

By Mr. ADDONIZIO:

H.R. 9159. A bill to provide for the holding of public hearings in connection with the approval by the Comptroller of the Currency of the establishment of new national banks or national bank branches and for judicial review; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H.R. 9160. A bill to provide for a more varied representation of the country's banking interests on the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COFFIN:

H.R. 9161. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide funds for educational purposes by providing increased incentives for private giving through the allowance of a tax credit for charitable contributions to institutions of higher education; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILSON:

H.R. 9162. A bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, insofar as it applies to Customs District 25, to increase from $10 to $30 the maximum amount of administrative exemption from customs duties (on articles for personal or household use) which is available to individuals who return from visits to foreign countries before they can qualify for the regular statutory exemption; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRIFFIN (by request):

H. Con. Res. 436. Concurrent resolution authorizing and requesting the President to proclaim a Good Neighbor Day during 1959; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAWSON:

H. Res. 381. Resolution providing for printing of additional copies of House Report 1121; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. HIESTAND:

H. Res. 382. Resolution concerning the desirability of holding an international exposition in the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

H. Res. 383. Resolution concerning the desirability of holding an international exposition in the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOWNING:

H.R. 9163. A bill for the relief of Matsuyo Ishida Montgomery; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FARBSTEIN:
H.R. 9164. A bill for the relief of Zlatko Brnabich; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PROKOP:
H.R. 9165. A bill for the relief of Aurora Giordano; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROGERS of Colorado:
H.R. 9166. A bill for the relief of Rosetta Sutton Roberts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

By Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey:
H.R. 9168. A bill for the relief of Carmina Paolina Sabatucci; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILSON:
H.R. 9169. A bill for the relief of Diomey S. Pondoc; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONTE:
H.R. 9170. A bill for the relief of John J. Finn, Jr.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FINO:
H.R. 9171. A bill for the relief of Cassim Mohammed Jadwat; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WALTER:
H. Res. 384. Resolution opposing the granting of permanent residence in the United States to Fu Sheng Cheng and Fu-Mei Lin; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

276. The SPEAKER presented a petition of Jodie Aldridge, Nashville, Tenn., respectfully requesting that the law be repealed that created the Civil Rights Commission, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Our New Labor Law: What It Is and How It Came About

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the remedial labor legislation recently enacted was designed to and will first, to a great extent, protect the right of union members to participate in union policy. To know for what purpose the dues and special assessments exacted from them through the checkoff are spent. It will give them a greater opportunity to elect union officials and, thereafter, control their activities.

Second. It will in certain circumstances permit the union shop which compels the applicant for a job to join the union, pay initiation fees, and dues.

Third. It will somewhat limit secondary boycotts, picketing to force employees to join unions.

Fourth. It supplements the Hobbs amendment to the Anti-Racketeering Act, which, if properly enforced, will prevent extortion and racketeering.

It does not make antitrust and monopoly laws applicable to union activities. This is necessary if nationwide strikes and tieups are to be prevented.

It fails to prevent strikes in public utilities, which in the past have, and in the future may, prevent the supply of necessities such as light, water, food to whole communities.

It fails to prevent forcing employees to make involuntary contributions for the establishment of policies to which they are opposed.

Overall, it is a good bill and will work out for the benefit of practically everyone.

WHO FORCED ITS ENACTMENT?

An amusing situation has come about because of the effort of so many to claim credit for the law's enactment.

In truth and in fact, as everyone familiar with the situation knows, we now have the law on the books because the people, learning through the publicity given the McClellan committee's hearings so much of what has been happening, and many, finally realizing how they were adversely affected, demanded that their representatives provide a remedy.

We have the law today because of aroused public sentiment. The result is very encouraging because it shows that, when the people really take an interest in their Government and insist, their representatives get up into the collar and do what the home folks want.

West Virginia Is Getting Shortchanged

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KEN HECHLER
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. HECHLER. Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page 18661, I furnished State-by-State figures on employees of the Department of Commerce, relating them to the population of each of the 50 States in the Union. This record, compiled from official figures supplied by the Department of Commerce itself, reveals that my State of West Virginia ranks absolutely last in the relationship of Commerce Department employees to State population.

We have only 37 employees of the great Department of Commerce within our State, Mr. Speaker—a mere 37 out of a department with some 25,000 employees of whom almost two-thirds are located outside of the District of Columbia and within the 50 States.

Today, one out of every eight able-bodied workers in West Virginia is unemployed. There is no blinking at this stark fact. There are those who have accused me of advertising West Virginia in an adverse light for bringing out this fact, but neither the State of West Virginia nor the Nation can afford to stick its head into the sand and wish the problem would go away. Of course, the solution is to attract more and diversified industries, and believe me we have been making some fine progress along these lines in recent years: the construction and expansion of the Kaiser Aluminum plant at Ravenswood, the Goodyear plant at Apple Grove, and the projected Montocatini Chemical plant in Wayne County, to mention only a few.

But industry does not automatically settle and build plants on those tracts best suited for their products, labor supply, transportation, and resources. Frequently the assistance of Federal officials, working in conjunction with State and local leaders, cause an industry to decide on one spot rather than another. Now I submit that the Department of Commerce, by its prejudice against West Virginia in the number of its employees in the State, is loading the dice against West Virginia in industrial development.

The Department of Commerce maintains a Business and Defense Services Administration with field offices in 33 States. Not one of these 33 offices is located in the State of West Virginia, which sorely needs an office of this nature. Huntington, W. Va.—with a population of 86,353 according to the 1950 census—would be the ideal location for such a field office. Let us examine some of the cities in which these 33 field offices have been located. Perhaps these cities have been selected on account of the size of the city. If this be the case, then why is one of the 33 field offices located in Greensboro, N.C., with a population of 74,389 according to the last census? Or Cheyenne, Wyo., with a population of 31,935? Or Charleston, S.C., with a population of 70,174? Or Reno, Nev., with a population of 32,497? Each of these cities mentioned is exceeded by Huntington, W. Va., in population; yet Huntington and the entire State of West Virginia are deprived of a single field office. This further weights the scales of disadvantage against West Virginia when it comes for assistance in business development.

It is all very well for people to say: "All business development depends ultimately on community initiative." Of course community initiative is the most important single factor, and no community can attract and foster industrial development if its schools, roads, resources, and leadership are inferior. But when you do have a high-spirited community, with lots of able people, and which after years of work has made the community and its resources highly attractive, why handicap them because they are in a State to which the Department of Commerce gives an absolute minimum of assistance?

It seems to me that from the standpoint of improving the national economy, the Department of Commerce should not concentrate on making wealthy States wealthier, but should try to be of greater assistance to those States like West Virginia where the potentialities for future industrial development are greatest, and where the labor supply is high and readily available. Yet what do these 37 employees of the Department of Commerce in West Virginia do? They are employed by the Bureau of Public Roads in Charleston, and the Weather Bureau in Charleston, Huntington, and Parkersburg. This is small comfort for a State working hard against odds to develop and expand its industry.

Not long ago, my hometown of Huntington, W. Va., was selected by an expert jury as an All-America City. Huntington worked for this award. Its citizens sacrificed a great deal to build up the city to meet higher standards—economic, political, and cultural. The city voted special levies to improve its services to all the people. It built a fine new airport with the aid of individual and community contributions. Yet the specter of unemployment still stalked the city, and it worked hard to attract new industry and provide job opportunities for its younger people. Of what earthly justification is all of this blood, sweat and tears if the Federal Government turns around and uses the money of the taxpayers of West Virginia to help other and richer States expand their industries? I say, Mr. Speaker, that is not only downright unfair but it is high time we blow the whistle on that kind of misapplication of the people's money.

Let us look at this whole problem in perspective and in a constructive spirit, Mr. Speaker. To develop the Nation's economy to make a stronger America, do not throw the weight of the Federal Government against certain States and areas like West Virginia where there is a good labor supply, natural resources, transportation, and markets.

Give West Virginia an even break—that is all we ask. Stop making us cover 25 yards instead of 10 when we make a first down.

Report to the People of the 12th Congressional District of New York

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCIS E. DORN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. DORN of New York. Mr. Speaker, each year it has been my custom to submit to the people of the 12th Congressional District of New York, whom I have the honor to serve, a questionnaire setting forth various questions which will be considered by the Congress of the United States in its deliberations.

I appreciate the fine response to the questionnaire and am gratified to say that the people of the 12th Congressional District of New York are intensely interested in their Government and are willing to take time to participate in it by expressing their opinions and advice to their Representative in the Congress.

The following is the questionnaire and the results in percentages:

[In percent]

	Yes	No	No opinion
1. Do you approve of the President's policy of moderate government?	71	18	11
If "no" should he turn to the right (10 percent), left (6 percent), no opinion (84 percent).
2. Do you favor a continuation of our present foreign policy?	68	21	11
(a) Continuing foreign military aid?	76	15	9
(b) Continuing foreign economic aid?	66	26	8
(c) Maintaining our forces in Berlin?	83	10	7
(d) Our defense of Quemoy and Matsu?	70	20	10
(e) Our defense of Formosa?	78	13	9
3. Do you favor ending of nuclear bomb tests?	40	53	7
4. Do you believe that past "summit meetings" have served the best interests of the United States?	31	56	13
Do you favor:
5. Reduction of the Federal debt before reducing taxes?	78	18	7
6. Reduction in nondefense Government spending if existing functions are curtailed?	64	29	7
If "yes" would you suggest cutting foreign aid (16 percent), farm subsidies (28 percent), public works (14 percent), highways (10 percent), veterans' aid (13 percent), slum clearance (11 percent), others (8 percent).
7. Raising minimum wage to $1.25 per hour?	67	26	7
8. Requiring registration of pension and welfare funds of labor unions and disclosure of financial transactions involving them?	93	4	3
9. The enactment of a strong civil rights program to enforce the voting rights of all citizens?	80	13	7
10. Making it a Federal crime to bomb churches, synagogues, or schools?	89	8	3
11. Further reduction in the age at which persons shall be eligible for social security benefits?	60	37	3
12. An increase in social security benefits?	70	26	4
13. Direct Federal grants to States for education?	56	38	6
14. More liberal credit and lower interest rates for small business?	77	17	6

The response to the questionnaire by thousands of residents of our district has been of great assistance to me in carrying out their wishes. Many persons who answered the questions also submitted comments on other issues and suggestions for solutions to some of the problems of the day.

They are the people who elected me to represent them in the Congress of the United States. If there is any way in which I can be of service to them I hope they will not hesitate to call upon me. During recess both my Washington and Brooklyn offices remain open. I have a competent staff and my services and theirs are available to my constituents. I want them to know that even when Congress is not in session I am on the job.

The Labor Reform Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES C. OLIVER
OF MAINE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, in voting against the Landrum-Griffin so-called labor reform bill and the 90 percent Landrum-Griffin conference agreement, I voted to prevent retrogressive developments in the trade union movement which are certain to cause more far-reaching adverse results to the American economy and democracy, itself, than have been disclosed by the McClellan committee, in its many months of antiracketeering investigations.

It seems to me almost inevitable under the provisions of this law, that the clean, legitimate small unions of this Nation will have no future because of the roadblocks against their growth and expansion, written into this law. Expensive legal and accounting requirements will force these unions to merge or to become absorbed by the powerful and big international organizations.

It also seems inevitable that the dedicated, honest leaders of small unions will be forced out of office by the persecution and prosecution with criminal sanctions which are certain to stem from planned incidents in union meetings by stooges of management, drunks, and agitators, including Communists; such a vacuum in leadership will be filled by racketeers and hoodlums, the very same type of leadership which this law is supposed to destroy. A few examples of such probable incidents are as follows:

First. One member, among hundreds, is not given the floor at a union meeting because the chair understood the debate to be closed; the speaker had exhausted his time; or the speaker acted in a disorderly fashion; or for a dozen other reasons which are well-founded, but possibly illegal under the statute.

Second. One member, among hundreds, did not receive adequate notice of a union election, due to a misaddressed envelope.

Third. Union dues are increased, pursuant to arrangements for a secret ballot election, but the ballot of one member among hundreds, was marked in an open area where it was observed by others.

Fourth. A hand was raised to nominate a local union officer at a local union meeting, but the chair overlooked it.

Fifth. A charge, upon which a member is disciplined, after due notice and a fair hearing, is held not to be as specific as some judge may subsequently determine.

Sixth. The involved, intricate and confusing internal government and financial reports which the officers—most of whom are unschooled as well as unpaid—are required to file, prove to be inaccurate, due perhaps to an error in arithmetic.

It, furthermore, seems inevitable to me that any such developments, involving the destruction of clean leadership and the absorption of small unions by large powerful unions will naturally result in the next attack, by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and National Manufacturers Association on the trade union movement, being directed against the bigness of unions. This attack, after sufficient public demand has been generated, will have antitrust controls over labor as its goal. Another objective already being discussed by President Canham of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce is a so-called national right-to-work law.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the pattern is clearly indicated. The great industrial and financial giants of America are determined to be the political giants, as well. They will, then, have the package, all wrapped up. Complete control of America by the forces of conservatism and even reactionaryism will be the inevitable result of the weakening of trade unionism.

To document my viewpoint with regard to this detrimental trend for small unions, Mr. Speaker, I am including in my remarks the following newspaper story by Wilfrid C. Rodgers in the Boston Daily Globe of September 7, 1959:

[From the Boston Daily Globe, Sept. 7, 1959]

LABOR REFORM BILL HIKES COSTS OF RUNNING UNIONS—MEMBERS GET MORE SAY BUT MUST PAY

(By Wilfrid C. Rodgers)

Passage of the labor reform bill by Congress will have two almost immediate effects on individual union members:

1. Gives them a bigger voice in union affairs.

2. Makes bigger dues almost automatic in many unions.

The bigger voice in union affairs was given members by legislative law in an effort to get rid of crooks in the labor movement.

The bigger dues will be assessed on members because of an economic law—the labor bill pushes up the cost of doing business for unions and the members have to pay these costs through dues.

Why the increased costs for unions?

Every time the Federal Government passes labor relations laws it costs unions more to operate.

It started for most unions with passage of the Wagner Act. There were no complaints from union officials on this score, however, because to them the Wagner Act was the "magna carta of labor."

It opened a whole new field of organizing and brought in new union members by the thousands.

It also opened a new legal field for lawyers—labor relations.

Until the Wagner Act, the Nation's labor laws depended upon what State you were in. The State courts were supreme.

A strike declared legal by a court in New York could well be—and often was—declared illegal in Massachusetts.

In effect, with the passage of the Wagner Act, the Federal Government said to the States:

"When it comes to interstate commerce we'll make the laws on labor relations and enforce them. You keep your hands off."

This was the way things operated during the New Deal and through much of the Truman administration.

The National Labor Relations Board administered the Wagner Act with appeals from its decisions going to the Supreme Court.

Then came the Taft-Hartley Act.

One Boston labor leader sums it up this way:

"The Wagner Act meant a union had to have a lawyer. The Taft-Hartley meant you had to have two. And the labor reform bill means we'll have to have three lawyers and a corps of certified public accountants."

The labor reform bill now has placed a large segment of labor relations cases back in the hands of State courts or State administrative boards.

The reason for this was the so-called no man's land.

At first the NLRB took jurisdiction over any firm that was even closely connected to interstate commerce.

If the firm, its products or its raw materials crossed State lines, the NLRB took charge.

Then business became heavy. The NLRB complained it couldn't carry the entire load. It set up standards, usually stating that only firms doing a certain amount of gross business interstate, were eligible to use the NLRB.

This reduced the amount of work for the NLRB but meant chaos for some small businesses and small unions.

STATES COULDN'T ACT

Because the Wagner Act said the Federal Government would handle the interstate commerce disputes, the Supreme Court held that even if the NLRB declined jurisdiction, State courts or State administrative bodies couldn't touch the disputes.

The labor reform bill now says that if the NLRB declines to handle the case, the firms or unions involved can go into the State courts.

The rub comes—so far as labor is concerned—when the labor reform bill says that State law will govern the State court in acting on the cases.

State courts have been mostly out of the labor relations business since New Deal days. Except for a small handful of States, no attempt has been made by legislatures to keep State laws up to date on labor relations.

Why should they, when labor relations mostly was in the hands of the Federal Government?

BABY WAGNER ACT

In Massachusetts there exists a Baby Wagner Act. This created a State labor board which did for intrastate business what the NLRB did for interstate business.

Now the State labor board will have jurisdiction over those cases turned down by the NLRB. (This board was almost eliminated during the budget-cutting sessions of the legislature on the grounds it didn't have enough business to do.)

In Maine, however, there is no State labor board, so cases declined by the NLRB in that State will be thrown into the State courts.

Already unions and management are preparing for legislative tugs of war over this issue.

The unions will press for State labor boards where they don't exist and State statutes governing labor relations.

To comply with the financial reporting provisions of the labor reform bill, unions will have to spend money for certified public accountants. (Many already do.)

The touchy part of this provision of the bill, to labor leaders, is that if the financial reports aren't correct the union officers can be thrown into jail.

SMALL UNIONS AFFECTED

Since small unions—with less than 300 members—aren't exempt from these reporting provisions, union leaders anticipate trouble getting members to run for office.

Most of these officers receive little if any pay; most aren't experienced in making financial reports.

To induce members to run for office, some locals may have to make the position salaried.

Other locals may well be forced into merging with other small locals in their area who belong to the same international.

In this manner, two, three, or even four small locals could merge into one and pay but one bill for lawyers and accountants rather than three or four such bills.

Trouble is that some of the very men the labor reform bill aims at getting out of the labor movement, such as James R. Hoffa, have been trying to merge these small locals for years without too much success.

Dumping three small locals—that the international doesn't control—into one big local that it does, resulted in many abuses the labor reform bill hoped to eliminate.

Proponents of the bill, however, hope that giving individual members a bigger voice in union affairs they will use it and rid labor of some of the corruption exposed by the McClellan committee.

Padre Island, Tex.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LYNDON B. JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, in recent years there has been increasing concern at the rapid rate at which our Nation's natural shoreline areas have been vanishing.

One of the greatest of these areas, embracing the longest undeveloped shorelines area in the United States, is Padre Island which stretches for 117 miles along Texas gulf coast.

In an effort to assure timely action by the Federal Government in preserving this priceless heritage for the public good, I recently joined with my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] and two able Members of the Texas delegation in the House [Mr. KILGORE and Mr. YOUNG] in addressing letters to the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, as well as the Honorable Fred A. Seaton, Secretary of the Interior.

In the interest of apprising others in the great potential of Padre Island, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that both these letters be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 2, 1959.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you are well aware there has been increasing concern in recent years over the rapid rate at which the natural shoreline areas of the United States have been vanishing. It is generally recognized that unless the Federal Government acts soon to preserve for the American people some of the few remaining areas of shoreline wilderness, this aspect of our heritage will have disappeared forever.

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs currently has under consideration a number of bills which would authorize the establishment of shoreline park areas, including S. 4 introduced by Senator YARBOROUGH, which would specifically authorize the establishment of a national park at Padre Island, Tex. Other bills would authorize the acquisition of shoreline areas, and though they are broad enough in scope to permit development at Padre Island, its selection would not be assured under the terms of these bills.

The purpose of this letter is to urge your committee to conduct hearings on the question of establishing a national shoreline area on Padre Island and to report to the Senate legislation which would insure the preservation of this natural wonder. Padre Island, stretching 117 miles along the Texas gulf coast, is the longest remaining undeveloped beach area in the Nation. Here at Padre Island the United States has its last opportunity to preserve a substantial length of beach area in its natural state.

The National Park Service has conducted a full investigation of the potentialities of Padre Island, and both the Park Service and the Interior Department's Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings, and Monuments have recognized the opportunity at Padre Island and have strongly recommended the establishment of a national shoreline area here. If Padre Island is to be preserved for future public use and enjoyment, action must be taken soon. Otherwise, the island will follow other shoreline areas into conventional commercial beach development.

We believe that the Congress must enact authorizing legislation soon if this beautiful wilderness is to be preserved. If at all possible, Congress should act on the matter next year. Therefore, we respectfully request that your committee hold hearings on this question between the adjournment of the present session of Congress and the commencement of the next session. If the committee does hold these hearings we recommend that the committee visit the area for on-the-spot hearings in order that its members will personally appreciate the wonders of nature found at Padre Island.

We are most anxious that the Congress act on this matter soon, and we know that if the members of your committee would visit Padre Island and report their impressions to the Senate, the early establishment of a national shoreline area at Padre Island would be assured.

Sincerely,

LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
U.S. Senator.
RALPH YARBOROUGH,
U.S. Senator.
JOE M. KILGORE,
Member of Congress.
JOHN YOUNG,
Member of Congress.

U.S. SENATE,
OFFICE OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER,
Washington, D.C., September 2, 1959.

Hon. FRED A. SEATON,
Secretary of the Interior, Interior Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On April 27, 1959, you transmitted to each of us a copy of a field report by the National Park Service on the proposal to establish a national shoreline area on Padre Island, Tex.

We were and are extremely impressed with this report. It is apparent that the National Park Service's investigation of the potentialities of Padre Island as a shoreline area was extremely thorough, and the need for immediate action to preserve this beautiful area for the people of America is fully demonstrated by this report.

Both the National Park Service and the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments have recommended the establishment of a national shoreline area on Padre Island. But to our knowledge the Interior Department has not approved this proposal nor has the Department recommended that the Congress enact legislation which would insure that a national shoreline area be established on Padre Island.

This is one of the Nation's last opportunities to preserve a substantial segment of our shoreline in its wilderness state. Padre Island, stretching 117 miles along the Texas gulf coast, embraces the longest undeveloped beach remaining in America. Thousands of acres of Padre Island are still in a natural state providing many miles of spacious beaches and lovely dunes. If these can be preserved, American families in the future will be assured of the opportunity to enjoy the natural beauty of the island as well as the recreational benefits the wonderful Padre Island beaches can bring. But if this is to come about, action must be taken now. Otherwise, the opportunity will have been lost, and the natural beauty of Padre Island will have given way to conventional commercial beach uses.

We strongly urge you to take immediate action to implement the recommendations of the National Park Service and the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments that a national shoreline area be established on Padre Island. We ask that Padre Island be officially designated by the Department of the Interior as a suitable location for such a national shoreline area, and that the Department immediately recommend to the Congress that it enact legislation which will specifically authorize the establishment of a national shoreline area on Padre Island.

Sincerely,

LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
U.S. Senator.
JOE M. KILGORE,
Member of Congress.
RALPH YARBOROUGH,
U.S. Senator.
JOHN YOUNG,
Member of Congress.

Systematic Retirement of the National Debt

OF
HON. JIM WRIGHT
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the National Federation of Independent Business has polled its entire membership on my bill creating a systematic retirement of the national debt. This poll included more than 130,000 independent businessmen all over the Nation, and the result of the poll shows an overwhelming 86 percent in favor of the bill.

Only 10 percent expressed doubt about the efficacy of the proposition and 4 percent expressed no opinion.

This overwhelming endorsement resulting from this actual poll of small businessmen throughout the Nation corresponds with the general enthusiasm I have encountered in the public at large in favor of this proposal to retire the national debt on a systematic basis.

Another Korea?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the folly of surrendering our independence to any international organization is becoming increasingly obvious.

Possibly no one could conceive of a finer thought or program than that of bringing permanent peace to the world, improving the living conditions of all people wherever found, bringing prosperity and security to everyone. That might be the thought which took us into United Nations, NATO, and other international organizations.

The idea back of our entanglement in foreign affairs, and you will recall that Washington warned against it, may be somewhat similar to that entertained by those who attempted to build the tower of Babel. That failed, we are told, because of the confusion of tongues.

Since then human nature has remained much the same.

A "ONE WORLD ORGANIZATION"

We now find that, by joining United Nations and NATO, we are committed to a policy, wherever in the world what we are pleased to call a free nation is invaded or imposed upon by the Communists, of sending not only money and supplies, but our young men to fight in a war in which we are not directly interested.

Because of our previous commitments to our so-called allies, we became involved in Korea, and the cost in lives and suffering was enormous.

An extremely unfortunate result of our joining these foreign organizations is that so far, and evidently in the future, we—our people—will be forced to bear an undue part of the cost, both in treasure and in lives.

It is extremely difficult for the young women and the young men of America of today to see why they should be forced into the armed services, into a program of intensive training and ultimately to fight and die at the call of some foreign group which has no real interest in the future of our country.

Today, whether our young men and, perhaps, our young women, because of our membership in U.N. are taken from their homes and sent to fight in Laos depends upon what the Security Council of the United Nations decides. For years, we have poured millions into Laos.

We have sent billions upon billions taken from our taxpayers to bolster not only the independence and integrity of other countries, but to make them active and efficient competitors of our industry.

Certainly, we believe in charity, in being helpful, and that has been our record since the beginning of our Nation, but, in my judgment, of far more importance is a policy which will enable us to remain independent, in control of our own destiny, to make secure the future of our own people.

Why not do a little serious thinking on the issue of how far can we weaken ourselves, and are we justified in imposing burdens upon our own folks to aid others?

The present demand is that, if we are better acquainted with the people of other nations, there will be less contention. Perhaps so. But history shows that the nations of the Old World—neighbors, it might be said—have always been on the verge of war with each other.

Helpful to others? Yes. But not at the cost of our own independence.

Prohibition's Ally

OF

HON. F. EDWARD HÉBERT

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, at the very outset of these remarks I want to get one thing straight—I am not a prohibitionist.

Perhaps it is not necessary for me to reaffirm my strong antiprohibition sentiments but I wanted to repeat them to make certain that what I am going to say will not be distorted or misinterpreted. It is because I am so strongly opposed to prohibition that I am compelled to bring to the attention of the House the things which I am going to say as a warning not to allow prohibition to sneak up on us on our blind side as it did once before.

There were those before the advent of the "noble experiment" who thought it couldn't happen, but it did happen.

There are those now who think that prohibition cannot happen again, but it can if those of us who are so strong against it do not recognize what is going on about us and do something about it.

When Oklahoma recently went wet it was pointed out that only one State in the Union, Mississippi, remained "legally dry."

A real eye opener would be to tabulate the counties of the several States and find out how many are "legally dry" especially in some recognized wet States and have become so since the repeal of prohibition.

The prohibitionists have never ceased their fight to return this country to the dry calendar. They are still about their business and are taking every advantage of situations and conditions which will lend themselves to an argument in favor of the return of prohibition, first on a local option basis and then on a nationwide scale.

Let us look the facts right straight in the eye.

I, personally, make no secret of the fact that I consider myself a pretty fair "country two-fisted drinker" and have demonstrated it on many an occasion through the years. The fact that I can hold my own is something with which I had nothing to do. I just happened to be born that way. I am not allergic to alcohol but there are many things to which I am allergic and to which other people are not allergic.

Some people are allergic to the effects of one of the greatest miracle drugs of our times—penicillin. They had nothing to do with it, they were born that way.

Some people are allergic to dust through no fault of their own; others to weeds or grass or vegetables.

And some people are simply allergic to alcohol.

Let us be sensible about this whole business and face the facts of life and do something realistic about it.

Recent developments here in the District of Columbia cause me to wonder whether the words of an old epigram of unknown authorship which reads "God looks after fools, drunkards, and the United States" are being taken too literally. My particular concern at this moment is with the measures which are being taken in the District to effect the scientific treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics. Some of you will recall that I was the author of a bill to establish an alcoholic clinic in the District of Columbia to do something to help and rehabilitate excessive and compulsive drinkers here in Washington. This bill—Public Law 347—was approved by the 80th Congress on August 4, 1947. Now, after nearly 12 years have passed, I am dismayed to find that we are still a long way from accomplishing the purposes of this act which had the unanimous approval of the Congress. I beg your indulgence for a few moments to bring you up to date on the problem of alcoholism generally and specifically in the District of Columbia; to tell you something about the shortcomings and weaknesses in the District program for the alleviation of alcoholism, and to outline for you some further steps which must be taken to strengthen the alcoholic rehabilitation program and increase its effectiveness.

In spite of the fact that there is some lack of agreement as to the exact size and nature of the problem of alcoholism no one disagrees that it is a serious problem here and elsewhere in the United States. Some consider it a sin, others a vice, and there are those who think of it as a disease or a symptom of a disease. In some circles there is no distinction made between so called social drinking on the one hand and outright "alcoholism" on the other. Most people agree that there are "problem drinkers." The more precise definition of such individuals in terms of the psychiatrists and the behavior scientists is a person who has a chronic behavioral disorder manifested by repeated drinking of alcoholic beverages in excess of his dietary needs and the social standards of the community and to an extent that interferes with the drinker's health or his social or economic functioning.

Applying a definition of this kind, it has been estimated that there are nearly 5 million alcoholics in the United States, only a small proportion of which are found on skid row. For instance, it has been estimated that there are 1½ million alcoholics employed in business and industry. It has been estimated that alcoholism results in an annual economic loss to industry of $1 billion through accidents, work spoilage, and absenteeism. In the District of Columbia it is said that there are nearly 50,000 alcoholics, for an average of 7.8 percent of every 100,000 adults. It has been definitely proven that the sale of alcohol in the District of Columbia is over twice the amount per capita as elsewhere in the country. Here it is 4.6 gallons per capita per year. In the country as a whole it is less than 2 gallons. These are some of the facts which have caused medical authorities to recognize alcoholism as a major public health problem.

Happily, experience has shown that alcoholics can be helped and rehabilitated. The integration of scientific knowledge and treatment techniques into community programs offers a means of controlling and preventing this devastating condition. During the past 15 years, 38 States and the District of Columbia have enacted legislation authorizing specific programs on alcoholism and establishing provisions to attack the problem through research, treatment, and education. Thirty-two of these programs have specific services for treatment and rehabilitation, and the District of Columbia is among these. These programs operate a total of 122 alcoholic clinics. In 1956 these agencies expended over $3 million on a total of nearly 23,000 cases. Unfortunately, many programs have been hampered by inadequate funds.

Now, let us take a brief look at the alcoholism picture here in the District. More than 1,600 chronic alcoholics are admitted to the psychiatric service of the District of Columbia General Hospital each year. These patients remained in the hospital for an average period of three days. Each year, about 1,000 alcoholics voluntarily share the limited resources at the Alcoholic Rehabilitation Clinic which is operated by the Department of Public Health. Perhaps the most grievous figure is that of the number of persons who are arrested by the Metropolitan police for intoxication. For instance, in the year 1956 there were 40,000 arrests for intoxication, 16,000 of which resulted in prison commitment. Consider for a moment that the average daily drunk population in the District prisons exceeds 1,200.

I have it on good authority that if one totals up the cost of handling chronic alcoholics by police, courts, prisons, the Clinic and hospitals, in the District, it is found to be nearly $2 million a year. The saddest part of the whole business is the inadequacy of present methods. Obviously, a program which spends so much on arresting and jailing alcoholics offers little to the so-called "social alcoholic" who, when arrested, ordinarly forfeits collateral and is released to his family, going unnoticed until he is again arrested. By the same token, a program of this kind has little to offer the "skid row chronic alcoholic" who has no home, family or other social ties in the community and whose rehabilitation requires intensive treatment rather than imprisonment. As presently managed in the District, alcoholism results in overworked police and courts, overcrowded prisons, and only very limited treatment and rehabilitation. There is no better indicator of the ineffectiveness of the program than the high rate of recidivism among those arrested for intoxication. One study showed that 68 percent of those arrested were repeaters, many having a record of 12 prior arrests for the same offense.

Unfortunately, very little has been done to reverse the growing trend of drunk arrests so that the problem of alcoholism in the District continues relatively unabated. All of this is a source of grave personal disappointment to me since I had high hopes that the passage of Public Law 347 would offer some relief from this unsatisfactory situation. You will recall that this act provided that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be authorized and directed to establish clinic and hospital facilities for the treatment and study of chronic alcoholics who become known to the Municipal Court for the District of Columbia. As originally conceived, the alcoholic clinic established by this act was to have resources and personnel to enable it to carry on an effective treatment, rehabilitation and education program, and to permit it to effect close liaison with the courts, hospitals and other agencies concerned with the management of alcoholism. The act stipulated that 10 percent of the annual fees for licenses for the manufacture or sale of alcoholic beverages were to be permanently appropriated to carry out the purposes of the act.

Now I must report to you the sad fact that we have fallen far short of realizing the constructive and vitally important aims of the act. For some time now, the Alcoholic Rehabilitation Clinic, which is the keystone of the program, has been severely handicapped by lack of funds and personnel. Although the 1958 annual report of Public Health Service Advisory Council for the District of Columbia indicates death rates from cirrhosis of the liver—which is correlated with alcoholism—was much higher than for several diseases including tuberculosis, the investment of funds for combating alcoholism remains pitifully small compared with money spent on these other ailments. The clinic program, which opened in 1950, with a budget in the neighborhood of $100,000 has subsequently had its funds drastically reduced when the portion of the license fees allotted for its operation was cut to 6 percent.

Although more than $10 million was collected in taxes on liquor in 1958 in the District of Columbia, less than $70,000 was devoted to salvaging the victims of alcoholism through the clinic program. It seems almost inconceivable to me that an alert Board of Commissioners and the public could have permitted this to have happened. I am even more concerned about the apparent apathy which permits this most unsatisfactory arrangement to continue. I ask you, How may a program of this kind be expected to grow and increase in effectiveness when its appropriations are so drastically reduced?

Let me tell you how this has affected the staffing pattern at the Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center. I am advised that its full-time staff now consists of two psychiatrists, three social workers, three clerks, and one psychologist. Physical examinations are conducted by a physician who visits the clinic on a part-time basis. Since there is no provision for an administrative officer, one of the full-time psychiatrists must devote a good portion of his time to the purely administrative responsibilities of the clinic. In addition, the clinic does not have any health educator on its staff nor does it have any nurses or occupational therapists.

It is only through the dedicated spirit of this limited staff that any good results are obtained with the thousand or so patients seen annually by the clinic. To give you an idea of the kind of results obtained at the clinic, I would like to tell you about one of their cases. This man, who voluntarily applied for treatment, was 40 years old at the time of his admission. He was married and had a young son. Employed as a taxi operator, this man was known to be an intelligent and capable person who was strongly critical of himself because of his lack of achievement. His drinking began as a teenager and he observed that it helped him to overcome his timidity when with other people. By the age of 29 he had had an episode of delirium tremens during which he attempted suicide. When he came to the clinic, he had reached the point that he was unable to control his drinking which caused him to be incapable of working nearly a third of the time. In spite of his wife's effort to supplement the family income, they were hard pressed to meet their obligations.

At the clinic, this man participated in group therapy sessions and also underwent treatment with the drug antabuse. Although he showed some improvement under these treatments, he did not attain continuing sobriety until he was placed under individual psychiatric treatment. This treatment enabled him to gain a better understanding of himself, enhancing his confidence in himself and enabling him to deal with his underlying fears and anxieties without returning to the excessive use of alcohol. The clinic staff points with pride to the fact that this man has now remained completely sober for the past 5½ years. His homelife with his family is greatly improved and he is employing his leisure time in constructive activities. His wife is grateful to the clinic for their help and the patient is finding new happiness in his increased self-esteem and self-confidence.

It should be readily apparent that increasing the number of psychiatrists, psychologists, and social workers will permit the treatment activities to be expanded and will also permit more intensive efforts with those who come to the clinic for help. It is doubtful that the clinic will accomplish much in the way of education and the promotion of temperance until at least one health educator is placed on the staff.

But these are only some of the immediate needs of the program. In addition, the inpatient hospital facilities for alcoholics must be expanded. The present practice of hospitalizing alcoholics for a brief 5-day-or-so drying-out period and then sending them out into the streets without any followup accomplishes very little in the way of rehabilitation. Expansion of the clinic staff and facilities would make it possible to offer followup treatment to alcoholics after they have been discharged from the hospital. This should greatly improve the results obtained.

Under present conditions, the clinic often must improvise arrangements for the care of alcoholics who are in need of hospital care, which is not available. More hospital beds for alcoholic patients are urgently needed to remedy this unsatisfactory situation.

The establishment of a halfway house facility would also add greatly to the strength of the program. Such a facility would provide a situation for the continued care of patients who are well enough to be out of the hospital, but still require some degree of formal supervision.

Let me emphasize again my belief that we have a grave responsibility to take some action to increase the resources for the treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics in this city. We must insure adequate clinical facilities for their diagnosis and treatment. When adequate facilities for the medical diagnosis and treatment of alcoholism are available, the stigma of alcoholism will no longer be a problem; public support will have been gained. Adequate facilities must include resources for education and for the dissemination of information and the coordination of all of the various agencies and activities which are, and should be, concerned with this problem. We must enlist the complete cooperation of the medical profession as well as that of the law enforcement people and all social agencies concerned. Also, expansion of treatment facilities should go hand in hand with research. A treatment program incorporating all that we know will be the best place in which to learn what we do not know and what more we need to know. Research should follow such an activity and, in fact, be a part of it.

In urging this action I am not speaking as "teetotaler" or a "blue nose" or "killjoy." I am simply presenting for the attention of Congress and action by the District Commissioners an inescapable health problem demanding attention and constructive action. Here is a case where "one man's meat is another man's poison." Senseless efforts to sweep it under the rug spell only disappointment and disaster. Let us begin to chip away at it straightforwardly and intelligently. We have appropriated this year upward of $221,584,000 for cancer, heart disease, mental illness, and a dozen other of mankind's killers. I am all for that but also I am for making at least a token effort to do something about a public health problem as baffling and widespread as any for which we have appropriated so much.

Address by Senator Eugene J. McCarthy on "The Family and Political Action" at the Annual Convention of the Christian Family Movement at the University of Notre Dame

OF

HON. JOHN BRADEMAS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, there are few Americans who can discuss with such wisdom and dedication the role of politics and politicians in a democracy as the distinguished junior Senator from Minnesota, the Honorable EUGENE J. MCCARTHY.

Senator MCCARTHY has been a high school teacher and a university professor. For 10 years he served with great distinction as a Member of the House of Representatives. He speaks with deep understanding and experience of the responsibility of the Christian in political life.

Last month, on August 29, 1959, Senator MCCARTHY delivered a fine address on "The Family and Political Action" at the 11th Annual Convention of the Christian Family Movement held on the campus of the University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.

Other distinguished speakers at this convention, which was attended by more than 2,500 persons, including 750 married couples, included Roman Catholic Archbishop Albert G. Meyer, of Chicago; the Reverend Robert C. Hartnett, S.J., former editor of the weekly magazine America; and Stephen A. Mitchell, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I should like at this point in the RECORD to include excerpts from Senator MCCARTHY's address:

THE FAMILY AND POLITICAL ACTION

(Excerpts from address of Senator EUGENE J. MCCARTHY at the Christian Family Movement Convention, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind., August 29, 1959)

Nineteen hundred and sixty is a national election year. When the polls close on November 8, the voters of the United States will have chosen thousands of State and local officials. They will also have elected 437 Members of the House of Representatives, one-third of the 100 Members of the U.S. Senate, and a President of the United States.

Next year will be a year of intensive political activity. Candidates, their supporters, party officials, and party organizations will be busy trying to convince the voters of the merits of their causes.

Through the media of mass communication, the newspapers, the radio, and television, political discussion and political personalities will come into the homes of America. The home, rather than the public square, the street corner, or the picnic grounds has become the principal arena of political controversy.

It is no longer possible for the citizen to avoid politics or to set it apart for special times and places. Neither is it possible any longer to isolate children and young people from politics. It remains to be seen whether or not these changes in place and methods of political action will improve our democracy.

Certainly it is desirable that citizens be politically aware. In a democratic state, all citizens have political power. That power can be exercised well only if all citizens, or at least a majority, are wise; that is, are intelligent and informed and are men of good will.

Modern techniques of communication and of influence have proved excellent tools for the demagogue and the tyrant. The challenge is to use them to improve government and thus to promote the common good.

Parents have a very special responsibility to develop right attitudes and to advance the political education of children. This responsibility is of special importance because of the significance of citizen participation in politics in a democracy, and because of the fact that politics can no longer be excluded from the home or the young people protected from it.

For adults enjoying full citizenship, issues and personalities are important as a basis for the practical political decisions which must be made. Issues and personalities will be important to children in an election year also. It is wholly natural for them to be interested in political personalities and in controversial issues. For children and young people, however, who are not yet qualified for direct or full participation in political action, the development of right attitudes toward democracy, government, and politics is even more important. In an election, parents have an opportunity to lead the young people of the Nation away from the popular disposition to be cynical regarding politics and government.

There is no disputing the fact that the conduct of some public officials in the United States has been disgraceful. Many have shown a shocking lack of any sense of moral responsibility. Others have been found holding to standards which are extremely personal, flexible, and generally inadequate. The facts in these cases should not be withheld or glossed over. It is essential, however, that they be presented accurately, without exaggeration and without unwarranted general applications.

Children should not be brought up believing that the holders of public office are generally venal and corrupt. They should not be conditioned to the careless use of expressions such as "pork barrel" and "feeding at the public trough" in relation to public service, and should be discouraged from using terms of opprobrium without deliberation and distinction. They should not be led to look upon politics as a necessary evil at best, or as a field in which the ordinary standards of truth and decency do not apply and need not be honored. They should be brought to realize that political party activity is not necessarily unbecoming or degrading.

Not every citizen has an obligation at all times to participate intensively in party activities, but every citizen should realize the need for political parties and for party activities. History demonstrates clearly the need for party politics in democratic government. In America party factions preceded the adoption of the Constitution itself.

Parents should be careful to educate children to an understanding of the importance of the political party in our system of government, and to bring them to realize that good government depends on good political parties. By their own example, as well as by word, they should show the young people that a political party is not merely a propaganda instrument, not a private club, nor an organization which protects one's own job or which provides a job in return for the payment of dues and the performance of party services.

Rather, a political party is an organization made up of a disciplined group of citizens seeking to influence government or to gain control of it in order to govern not only for the majority, but for all according to the determination of the majority within the limits set by custom, law, and constitution.

In order to prevent disillusionment, young people should, of course, learn that politics is part of a real world. Political choices must be made in actual historical situation, affected, therefore, by ignorance, prejudice, and bad will. They should know that political officials often cannot make the ideal choice, but must adjust decisions to circumstances.

Truth will prove the best antidote for cynicism, which is an especially dangerous attitude when it prevails among the young. It destroys the base for an attack on real and different problems in politics, as in other fields.

This danger is clearly shown in one of the novels of Charles Williams, the great English writer of novels dealing with the conflict between good and evil. Mr. Williams shows the great advantage which can be given to evil by the loss of public belief in politics. The consequence of this loss of faith in Mr. William's novel was the acceptance of a completely amoral leader who capitalized on the cynicism of the people and come to power because of it.

An election year provides the best of times in which to develop in children and young people a clearer understanding of the real meaning and implications of democracy; of impressing upon them the fact that democracy does not simplify life, but rather that it complicates it by adding the responsibility of government to other responsibilities.

It is further complicated when we consider that democracy seeks to establish an order based not only upon justice, but upon justice and freedom; that is, not only an order of justice prescribed and forced on people, but determined by them and freely accepted.

An election year provides the best of times in which to develop in our children and young people understanding and respect for the purposes, institutions and procedures of democratic government, and to lay the foundations upon which we can erect in the United States a firm tradition of the privilege and responsibility of citizenship and of public service.

It is not sufficient merely to undertake to humanize and sanctify our individual lives. Neither is it sufficient to humanize and sanctify the institution of the family alone. Over and above this, it is essential to humanize and sanctify social institutions such as the neighborhood, the class to which one belongs, the business and professional community, leisure time activities, means of communication, and political institutions.

For as Cardinal Suhard has stated: "Each of them constitutes both an area of living and reality which is independent of the individuals of which it is made up (and one can say also independent of the family units which make it up) or over whom it holds away."

Although it is true that the social order exists for the persons who make it up, and in a secondary sense also exists for the family, it is nonetheless correct to say that society—that is, civilization itself—requires salvation.

Neither the salvation of persons, nor the salvation of the family can be accomplished without a humanization and sanctification; that is, a Christianization of all essential institutions which make up the social order.

Schedule of Meetings, Eighth Ohio District

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JACKSON E. BETTS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 9, 1959

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Speaker, the best way for a Congressman to secure the views of his constituents is by personal interview. For this reason, I plan to visit the county seats in the Eighth Ohio District this year, as I have each year in the past. If anyone has any problems or views in connection with the Federal Government, I will be pleased to have him come in and discuss them with me.

I shall be at the commissioner's office in the courthouses at the following places on the following dates from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.:

Monday, October 5, Bucyrus; Tuesday, October 6, Tiffin; Wednesday, October 7, Tiffin; Friday, October 9, Upper Sandusky; Tuesday, October 13, Marion; Wednesday, October 14, Marion; Thursday, October 15, Mount Gilead; Friday, October 16, Kenton.
